The contentions of appellant are: First, that the court erred in refusing to allow defendant to introduce evidence of the oral representations made to him by plaintiff and its agents; and, second, that "the judgment is erroneous because it was based upon a general verdict of the jury without findings." As to the supposed erroneous ruling, the transcript shows that the defendant, after stating that he had a conversation with one Fred Johnson, an agent of plaintiff, was asked this question:

"When he came over to your home, what conversation did you have with Mr. Johnson with reference to the purchase of this tractor?"

To this question an objection was made on the general ground and, also:

"It does not tend to prove any issues involved in this action, and it is a manifest beginning of an attempt to contradict, change, and vary the terms of a written instrument."

After some discussion, the question was withdrawn and this question was asked:

"Prior to the execution of this contract, which is on March 12, 1915, did the Yuba Construction Company, now known as the Yuba Manufacturing Company, or any of its agents—I will have to make it leading now I guess—make any representations to you of any kind as to what the capacity of the machine—that is, the tractor, which they were attempting to sell you—would be, or what it could do in the matter of driving rice threshers?"

It was objected to as "irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and tending to alter and vary the terms of a written instrument, to wit, the contract as finally executed and set forth in the pleadings in this action." The objection was sustained by the court, and this ruling is the cause of the principal complaint of appellant.

The written contract, as appears from the pleadings, was executed on the 12th day of March, 1915, and provided for the sale and delivery by the respondent to appellant of "one Model 18 Yuba Ball Tread Tractor, with canopy and Prest-o-lite." It further appears that appellant should pay for said tracfor the sum of $3,055, in installments, which were to be evidenced by promissory notes, except the first payment, which was made at the time of the execution of the agreement. It was, also, provided that the property in said tractor should remain in plaintiff until the whole amount should have been paid by defendant, and that the defendant should have the right to hold and use the said tractor so long as there was no default in the payment of any of the moneys evidenced by said promissory notes.

Paragraph 5 of said written agreement provides as follows:

"The party of the first part warrants that the said tractor when delivered will be in good working order and free from any latent defect arising from poor workmanship or the use of improper or defective materials, and agrees to correct any defects due to poor workmanship or defective materials which may develop under normal and proper use within one year from the date of delivery."

[1] This, it may be said, is the only statement in said contract and the only warranty in reference to quality, capacity, or efficiency of said tractor, and it is the contention of respondent that by offering said parol evidence of previous conversations between appellant and the agent of respondent an attempt was thereby made to add an additional warranty to that expressed in said written instrument, and that by virtue of the provisions of the Code, and, also, of the decisions of the court, such parol evidence is inadmissible. It is not disputed by appellant that an additional warranty cannot be shown to that contained in the written contract, but it is contended that the offer constituted an effort to prove fraud which operated as an inducement to the execution of said agreement, and which, if shown, would avoid the whole contract and relieve the appellant from the apparent liability on said promissory notes.

It cannot be disputed, though, that the statement claimed to have been made by respondent's agent was in reference to the capacity of said machine. It amounted to nothing more nor less than an assurance or guaranty that the tractor would do a certain amount of work. If effect were given to the declaration of the agent, respondent would be required to furnish a tractor of a certain specific and definite capacity.

[2, 3] An "express warranty" means simply an undertaking or covenant that the thing which is the subject of the contract is or is not of a certain quality or capacity. It is difficult, therefore, to resist the conclusion that appellant sought to add to the warranty contained in said written instrument. Of course, the significance of the said parol assurance was not changed by reason of the fact that it is claimed to have been fraudulently given. Whether the promise was made with or without a deceitful intent, its importance to appellant arose from the consideration that it related to the character of the tractor which was to be furnished. Its quality as a warranty would not be changed or affected in the least by alleging that the representation was fraudulently made.

[4] The rule as to warranties seems to be well settled that, where the parties have reduced their agreement of sale to writing, they are conclusively presumed to have exhibited therein all the covenants and conditions as to the quality and capacity of the thing sold, which are binding upon the vendor.

The principle that governs is stated in Benjamin on Sales (7th Ed.) p. 666, as follows:

"If the article is sold by a formal contract, or a regular bill of sale, which is silent on the subject of warranty, no oral warranty made at the same time, or even previously, can be shown, since the writing is conclusively supposed to embody the whole contract. For the same reason, no additional warranty can be ingrafted on, or added to, one that is written."

In United Iron Works v. Outer H., etc., Co., 168 Cal. 81, 141 Pac. 917, the action was brought to recover the purchase price of a dredge constructed by the plaintiff for defendant in pursuance of the terms of a written contract calling for its construction in accordance with accompanying plans and specifications, and it was held that parol evidence of the surrounding circumstances was not admissible under section 1647 of the Civil Code or section 1860 of the Code of Civil Procedure to show the warranty by the plaintiff, not expressly embodied in the written contract, that the dredge would be capable of doing certain specified work. It was furthermore, held:

"That where the parties have reduced to writing what purports to be a complete and certain agreement, importing a legal obligation, it will, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, be conclusively presumed that the writing contains the whole of the agreement between the parties, and parol evidence of prior, contemporaneous, or subsequent conversations, representations, or statements will not be received for the purpose of adding to or varying the written instrument. If, therefore, such a writing exists between the parties, and it contains no warranty at all, no warranty can be added by parol; if it contains a warranty of some kind or to some extent, parol evidence will not be admitted to extend, enlarge, or modify that which the writing specifies."

In Tockstein v. Pac. Kissel Kar Branch, 33 Cal. App. 262, 164 Pac. 906, it is held:

"A person buying or agreeing to buy personal property, the terms of which purchase or agreement to purchase are put in writing, is bound as to the terms of the contract by such writing, into which all preliminary understandings and assurances are presumed to be merged, and such person cannot go behind such writing to avoid the agreement of purchase for the alleged breach of some oral understanding or guaranty not contained within its written terms."

It is true that in the Tockstein Case the written agreement contained upon its face the statement "that only the written representations, agreements, and guaranties contained within its terms shall be binding upon" the vendor; but such recital added nothing to the effect of the written instrument. The written instrument herein, apparently complete in itself, necessarily implies that it contains all the covenants of the parties.

In the Tockstein Case, supra, the plaintiff asserted:

"That the inducing cause for her agreement to purchase the car in question was the representation of the salesman of the defendant that the car which would be delivered to her would be a new and perfect car and that it was guaranteed perfect in every way, and that she would have no trouble with it."

But, for the reason already stated, she was not permitted to show that this representation was made.

It must be apparent that the same rule applies whether the said oral representations be regarded as technically a "warranty" or as simply a covenant or promise. In either event it must be entirely excluded because not contained in the final written agreement of the parties. For further discussion of the principle we may refer to the carefully considered case of Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 90 Pac. 948.

[5] Manifestly, this consideration does not preclude either party from showing fraud that might vitiate the apparent contract of the parties. The fraud, however, must relate to and be connected with the agreement which is the basis of the action. Herein, as we have seen, the supposed fraudulent representation is entirely disconnected from the actual contract of the parties and cannot be considered a material element, since it was entirely ignored and superseded by the written instrument. If appellant had made a similar allegation as to any of the facts recited in said instrument, or had shown by proper averment that his signature to the contract was obtained fraudulently or that he was deceived as to the contents or that it did not contain the full intent of the parties, a different situation would, of course, be presented. The cases cited by appellant in this connection are distinguishable from the one before us.

Newman v. Smith, 77 Cal. 22, 18 Pac. 791, does state the rule to be that—

"Fraudulent representations as to a material matter, by which a party was induced to enter into a contract to his damage, is ground for an action at law or relief in equity, notwithstanding ing that the contract was in writing and the representations were verbal."

However, that case involved the sale of real property, and it appeared that the fraudulent representations affected the terms of the written instrument, particularly in reference to the value of the property. In other words, by reason of the fraud of the vendee the written instrument did not fully express the intent of the parties.

In Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 126 Pac. 351, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 125, several questions of fraud were involved, all directly connected with the written contract of the parties. The principal elements upon which appellant relied, however, for damages related to the capacity of the architect and the false representation in reference to the cost of the building. These were matters not comprehended and concluded by the written instrument, and it must be apparent that they stand upon a different footing from oral representations as to the quality of a machine, where the parties have thereafter agreed in writing as to what it shall be.

The principal questions involved in Macdonald v. De Fremery, 168 Cal. 189, 142 Pac. 73, were whether a false statement in order to sustain an action of deceit must be the sole or might be only one inducement for the purchase of bank stock and whether the purchaser was justified in relying upon the representations of the directors as to the value of the stock.

In Teague v. Hall, 171 Cal. 668, 154 Pac. 851, no question arose as to adding to or varying the terms of a written contract, but the court rightly held that the action for deceit would lie for false representations as to the number of budded nursery trees made by the vendor.

In Brandt v. Krogh, 14 Cal. App. 39, 111 Pac. 275, the agreement for the sale of corporate stock was in parol and the fraudulent representations were in reference to the value of said stock.

Manifestly, the court, as far as possible, should protect an innocent party against the fraud of one seeking to take an unconscionable advantage; but in this class of cases, when the parties have deliberately reduced their contract to writing and have undertaken to set forth the character of the contrivance which is sold, and there is no mistake or fraud connected with the execution of said instrument, it is reasonable and in accordance with the law to hold that the contract shall not be avoided by reason of some false representation as to the quality of the machine, which representation the vendee has seen fit to completely ignore in the written instrument. It is true, of course, that a defrauded party cannot by the simple "device of a written instrument" be deprived of the right to prove the fraud, but it is equally true that he cannot be permitted to nullify the rule in relation to written instruments by the specious claim that he was deceived by certain oral representations.

[6] As to the other point, it is undoubtedly the rule, as claimed by appellant, that—

"In an equity case a general verdict rendered by the jury is not determinative of the pleaded issues and a failure to find upon said issues is error requiring reversal of the judgment." Learned v. Castle, 67 Cal. 41, 7 Pac. 34; Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 169 Cal. 558, 147 Pac. 238; Holland v. Kelly, 169 Pac. 1000.

However, if we are correct in the foregoing views, the allegation as to the fraudulent misrepresentation was immaterial. The so-called cross-complaint failed to state a cause of action for affirmative relief. It did state a defense to plaintiff's complaint, for the reason that it alleged that it was not true, as warranted in the written contract, that said tractor "was in good working order and free from latent defects arising from poor workmanship or the use of improper and defective materials."

As we view it, the only material issues were, therefore, of legal cognizance, and there was no necessity for specific findings by the court.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

OTT HARDWARE CO. v. HOLMBERG, City Clerk and City Auditor (two cases).
(Civ. 2494, 2440.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied March 30, 1918.)

MANDAMUS  19 — PROCEEDINGS AGAINST CITY OFFICIALS—TERMINATION OF OFFICE AND DEATH OF DEFENDANT.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 385, where in a mandamus proceeding defendant, who was clerk and auditor of city, went out of office and died, action being prosecuted against him in his official capacity to enforce payment of money from city which he refused to pay, the succeeding clerk and auditor was properly substituted as defendant.

Appeals from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Samuel E. Crow, Judge.

Two actions by the Ott Hardware Company against Miss A. C. Holmberg, as City Clerk and City Auditor of the City of Santa Barbara, substituted for Alfred Davis, as City Clerk and City Auditor of such city. From adverse orders of the court, defendant prosecutes two appeals. Affirmed.

H. P. Starbuck and Canfield & Starbuck, all of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The controversy between the parties hereto, having run a prolonged course through the trial and appellate courts, is again here on two appeals, both taken by the defendant. As the questions involved are practically the same in both cases, the appeals may well be considered together. The first appeal, that numbered 2494, is an appeal taken from an order substituting A. C. Holmberg, city clerk and city auditor of the city of Santa Barbara, as defendant, in the place and stead of Alfred Davis, the former city clerk and auditor. The second appeal, that numbered 2440, is an appeal taken from an order directing the clerk of the superior court to collect a warrant for a sum of money drawn by the city clerk and auditor and deposited in court to await the result of a former appeal.

In December, 1909, Davis was city clerk and auditor of the city of Santa Barbara, and the city of Santa Barbara was at that time indebted in a considerable sum to Warren W. Clark. The Ott Hardware Company, having obtained a judgment in the superior court against Clark, sought to intercept this money due from the city to Clark by having filed with the city clerk and auditor, agreeable to the provisions of section 710, Code of Civil Procedure, an authenticated transcript of the judgment. Notwithstanding the filing of this transcript, the city clerk and auditor refused to follow the direction of the statute and draw his warrant payable to the court from which the transcript was issued, but did draw the warrant and delivered the same to Clark, or as directed by him. This proceeding in mandamus was then brought to compel Davis to return the warrant into court as the statute required him to do. The lower court held adversely to the petitioner's contention there, the matter was appealed to this court, and, the justices not agreeing, the cause was certified to the Supreme Court, which court later rendered its decision reversing the judgment of the trial court. See Ott Hardware Co. v. Davis, 165 Cal. 795, 134 Pac. 973. Upon the going down of the remittitur, further proceedings were had in the court below, and, agreeable to the conclusions expressed in the decision just cited, the superior court rendered its judgment, directing Davis to issue his warrant and return it to the superior court as prayed for in the petition. The defendant appealed from this judgment, and, not desiring to furnish bond, took advantage of the provisions of section 944, Code of Civil Procedure, and executed the warrant and deposited it with the clerk of the superior court to abide the judgment of the appellate court. While the appeal taken from the last-mentioned judgment was pending, Davis' term expired, and in April, 1914, he died. A. C. Holmberg was thereafter appointed to take the office held by Davis, that of city clerk and auditor of the city of Santa Barbara, and, after notice given, an order was made by the superior court substituting the said Holmberg as party defendant in this action. It is from this last order that one of the appeals now presented was taken. Following the substitution of parties so made in the superior court, a like order was made, after notice, by this court in the appeal then pending here from the judgment ordering the warrant to be issued. The last-mentioned appeal was decided in this court, the judgment being affirmed. Ott Hardware Co. v. Holmberg, 32 Cal. App. 229, 162 Pac. 911. Rehearing being denied in the Supreme Court, remittitur was transmitted to the superior court and a motion was thereafter made upon notice that the court order the clerk to collect the warrant which had been theretofore deposited in the superior court by Davis to abide the result of the appeal. This motion was granted and the second appeal now being considered here was taken from that order.

It is contended on behalf of appellant that there could be no substitution of Holmberg for Davis, because with the death of Davis or the expiration of his term the cause of action would die. Many authorities are cited, particularly from other jurisdictions, some of which tend to support this view. However, it would seem that we are not required to look beyond the statutes and decisions of our own state in order to find a complete answer to all of the contentions urged on these appeals. Section 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"An action or proceeding does not abate by the death, or any disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or any disability of a party, the court, on motion, may allow the action or proceeding to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest. In case of any other transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding."

This action was prosecuted against Davis in his official capacity to enforce payment from the city of money which the auditor refused to furnish for the benefit of the judgment creditor of Clark. Surely, as the city has been by the decision of the Supreme Court determined to be liable for the neglect or refusal of Davis to draw the warrant mentioned, it is no less liable because an officer acting in one of its departments has vacated the office or died. In such a case the law is not concerned with the person who may have become detached from the office, but only with the officer who is there to perform the functions which he or his predecessor has failed or refused to perform. It seems, in view of the conclusions of the Supreme Court in the main case, to be settled beyond controversy that the cause of action still exists, notwithstanding that Davis' term of office has ended and he has died. This being true, then the provisions of section 385, Code of Civil Procedure, are explicit and exact in their applicability to the situation here. The substitution of a succeeding official for one against whom mandamus had been brought has been decided to be proper practice. Ex parte Tinkum, 54 Cal. 201. See, also, Jordan v. Hubert, 54 Cal. 260. The appeal from the order substituting parties defendant we think is without merit. The appeal from the order made requiring the clerk to collect the warrant and pay the money into court for the benefit of the judgment creditor of Clark must also fall, as this appeal depends for support upon the contentions made in the first-mentioned appeal which have been hereinbefore discussed.

The order appealed from in cause numbered in this court Civil 2494 is affirmed.

The order appealed from in cause numbered in this court Civil 2440 is affirmed.

CHAMBERS et al. v. FARNHAM et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 30, 1918.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⇨128(5)—SPECIFICATION OF GROUNDS—"FINDING"—"DECISION."

While the statute providing for granting of new trials specifies "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision," the word "findings" is substantially synonymous with "decision," and specification of "findings and judgment" is sufficient; the references to the judgment being surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Decision; Finding.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨137—NEW TRIAL—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY—"TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS"—"MINUTES OF THE COURT."

A notice of motion for new trial, reciting that it "will be made upon a transcript of the proceedings had at the trial," made prior to the 1915 amendments, construed to mean by the words "transcript of the proceedings" the same thing as "minutes of the court" as used in the statute then in force.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨301—NEW TRIAL—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

On appeal from an order granting a new trial, a finding that a judgment introduced in evidence was pending on appeal is conclusive, where such finding was not attacked by the motion for new trial.

4. JUDGMENT ⚡663—EVIDENCE — CONCLUSIVENESS—APPEAL.

Where an action is pending upon appeal, the judgment therein is not final, and in another action is not admissible to prove facts therein recited except as to merely incidental or collaterally involved facts which are not directly in issue, and it is immaterial that no stay bond was given. Code Civ. Proc. § 1049.

5. NEW TRIAL ⚡79—GROUNDS—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

A finding that "it is not true that they wrongfully made said division or that they placed certain property beyond the reach of plaintiffs" is not a finding of fact, but a pure conclusion of law, and, even though erroneous, presents no legal ground for the granting of a new trial.

6. TRIAL ⚡397(3, 4)—FINDINGS—ISSUES—EVIDENCE.

Findings are properly not made, where no issues were framed by the pleadings to which such findings would be relevant and no evidence relevant thereto was introduced or offered by either of the parties.

7. TRIAL ⚡397(2)—FINDINGS—FAILURE TO FIND.

In a creditor's suit against directors of a corporation under Civ. Code, § 309, for corporate debts, the court's failure to find that the corporate assets were divided among its stockholders and remained subject to the payment of its debts did not render the decision against the law, where such finding would not destroy the effect of the other findings.

8. NEW TRIAL ⚡79—GROUNDS—FINDINGS.

The fact that the trial court has made a finding outside the issues does not warrant the granting of a new trial.

9. NEW TRIAL ⚡79—GROUNDS—SPECIFICATIONS—FINDINGS.

That findings of fact are insufficient to support a conclusion of law "that the defendants are entitled to the judgment," "that plaintiffs take nothing," and that the judgment "is wholly unsupported by and in conflict with the findings of fact," presents no legal ground for granting a new trial.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1050(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—IMMATERIAL EVIDENCE.

In a creditor's action against the directors of a corporation, evidence of a director that there was no intention of defrauding plaintiffs or other creditors, where the questions of fraud or fraudulent intent were not involved, if erroneous, held not prejudicial.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡867(3)—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Whether a complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action cannot be reviewed on appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by B. L. Chambers and another against J. E. Farnham and others. Judgment for defendants, and, from an order granting a new trial, the defendants appeal. Order reversed.

Barstow, Beach & Rohe, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Drew Pruitt, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by defendants from an order granting a new trial after judgment in their favor in the court below. Plaintiffs brought this action as creditors of the Belmore Land & Water Company, a corporation existing under the laws of this state, to recover the amount of their claim against said corporation from the defendants individually by reason of an alleged violation by defendants, as directors of said corporation, of the provisions of section 309, Civil Code, by dividing the capital stock of said corporation among its stockholders. Plaintiffs allege that they had entered into a contract of lease with said corporation whereby the latter undertook to construct certain dams and install certain headgates for the purpose of furnishing water for the irrigation of the lands thereby leased to plaintiffs; that said corporation, in violation of its contract, had failed to install said headgates, to the damage of the plaintiffs in the sum of $5,078.55, by reason of the failure of crops which plaintiffs had planted on said lands; that plaintiffs had instituted suit against said corporation for the recovery of said damages and recovered judgment therein, in the amount above stated, with costs, which judgment remains unpaid.

The trial court found against plaintiffs upon the allegations of breach of contract and damages resulting therefrom, but found that judgment had been recovered by them as alleged and the same remained unpaid, and that an appeal had been taken from said judgment, but no bond given to stay execution thereof. The trial court also found that pending said action the defendants had divided and distributed among themselves, in proportion to the stock held by them, all of the assets of said corporation, except one parcel of land of the value of $10,000, which parcel is still owned and held by said corporation. Thereupon judgment was entered for the defendants, and, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial having been thereafter granted by the court, this appeal is prosecuted from the order granting the same.

[1] The motion for new trial was made upon three grounds, as follows:

"(1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and judgment; (2) that said findings and judgment are against law; (3) errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiffs."

Appellants urge here that the specifications numbered 1 and 2 were insufficient to present any questions for review; citing Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 42, to the effect that insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment is not ground of motion for new trial. Of course, the ground specified by the statute in this connection is "insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision." We think, however, that, used in this connection, the word "findings" is substantially synonymous with "decision," and that the references to the judgment may be disregarded as surplusage.

[2] Appellants also urge that the notice was insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the court to grant the motion, because it recited that it "will be made upon a transcript of the proceedings had at the trial." This was prior to the 1915 amendments to the Codes at a time when the law required a motion for new trial upon the grounds here involved to be made either upon a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, or the minutes of the court. In view of the policy of the law that all controversies shall, so far as practicable, be determined upon their merits, it will not be overstraining the rules of construction, we think, to construe the words "transcript of the proceedings" as meaning the same thing as "minutes of the court."

[3, 4] Upon the motion for new trial plaintiffs specified four findings as not being sufficiently supported by the evidence. The first is:

"That the Belmore Land & Water Company is and was a corporation formed for the purpose of acquiring, holding and selling real estate, water and water rights."

The articles of incorporation, which were introduced in evidence, fully support this finding, and no other evidence whatever was introduced upon this question.

The second and third specifications attack the following findings:

"It is not true that by reason of the failure and refusal of said company to construct said or any headgates, as proposed by the terms of said lease, plaintiffs could only irrigate about 100 acres of the 800 acres of said ranch they had sowed to barley, as mentioned in plaintiffs' said complaint." And, "it is not true that by reason of the alleged breach of said contract as aforesaid, the plaintiffs sustained damages for the year 1912, or for any time, in the sum of $5,078.85, or in any sum or amount whatever."

These two findings are determinative of the case, and, if there is any evidence in the case which would be legally sufficient to support findings in favor of the plaintiffs upon these issues, the order granting the new trial must be affirmed under the established rule with respect to conflicting evidence. The only evidence introduced or offered under these issues consisted of the judgment roll in the action by plaintiffs against the corporation. It may well be doubted whether that judgment was admissible for any purpose in this action as against these defendants. These defendants were neither parties nor privies of parties to that action. This action does not seek to charge defendants as stockholders or by reason of any contractual relationship with the corporation which was the judgment defendant. This action is seeking to enforce a liability created by law, wholly irrespective of any contractual relationship on the part of the persons liable.

But it is not necessary to determine here whether or not that judgment against the corporation would, if final, be admissible in evidence in this action against these individual defendants, because the trial court found that the judgment in question had, at the time it was received in evidence, been appealed from. That finding was not attacked by the motion for new trial and is therefore conclusive upon this court. Rauer v. Fay, 128 Cal. 523, 525, 61 Pac. 90. Section 1049, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied."

"A judgment, in order to be admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving facts therein recited, must be a final judgment in the cause, and, if the action in which the judgment is rendered is still pending necessarily the judgment is not final." In re Blythe's Estate, 99 Cal. 472, 475, 34 Pac. 108; Naftzger v. Gregg, 99 Cal. 83, 33 Pac. 757, 37 Am. St. Rep. 23.

The same rule has been uniformly applied in this state with respect to judgments which are pending upon appeal. Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 369, 28 Pac. 118; Woodbury v. Bowman, 13 Cal. 634; Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589; Smith v. Smith, 134 Cal. 117, 119, 66 Pac. 81; Purser v. Cady, 120 Cal. 214, 218, 52 Pac. 489; Contra Costa Water Co. v. City of Oakland (C. C.) 165 Fed. 518. This rule is limited in its application by the exception that such a judgment may be received in evidence in proof of facts which are merely incidentally or collaterally involved, when such facts are not directly in issue. Greer v. Greer, 142 Cal. 519, 525, 77 Pac. 1106; Smith v. Smith, 134 Cal. 117, 66 Pac. 81; Cook v. Rice, 91 Cal. 664, 27 Pac. 1081. The case at bar clearly falls within the general rule above stated, and not within the exception. The fact that no bond was given to stay execution upon the appeal here in question is immaterial. Di Nola v. Allison, 143 Cal. 106, 112, 76 Pac. 976, 65 L. R. A. 419, 101 Am. St. Rep.

84. The burden of proof as to these allegations was on the plaintiffs, and, no competent evidence having been produced in support thereof, it is apparent that no different finding could have been made upon these issues by the trial court.

[5] The fourth specification of insufficiency attacks the finding that—

"It is not true that they (the directors) wrongfully made a division of the capital stock of the Belmore Land & Water Company of the value of about $175,000 among the stockholders, or that they placed said property beyond the reach of its creditors or plaintiffs."

No such finding was made by the trial court. The trial court did find the facts respecting the division of the capital stock among the stockholders and then added thereto the following paragraph:

"It is not true that they wrongfully made said division, or that they placed said property beyond the reach of the plaintiffs."

This latter is obviously not a finding of fact, but a pure conclusion of law drawn by the trial court from the facts found; and this, even though it were erroneous, presents no legal ground for the granting of a new trial. Estate of Keating, 162 Cal. 406, 412, 122 Pac. 1079; Swift v. Occidental Mining Co., 141 Cal. 161, 167, 74 Pac. 700.

[6] Eight specifications were made of particulars wherein the decision of the court was alleged to be against law. Specifications numbered 1, 2, and 5 are directed at the failure of the court to find:

"That said corporation was engaged in the business of acquiring, holding, and selling real estate, water, or water rights." "That any of the assets or capital stock * * * consisted of water or water rights, or of land with water rights appurtenant thereto." "That said division of assets of said corporation to its stockholders made by said directors, was made with the consent of the stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock thereof."

It suffices to say that no issues were framed by the pleadings to which such findings would be relevant, and no evidence was introduced or offered by either of the parties relevant thereto.

[7] Specifications numbered 3 and 4 are directed at the failure of the trial court to make "any finding of fact that could exempt the defendant directors under section 309 of the Civil Code from liability," etc.; and "any finding tending to show that the assets of said corporation divided among its stockholders by the defendant directors remained subject to the payment of the debts or liability of said corporation." It is obvious that such findings, if made, would not be findings of fact, but conclusions of law. Furthermore, if findings had been made favorable to the plaintiffs in these particulars, they would have been rendered immaterial by reason of the other findings necessarily made from which it resulted that plaintiffs here have failed to establish their status as creditors of the corporation. The rule that a failure to find upon material issues renders a decision against law is applicable only where a finding upon such issues might have the effect to countervail or destroy the effect of the other findings. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 328, 27 Pac. 186; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 436, 51 Pac. 630; Rauer v. Fay, supra.

[8] Specification numbered 6 is:

"There was no pleading on the part of defendants authorizing and no issue made in said cause upon which to base a finding of the court that 'the Belmore Land & Water Company was a corporation formed for the purpose of acquiring, holding and selling real estate, water and water rights.'"

This is true, but the fact that the trial court has made a finding outside the issues does not warrant the granting of a motion for a new trial. Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 611, 614, 80 Pac. 1075.

[9] Specifications numbered 7 and 8 are as follows:

"The findings of fact made by the court are wholly insufficient to support the conclusion of law made by the court, 'that the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the court that plaintiffs take nothing by this action.'" And, "the judgment rendered by the court in favor of the defendants is wholly unsupported by and in conflict with the findings of fact."

As we have already seen, these specifications do not present any legal ground for the granting of a new trial. Swift v. Occidental Mining Co., supra.

[10] There are three specifications of alleged errors in law occurring at the trial which are directed to three rulings of the court upon the admission of testimony the result of which was to permit one of the defendants to testify that in making the division of the corporate assets there was no purpose or intention of defrauding plaintiffs or other creditors. Obviously, there was no question of fraud or fraudulent intent involved in this action, and conceding these rulings to have been erroneous, nevertheless they could not possibly have been prejudicial to the plaintiffs herein.

[11] Much space has been devoted in the briefs to a discussion of the question whether or not the complaint herein states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. But where the appeal is from an order granting or denying a new trial, this court cannot consider that question. Rauer v. Fay, 128 Cal. 523, 525, 61 Pac. 90; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 327, 27 Pac. 186. That question can be reviewed only upon an appeal from the judgment.

We are not unmindful of the fact that "it is only in rare instances and upon very strong grounds that an appellate court will set aside an order granting a new trial." Nevertheless, where, as here, upon consideration of each of the grounds specified on the motion for new trial, outside of which neither the trial court nor the reviewing court may go, it clearly appears that no legal ground existed for setting aside the judgment, the order granting a new trial will be reversed. It is so ordered.

1. CONTINUANCE ⚡49—TERMS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Discretion of trial court held not abused in granting continuance upon condition of payment by movant of $120.

2. MOTIONS ⚡37—HEARING—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff's motion to strike out, as being unsworn, statements of defendants' counsel upon hearing of motion, which statements were no more than a repetition of statements previously made without objection, was too late, when made after the finding of the court as to the terms upon which order would be allowed.

3. CONTINUANCE ⚡49—DISCRETION — PAYMENT OF COSTS.

That cost bill afterwards presented, and in part allowed, was only about half the costs fixed as a condition of continuance by the court, upon the showing made at time of application for continuance, is not sufficient to show that the court acted arbitrarily, or in abuse of its discretion, on the evidence before it at the time.

4. CONTINUANCE ⚡49—DISCRETION — PAYMENT OF COSTS.

The court is not limited to requiring a payment of the taxable costs, as a condition of postponing the trial, but may exercise a reasonable discretion for the purpose of compensating the plaintiff for the expenses incurred in preparing for trial.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡709—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT BILL OF COSTS—IMPEACHMENT OF BILL.

Order denying plaintiff's motion to strike out defendants' bill of costs cannot be impeached on appeal, where there is nothing in the record showing what, if any, papers or files were used at the hearing, or what evidence was offered or presented by either side.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by Stewart Fraser against James Fraser and others, executors, in which Chalmer Munday, trustee in bankruptcy of Catherine M. Fraser, intervened. From judgment of dismissal, and from order denying his motion to strike out defendants' cost bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Heim Goldman, of San Francisco, and Wright & Dignan, of Nevada City, for appellant.

C. F. McGlashan, of Truckee, Hennessy & Peterson, of Grass Valley, and Herrington & Clausen, of San Francisco, for respondents.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action brought to recover the sum of $15,000 upon a rejected claim for services alleged to have been rendered decedent by plaintiff's assignor. Upon the day set for the trial of the case plaintiff moved the court for a continuance upon the ground that plaintiff's assignor, the real party in interest, was unable to be present and take part in the trial. Upon a hearing had, the court granted the continuance upon the condition that there be paid to defendants the sum of $120. Plaintiff refused to comply with this condition. He also refused to introduce any testimony, "for the reason we have not any witnesses here," and "the plaintiff's principal witness and main party is unable to appear in court upon the showing made for continuance." Whereupon, upon motion of defendants, the court ordered judgment of dismissal. From this judgment plaintiff has appealed, and has also appealed from the order of the court denying his motion to strike out defendants' cost bill.

As regards the judgment, plaintiff charges that—

"The trial court abused its discretion and exceeded its authority in its attempt to force the plaintiff to pay to the defendants a lump sum of money arbitrarily fixed by order of the court as a condition upon which the order granting a postponement would become effective."

[1] In our opinion, the record fails absolutely to substantiate this charge against the trial court. The record shows that the trial judge, after he had determined, in the exercise of a most generous discretion, to grant plaintiff's belated and ill-supported plea for a continuance, proceeded as follows:

"The Court (addressing defendants' counsel): Figure up your expenses, Mr. Peterson, and bring your witnesses here, and the reporter's expenses, and we will see what the court can do; figure up your expenses now.

"Mr. Peterson: We find the reporter's fee, and the transportation and hotel bills, and including witnesses' fees for nine witnesses for two days—the time they will be out—makes $173.52, for the witnesses and transportation, and $15 more for the reporter, making $188.52; that does not include any expenses of counsel—$188.52.

"Mr. Dignan (plaintiff's counsel): I ask that counsel give the names of the witnesses and where they come from, and state whether or not they were subpoenaed. * * * I would like to know where they are from, and what mileage claimed by each and their hotel bills, the hotel bill of each, so as to have it in the record."

In response to this request, defendants' counsel gave the names of the witnesses, and stated where they came from, and that they were all subpoenaed.

[2] Plaintiff's counsel made no examination of the witnesses, or offered any testimony or made any statements to assist the court in computing the costs; nor did he attempt to impeach or qualify the statement made by defendants' attorney. The court, after noting that two of the witnesses called "are here in attendance on this other case," and also that "the court will take off the executrix, from Truckee," stated that the motion for continuance would be granted upon the payment of $150, which amount it later reduced to $120. This amount was evidently found by the court by taking as a basis the above data furnished in open court by counsel as indicated above; and it does not appear that under the circumstances the court acted arbitrarily or abused its discretion in giving faith and credit to counsel's statements, and in computing mileage and expenses from the data furnished. After the court had fixed the amount of $120 as the proper amount to be paid as a condition to granting the continuance, plaintiff's counsel moved to strike out some of the statements made by defendants' counsel, upon the ground that they were unsworn statements. As a matter of fact, these statements were no more than a repetition of statements previously made without objection, and the motion, being made after the finding of the court, came too late.

Furthermore, as stated in the case of Murphy Mortgage Co. v. Epp, 99 Kan. 706, 162 Pac. 1170:

"In a certain sense a lawyer is always on oath that he 'will neither do nor consent to the doing of any falsehood in court.' The weight of authority is that the omission to swear a witness must be objected to at the trial. State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 13 S. W. 490, 8 L. R. A. 608; City of O'Neill v. Clark, 57 Neb. 760, 764, 78 N. W. 256; Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046; Goldsmith v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 112, 22 S. W. 405."

[3] And the fact that the cost bill afterwards presented, and in part allowed, was only about one-half of the costs fixed by the court upon the showing made at the time of the continuance, is not sufficient to show that the court acted arbitrarily, or in abuse of its discretion, on the evidence before it at the time.

[4] As stated in the case of Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 50 Pac. 683:

"The court was not limited to requiring a payment of the taxable costs as a condition of postponing the trial, but was at liberty to exercise a reasonable discretion for the purpose of compensating the plaintiff for the expenses incurred in preparing for the trial."

As regards the appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion to strike out bill of costs:

[5] On this appeal plaintiff has furnished no bill of exceptions, nor are we furnished with any transcript of the proceedings had at the time of the making of the motion. The notice of motion stated, as the grounds upon which the proposed motion would be made, "that the said cost bill was not served and filed within the time allowed by law," and that "the motion will be based upon all the papers, records, and files in the above-entitled action." But there is nothing in the record showing what, if any, papers or files were, as a matter of fact, used at the hearing, or what evidence was offered or presented by either side. The minute order denying the motion makes no reference to any records or evidence having been used, while the formal order denying the motion to retax costs recites affirmatively that no evidence has "been offered in support of said motion."

The original minute order made by the clerk fails to show that costs were allowed defendant upon dismissal, thus conflicting with the order indicated in the reporter's transcript, and non constat but there was an amended order entered at a subsequent day by the clerk. In addition to this, there is the formal order of dismissal afterwards entered. But, as already stated, there is nothing in the record to show whether these, or any of these, or some other orders or evidence were presented at the time of the hearing. The order, therefore, cannot be impeached. Muzzy v. D. H. McEwen Lumber Co., 154 Cal. 685, 98 Pac. 1062.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

TIMMONS v. COONLEY. (Civ. 2743.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 3, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨74—REVIEW—ORDER DENYING MOTION TO VACATE DEFAULT.

An order denying defendant's motion to vacate a default, being an order made before judgment, is not appealable, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨494—PERFECTION OF APPEAL.

Where no copy of the order attempted to be appealed from is in the record, the order cannot be reviewed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 951.

3. PLEADING ⇨222 — TIME TO ANSWER AFTER OVERRULING OF DEMURRER—NOTICE OF ORDER.

When a demurrer to a complaint is overruled, the time given to answer runs from the service of notice of the order, and not from its date, under Code Civ. Proc. § 476, and the notice is required by section 1010 to be in writing.

4. PLEADING ⇨222—OVERRULING DEMURRER—ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE—WAIVER OF NOTICE.

Where written notice of a decision upon a pleading is required by the statute, actual notice or knowledge of overruling demurrer is not a substitute; nevertheless the party for whose benefit the notice is required may, by facts appearing in the records, files, or minutes of the court, have waived the same.

5. PLEADING ⇨222 — OVERRULING DEMURRER—TIME TO ANSWER—WAIVER BY STIPULATION.

Where a demurrer was overruled, and time given to answer, a stipulation allowing further time operated as a waiver of the statutory notice of a decision overruling the demurrer; but such waiver became effective on its own date, and not on the date of the overruling order.

6. TIME ⇨10(2) — SUNDAY — JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Where a defendant had three days in which to serve and file her answer, and the third day was Sunday, she had all of the following Monday in which to file her answer, under Code Civ. Proc. § 13.

7. PLEADING ⇨222 — OVERRULING DEMURRER—TIME TO ANSWER—STIPULATION.

Where demurrer to complaint was overruled January 11th, and three days allowed for answer, which time would run from date of notice, or of waiver of notice of the overruling order, and notice was not given, but a stipulation on January 14th waived notice, defendant had three days thereafter to file answer, notwithstanding the stipulation allowed but two.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨290(5), 291 (17) — UNLAWFUL DETAINER — SET-OFF OR COUNTERCLAIM—DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

A counterclaim or cross-complaint of any kind or character is neither proper nor permissible in actions in unlawful detainer against tenant defaulting in rent, and no default judgment can be entered for failure to answer a cross-complaint therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by L. D. Timmons against L. E. Coonley, in which Louis M. Timmons, as administrator, was substituted upon notice of plaintiff's decease. From an order denying defendant's motion to vacate the entry of her default and permit the filing of an answer, and from a judgment entered against her, and from an order denying her motion for a default judgment against the plaintiff on her cross-complaint, defendant appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded to the superior court, with directions to vacate and set aside the entry of default and permit defendant to file her answer.

Elton G. Galusha, William Freeman and A. G. Reilly, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. F. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an action of unlawful detainer, after default in payment of rent and the service of a three days' notice to pay rent or quit. Defendant takes this appeal, first, from an order entered January 19, 1915, denying defendant's motion to vacate the entry of her default and permit the filing of an answer; second, from the judgment entered against her January 22, 1915; third, from an order entered January 26, 1915, denying her motion for a default judgment against the plaintiff on her cross-complaint.

[1,2] The appeal from the order denying defendant's motion to vacate the default cannot be here considered for two reasons: First. Being an order made before judgment, it was not an appealable order. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. Second. No copy of the order attempted to be appealed from is in the record. Code Civ. Proc. § 951.

[3] The judgment appealed from is a judgment by default for failure to answer after an order overruling defendant's demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer to the third amended complaint was overruled January 11, 1915, and defendant given three days to answer. No written notice thereof was served or filed and there was no express waiver of such notice. On January 14th the parties, through their attorneys, stipulated "that the defendant have to and including Saturday, January 16, 1915, in which to serve and file her answer and cross-complaint." Said stipulation was filed January 15th. On January 16th a copy of the answer and cross-complaint was served on counsel for plaintiff, but not filed. On Monday, January 18th, the clerk entered defendant's default pursuant to an order therefor made by the presiding judge. Later, on the same day, the defendant tendered to the clerk, for filing, her answer and cross-complaint, which were refused. Thereupon, upon the same day, the defendant served and filed her notice of motion to set aside the entry of default, which motion is asserted by counsel to have been heard and denied on January 19th; but, as stated above, no such order appears in the transcript. Thereafter the judgment here appealed from was signed and filed January 21 and entered January 22, 1915.

[4] When a demurrer to a pleading is overruled and time to answer is given, the time so given runs from the service of notice of the order. Code Civ. Proc. § 476. The notice here required is a notice in writing. Code Civ. Proc. § 1010. Where written notice is required by the statute, actual notice or actual knowledge thereof is not the equivalent thereof or a substitute therefor; nevertheless the party for whose benefit the notice is so required may waive the same. As was said by the Supreme Court in Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, at page 359, 61 Pac. 1123, at page 1124:

"The rule would therefore seem to be that written notice of filing of decision is in all cases required, unless waived by facts appearing in the records, files, or minutes of the court; and it follows that actual notice or knowledge, other than by written notice, is insufficient in any case unless it appears, from facts thus evidenced, that written notice was waived."

See, also, Forni v. Yoell, 99 Cal. 173, 33 Pac. 887, Gardner v. Stare, 135 Cal. 118, 67 Pac. 5, and Wall v. Heald, 95 Cal. 364, 30 Pac. 551.

It is clear under these authorities that defendant's time to answer did not begin to run from the date of the overruling of the demurrer.

[5-7] Respondent contends that the signing by defendant of the written stipulation, which was thereafter filed in the case, operated as a waiver of the notice required by the statute. We think that this contention is correct. But it does not follow that the waiver thus made was retroactive and became effective as of the date of the order overruling the demurrer. The waiver became effective to take the place of the written notice required by the statute only at the time when the acts which constitute it were performed; in other words, when the stipulation was signed on January 14, 1915. The defendant then had three days from and after that time within which to serve and file her answer. The third day was Sunday, January 17th, and she therefore had all of Monday, January 18th, in which to file her answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 13. She tendered the same for filing on that day, and therefore was not in default, from which it follows that her default on that day was prematurely entered and the judgment predicated thereon erroneous. The circumstance that the time to answer, as limited by the terms of the stipulation, expired on the 16th, we deem to be immaterial, for the reason that the stipulation obviously was not intended to shorten defendant's time for answer, but was entered into by both parties upon the erroneous assumption that her time to answer would otherwise have expired on the 14th.

[8] The order denying defendant's motion for a default judgment against the plaintiff for failure to answer her cross-complaint was properly made.

"It is the law in this state and also in other jurisdictions where unlawful detainer statutes are in terms or essentially similar to our own that a counterclaim or cross-complaint of any kind or character is neither proper nor permissible in actions in unlawful detainer." Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, at page 527, 126 Pac. 512, at page 516, and cases there cited.

The judgment is reversed, and the case remanded to the superior court, with directions to vacate and set aside the entry of default against the defendant and to permit the defendant to file her answer herein as of date January 18, 1915.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION CLUB OF NEVADA COUNTY v. M. HIRSCH &
SON. (Civ. 2509.)

(District Court of Appeal. First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 23, 1919.)

1. ASSOCIATIONS $\S$ 20(2) — SUIT IN OWN NAME.

An unincorporated association cannot sue in its own name, and when it undertakes to do so the defect may be taken advantage of on the plea that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.

2. PARTIES $\S$ 76(1)—LACK OF CAPACITY TO SUE—FAILURE TO DEMUR—WAIVER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430, 433, 434, where fact that plaintiff was unincorporated association appeared affirmatively on face of complaint, but defendants did not urge on demurrer objection that plaintiff had not legal capacity to sue, they waived the objection.

3. PLEADING $\S$ 376—MATTERS TO BE PROVED—ADMISSION BY ANSWER.

Where defendants pleaded affirmatively in their answer that plaintiff was unincorporated association, composed of 100 or more members, and, as such, had not legal capacity to sue, admission was sufficient to sustain court's finding that plaintiff was such an association.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT $\S$ 103(1) — PURCHASING AGENT—AUTHORIZATION BY TELEGRAM.

Where local junk man had acted as defendants' agent in forwarding waste paper to them, defendants' telegram to him, authorizing him to offer so much a ton for folded newspapers, and another amount a ton for folded magazines, was such authorization to him to act as their agent that they were bound by his acceptance of purchased paper as being properly folded and bundled.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Agricultural Extension Club of Nevada County against M. Hirsch & Son. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Wm. B. White, of San Francisco, and R. H. Armstrong, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $323.95 and costs, for certain merchandise alleged to have been sold and delivered to the defendants. The facts of the case are briefly these:

The plaintiff is an unincorporated association of 100 or more persons in the county of Nevada. In the month of April, 1917, this association, in aid of some charitable object, conceived the idea of commencing a campaign for the collection of folded newspapers and folded magazines throughout Nevada county, for which, when collected, it was understood a market existed in Sacramento. The president of the association wrote to a local junk dealer, who had theretofore done some business for the defendants in that region, and asked him if he could handle the matter. He undertook to do so, and telephoned to the defendants at Sacramento, who, on April 5, 1917, sent him the following telegram:

"T. Griffiths, Grass Valley, Cal.

"We authorize you to offer sixteen dollars and fifty cents per ton for folded newspapers and twelve dollars and fifty cents per ton for folded magazines. These prices are f. o. b. Grass Valley. You can draw on us for the amount of the weight of these papers as per railroad weights.
M. Hirsch & Son."

Upon the receipt of this telegram the local junk man to whom it was directed assumed control of the shipment of the papers and magazines as the same were delivered to him at the depot in the town of Grass Valley, and were by him, as consignor, shipped to the defendants as consignees; the destination of the shipment being San Francisco. The defendants claimed and alleged in their amended answer, and offered to prove at the trial, that the said newspapers and magazines were not properly folded or bundled at their point of shipment, and hence arrived at their destination in an unmarketable condition, and on that account they refused to pay for the same, whereupon this action was begun.

Upon the trial the court found against the defendants upon their several defenses, and in favor of the plaintiff for the amount of its claim.

[1] The appellants' first contention is that the court erred in not finding in the defendants' favor upon the issues presented in its answer, to the effect that the plaintiff as an unincorporated association had not the legal capacity to sue. In the plaintiff's amended complaint it affirmatively appeared upon the face thereof that the plaintiff was an unincorporated association of 100 persons, none of whom were named as plaintiffs in the action. It is a well-settled principle of pleading that an unincorporated association cannot sue in its own name. When it undertakes to do so, however, the defect is one which may be taken advantage of upon the plea that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. Since this, however, is a dilatory plea, and since dilatory pleas are not favored in law, it has been uniformly held that the objection is one which must be taken advantage of at the earliest opportunity presented to the defendant or else it is waived.

[2] Section 430 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes the objection that the plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue a ground of demurrer when it appears upon the face of the complaint. Section 433 of the same Code provides that—

"When any of the matters enumerated in section 430 do not appear upon the face of the complaint the objection may be taken by answer."

Section 434 of said Code provides that—

"If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

Construing these several sections of the Code with special reference to the objection that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue, the Supreme Court has held that, when this objection does appear upon the face of the complaint, the defendant must take advantage of it by demurrer, and, if he does not do so, he waives the objection. Tingley v. Times, etc., Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097; Cal. Safe, etc., Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 112 Pac. 274, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 729. In the case at bar the fact that the plaintiff was an unincorporated association appeared affirmatively upon the face of the plaintiff's complaint. The defendants did not urge upon demurrer to said complaint the objection that the plaintiff had not the legal capacity to sue, and they must therefore be held to have waived said objection in accordance with the foregoing authorities.

[3] The appellants' next contention is that there was no evidence to sustain the finding of the trial court to the effect that the plaintiff was an unincorporated association. No evidence was needed to sustain this finding, since the defendants themselves pleaded affirmatively in their answer that the plaintiff was an unincorporated association composed of 100 or more members, and that as such it had not the legal capacity to sue. This admission alone was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court upon the subject.

[4] The appellants further contend that the evidence in the case disclosed that in the shipment of the papers and magazines in question the local junk man to whom their telegram had been directed, was acting as the agent of the plaintiff, and not as the agent of the defendants, and hence that the defendants were not bound by his acceptance of the said merchandise in the condition in which it there was at the point of shipment. This contention is, we think, without merit. The local junk man had acted as the defendants' agent in that region upon former occasions. The defendants' telegram to him was a direct authorization to act as their agent upon this occasion; nor do we think his agency was limited by the terms of said telegram to the acceptance only of newspapers and magazines which were folded in any particular way. Both he and his principals were junk men, and as such were presumably possessed of knowledge as to when merchandise of the kind in question here was in a proper state of folding or bundling for use in their peculiar trade. The plaintiff, on the other hand, could not, through its membership, be expected to possess this knowledge, and hence must be held to have been entitled to rely upon the defendants' agent for the assurance that their offered merchandise was in an acceptable condition when it was tendered for shipment at the depot in Grass Valley and was received and forwarded to the defendants without objection. We think, in short, that the evidence sufficiently shows an acceptance of the merchandise by the defendants through their agent at the point of shipment to bind them to the payment of the offered price.

This ruling disposes of the other contentions of the appellants as to the alleged errors of the court upon the admission or rejection of evidence during the trial of the cause.

Judgment affirmed.

1. ASSIGNMENTS ⇨136—EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note, plaintiff's ownership of the note, as assignee of the bank which formerly owned it, was sufficiently proved by plaintiff's production in evidence of an instrument, in due form, whereby the bank purported to transfer to plaintiff all of its notes and all assets of the bank.

2. PLEDGES ⇨19—OBLIGATIONS SECURED BY PLEDGE.

A recital in a note that collateral security was pledged "for the payment of this or any other liability of mine * * * when due, or to become due, or may hereafter be contracted," was sufficient to include within the protection of the security past-due obligations, as well as the note so reciting.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨330—DEFENSES AVAILABLE TO MAKER OF PLEDGED NOTE.

One whose note has been wrongfully pledged by the payee thereof, who had paid no consideration therefor, is not concerned with the manner in which the notes of such pledgor were acquired by the pledgee, in the absence of a claim that the pledgor had a defense against them.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨357—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—PLEDGE.

Pledgee's interest in a negotiable note deposited as pledge held one of an actual holder for value of the pledged note, and not of a mere assignee for purposes of collection.

5. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨167—NEGOTIABILITY—COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 3092, the fact that a stock certificate was pledged to the payee of a note as security therefor, even if known to one to whom the note was pledged by the payee as collateral security, did not affect the negotiability of the note.

6. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨343—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—FACTS PUTTING ON INQUIRY.

The mere fact that H., payee of defendant's note, and pledgee of defendant's stock deposited as security for such note, had both the note and stock certificate in his possession on a date prior to the maturity of the note, when he pledged both to plaintiff for his own obligation, did not put plaintiff on inquiry concerning the contract relations between H. and defendant.

7. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨497(2)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

When plaintiff has shown he acquired the note in suit before maturity, for value, and in the usual course of business, then, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken under circumstances creating the presumption that plaintiff knew facts impeaching its validity, the burden is upon defendant to show that plaintiff took with knowledge of defendant's equities.

8. CORPORATIONS — 123(19) — PLEDGE OF STOCK—BONA FIDES OF PLEDGEE.

Plaintiff pledgee, having taken certificate of stock indorsed in blank in good faith and without notice of the owner's claim, is entitled to retain it as security for the debt, although the stock stood on the books of the corporation in the name of the owner, and he had in fact pledged it, and his pledgee had wrongfully used the certificate by pledging it to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Action by the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank against Le Roy Armstrong. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Shankland, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Benjamin E. Page and Arthur C. Hurt, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, amicus curiae.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought by respondent to recover judgment against appellant on a promissory note made and executed by appellant to one E. E. Hewlett, dated March 21, 1913, for the sum of $25,000, due nine months after date. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

The plaintiff sued as pledgee of the note, alleging that the same had been indorsed and delivered to it by Hewlett as security for certain notes executed by him. The trial court found that the consideration for the Armstrong note, as between the defendant and Hewlett, had wholly failed, and also held that that was a negotiable instrument, and that the plaintiff, as pledgee, acquired the same as an indorsee in due course.

The note in question is similar to one which came before this court in Eastman v. Sunset Park Land Co., 35 Cal. App. 628, 170 Pac. 642. In that case the negotiability of the note was attacked upon the same grounds which are presented by appellant here. On the authority of that decision, we hold that the Armstrong note was a negotiable instrument.

On May 14, 1913, Hewlett executed to plaintiff a note for $11,000. This was done in consideration of the cancellation of an unsecured $11,000 note previously executed by Hewlett to the All Night and Day Bank, which had been assigned and delivered by that payee to the plaintiff. Hewlett had executed to the All Night and Day Bank two other unsecured one-day notes, of which one was for $9,000, dated May 1, 1912, and the other was for $2,500, dated February 1, 1913, both of which had been transferred to the plaintiff. The $11,000 note, of date May 14, 1913, executed by Hewlett to the plaintiff, referred to the security given by Hewlett as follows:

"I hereby pledge to and deposit with said bank as collateral security for the payment of this or any other liability or liabilities of mine to said bank when due, or to become due, or may hereafter be contracted, the following property: Note of Le Roy Armstrong dated March 21, 1913, due 9 months, for $25,000, and certificate No. 30 for 187 shares of the capital stock of the Pacific Coast Motor Car Company, the market value of which is now ——— dollars."

On May 14, 1913, when Hewlett executed the $11,000 note in favor of the plaintiff, he indorsed and delivered with it, to the plaintiff, the $25,000 note sued on in this case, together with said certificate of stock of Pacific Coast Motor Car Company. The certificate was issued to Le Roy Armstrong and bore date March 21, 1913. It carried a blank assignment, dated May 13, 1913, signed by Armstrong. The transaction of May 14, 1913, between Hewlett and the plaintiff, was conducted on the part of the plaintiff by C. R. Bell, who was the secretary of the plaintiff. He testified that he was secretary of the All Night and Day Bank from June, 1912, until it was merged with plaintiff in April, 1913, and that prior to June, 1912, he was cashier of the All Night and Day Bank. He testified that he did not distinctly remember his conversation with Mr. Hewlett at the time of the transaction of May 14, 1913. There is no evidence showing that Hewlett informed the plaintiff that the certificate of stock which he was pledging to the plaintiff was held by him in pledge or as security for the Armstrong note. There is not contained in that note, nor in the certificate of stock, nor in any document received by the plaintiff, any statement showing or indicating that the certificate of stock was held by Hewlett as security for the $25,000 note.

It was a fact, as the court correctly found from the evidence, that Hewlett held the certificate of stock only as pledgee and as security for the $25,000 note, that the stock was without value, that the consideration for the $25,000 note had wholly failed, and that as between Hewlett and Armstrong the act of Hewlett in pledging the note and certificate to the plaintiff was an act of bad faith on the part of Hewlett toward Armstrong, and was contrary to an agreement which Hewlett had made with Armstrong.

[1] Appellant claims that the evidence was insufficient to prove that the plaintiff was the owner of the notes which were found to have been assigned to the plaintiff by the All Night and Day Bank, especially in this: That there was no evidence of delivery of the instrument of assignment from the All Night and Day Bank to the plaintiff. We think that the evidence was sufficient. The plaintiff produced in evidence an instrument, in due form, whereby the All Night and Day Bank purported to transfer to the plaintiff all of its notes, etc., and all assets of the All Night and Day Bank. The evidence is sufficient to prove that this instrument, together with the notes, was in the possession of the plaintiff on and before the 14th day of May, 1913. The court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the admission of this instrument in evidence.

[2, 3] Appellant, in his answer, denied that the hypothecation of his note to the plaintiff was made to secure the $9,000 note or the $2,500 note. His contentions in support of this denial are not only that those notes had not been transferred by the All Night and Day Bank to the plaintiff, but also that the words contained in the $25,000 note, which we have quoted, referring to the pledge, were not sufficient to constitute a hypothecation covering those two notes. The judgment rendered herein against appellant was for a sum a little less than $25,000, being the aggregate of the principal of the three notes made by Hewlett, with interest and attorney fees thereon. Appellant contends that, if he is liable at all to the plaintiff, he should not be held for anything more than the new note of $11,000 made payable to the plaintiff. In support of these contentions counsel for appellant claims that the words "when due, or to become due, or may hereafter be contracted," are not sufficient to cover past-due obligations held by the plaintiff; also that the $9,000 note and $2,500 note were not taken in the ordinary course of business, and therefore cannot be deemed secured by the pledge of the Armstrong note. We think that the words above quoted from the Armstrong note are sufficient to cover past-due obligations; also we are of opinion that appellant is not concerned with the matter or the manner in which those notes were acquired by the plaintiff, there being no claim that Hewlett had any ground of defense against them. It is only with respect to the Armstrong note that the plaintiff was obliged to show that it was taken in the ordinary course of business.

[4] Appellant next contends that the Armstrong note was transferred to plaintiff for collection only, and that by reason of the pledge agreement contained in the note made by Hewlett to plaintiff the assignment of the Armstrong note to plaintiff becomes, not a general or special indorsement, but one upon a special contract; that for these reasons plaintiff holds the Armstrong note subject to the defendant's equitable defenses. The authorities cited by appellant in support of these propositions (Hays v. Plummer, 126 Cal. 107, 58 Pac. 447, 77 Am. St. Rep. 153; First National Bank v. Golden, 19 Cal.

App. 501, 126 Pac. 498) do not sustain the contention made by him. In the first-cited case the pledged note carried upon it no indorsement by the pledgor, and the plaintiff took it with actual knowledge of the circumstances out of which the defendant's equities arose. In the second case the pledged check was drawn against a savings bank, and was accompanied by a passbook, by means of which the plaintiff had notice of facts which rendered the check nonnegotiable. It is plain enough that the plaintiff, as pledgee of the Armstrong note, is not to be regarded as merely an assignee for purposes of collection. By reason of its interest as pledgee, it is an actual holder for value of the pledged note.

[5, 6] Appellant further contends that the note in controversy, at the time of its transfer to plaintiff, accompanied by the certificate of shares pledged by Armstrong to secure it, was by reason of the pledge sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry as to the contract of pledge, thus binding plaintiff by all the conditions relating to that contract and the execution of the note. The bare fact that the certificate was pledged to Hewlett to secure the Armstrong note, even if known to plaintiff, did not affect the negotiability of the note. Civ. Code, § 3092. But in fact the Armstrong note and the certificate do not contain anything sufficient to carry notice that the one was pledged as security for the other. The only fact bringing them together at all is the fact that Hewlett had both documents in his possession on the 14th day of May, 1913, and delivered them at the same time to the plaintiff in pledge for his own obligation to the plaintiff. Defendant has not brought home to the plaintiff knowledge of any facts sufficient to put the plaintiff upon inquiry concerning the contract relations which at the time of the pledge made to plaintiff may have existed as between Armstrong and Hewlett. In this case differs from the numerous authorities referred to in appellant's brief. It is not at all parallel to those instances where a note negotiable in form was pledged or otherwise transferred, together with or with notice of a mortgage securing the same, and where, on their face, the two instruments are parts of the same transaction.

[7] In the case at bar the plaintiff proved that it acquired the note in suit, before maturity, for value, and in the usual course of business. "When this is done, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken by the plaintiff under circumstances creating the presumption that he knew the facts impeaching its validity, the burden is cast upon the defendant to show, if he would defeat the plaintiff in his action, that the latter took the instrument with notice of the defendant's equities." Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873; Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v. Moretti, 170 Pac. 419. Under this rule, the evidence, to which we have referred, is sufficient to justify the court in its finding that the plaintiff did not have any notice or knowledge, express or implied, of the facts on which those equities depend.

[8] Appellant takes the position that because the shares of stock, notwithstanding the blank assignment indorsed upon the certificate of stock, stood in the name of Armstrong on the books of the corporation, the bank had no right to assume that the shares belonged to Hewlett. In Fowles v. National Bank of California, 167 Cal. 653, 140 Pac. 271, a blank indorsement had been made (similar to that shown in the case at bar) of a certificate of stock delivered in pledge; the shares remained in the name of the pledgor on the books of the corporation; the pledgee wrongfully used the certificate by pledging it to the defendant. Nevertheless it was held that, the bank having taken the certificate in good faith and without notice of the owner's claim, was entitled to retain it as security for the debt on account of which the certificate was received by it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; MYERS, Judge pro tem.

39 Cal. App. 523

LAMUS v. ENGWICHT et al. (Civ. 1895.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Jan. 30, 1919. On Rehearing, March 1, 1919.)

1. REPLEVIN ⚡59—PLEADING—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

Complaint in claim and delivery for possession of specific shares of stock fails to state a cause of action, where it omits to mention, describe, or identify the certificate representing the shares sued for.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⚡34(1)—ADVERSE CLAIM—PLEADING.

Complaint, alleging that defendants claim some right, title, or interest in shares of stock sought to be recovered, which claim is entirely without right, does not state a cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1050, authorizing action by one person against another to determine adverse claim which the latter makes against the former for money or property upon an alleged obligation.

3. QUIETING TITLE ⚡2—To PERSONALTY.

No action will lie to quiet title to personal property.

4. REPLEVIN ⚡22—PARTIES—JOINDER.

In claim and delivery for possession of specific shares of stock kept by deceased in vaults of defendant bank, executors who had never had possession of certificates, either actual or constructive, were improperly joined as parties defendant.

5. PLEADING ⚡403(2)—DEFECTS IN COMPLAINT—CURE BY ANSWER.

Where, in claim and delivery for possession of specific shares of stock, defendant pursuant to leave granted by court, filed in lieu of original answer a disclaimer, whereby it disclaimed all interest in the subject-matter of the action, original answer could not supply or cure averments in complaint essential to statement of cause of action.

6. PLEADING ⚡403(2)—COMPLAINT—DEFECTS—CURE BY ANSWER.

Where, in claim and delivery for possession of specific shares of stock, complaint failed to describe or identify certificate representing shares of stock of deceased sued for, answer admitting that defendant has in its possession 43 shares of stock issued to deceased would not cure defect.

7. PLEADING ⚡406(9)—INSUFFICIENT COMPLAINT—CURE BY EVIDENCE.

In claim and delivery, failure of complaint to describe or identify certificates representing shares of stock sued for was not overcome by the introduction of evidence disclosing that stock referred to was evidenced by a certificate, inasmuch as defendants objected to allowance of any and all evidence offered upon the ground that no cause of action was stated in complaint.

8. REPLEVIN ⚡100(1)—FINDINGS AND JUDGMENT—IDENTIFICATION OF PROPERTY.

Findings and judgment in claim and delivery, following averments of complaint, which did not describe or identify certificate representing shares of stock sued for, are too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to facilitate identification and seizure of property.

9. REPLEVIN ⚡10—IN POSSESSION OF DEFENDANT—EVIDENCE.

Although key to box containing papers sought to be recovered was given by deceased to plaintiff's minor to retain in his possession until after the former's death, defendant bank has such control over its vaults, in which the box is kept, that its possession and that of minor is joint, and claim and delivery is an appropriate action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by N. E. Lamus, as guardian of the person and estate of George Engwicht, a minor, against Harry Engwicht and another, as executors of the last will of George Engwicht, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

B. K. Collier, of Yreka, and Chenowith & Leininger and Carr & Kennedy, all of Redding, for appellants.

W. D. Tillotson, of Redding, for respondent.

HART, J. George Engwicht, plaintiff's minor, was adjudged to be the owner of 43 shares of the capital stock of the State Bank of Dunsmuir and was awarded the possession thereof.

Separate notices of appeal from the judgment were filed by the executors and by the bank; but, as both appeals are presented upon the same transcript and practically the same points for reversal of the judgment are urged by all the appellants, we will consider the appeals together.

As the names of the plaintiff's minor and the deceased whose estate he is suing are the same, we will herein refer to these parties as the minor and the decedent.

The facts are undisputed and are as follows: The decedent was the uncle of the minor and was, prior to his death, which occurred on the 31st day of January, 1916, the owner of considerable stock of the defendant bank, of which he had been president. The certificates representing his shares of stock, as well as other papers and securities, were kept by him in a safe deposit box in the vaults of the defendant bank. For some years prior to and at the time of his death, decedent resided at Dunsmuir, and the minor lived with his parents at Keswick, in Shasta county.

In the latter part of 1915, decedent wrote to the minor's parents, stating that he was ill and requesting that the minor, then about 19 years of age, be permitted to go to Dunsmuir to take care of him for a few weeks. The request was granted, and the minor went to Dunsmuir on the 23d day of November, 1915, and from then until the decedent died the minor stayed with his uncle, "ran errands for him, attended to his little affairs, going after his mail, packing his meals to him," until December 4, 1915, at which time a Mrs. Hattie L. Moore, of Red Bluff, came to assist in the care of the decedent. She remained until the death of decedent, and the minor continued to run errands for his uncle.

On the 5th day of January, 1916, decedent sent the minor to the State Bank of Dunsmuir to obtain his safety deposit box. The minor procured the box, took it to the house, and delivered it to the decedent with the keys. The latter called for pen, ink, and envelopes and was left alone. He retained the box for a day or two and then called the minor into the room where he was. Mrs. Moore and the minor both testified that decedent told the minor to take the box back to the bank and to keep the keys in his (the minor's) possession and not allow them out of his possession, and that in case anything should happen to him (decedent) to notify Mr. Tubbs, the tax appraiser at Yreka. The minor took the box to the bank and retained the keys.

On the day after the death of his uncle, the minor went to the bank. The vice president of the bank, the executors of the will of decedent, the attorney of the bank, and the minor examined the contents of the box. Among other papers therein was a sealed envelope, addressed to the minor, containing a certificate for 43 shares of the capital stock of the defendant bank, of the par value of $100 each indorsed: "George Engwicht." Upon the outside of the envelope was the following indorsement: "Property of George Engwicht, my nephew. To be delivered to him after my death. George Engwicht." The envelope was returned to the safe deposit box, the box was locked by the minor and placed by him in the vault, and he then locked the door and retained the keys. On July 6, 1916, demand was made on the bank for the delivery of the stock to the plaintiff. The bank refused the demand upon the ground that the same was claimed by the estate of the decedent.

The record shows that, as to the pleadings, the following proceedings took place: The complaint was filed July 17, 1916. It contained allegations of the appointment of plaintiff as guardian of the minor; the incorporation of the defendant bank; the appointment and qualification of the executors of the will of the decedent; "that on the 6th day of July, 1916, the said George Engwicht, a minor, was, and ever since said time has been, and now is, the owner and entitled to the possession of 43 shares of the capital stock of the said State Bank of Dunsmuir, which said stock was then and there, and ever since has been, and now is, in the possession of said bank;" that, on said day, demand was made by plaintiff on defendant bank for the delivery of said stock and that the bank refused to comply with said demand; that the executors claim some right, title, or interest in and to said 43 shares of stock, which claim is entirely without right. The prayer was: That said bank be required to deliver said stock to the plaintiff; that it be decreed that the executors have no right, title, or interest in or to said stock; and for judgment against the executors for costs.

On August 2, 1916, the bank and the executors filed separate answers, in which it was alleged that said shares of stock belonged to the estate of the decedent.

The cause was called for trial on the 20th day of February, 1917. At that time counsel for the bank was granted leave to strike out its answer and substitute therefor a disclaimer on the part of the bank, which was done. At the same time the executors were permitted to file an amendment to their answer, which they did. They then made a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which motion the court denied. Thereupon, plaintiff was permitted to file an amendment to the complaint, alleging the death of the decedent and the fact that his nephew is a minor. Defendants then asked permission to file a demurrer to the complaint, specifying several grounds, which was objected to by plaintiff as coming too late; it being admitted by plaintiff that the objection that the complaint does not state a cause of action can be taken advantage of at any stage of the proceedings, but an objection on other grounds cannot. The court overruled the objection, permitted the demurrer to be filed, and overruled that.

"A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." Civ. Code, § 1146.

A verbal gift is valid where the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, or where, if the thing given is capable of delivery, there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee. Civ. Code, § 1147.

"A gift in view of death is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver." Civ. Code, § 1149.

There can be no doubt that the evidence presented by this record would justify these findings: That the deceased, in contemplation of death, made a gift of 43 shares of the capital stock of the defendant bank to the said minor, that said stock was represented by a certificate, and that the donor gave to the donee a key to the box containing the certificate and directed him to retain it until after his death. And from such findings the court would be justified in concluding as a matter of law that the donor gave to the donee the means for obtaining possession of the certificate, if, indeed, not the actual possession of the certificate, and that the gift of the stock constituted a donatio causa mortis. Therefore, it is with much regret that we find that we are constrained to reverse the judgment and remand the cause for another trial for reasons now to be considered.

The appellants contended at the trial, as they here contend, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The point was raised by demurrer, interposed under the above-indicated circumstances, by a motion for judgment for the defendants on the pleadings, by objection to evidence on the specific ground that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, and by motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case. Among the grounds of demurrer were those of misjoinder of parties defendant and misjoinder of causes of action.

It will be conceded, no doubt, that the action here is not in conversion, there being no allegation that the stock was converted by the bank or any claim of damages for any wrongful conversion. It is clear that, so far as the defendant bank is concerned, the action is essentially one in replevin, or, as our Code designates an action for the recovery of the possession of specific personal property, claim and delivery. The complaint alleges that, on the 6th day of July, 1916, "the said George Engwicht, a minor, was, and ever since has been and now is, the owner and entitled to the possession of 43 shares of the capital stock of the State Bank of Dunsmuir"; that on said day he demanded of said bank that it deliver the said stock to the said plaintiff, which the said bank "refused to do, and still refuses to do."

As to the defendants, executors of the last will of the deceased, it is alleged that they (said executors) "claim some right, title, or interest in and to the said 43 shares of the capital stock of the said State Bank of Dunsmuir, which claim is entirely without right."

Nowhere does the complaint refer to or describe the certificate evidencing the stock referred to therein, nor is there any other attempt to describe or identify the particular stock to recover the possession of which this action was brought.

[1] That the mere reference in the complaint in such an action to recover possession of the stock of a corporation to the stock, without describing or referring to the certificate, if any there be, representing such stock, does not state a cause of action in claim and delivery, which is a possessory action, is not only an obvious proposition but one which has been so expressly determined by the cases. Ashton v. Heydenfeldt, 124 Cal. 14, 56 Pac. 624; Bell v. Bank of California, 153 Cal. 234, 94 Pac. 889. In these cases it is said, quoting from the syllabi in the first-named case:

"An action of claim and delivery will not lie to recover shares of stock in a corporation, where the proceeding is not aimed at the certificate representing the shares, and it is not mentioned or described in the complaint."

In other words, where the action is for the recovery of the possession of specific shares of stock, the complaint fails to state a cause of action in claim and delivery where it omits to mention or describe or identify in some appropriate way the certificate representing the shares so sued for.

The rationale of the rule as thus stated is obvious, and it is that, since an action in replevin or claim and delivery is, in its very nature, wholly adapted to the recovery of the possession of specific personal property, the property so sought to be recovered must exist in some concrete or tangible form, capable of identification and seizure. Therefore, since "stock" in a corporation is "an incorporeal, intangible thing, and therefore incapable of identification or seizure under the writ," the proceeding must be aimed at the certificate representing the shares, if any there be. If there be no certificate of the shares, then, as stated, the action of claim and delivery obviously does not afford the proper remedy either for compelling the corporation to issue the stock to the party claiming to own it or for determining which of two or more adverse claimants of the stock is entitled to have the certificate thereof issued and delivered to him.

[2-4] As to the defendants (executors of the last will of the deceased), the complaint does not charge that they ever had, or now have, possession, either actual or constructive, of the stock. Obviously, the action of claim and delivery is not available or appropriate as against them. Nor, as against said defendants, does the complaint state a cause of action under section 1050 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes an action by "one person against another for the purpose of determining an adverse claim, which the latter makes against the former for money or property upon an alleged obligation." So far as the executors are concerned, the allegations of the complaint are more in the nature of or appropriate to an action to quiet title, but it is well settled that no action will lie in this state to quiet title to personal property. Fudickar v. East Riverside Irr. Dist., 109 Cal. 29, 41 Pac. 1024; Gagossian v. Arakelian, 9 Cal. App. 571, 99 Pac. 1113. Viewing, then, the action against the bank as one in claim and delivery, it is evident that the executors are not proper parties to the suit and were improperly joined. In any event, however, it is clear that the complaint does not state a cause of action of any character against the executors. It follows that since, as above shown, no cause of action in claim and delivery against the bank is stated in the complaint, the court below should have sustained both demurrers to that pleading.

[5, 6] But it is argued by the respondent that the answer of the bank supplied and so cured the pretermitted averment in the complaint essential to the statement of a cause of action in claim and delivery to recover the possession of the stock. We do not think that it can properly be so held.

The bank, as seen, was granted leave by the court to strike out its answer, originally interposed, and file in lieu thereof a disclaimer, whereby it disclaimed any and all interest in the "subject-matter of the above-entitled action." This amendment superseded and eliminated from the case as a pleading the answer previously filed by the bank. While an original complaint, superseded by an amended complaint, may be considered for some purposes—as, for instance, to determine when the action has been commenced or whether a new cause of action, different from that stated in the original complaint, has been set up in the amended complaint—yet it performs no function as a pleading in the case. We can see no purpose which a superseded answer can subserve, particularly where the amended answer sets forth a full defense to the action or where, as here, the defendant by the amended answer disclaims or renounces any interest in the subject-matter of the action. Certainly it cannot be considered for the purpose of supplying essential facts omitted from the complaint for the very obvious reason that the only live pleadings in the case are those by which the issues of fact have been framed and upon which the trial was had. It seems to us that, to permit an examination of an answer which, as a pleading, has become functus officio in the action by reason of the filing of an amended answer, for the purpose of finding some averment or admission therein which, if the answer had not been amended and so had remained as the answer, would have cured a defect in the complaint, otherwise fatal, would in practical effect be the same as attempting to cure such a defect by proving that the defendant had extrajudicially admitted the alleged curative fact. But, conceding that the original answer may be considered for the purpose suggested, yet we are still of the opinion that it could not have the effect of aiding the complaint in the statement of a cause of action, since it nowhere refers to or mentions the certificate representing the stock, although it admits that the bank has in its possession 43 shares of its capital stock, which was issued to the deceased in his lifetime. The rule requiring, in an action of claim and delivery for the recovery of the possession of shares of stock in a corporation, that the proceeding shall "be aimed at the certificate representing the stock" so sued for and that the complaint must therefore describe the stock or in some manner so refer to it as clearly to show that the certificate is the thing whose possession is thus sought, is, as has been shown, based upon the proposition that the action of claim and delivery is for the recovery of the possession of specific personal property and that, to render that form of action available, it must of necessity be shown by the complaint as well as by the proofs that the property so sued for is in a form susceptible of physical possession or capable of seizure. The answer, no less than the complaint, falls far short of disclosing that the "43 shares of stock" are represented or evidenced by a certificate or have any existence as property except in mere contemplation of the mind.

[7] Nor was the effect of the failure of the complaint to state a cause of action overcome by the introduction of evidence disclosing that the stock referred to in the plaintiff's pleading was evidenced by a certificate, inasmuch as the appellants objected to the allowance of any and all of the evidence offered by the plaintiff, including that represented by the certificate itself, upon the ground, among others, that no cause of action was stated in the complaint.

[8] It is further objected that the findings and judgment are too vague, indefinite, and uncertain to facilitate identification and seizure of the property therein referred to. This is necessarily so, since the findings and the judgment follow the averments of the complaint and merely find and adjudge that the plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to the possession of "43 shares of the capital stock of the State Bank of Dunsmuir."

[9] We do not, however, agree with counsel for the appellants in the contention that the defendant bank has no possession of the certificate of stock which was given to the plaintiff's minor. While the evidence shows it to be true that the minor has in legal contemplation possession of the certificate, the bank nevertheless has such control over the deposit vault in which the box containing the certificate is kept as that it may prevent any person from taking from the vault any box or papers therein deposited. It is therefore correct to say that the bank and the minor have joint possession of the box and its contents, assuming, of course, that the evidence will show, as the evidence in the present record seems clearly enough to show, that the key to the box was given by the deceased to the minor to retain in his possession until after the former's death; a circumstance strongly tending to prove that the possession of the box was given over to the minor by the deceased. It follows that, as to the bank, claim and delivery is an appropriate action.

We think that, under the circumstances of this case, the plaintiff should be permitted to amend his complaint; and therefore the judgment is reversed, with a direction to the court below to allow the plaintiff, if he be so advised, to amend his complaint in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem.; BURNETT. J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The appellants, petitioning for a rehearing of this cause, particularly object to that portion of our former opinion in which we held that the evidence as disclosed by the present record that the deceased, during his fatal illness, inclosed in an envelope certain shares of stock of the State Bank of Dunsmuir, with an indorsement on the back of said envelope that the contents thereof were the property of his nephew, to be delivered to him after the death of deceased, and thereupon placed the envelope in his (deceased's) private box and delivered the latter, with the key thereto, to his nephew, with instructions that the box be returned to the safe deposit vault in the bank, which was done by the minor, who retained in his possession the keys to the box and the vault, appeared to show a causa mortis gift of the stock to said minor. It is in the petition vigorously contended that whether the facts as developed by the evidence showed a donatio causa mortis is at least debatable, and that that proposition should not now be decided.

Upon a careful consideration of the petition, we have been persuaded that there appears to be some force in the argument of counsel upon that proposition, and that, since what was said thereon upon that question was wholly unnecessary to the decision of the principal point submitted by the appeal and discussed in the briefs, the proposition should not be decided here. Another trial might result in bringing out evidence addressed to that question not brought out at the trial already had which would more clearly disclose the legal nature of the transaction than does the evidence now before us. It is not deemed necessary, though, to grant a rehearing and thus postpone the final disposition of the case for several months. Therefore the former opinion will be and is hereby modified by striking therefrom the following language:

"A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." Civ. Code, § 1146.

"A verbal gift is valid where the means of obtaining possession and control of the thing are given, or where, if the thing given is capable of delivery, there is an actual or symbolical delivery of the thing to the donee." Civ. Code, § 1147.

"A gift in view of death is one which is made in contemplation, fear, or peril of death, and with intent that it shall take effect only in case of the death of the giver." Civ. Code, § 1149.

"There can be no doubt that the evidence presented by this record would justify these findings: That the deceased, in contemplation of death, made a gift of 43 shares of the capital stock of the defendant bank to the said minor, that said stock was represented by a certificate, and that the donor gave to the donee a key to the box containing the certificate and directed him to retain it until after his death. And from such findings the court would be justified in concluding as a matter of law that the donor gave to the donee the means for obtaining possession of the certificate, if, indeed, not the actual possession of the certificate, and that the gift of the stock constituted a donatio causa mortis. Therefore, it is with much regret that we find that we are constrained to reverse the judgment and remand the cause for another trial for reasons now to be considered."

With the foregoing modification of the opinion, the petition for a rehearing will be and the same is hereby denied.

MOCH et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY
et al. (Civ. 2805.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENT — 570(5) — CONCLUSIVENESS
— DISMISSAL — MERITS.

Whether judgment is a final adjudication on merits is to be determined, not on basis of any single word or phrase used, such as word "dismiss," but upon a consideration of entire judgment together with pleadings and findings.

2. INFANTS — 19 — ABANDONED CHILDREN — STATUTES.

The purpose of Juvenile Court Law, § 15, is to provide machinery and prescribe procedure in which state may assume control of unfortunate children who should be removed from parental custody, but such procedure is not designed for adjudication or determination, as between parents of child, as to which one of them is entitled to its custody.

3. INFANTS — 19 — ABANDONED CHILDREN.

The intent to abandon child is a decisive factor in proceeding under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, to declare child free from custody and control of parents; failure to provide for child for one year being only presumptive evidence of abandonment.

4. INFANTS — 19 — ABANDONMENT — STATUTES — PROCEEDINGS.

Proceedings under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, to declare an abandoned child free from the custody of its parents, is a special proceeding, neither criminal nor quasi criminal in its nature.

5. INFANTS — 19 — ABANDONED CHILDREN.

Intent to abandon child being decisive factor in proceeding under Juvenile Court Laws, § 15, to declare child free from custody and control of parents, fact that parent was a ward of juvenile court, under section 6, and deprived of her liberty, is immaterial on question whether or not child was abandoned.

6. JUDGMENT — 570(5) — CONCLUSIVENESS
— STATUS OF CHILD.

A decision, in proceeding under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, to declare infant abandoned and free from custody and control of its parents, that petition was prematurely filed in that mother of child, in accordance with section 6, was a ward of juvenile court and deprived of her liberty, was not a decision on the merits; there being no finding that there was "an intent to abandon."

7. INFANTS — 19 — PROCEEDINGS IN JUVENILE COURT — ORDERS APPEALABLE.

No appeals can be taken from any decision within scope of Juvenile Court Law, except from those enumerated in section 23 thereof, though Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 1, provides for appeals in special proceedings.

8. MANDAMUS — 31 — APPLICATION.

Where court, in proceeding under Juvenile Court Law, § 15, to declare an infant abandoned and free from control of its parents, dismissed proceeding for want of jurisdiction on ground that mother was a ward of juvenile court and deprived of her liberty, not passing on question of "intent to abandon," mandamus will lie to require the court to proceed with hearing and determination of status of child.

Petition by Sam Moch and Myra Moch for a peremptory writ of mandate against the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles in the State of California and another. Writ ordered to issue.

Hunsaker & Britt and Le Roy M. Edwards, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Vincent Morgan, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, and Argabrite & Drapeau, of Ventura, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an application after notice for a peremptory writ of mandate to require the respondent, sitting as a juvenile court, to proceed with the hearing and determination of a proceeding before it under section 15 of the Juvenile Court Law (Act 1770a of Deering's General Laws, p. 747). There is no controversy as to the facts, and the matter is submitted upon the petition for the writ and general demurrer thereto.

The petitioners herein filed their petition in said juvenile court November 30, 1917, to have one Donna Spencer Lee, an infant child, declared free from the custody and control of her parents, as provided in said section 15 of said act. It was alleged that petitioners had received said child July 27, 1916, from the Children's Home Finding Society, and had ever since kept and maintained her in their home; that the father had abandoned said child, and its mother shortly after the birth of the former and had never contributed anything to its support; that on May 27, 1916, the mother, "with the intention of then and there abandoning, relinquishing and surrendering her infant child," signed and executed a written relinquishment of the child to Mrs. Porter, a probation officer, and then left said child in the care and custody of said Mrs. Porter without any provision for its support, since which time she has never contributed in any manner to the support or maintenance of said child; that said mother was, on or about October 18, 1916, committed to the State School for Girls, at Ventura, Cal., as a ward of the juvenile court, where she has since remained; that said petitioners were desirous of adopting said child, and therefore prayed for an order of court adjudging said child free and clear of the custody and control of her parents.

A citation to the parents of the child was duly issued and served, in response to which the mother, Donna Lee, appeared and filed her answer. She alleged that she had supported said child until she (the mother) was declared a ward of the juvenile court, since which time she had been unable to do so by reason of her confinement under order of that court. She admitted the execution of the written relinquishment alleged in the petition, but denied that it was with the intention of abandoning or relinquishing or surrendering said child. She alleges that it was signed and acknowledged by her without understanding of its meaning or effect, and she disavows it and asks to have it canceled.

The father, James Lee, defaulted, and a trial was had upon the allegations of the petition and answer above mentioned, and, upon evidence presented by both parties, the matter was submitted. The trial judge signed and filed "findings of fact and conclusions of law" and a "judgment." He found all of the facts which were admitted by the pleadings and, upon issues framed by the pleadings, he found certain of the probative facts, but none of the ultimate facts. He found that the written relinquishment was executed by the mother, as alleged in the petition, and that it was revoked by her at the time of filing her answer, but not prior thereto. Petitioners contend that from this probative finding the ultimate finding of "abandonment" should be deduced. But, on the other hand, the court found:

"That said Donna Spencer Lee was, on the 15th day of February, 1916, left with Mrs. Earl Meanor by said respondent under an oral agreement to compensate said Mrs. Meanor for its care and custody and that said oral agreement has never been revoked by said respondent."

Counsel for the respondent here argue that from this latter finding we should deduce the ultimate fact that the child was never abandoned by its mother. The crucial issues in the case were the questions whether or not the relinquishment was executed by the mother with the "intention of abandoning" the child, and, if so, then, whether or not such intention persisted for a period of one year thereafter. Upon these issues the court made no finding.

In its conclusions of law and judgment:

The court "ordered that said child, in so far as James Lee, the father, is concerned, is a person coming within the meaning of section 15 of the Juvenile Court Law, * * * and is adjudged to be free from the custody and control of said James Lee, but that said petition is prematurely filed, in so far as it applies to said respondent Donna Lee, in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the Juvenile Court Law, in that the said Donna Lee has been a ward of the juvenile court since the 6th day of September, 1916, and has by order of this court been deprived of her liberty since that date and confined in the California School for Girls at all times since the 13th day of April, 1917, and that therefore said petition is hereby ordered dismissed, in so far as the respondent Donna Lee is concerned."

(We have not been advised by counsel nor have we succeeded in determining the relevance of said subdivision 6 to the matters here under consideration.)

Counsel for the respondent take the position that this judgment was a determination of the merits of the proceeding upon the evidence submitted to the court, and that therefore nothing remains to be done by that court which can be required to be done by a writ of mandate; and, second, that it constitutes a final judgment in a special proceeding from which an appeal is provided for by subdivision 1 of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] In considering the question whether or not this judgment was an adjudication of the merits of the controversy, it must be conceded that the use of the word "dismissed" is not determinative. The cases are not rare wherein judgments or orders purporting to be merely "dismissals" have been held to be final adjudications upon the merits. This question is to be determined, not on the basis of any single word or phrase used, but upon a consideration of the entire "judgment," together with the pleadings and the findings, in the light of the provisions, the scope, and the apparent purpose of the Juvenile Court Law. It is evident that one of the purposes of this law is to provide the machinery and prescribe the procedure by which the state may assume control of those unfortunate children who, by reason either of financial incapacity or moral unfitness of their parents, should, for their own welfare, be removed from the parental custody. Matter of Guardianship of Michels, 170 Cal. 339, 342, 149 Pac. 587. And so it named the forum and prescribed the conditions under which and the procedure by which such a child could be judicially determined to be free from the custody and control of its parents. It is equally apparent upon consideration that this forum and this procedure were not designed for adjudication and determination as between the two parents of a child as to which one of them was entitled to its custody. That which the juvenile court was here called upon to adjudicate and determine was the status of the child; whether it was a child "subject" to the parental custody and control, or "free" therefrom.

[3-6] The question here is: Has the court in this proceeding adjudicated the status of the child Donna Spencer Lee? For the purposes of this case we may assume, without deciding, that it has done so, so far as the father is concerned. With respect to the question of the parental rights of the mother, could this judgment be successfully interposed as an estoppel? We think not. The law defines a person who should be declared free from the custody and control of his parents as one "who has been left in the care and custody of another by his parent or parents, without any provision for his support or without communication from such parent or parents for the period of one year, with the intent to abandon such person." The italics are ours, but it is clear that the "intent" is the decisive factor, and it has been in effect so held. In re Cordy, 169 Cal. 150, 146 Pac. 532, 534; Guardianship of Snowball, 156 Cal. 240, 104 Pac. 444; Matter of Schwartz, 171 Cal. 633, 154 Pac. 304. The allegation of the intention to abandon was the one vital allegation of the petition which was traversed by the answer, but upon that issue the court made no finding. It is apparent that this omission was intentional and that the trial judge purposely refrained from finding upon this issue because of his opinion that he was precluded from so doing, either by the circumstance that the mother was then a ward of the juvenile court, or by the fact that she was then restrained of her liberty and confined in a state institution, or by the fact that she had been so confined continuously from a point of time within less than a year after the execution of the relinquishment above referred to. Counsel have not furnished us with either reason or authority for concluding that either of these circumstances would have the effect of depriving the court of jurisdiction or authority to proceed with the hearing and determination of this matter. This was a special proceeding, neither criminal nor quasi criminal in its nature. The Juvenile Court Law contains no provision for an exception in the case of a parent so restrained. Neither do we find any provision in the Codes or general laws which either directly or by implication would render such a situation a ground for abatement of the proceeding. Neither the circumstance of the mother being adjudged a ward of the juvenile court or deprived of her liberty would have any necessary effect upon her purpose to abandon her child, if she held such purpose; nor would it prevent her from manifesting a change of such purpose if she experienced such change. The court found that, after this proceeding was instituted, the mother revoked the relinquishment theretofore executed by her. If she could revoke it then, she could have done so sooner. A failure to provide for a period of one year does not operate to constitute the child an abandoned child. It is merely "presumptive evidence of an intent to abandon." The presumption thus created could therefore be overcome by opposing evidence, and, when it is made to appear that the failure to provide was by reason of inability to do so, less evidence than under other circumstances would naturally be required to overthrow such presumption. But the crucial question, the question of the existence and of the persistence for a year of "an intent to abandon," is at all times a question of fact upon which it is the duty of the trial court in such proceeding to find. We conclude therefore that the judgment here in question is not a final judgment, and that it did not determine on the merits the issues which were presented to the court for determination.

[7] It follows, then, that the writ should issue, unless the petitioners have some other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. In this connection the respondent contends that a right of appeal is provided by section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 1, which provides for an appeal "from a final judgment entered in an action, or special proceeding, commenced in a superior court." While we have concluded that the judgment in question was not a final judgment in the sense of an adjudication on the merits of all the questions there submitted to the court, nevertheless it did finally dispose of that case, so far as that court was concerned; so that it must be regarded as a final judgment, so far as the question of the right of appeal is concerned. Saul v. Moscone, 16 Cal. App. 506, 118 Pac. 452; Wood v. Missouri, etc., Ry. Co., 152 Cal. 344, 347, 92 Pac. 868. This is admittedly a special proceeding of a civil nature, and, if there were no provision respecting appeals in the Juvenile Court Law itself, we should hold the provision of section 963 above quoted applicable thereto, under the authority of People v. Bank of San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 261, 92 Pac. 481. But that act does contain such a provision. Section 23 thereof provides:

"Every judgment or decree of a juvenile court assuming jurisdiction and declaring any person to be a ward of the juvenile court or a person free from the custody and control of his parents may be appealed from in the same manner as any final judgment, and any subsequent order may be appealed from as from an order after judgment."

This presents an apt situation for the application of the maxim, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius." No other conclusion may reasonably be drawn therefrom than that the Legislature did not intend thereby to provide for appeals from judgments and orders within the scope of that act other than those there enumerated. Peralta v. Castro, 15 Cal. 511; Frاندzen v. County of San Diego, 101 Cal. 317, 321, 35 Pac. 897.

[8] It is our conclusion, therefore, that the court below, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, declined to proceed and determine the issues submitted to it upon their merits, solely because of a mistaken conception of its jurisdiction or authority in the premises, and that no appeal lies from its judgment so rendered.

"Under such circumstances, the court cannot, by holding without reason that it has no jurisdiction of the proceeding, divest itself of jurisdiction, and evade the duty of hearing and determining it." Temple v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699.

The circumstance that the issuance of the writ prayed for will have the incidental effect of annulling (without a writ of certiorari) the judgment of dismissal is no ground for denying it. Golden Gate Tile Co. v. Superior Court, 159 Cal. 474, 114 Pac. 978.

Let the writ issue as prayed for.

NELLIGAN et al. v. KNUTSEN. (Civ. 1813.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 27, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 27, 1918.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §930(2)—PRESUMPTION—INSTRUCTIONS FOLLOWED.

Where the court by instruction told the jury in explicit terms not to regard or consider certain testimony in reaching their verdict, the presumption is that they obeyed the instruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

On rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 175 Pac. 18.

Wm. N. Graybiel, of Turlock, and E. H. Zion, of Modesto, for appellant.

R. R. Fowler, of Turlock, and James L. Crittenden, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In his petition for a rehearing, appellant, among other points therein made, declares that, in reaching our conclusion as announced in the original opinion, we considered the testimony of Nelligan as to the price at which corn could be sold in Santa Rosa. In reply, we take occasion to say that we based our decision solely upon the proposition that the record contained sufficient evidence to support the verdict in all vital particulars growing out of the issues made and tried, and that, although we referred in our opinion to the testimony relative to the price at which corn could be sold in Santa Rosa, we attached no significance thereto so far as the verdict was concerned. That testimony was by the court taken from the jury in an instruction in which they were told in explicit terms not to regard or consider it in reaching their verdict, and the presumption is that they obeyed the instruction and disregarded the testimony.

As to the remaining grounds upon which a rehearing is asked, we are satisfied with our original opinion, and a rehearing is, therefore, denied.

PEOPLE v. TOBIN. (Cr. 811.)

CRIMINAL LAW §511(7)—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—CONFESSION OF DEFENDANT.

Where the corpus delicti has been established by the testimony of an accomplice, the necessary corroboration may be furnished by the confession of the defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Caba-niss, Judge.

Austin W. Tobin was convicted of the infamous crime against nature and from judgment of conviction and from order denying motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

John F. Glover, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rior-dan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of the infamous crime against nature, and appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The record conclusively establishes the guilt of the defendant. The verdict is based upon the frank testimony of an accomplice, but which was corroborated by the equally frank confession of the defendant, made to representatives of the San Francisco police department and the United States army; nor did the defendant, although he took the witness stand, unequivocally and categorically deny the commission of the offense, but contented himself with stating that he and his particeps criminis were intoxicated at the time, and denied knowledge of the act charged. As to his confession, testified to by the officers, this remained uncontradicted.

It is settled law in this state that where the corpus delicti has been established by the testimony of an accomplice, the necessary corroboration may be furnished by the confession of the defendant. People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 Pac. 20; People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 400.

There is no merit in the further contention of the appellant that his confession was not free and voluntary. Its character in this respect was established by witnesses, and by the contents of the confession itself, which was in writing.

It is also claimed in support of the appeal that the court indulged in remarks during the course of the trial prejudicial to the rights of the defendant; but the record on appeal does not disclose any such, nor that the defendant during the trial made any objection of the character now advanced, nor any assignment of conduct prejudicial to his rights.

Finally, the contention is made by the appellant that the court erred in refusing to read to the jury section 1111 of the Penal Code with respect to the testimony of accomplices. No such instruction was requested. The defendant asked for certain instructions, which were given as requested, with the exception of the final portion of one of them. The omitted portion was to the effect that a confession alone will not sustain a conviction, and was refused by the court because the state of the evidence before the jury rendered it inapplicable. The court did instruct the jury that it is "established law that extrajudicial confessions and verbal admissions should be received with caution and viewed with distrust."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DIAL v. HOMESTEAD LAND & BUILDING CO. et al. (Civ. 2629.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1919.)

VENUE §5(4)—CHANGE OF VENUE—"REAL ACTIONS."

An action instituted by a stockholder of a corporation to set aside a resolution fraudulently adopted, and conveyance of real estate made in pursuance thereof, was in nature of a "real action," which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, must be tried in the county where the real estate is situated, although an accounting, dependent upon the determination of the ownership of the land, was prayed for.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Real Action.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by W. H. Dial against the Homestead Land & Building Company and others. From an order changing the place of trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Dial, J. O. Davis, of Berkeley, and J. Early Craig, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, and Pardee & Pardee, of Susasville, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, changing the place of trial of this action from the said city and county of San Francisco, in which the action was brought, to the county of Lassen, in which the real estate affected by the action is situated. The action was one instituted by the plaintiff as one of the stockholders of the defendant Homestead Land & Building Company, to have vacated and set aside a certain resolution of said last-named corporation, which plaintiff alleges to have been fraudulently adopted, and also to have set aside a certain conveyance of the real estate in question made by it in pursuance thereof to said defendant Bank of Lassen County, a corporation, and to obtain a decree of said court directing a reconveyance of said real estate from said Bank of Lassen County to said Homestead Land & Building Company; and also to obtain certain other equitable relief. The defendants moved for a change of place of trial of said action to the county of Lassen as the place where the real estate in question is situated. The court granted such motion.

The sole question presented upon this appeal is whether this action is in the nature of a real action which, under the provisions of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, must be tried in the county where the real estate is situated.

We are of the opinion that it is such an action. The principal relief which the plaintiff seeks, as appears from the prayer of his complaint, is a reconveyance of the title to the lands in question from the defendant Bank of Lassen County to the defendant Homestead Land & Building Company. The plaintiff has thus by his own pleading and prayer for relief determined the character of this action to be one the real substance and purpose of which is to have it determined that the Homestead Land & Building Company is the equitable owner of the premises in question, and to have its legal title to the same re-established by a conveyance from the other defendant to it. The case is thus, we think, brought clearly within the principles laid down in the cases of Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820, and Bradley Bros. v. Bradley, 20 Cal. App. 1, 127 Pac. 1044. It is true that in each of these cases the question presented was that of the application of the statute of limitations and not that of the change of the place of trial; but notwithstanding this difference the question presented was the same, viz., what was the nature of the action; and hence the reasoning of those cases must be given application to the case at bar. The fact that the plaintiff in this action does not seek to establish title to the property in himself, but in the corporation of which he alleges himself to be a stockholder, is immaterial, since an action brought by a stockholder of a corporation for its benefit and to obtain remedies for it, which its governing body refuses to take legal steps to seek, is in its essence an action brought by the corporation itself. Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 Pac. 272.

The final contention of the appellant herein that the action is one also involving personal property, which the plaintiff would have the right to have tried in the county of his selection, is without merit. No personal property is described in the complaint, and the accounting which the plaintiff seeks on behalf of his corporation is one to which he or it could only be entitled upon the determination that said corporation was the owner of, and was to be reinvested with the title to, the real estate. It would thus be a mere incident to the main relief sought, which as we have seen, was the recovery of the real estate.

HOLCOMB v. JUSTER et al. (Civ. 2631.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1919.)

1. EXECUTION ☞75—TIME FOR ISSUANCE.

Where, on February 23d, when trial court announced judgment for plaintiff, a stay of execution of ten days was granted, an execution immediately taken out, after judgment was filed on February 28th, was illegally issued.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ☞485(1)—RETURN OF MONEY OBTAINED BY MEANS OF ILLEGAL EXECUTION—SUPERSEDEAS.

Where, on application for writ of superseas, it appears that moneys in the hands of plaintiff and his attorney were obtained by means of illegal execution and levy, the moneys together with interest will be ordered returned.

Action by N. R. Holcomb against Max Juster and others. Judgment for plaintiff. On defendants' application for writ of superseas. Ordered that plaintiff and his attorney pay to defendants moneys obtained by means of an illegal execution and levy.

Herbert Choynski, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Arthur W. Perry and Norman A. Eisner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of superseas. The facts pertinent to the application include the following: The plaintiff sued the defendants as copartners and obtained a judgment. On February 23, 1918, the trial court announced that its judgment was in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, and the latter asked and were granted a stay of execution of ten days from the date of the entry of the judgment. Later the findings were prepared, signed, and filed, and a judgment was filed February 28, 1918. Immediately thereafter an execution was taken out, delivered to the sheriff, and was by him levied on funds of Mendel Topper, one of the defendants. The execution was so levied on a savings bank account of Topper in the Humboldt Savings Bank of San Francisco, and there was so collected, $817.75; and it was levied on credits owing by F. W. Woolworth Company, and there was collected from it $155. The record admits that the plaintiff and his attorney will hold and retain said moneys. The defendants did not know of said levy until March 5, 1918. They immediately applied to the trial court for relief, but their motion did not come on for hearing until March 22, 1918. In the meantime, March 13, 1918, the defendants perfected their appeal from the judgment. When the motion came on for hearing, it was resisted on the ground that jurisdiction had vested in this court. Said motion was denied April 6, 1918, "for want of jurisdiction," and thereupon this application was made.

[1, 2] It is clear that there was no instant of time when an execution could have legally issued; but, nevertheless, it appears that the writ did issue and that the plaintiff and his attorney hold said money as the fruits of such illegal issue and levy. They cannot retain the same, but must return the money to the payors of the same. Romine v. Cralle, 83 Cal. 432, 23 Pac. 525. In the present case the order of the court will be that N. R. Holcomb, the plaintiff, and Arthur W. Perry, his attorney, pay to the defendants within ten days $972.75, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from February 28, 1918.

It is so ordered.

MULCAHY v. GAGLIARDO. (Civ. 2494.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California, Division 1. Jan. 24, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ☞49—PROVISION FOR SELLER'S PROCURING LOAN FOR BUYER.

Contract provision that vendor's agents, to enable buyer to finance the purchase, should procure a loan for him upon the security of the tract to be conveyed and also other land then owned by him, was performed when vendor's agents procured a person ready and willing to make the loan upon the stipulated terms, despite buyer's failure to consummate the loan, because his wife, after the contract was made, caused a homestead to be placed upon the property owned by him, and thereafter refused to execute the papers necessary to consummate the loan.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 335—BREACH BY BUYER—RETENTION OF DEPOSIT.

Seller, on buyer's breach, may retain buyer's deposit to his own use.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — 335—BREACH BY BUYER—FORFEITURE OF NOTE.

Seller of land, to whom buyer gives promissory note for part of price, on buyer's breach has same right to retain note to his use that he would have had to retain any deposit of money, particularly where written agreement stipulated that buyer, on failure to perform, should forfeit deposit, so that he cannot complain of effort of seller or transferees to enforce note.

4. BILLS AND NOTES — 92(6)—NOTE FOR PART OF PRICE OF LAND—CONSIDERATION.

Agreement to sell lands, and detriment suffered by seller through prevention from making sale to another during life of agreement, constituted sufficient consideration for buyer's note given by buyer for part of price.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by M. F. Mulcahy against A. G. Gagliardo. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Rea and A. A. Caldwell, both of San Jose, for appellant.

C. D. Cavallaro, of San Jose, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action was brought to recover judgment upon a promissory note for the sum of $1,000, and interest, payable one day after date, executed by the defendant to Rancadore & Cavala, a firm of real estate agents, and assigned by them to the plaintiff for collection.

The stipulated record on appeal embraces the pleadings, the findings, the minute orders, the judgment, and the notice of appeal. The facts of the case, as found by the court, are briefly these:

One F. S. Gomes was on May 3, 1917, and thereafter the owner of a tract of orchard land in the county of Santa Clara containing 19½ acres. On that date the defendant, A. G. Gagliardo, entered into a written agreement with said Gomes, through the agents of the latter, Rancadore & Cavala, for the purchase by Gagliardo of Gomes' said tract of land for the sum of $17,000, of which sum he was to pay $1,000 as a cash deposit and part payment upon the purchase price. In lieu of making said agreed payment Gagliardo gave to said Rancadore & Cavala, as the agents of Gomes, the promissory note for $1,000, which forms the basis of this action. The balance of the purchase price was by the terms of said agreement to be secured and paid to Gomes in the following manner: Rancadore & Cavala were, within a reasonable time, to secure a loan for Gagliardo in the sum of $21,500, which the latter was to secure by a mortgage or deed of trust upon the Gomes tract presently to be conveyed to him, and also upon a tract of land then owned by him containing 20 acres of land. Within a reasonable time thereafter the firm of Rancadore & Cavala found and produced a person ready and willing and able to make said loan upon the security of these two tracts of land. The title to the Gomes tract was good and sufficient for said transfer and loan. As to the title to the Gagliardo tract, however, the following difficulty arose: Gagliardo's said land was the community property of himself and wife. The latter objected to incumbering it, and in order to make good her objection caused a homestead to be placed upon the property after the date of Gagliardo's agreement with Gomes, and thereupon refused to execute the papers necessary to consummate said loan. As a consequence Gagliardo was unable to carry out his agreement with Gomes for the purchase of the latter's property, and the transaction through his failure fell through. Thereafter Gomes assigned to Rancadore & Cavala his interest in said note, and they thereupon transferred the said note to the plaintiff for collection.

The defendant's answer set forth substantially the foregoing facts, and averred that said note was without consideration, and that the same became void upon the alleged failure of the firm of Rancadore & Cavala to actually consummate the agreed loan upon the Gomes property and upon such title to his own property as he had to offer. The finding of the trial court was against the defendant upon both of these contentions, and was in favor of the plaintiff for the recovery of the full sum due upon the face of said promissory note. From the judgment entered thereon the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1-3] We are unable to agree with the appellant's contention as to the construction to be placed upon his agreement with Gomes and with the firm of real estate agents in respect to the loan to be secured for him upon the two properties. His authorization to the said firm of real estate agents to secure for him such a loan carried with it the necessary implication that he would furnish as to both properties a good and merchantable title for the purposes of such loan. He had, at the time he entered into the agreement, such title. All that the firm of real estate agents had to do, therefore, under said agreement was to secure and produce a bona fide lender ready and willing and able to consummate said loan upon such sufficient title as the said Gagliardo had at the date of said agreement. Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 28 Pac. 857; Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 570, 75 Pac. 180. This they did, and in so doing, so far as they were concerned, and also so far as their principal, Gomes, was concerned, the agreement on their part and on his part was fulfilled. The failure of the defendant to keep his part of said agreement, if not his fault, was at least his misfortune, in not being able to have the title to his tract of land remain good and merchantable for the purposes of the loan. The breach of the agreement was therefore his breach, from which the legal consequences of a vendee's breach of an agreement for the purchase of real estate must flow. Had the defendant, Gagliardo, deposited with Gomes, or with his agents for him, the sum of $1,000 in cash, as the written agreement apparently contemplated, his vendor, upon Gagliardo's breach of said agreement, would have had the right to retain to his own use said deposit, under the rule laid down in the leading case of Glock v. Howard, etc., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, and the later decisions of the Supreme Court and of this court, adopting and approving said rule. Odd Fellows' Savings Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 Pac. 1109; Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363; Champion, etc., Co. v. Champion, 164 Cal. 205, 128 Pac. 315; Cross v. Mayo, 167 Cal. 594, 140 Pac. 283; Poheim v. Meyers, 9 Cal. App. 31, 98 Pac. 65. It follows, logically, that the vendor would have the same right to retain to his own use the promissory note which his vendee, Gagliardo, had deposited in lieu of cash on account of the purchase price of Gomes' land.

In this connection it may be noted that Gagliardo, by said agreement, expressly stipulated, "in the event of his failure to comply therewith, to forfeit the deposit herein paid." This being the effect and express terms of his agreement and of the breach thereof by him, he cannot now be heard to complain of the effort of Gomes or his transferees to enforce the obligation of his promissory note, to the full benefit of which Gomes became entitled upon his failure to keep his agreement for the purchase of Gomes' land.

[4] The final contention of the appellant that the note was without consideration, and therefore void, is without merit, since the agreement itself and the detriment thereby suffered by Gomes, through the prevention from making a sale of his lands to another during the life of said agreement, would constitute a sufficient consideration for the note.

Judgment affirmed.

PIONEER TRUCK CO. v. HAWLEY et al.
(Civ. 2784.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 373(1), 411—NOTICE OF APPEAL—UNDERTAKING.

On appeal under the alternative method provided by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a-941c, it was sufficient to file the notice of appeal without serving it upon respondent or his attorney and without filing any undertaking on appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 373(1) — UNDERTAKING—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

It is only for the purpose of obtaining a stay of proceedings that an appellant must file an undertaking.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 640—DEMAND FOR TRANSCRIPT—NECESSITY.

In view of Rule 5 (176 Pac. ix), where appellant had filed in the appellate court a typewritten clerk's transcript duly certified and containing notice of appeal and the judgment roll before respondent gave notice of motion to dismiss, the appeal will not be dismissed because of appellant's failure to make request for a clerk's transcript, or file notice of demand for such transcript within 10 days after service of notice of entry of judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Pioneer Truck Company against H. W. Hawley and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

Jensen & Jensen, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Warren E. Libby, of San Diego, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1, 2] The first ground of the motion is that the notice of appeal was not served upon respondent's attorney, and that no undertaking on appeal was filed within five days from the filing of the notice of appeal. The motion cannot be sustained upon the ground stated. Under the alternative method of taking an appeal, provided by sections 941a, 941b, and 941c, Code of Civil Procedure, it was sufficient to file the notice of appeal, without serving it upon the respondent or his attorney, and without filing any undertaking on appeal. It is only for the purpose of obtaining a stay of proceedings that an appellant must file an undertaking, which is to be done in accordance with those sections of the Code which provide for stay bonds. Chung Sing v. Southern Pac. Co., 172 Pac. 1103; Lang v. Lilley and Thurston Co., 161 Cal. 295, 119 Pac. 100.

[3] The second ground of the motion is that no request for a clerk's transcript, or notice or demand for such transcript, was filed with the clerk of the lower court within ten days after the service, on appellant's attorneys, of notice of entry of judgment; no proceeding on motion for new trial being pending. Counsel makes this contention on the theory that the provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure (referring to appellant's duty to file with the clerk a request for "a transcript of the testimony," etc., when he desires to obtain such transcript), apply to the matter of obtaining a copy of the notice of appeal and of the judgment roll. But that theory is unsound. The fact that, before respondent gave notice of motion to dismiss, appellant had filed in this court a typewritten clerk's transcript, duly certified, and containing the notice of appeal and the judgment roll, is a sufficient answer to this part of the motion. Rule 5 (176 Pac. ix). The typewritten transcript is sufficient. Beckett v. Stuart, 35 Cal. App. 796, 171 Pac. 107. By this we are not to be understood as declaring that appellant need not print in his brief, or a supplement thereto, such portions of the record as he desires to call to the attention of the court. The motion is denied.

NEASHAM et al. v. YONKIN et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 27, 1919.)

1. ESTOPPEL ⇐71—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—DISCLAIMER OF RIGHTS.

In an action to restrain defendants from interfering with the flow of water from springs on defendants' lands, the pleading and finding that plaintiff's predecessor induced one of defendants to take up the land as a homestead by offer to give up his right to such waters, and that plaintiffs induced defendants to forego a right to impound flood waters because of having right to such springs when supported by evidence, warranted a judgment for defendants by equitable estoppel.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇐146—USE OF SPRINGS—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

If defendant for more than five years had peaceable, quiet, open, uninterrupted, notorious, continuous, exclusive, adverse possession of the flow of springs, she was entitled thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence N. Raker, Judge.

Action by Catherine Neasham and others against Mary L. Yonkin and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Judgment affirmed.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for appellants.

W. Lair Thompson and Snow, Bronaugh & Thompson, all of Portland, Or., for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to restrain the defendants from interfering with the flow of waters of a certain Neasham creek and of two certain springs and for a judgment decreeing that plaintiffs are the owners of all the flow of said waters and entitled to the use of the same and that defendants have no right, title, or interest in or to the said waters or any part thereof.

Defendants answered, denying many of the allegations of the complaint and setting up two defenses, namely, that plaintiffs were estopped from claiming any interest in said waters and that defendants had acquired a title thereto by adverse possession and use.

It may be said that the controversy is really as to the ownership of the waters flowing from two certain springs, designated as Nos. 1 and 2, located on the land of said defendants.

The court found:

"That in the year 1900 Ralph Neasham was the owner of, in possession of, and entitled to the possession of the above-described lands of plaintiffs. That in the year 1900 the said Ralph Neasham urged the defendant Mary L. Yonkin to enter under the homestead laws of the United States, and by virtue of said laws acquire title to the above-described lands of defendants, and at said time as an inducement to said defendant Mary L. Yonkin to enter said lands under said homestead laws agreed with said defendant that, if she would enter upon the said lands and acquire title thereto, he, the said Ralph Neasham, would give the said defendant the use of the waters of the above-mentioned spring No. 1 and spring No. 2; said springs being the same which plaintiffs assert the right to use in their complaint in this cause. That at said time said Ralph Neasham agreed with the said defendant that he would make no further claim to said waters of said springs or to the use thereof if defendant would enter said land. That said lands were at said time, and now are, arid and require artificial irrigation, and were valueless without water, and would not have been entered by said defendant under the homestead law without the use of the waters of said springs. That said defendant Mary L. Yonkin believed and relied upon the said statements and promises of the said Ralph Neasham, and so relying upon said statements did, in the month of December, 1900, enter upon the said land of defendants with the intention to claim and obtain title to said lands under the homestead laws of the United States of America, and thereafter complied with said homestead laws as to residence and cultivation, and diverted and applied to the necessary irrigation of said land and to the crops growing thereon, and for domestic use and stock water thereon all of the water of said springs No. 1 and No. 2, and duly obtained patent to said lands under the homestead laws of the United States. That said defendant in reliance upon the said promise of said Ralph Neasham spent five years of her life acquiring title to said land, and expended large sums of money in improving said lands. That in the year 1902 said Ralph Neasham again assured said defendant that she had a right to the use of the waters of said springs No. 1 and No. 2, and that said Ralph Neasham had waived all claim thereto; and that said defendant could continue spending money upon and improving her said homestead and acquire title thereto with the assurance that she would not be deprived of the use of the waters of said springs. That said defendant completed her homestead residence and improvements upon said lands in reliance upon said first and said further assurances. That in the year 1903 said defendant Mary L. Yonkin undertook to secure a right to construct reservoirs upon the upper sources of the waters of Neasham creek with the intention and purpose of impounding the flood and freshet waters of said creek, but at said time the above-mentioned plaintiffs urged the defendant to desist from acquiring a right to said freshet and flood waters, and stated to defendant that their father, Ralph Neasham, had given the defendant the waters of springs No. 1 and No. 2, and that because of said gift plaintiffs had lost their right to use said waters; and that said defendant should permit plaintiffs to have said freshet waters and acquire said reservoir site. That said defendant relied upon said statements of plaintiffs that the waters of said springs belonged to her by gift from the said Ralph Neasham, and so relying upon said statements desisted from her efforts to secure said reservoir site and use of said flood waters, and had lost the rights which were acquired under her reservoir application, and has depended solely and entirely upon the waters of said springs for the necessary irrigation of her said lands, and for domestic and stock water thereon."

The court further found:

"That in the month of December, 1900, defendants entered upon the above-mentioned springs No. 1 and No. 2 and cleaned the same out, and in the irrigation season of 1901 diverted the waters of said springs to and used the same upon the above-described lands of defendants in the necessary irrigation of crops thereon, and for domestic and stock water."

It is further found that she, the said Mary L. Yonkin, continued to use said waters from said springs from the year 1901 for more than five years thereafter in a "peaceable, quiet, open, uninterrupted, notorious, continuous, exclusive (manner) and adverse to the whole world, and particularly adverse to plaintiffs in this action and their predecessors in interest, under a claim of right and title as against said plaintiffs, and each of them."

[1, 2] We have examined the record and have discovered that each of the said findings is abundantly supported by the evidence. The particular portions of the transcript wherein the evidence is found are pointed out in the brief of respondents, and we may add that appellants have filed no reply brief and have made no attempt in any manner to meet the argument made by said respondents. That an equitable estoppel was sufficiently pleaded and found cannot be disputed, no citation of authorities being required, and that either of said findings, if supported by the evidence, would warrant the judgment; is equally beyond controversy. The fact is that the case presents simply a question of conflict of evidence, and about the only surprising thing is that the appeal should have been taken at all.

The judgment is affirmed.

BAIRD v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.
(Civ. 2868.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 29, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1919.)

1. PLEADING 291(2) — VERIFICATION — OMISSION—GENUINENESS OF RELEASE—BURDEN TO REBUT.

Where defendant, in personal injury action, set up settlement with plaintiff for all alleged damages, as shown by releases set out, and plaintiff did not file affidavit provided for by Code Civ. Proc. § 448, denying genuineness of releases, burden was on him to rebut presumption of payment raised by releases execution and genuineness of which were admitted by failure to file affidavit.

2. PLEADING 291(2) — GENUINENESS OF RELEASE—FAILURE TO FILE AFFIDAVIT—ESTOPPEL TO ATTACK.

Plaintiff in personal injury action who did not file affidavit provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 448, denying genuineness or due execution of releases pleaded by defendant, was not estopped from attacking such releases by any valid defense other than such as involved their genuineness or due execution, and could controvert them by evidence of fraud, mistake, undue influence, compromise, payment, estoppel, or mental incompetency.

3. PLEADING 166—NEW MATTER IN ANSWER—NECESSITY OF REPLY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 462, providing that statement of any new matter in answer in avoidance or constituting a defense on trial must be deemed controverted by opposite party, plaintiff suing for personal injuries, and met by defendant's plea of releases, was entitled to introduce, without further pleading, evidence to sustain any legitimate defense to new matter in answer.

4. RELEASE $\S$ 24(2) — VALIDITY — CONTRACTUAL CAPACITY—CONTESTING VALIDITY—RESTORING CONSIDERATION.

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 38, releases of liability for personal injuries executed by street car passenger whose injury had rendered him totally incompetent to enter into settlement were void and without effect, and no obligation of injured person to repay money advanced on settlement, as condition of controverting releases or agreements, would exist.

5. RELEASE $\S$ 24(2)—OFFERING EVIDENCE—TENDER BACK.

Though disability of street railway's injured passenger was only partial and temporary, if settlement of liability was obtained by railway by fraud and deceit as to contents of agreements and their legal effect, or if passenger in his weakened condition was induced by misrepresentations to sign releases in belief he was being paid on account, he cannot be required to tender back payments as condition of offering evidence to defeat the settlement.

6. RELEASE $\S$ 53—PLEADING—RIGHT TO INTRODUCE EVIDENCE.

In injured passenger's action against street railway, wherein railway pleaded releases, court erred in denying plaintiff privilege of introducing evidence to rebut presumption of full payment and satisfaction of demands raised by the releases, though they were not controverted by reply.

7. JURY $\S$ 13(8)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY—ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURIES—LEGAL DEFENSE.

In action against street railway for personal injuries, wherein railway set up releases whose genuineness and due execution were not denied by plaintiff pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, under section 592, plaintiff had right to jury trial. Answer denying facts pleaded to show liability, and setting up contract of payment and release, a legal defense, even if equitable issue was injected into case by evidence to avoid such affirmative defense.

Action by Albert J. Baird, an incompetent, by his guardian ad litem, Mary L. Baird, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
W. R. Millar, Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment that he take nothing by his action, and for costs in favor of defendant. The action is upon a complaint which states a cause of action for damages alleged to have resulted from a wrongful and forcible ejection of plaintiff by defendant from its electric railway car. The answer denies the liability of defendant for damages, pleads contributory negligence of plaintiff, and sets up as an affirmative defense a settlement with plaintiff for all alleged damages, as shown by three separate agreements and releases, signed by the plaintiff and set out in full in the answer. Either of these releases is a complete defense to plaintiff's demand, if permitted to stand unimpeached. The plaintiff at no time filed the affidavit provided for by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is held to have confessed the genuineness and due execution of these releases. No other averments or admissions by plaintiff as to the execution or binding effect of these releases appear in the record.

Prior to the date of trial, the plaintiff demanded a jury, which demand was by the court denied, on the ground that the issues made and presented by the pleadings were not cognizable before a jury, and presented equitable issues alone. Upon the calling of the case for trial, a witness for the plaintiff was sworn and called to the stand; but thereupon defendant's counsel objected to the introduction of any evidence for plaintiff, on the ground that it appeared from the pleadings that said plaintiff had no cause of action against defendant, and upon the failure of plaintiff to make a tender of the sums of money admitted in open court to have been received from defendant at the time of the execution and delivery of the three releases pleaded in the answer, after an adjournment from 11:30 a. m. until 2 o'clock p. m., granted to enable plaintiff to make such tender, and, the court having refused further time to procure the money for such tender, the court sustained defendant's objection to the introduction of evidence, and gave judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff alleges error of the trial court in refusing him a jury trial, and in denying the admission of any evidence for plaintiff.

[1-5] We will consider first plaintiff's right to introduce evidence, as it will be immaterial whether he had a jury or not, if he could not offer his evidence. It is clear that, under the state of the pleadings at the time the trial was called, the burden was upon plaintiff to rebut the presumption of full payment and satisfaction of his demands, raised by the releases set forth in defendant's answer, the due execution and genuineness of which were admitted by failure to file the affidavit provided by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is equally clear that he was not estopped from attacking these releases by any valid defense, other than such as involved the genuineness or due execution thereof. He could controvert them by evidence of fraud, mistake, undue influence, compromise, payment, estoppel, mental incompetency, and like defenses. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 432, 51 Pac. 630. As has been stated, there is nothing in the pleadings to indicate what, if any, defense the plaintiff might have interposed to the admitted execution of these releases set forth in the answer. Under our system of pleading, no such showing is required. The provision of section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "the statement of any new matter in the answer, in avoidance or constituting a defense or counterclaim, must, on the trial, be deemed controverted by the opposite party," entitles the plaintiff to introduce, without further pleading, evidence to sustain any legitimate defense to the new matter in the answer. Brooks v. Johnson, 122 Cal. 569, 55 Pac. 423. In this particular case the court seems to have assumed that the plaintiff was relying upon some defense which he could not be permitted to maintain without first tendering back to the defendant the money he had received in consideration of the settlement agreements. We find nothing in the record to justify such assumption. It may perhaps be inferred that mental incompetency on the part of the plaintiff would be the defense. The action here was brought for plaintiff through a guardian ad litem; the complaint alleges that by reason of injury to his skull, in his expulsion from the car, his brain and mind were permanently injured; the bill of exceptions, in stating the ground of defendant's objection to a jury trial, puts it on the ground that the action under the pleadings has become essentially an action to avoid said releases upon the ground of mental incompetency. But conceding that these facts committed the plaintiff to the defense of mental incompetency, there is nothing whatever to indicate whether he would rely upon a partial or total incompetency. If his evidence would have disclosed a total incompetency to enter into a settlement, and a continuing and permanent disability in that respect, these releases became mere "scraps of paper" (Civ. Code, § 38); and it is well settled that no obligation to repay money advanced on the settlement as a condition of controverting the agreements would exist. Or, even if the disability was only partial and temporary, and it should be shown in evidence that the settlement was obtained by fraud and deceit as to the contents of the agreements and their legal effect, or, again, if a state of facts existed where, in his weakened mental state, the plaintiff was induced by fraudulent representations to sign these releases, in the belief that he was being paid so much on account, he could not be required to tender back the payments as a condition of offering evidence to defeat the agreed settlement. Meyer v. Haas, 126 Cal. 562, 58 Pac. 1042; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 73 Ark. 42, 83 S. W. 332, 3 Ann. Cas. 573; Mullen v. Old Colony Ry. Co., 127 Mass. 86, 34 Am. Rep. 349.

[6] Other similar conditions, consistent with the facts shown in this record, might be shown in evidence to exist; but it is unnecessary to multiply illustrations. It is sufficient if any single line of attack upon these releases was open to the plaintiff, which he might have pleaded where circumstances required it. He was entitled to the presumption that he had evidence to offer in that behalf. It is quite probable that he might have been required by the court, as a condition of being allowed to introduce evidence, to state what he expected to prove, and to show that he was relying upon a state of facts that would excuse a tender back of the money received, but nothing of the kind was demanded of or volunteered by him, so far as the record shows. Under the circumstances it was error for the court to deny plaintiff the privilege of introducing evidence.

[7] We also think plaintiff was entitled to a jury trial on the issues presented by the record. His complaint was to recover damages for injuries. Section 592 of the Code of Civil Procedure primarily gave him the right to a jury trial. The answer denied the facts pleaded to show liability, and set up a contract of payment and release, a purely legal defense. The nature of the plaintiff's attack upon the validity and binding effect of the releases was not disclosed. It might be purely a denial of the validity of the settlement because of fraud or mental incapacity to contract, which would have raised only an issue of fact for the jury. The assumption that he would seek the aid of equity in rescinding the contracts as being merely voidable finds no support in the record. And in any event, so long as the original issues in the case remained unchanged, under the allegations of the complaint and the denials of liability in the answer, it does not follow that the mere injection of an equitable issue into the case by evidence, to avoid an affirmative defense, would deprive the plaintiff of his right to a trial by jury of the legal issues raised by the pleadings. In the event that the decision of the equitable question permitted him to present the issues of his complaint, they would still have to be tried under the denials of the answer, and he would have a right to a hearing of these by a jury. If the defendant, by its answer, had admitted its liability for the damages sued for, and pleaded only the settlement, and the only issue remaining had been for equitable relief against the releases, a different question would be presented. But as it appears from the record, no equitable issue has been presented to the court.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Edward E. Bacon, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George H. Woodruff and Clyde C. Shoemaker, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. On motion to dismiss appeal. The motion is made upon the grounds that the judgment appealed from is final and became final before the notice of intention to move for a new trial in the court below was served or filed, and that the appeal was not taken within the time provided by law.

The judgment was entered April 20, 1918. On the 20th day of June, 1918, the plaintiff filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. On the 25th day of July, 1918, plaintiff filed notice of appeal from the judgment. No notice of entry of judgment was ever given. The trial in the court below was before the court without a jury. An order denying appellant's motion for a new trial was entered on the 16th day of July, 1918.

The cases in which an appeal may be taken from the superior court are those stated in section 963, Code of Civil Procedure. An amendment of that section in the year 1915 took away the right which theretofore existed to appeal from orders denying motions for new trial. By sections 939 and 941b, Code of Civil Procedure, an appeal from a judgment must be taken within 60 days from the entry of judgment. "If proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending, the time for appeal from the judgment shall not expire until thirty days after entry in the trial court of the order determining such motion for a new trial, or other termination in the trial court of the proceedings upon such motion." Section 956, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that upon an appeal from a judgment the court may review any order on motion for a new trial. Under section 659, Code of Civil Procedure, a party intending to move for a new trial "must, within ten days after receiving notice of the entry of the judgment, * * * file with the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a notice of his intention to move for a new trial," etc.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial was not given until the sixty-first day after the entry of judgment. At that time the right to appeal from the judgment had expired. Counsel for appellant concede that the right of appeal was lost, save only that they contend that, under the form of an appeal from the judgment (though taken more than sixty days after entry of judgment), appellant is entitled to a review of the court's order denying the motion for new trial. If the right thus claimed can be sustained at all, such right must arise out of the fact that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was made in due time (there having been no notice of entry of the judgment), taken together with the provision of section 956 that an order on motion for new trial may be reviewed on appeal from a judgment. But it is our opinion that the Code of Civil Procedure does not authorize a party, whose right of appeal from a judgment has expired, to revive that right of appeal by subsequently giving notice of intention to move for a new trial. The phrase "if proceedings on motion for a new trial are pending" (sections 939 and 941b) refers exclusively to such proceedings pending within the period of 60 days from the entry of the judgment. This appears so plainly to be the meaning of the language used that we are unable to give it any other construction. The quotation in the brief for appellant, from the decision in Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 Pac. 1019, does not conflict with our view of the question. The notice of intention to move for new trial, in that case, was served and filed within 60 days from the entry of the judgment, and the notice of appeal from the judgment was filed less than 30 days after the court denied the motion. It was therefore true, as stated by the Supreme Court, that—"If the court below had power to grant a new trial of the proceedings by which the judgment against Rowe was given, the appeal from the judgment would be in time."

Appellant's position is not improved by the decisions of the Supreme Court in Schmitt v. White, 172 Cal. 554, 158 Pac. 216, and Wilcox v. Hardisty, 171 Pac. 947. In each of those cases the proceeding to obtain a new trial had been initiated prior to August 8, 1915 (the date when the amendments of the Code of Civil Procedure, concerning the time allowed to appeal from a judgment, and concerning the right of appeal from an order made on a motion for a new trial, became effective), and therefore was pending while the right of appeal attached to an order made on such motion, independently of any appeal from the judgment. Under the circumstances noted, the statutes were construed liberally to preserve rights of appeal which otherwise would have lapsed; rights upon which the parties were entitled to rely, but which, under a strict technical construction of the amendments, they would have lost. But it is not so here. To sustain the right of the plaintiff to maintain this appeal, we would be attempting to revive a right which has been lost, and which cannot be revived without construing the statute against the direct statement of its intention. If appellant's position is correct, then there is no definite time fixed by law when a judgment will become immune from appeal, unless notice of entry of judgment be given. But the law provides that the time within which to appeal from a judgment shall run from the day of entry of the judgment. This is emphasized by the fact that, by the amendment to section 941b, Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1915, p. 204), the words "notice of," preceding the words "entry of judgment," were stricken out, and the section thereby harmonized with section 939.

The appeal is dismissed.

SAME v. ROOT et al.

(Civ. 2474.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1919. Rehearing Denied Feb. 27, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court March 27, 1919.)

1. EVIDENCE §372(6) — ANCIENT DOCUMENTS—CUSTODY.

In action by plaintiff company for unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock, where company's secretary, who was custodian of its books more than 30 years old, produced and identified them and testified that they were turned over to him in the usual course of business when he became secretary, books were properly admitted; proof being sufficient to make out prima facie proof of identity.

2. CORPORATIONS §90(6) — NONPAYMENT FOR STOCK—EVIDENCE.

In action by plaintiff company to recover unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock, evidence held sufficient to make out a prima facie case and satisfy plaintiff's burden of showing nonpayment.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Geary Street, Park & Ocean Railroad Company, a corporation, against George Campbell, and by the same plaintiff against Jean Campbell Root and another, tried together in the lower court and consolidated on appeal. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jesse H. Steinhart, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. These actions were brought to recover alleged unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of plaintiff corporation. By stipulation of counsel the actions were tried together, and it was agreed that the evidence offered and received should apply equally to both cases. The appeals are by stipulation presented upon one bill of exceptions, and have been consolidated by order of this court.

They are brought here by George Campbell Root and Jean Campbell Root from judgments rendered against them on a stock call or assessment arising as follows: The Geary Street, Park & Ocean Railroad Company was incorporated with a capitalization of $1,000,000, divided into 10,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. On the 25th day of November, 1915, the board of directors of the corporation levied an "assessment and call" upon its capital stock. The assessment was levied for the purpose of paying certain obligations of the company. It amounted to the sum of $34 a share in all, and was therefore more than 10 per cent. of the capital stock. In an exhibit attached to the complaint, the order of the board of directors levying the assessment is set forth, as are also certain recitals as to the indebtedness of the corporation, the issuance of the capital stock, and the declaration that the amount of $62.50 remains unpaid upon the original subscription to each share. The complaint further sets forth that an assessment or call for unpaid subscriptions in the sum of $34 will be required to raise the amount of indebtedness of the company. The resolution assessing the stock also appears therefrom. The complaint also shows that the directors of the company elected to waive proceedings leading up to a sale of the stock for nonpayment of the assessment, and decided to bring actions against the stockholders for the amount sued for.

At the time the assessment was levied, both defendants herein were each the owner of 50 shares of the capital stock of the company which they had inherited from their father. Upon their failure to pay the assessment these actions were brought against them by the corporation for $1,700 each.

The complaint proceeds upon the theory that the stock was never fully paid up, and it is conceded that the action is one to recover upon unpaid subscriptions. The trial court found that there had been paid upon each share of the capital stock of plaintiff the sum of $37.50, and that the remainder of the subscription, $62.50, remained unpaid. Judgment went for plaintiff, and the defendants appeal.

As grounds for reversal appellants claim that no sufficient foundation was laid for the introduction in evidence of certain books and records of the company to prove nonpayment. They further claim that, even assuming the books and records to have been properly admitted, they do not make out a case against them for the reason that they fail to show that no more than $37.50 a share was paid in by the stockholders on their stock, or that appellants or their predecessors in interest did not themselves pay the whole balance due thereon. They also claim that the amount of the assessment exceeds the debts of the corporation.

[1] The books of the company received in evidence were more than 30 years old. The secretary of the plaintiff, who had occupied that position for many years, produced them, and testified that they were turned over to him in the ordinary course of business when he became such secretary, as the books of the corporation, and he identified them as such. He was the custodian of the books and records of the company, and the evidence offered was deemed sufficient by the trial judge. Being free from suspicion of fraud, we think they were properly admitted. The proof presented was sufficient to make out a prima facie proof of identity.

From certain pages of these books it is apparent that there were eight assessments upon the stock of the corporation aggregating $37.50 a share, after which the stock was issued. The fact of issuance of the stock, it is claimed by appellant, raises the presumption of payment. Assuming this to be true, the corporation books show the contrary, for it appears therefrom that no certificates were issued until $37.50 a share had been paid after the eight assessments, at which time [it would follow, as the court found that]¹ there still remained due upon the stock the sum of $62.50 a share, and that no other assessments were ever levied. The court below gave credit to this evidence, and its finding cannot be disturbed here.

[2] We are further of the opinion that this evidence was sufficient to make out a prima facie case, and that it satisfied the burden cast upon plaintiff to prove nonpayment.

That the amount of the assessment did not exceed the debts of the corporation is fully sustained by the evidence. The assessment at $34 a share amounted to $340,000 in all, and the evidence shows that the company was indebted for an amount slightly in excess of that sum.

From what we have said it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

NASON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 2759.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⌘315
(1) — DISTRIBUTION OF PROPERTY — DISCHARGE OF ADMINISTRATOR.

Where a distribution of the property of an estate had been decreed, and the administratrix distributed the property according thereto, and nothing remains to be done, she is entitled to her discharge, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1697, although the time for appeal from the decree of distribution has not expired.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⌘314
(12) — DECISIONS REVIEWABLE — DISCHARGE OF ADMINISTRATOR.

The modes in which a decision may be reviewed are prescribed by statute, and as a general rule the courts are not at liberty to substitute other modes, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3, from a decree discharging an administrator there is no appeal.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⌘315
(4) — DISCHARGE OF ADMINISTRATOR — SETTING ASIDE OF DISCHARGE.

An order granting a motion to set aside a decree of discharge of an administrator, not made under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing relief from judgment or order taken through mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, may not be affirmed as one authorized thereby.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 314
(12) — CERTIORARI — INADVERTENCE — ORDER DISCHARGING ADMINISTRATRIX.

That an order, after distribution, discharging an administratrix, made improvidently or inadvertently, and not in the legal exercise of jurisdiction, may be set aside, does not mean that an order may be vacated because the court subsequently concludes it erred as to fact or law, and the objection that the court acted in an unauthorized mode may be reviewed by certiorari.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 315
(4)—DISTRIBUTION—SETTING ASIDE DECREE —REVIEW.

Upon review of an order setting aside a decree of discharge of an administratrix, where inadvertence was not presented in the motion or by the record, except in the order vacating the decree, it will not be presumed that the judge knew of some inadvertence justifying the order, particularly where he was not the judge who made the order vacated.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 315
(4)—DISTRIBUTION—VACATION OF ORDERS—“ORDER MADE OUT OF COURT.”

A decree of final discharge of an administratrix, after distribution, is not an “order made out of court,” without notice to the adverse party, and is not authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 937, providing for vacation of orders.

In the matter of the settlement of final account of Mabel A. Nason, as administratrix of the estate of Cornelius Walker, deceased. From a formal order, vacating an order of discharge, Mabel A. Nason brings certiorari against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County; J. C. Rives, Judge thereof. Order annulled.

George M. Harker, O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, and Roy V. Reppy, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Schmidt & Riggins, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Certiorari. By this proceeding petitioner seeks to have annulled an order vacating an order discharging Mabel A. Nason as administratrix of the estate of Cornelius Walker, deceased.

As appears from the petition, after a contest over heirship between Edwin N. Walker and E. Earle Walker (hereafter referred to for convenience as the Walker twins), and Mabel A. Nason, which contest was decided in favor of Mrs. Nason, the court settled the final account of the administratrix, and rendered a decree of distribution, awarding all of the property of the estate to Mrs. Nason. This decree was entered on the 15th day of May, 1916. On May 25th Mrs. Nason filed a receipt, made by her as distributee to herself as administratrix, for all the property distributed, and thereupon she applied for and was granted an order of discharge as administratrix of the estate.

On the 8th day of June, 1916, the Walker twins applied to Judge Wilbur in open court by motion for an order vacating the order that had been made discharging Mrs. Nason as administratrix. Notice that said motion would be made was served upon Mrs. Nason; the grounds of the motion being stated in said notice as follows:

“That said administratrix was not and is not entitled as yet to final discharge, and that the condition of the estate is such that it requires an administratrix.”

No supporting affidavit was served or filed, nor at the time said motion was presented was any testimony introduced; the notice stated that the motion would be made “upon the minutes of the court.” Judge Wilbur never ruled on the motion.

On March 27, 1918, pursuant to notice given, the Walker twins made a motion before Judge Rives to have the motion to vacate order of discharge restored to calendar for hearing and determination. This motion was granted by Judge Rives, and the motion to vacate the order of discharge was given consideration by him and granted. The order granting the motion describes the proceedings taken to restore to calendar the motion to vacate, and recites further that the motion was restored to calendar and was heard and argued by the attorneys for the interested parties, and that the court took the matter under submission and ordered affidavits filed, and that affidavits of Ruben F. Schmidt, George M. Harker, and A. M. Case were filed in response to said order. Said affidavits dealt solely with the question whether or not Judge Wilbur had ruled upon said motion presented on June 8, 1916. The formal order vacating order of discharge contained a number of “findings”; three of them dealing with the question of whether or not the motion to vacate was before the court and undetermined. The fourth finding was as follows:

“That the condition of said estate on said 25th day of May, 1916, and ever since has been and now is in such a condition that it requires an administrator.”

This “finding” responded to the ground urged by the Walker twins in their motion. The fifth and last fact found is outside of the issues involved in the motion, and is as follows:

“That said discharge of said administratrix on said 25th day of May, 1916, was made inadvertently and ex parte.”

[1-3] The “minutes of the court”—taking that phrase to mean the court files and records of administration—showed that the es-

late had been disposed of by a final decree of distribution, which included a settlement of the final account of the administratrix, and that the administratrix had made delivery of the property of the estate in accordance with the decree. On that state of facts the court had made its order discharging the administratrix. This was in accordance with law, and was in accordance with the regular and ordinary practice of the superior court in the conduct of its business in the administration of estates. Section 1697, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that when an estate has been fully administered, and it is shown by the administrator that he has performed all of the acts lawfully required of him, "the court must make a judgment or decree discharging him from all liability to be incurred thereafter." It is true that, at the time when the discharge was granted, the time within which an appeal from the decree of distribution might be taken had not yet expired. But there was nothing in the record showing that an appeal had been taken, or that any stay of proceedings under the decree of distribution had been obtained. Under those circumstances an administrator who delivers the property to the distributees is acting in the performance of his duty. That duty having been performed, he is not concerned with the fact that an appeal may thereafter be taken.

In the absence of a present showing in the record of facts indicating that an administrator is necessary to represent the estate in some further proceedings connected therewith, he is then entitled to his discharge. It follows that, in the matter of the Walker estate, the "minutes of the court" were entirely wanting in any facts from which the court could derive authority to set aside the decree of discharge on the grounds stated in the notice of motion, to-wit: That the administratrix was not as yet entitled to discharge, and that the condition of the estate was such that it required an administratrix. The modes in which a decision may be reviewed are prescribed by statute, and as a general rule the courts are not at liberty to substitute other modes in their places. From a decree discharging an administrator there is no appeal. Estate of Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 33 Pac. 744; Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 3. The motion to set aside the decree of discharge was not made for relief, under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and the order may not be affirmed as one authorized thereby. This brings us to the principal contention upon which respondent relies, which is that, as stated in the fifth "finding," the decree of discharge was inadvertently made.

[4] Where an order has been irregularly and improvidently made, that fact takes the case out of the general rule above stated. For example: If an order granting, or an order refusing, a new trial, has been improvidently made before the motion has been regularly submitted, it would be within the power of the court, and would be its duty, to set aside the order. This is based upon the fact that in such case the order was not made in the regular exercise of the jurisdiction of the court. Odd Fellows' Savings Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 168, 4 Pac. 1173. But, as stated by Mr. Justice Sloss in Robson v. Superior Court, 171 Cal. 588, 597, 154 Pac. 8, 11:

"This does not mean that an order may be vacated because the court concludes, after making it, that it erred in matter of law or fact."

"Such a state of things, being of rare occurrence, is not presumed, but must be affirmatively shown. The objection that the court has acted in an unauthorized mode goes to the power of the court, and hence its action may be reviewed on certiorari." Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 Pac. 174.

[5] In the case at bar, the fact that the decree of discharge was inadvertently made was not presented as one of the grounds of the motion to set aside that decree. No fact appeared in the record from which inadvertence of the court may be inferred. The order itself, now under review, while it states that the decree of discharge was made inadvertently and ex parte, does not indicate any particular in which the court had acted improvidently or inadvertently. Under such circumstances we cannot, from the mere assertion contained in the order, indulge in a presumption that the judge knew of some inadvertence which would justify the order. This would have been true if the judge who acted last had been the same judge who made the decree of discharge. It is even more emphatically true, when the claimed inadvertence was that of another judge.

[6] No help for respondent's case can be obtained from section 937, Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes a judge to vacate "an order made out of court, without notice to the adverse party." A decree of final discharge of an administrator is not "an order made out of court."

The order is annulled.

BOCK v. LOSEKAMP. (L. A. 4652.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1919.
Rehearing Denied in Bank March 8, 1919.)

1. EXECUTION $\S$ 250—SETTING ASIDE SALE—INADEQUACY OF PRICE.

Mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not of itself sufficient ground to set aside sale on execution legally made; but there must, in addition, be proof of some element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression.

2. EXECUTION $\S$ 275(1) — PURCHASER AT SALE—DUTY TOWARD JUDGMENT DEBTOR.

Purchaser at execution sale, who is stranger to proceedings and buys in good faith, is charged with no duty toward judgment debtor, though he must examine judgment and execution to determine whether officer is authorized to make sale, but need not inquire further to ascertain if proceedings of officer and creditor have been fair toward debtor.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Herman Bock against G. W. Losekamp. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Angellotti, C. J., dissenting.

Frank S. Adams, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goudge, Williams, Chandler & Hughes and Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to set aside an execution sale and deed of the plaintiff's real estate.

The facts are very fully set forth in the findings. A judgment in favor of W. J. Cook for costs in the sum of $15.50 was entered in the superior court. One year later an execution issued on said judgment was levied by the sheriff on the property in question, and after due notice the property was offered for sale by the sheriff in the usual manner. The defendant, who was not a party to the action, was the only bidder at the sale, and bought the property for the sum of $35.60; that being the amount of the judgment and costs. No redemption was made, and in due course the sheriff executed a deed of the property to the defendant. The plaintiff knew that judgment had gone against him on the merits in the action in which a judgment for costs was given; but he had no actual knowledge or information of the judgment for the costs, the issuance of the execution, or the sale, until after the sheriff's deed was given. Three futile demands for payment of the judgment had been made on Bock's attorneys in that action before the execution was issued, but no notice was given to them of the execution or of the sale. The property was incumbered for $220 and was worth $2,000; but the defendant believed that it was worth only $500 at the time of the sale. The court found that the consideration paid by the defendant for the property was grossly inadequate. Shortly after the issuance of the sheriff's deed, the plaintiff learned for the first time of the execution and sale, whereupon he promptly tendered to the defendant the amount paid by the defendant for the property, with interest, and brought this action to set aside the sale and deed.

The court further found that the judgment creditor, Cook, knew where the plaintiff resided and did not notify him of the sale, and that both Cook and the sheriff knew that the plaintiff did not see the published notice of the sale. This notice appeared in a newspaper published in the city of Los Angeles, but in a part thereof about 30 miles distant from the plaintiff's residence and from the property.

As to the defendant's connection with the sale, the court found that Cook's attorney was also the defendant's attorney in some other matters not connected with the sale, and that he informed the defendant, prior to the sale, that it was all right for the defendant to become a purchaser at the sale. It was further found that the defendant did not, before obtaining the sheriff's deed, communicate to the plaintiff the fact that he had purchased the lot at the sheriff's sale, nor make any effort or attempt to do so, or to find the plaintiff, nor manifest or assert during said interval any rights of ownership or interest in the property, or any part thereof, and that in that interval the defendant permitted the plaintiff to pay taxes and assessments on the property amounting in all to the sum of $43.25. It also found, however, that the judgment was entered, the execution issued, and the proceedings thereunder carried on, without any design or intent on the part of the defendant, or said Cook, or his attorney, to carry on or effect a secret sale of the plaintiff's property, or to deprive him of the same for a mere nominal sum, or in any way to defraud the plaintiff.

It is not claimed or found that there was any irregularity in the proceedings connected with the sale, or that the defendant, Losekamp, had any knowledge of the circumstances which caused the ignorance of the plaintiff concerning the judgment, execution, and sale.

[1] The case cannot be distinguished from the recent decision of this court in Rauer v. Hertweck, 175 Cal. 278, 165 Pac. 946. In that case property was sold on execution for a grossly inadequate price, on a judgment and execution of which the debtor had no actual personal knowledge, and of which no actual notice was given to him, and the purchaser was a stranger to the judgment. The facts, in other words, were in all respects essentially the same as here, with respect to the position of the defendant as an innocent purchaser and as to the inadequacy of the price. The court in bank carefully considered the question and stated the rule in this state to be that—

"Mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale legally made. There must, in addition, be proof of some element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression, before a court will be justified in depriving the purchaser of his legal advantage."

The subject is further discussed at considerable length in that case, and it is unnecessary here to repeat the arguments and reasoning there given. Upon this principle the defendant in this case was entitled to judgment.

[2] The respondent relies on the decision in Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 Pac. 194. That case is cited and discussed in the Rauer Case, and it was there shown that it was not applicable to such cases as the one at bar. A purchaser at an execution sale, who is a stranger to the proceedings and buys in good faith, is charged with no duty toward the judgment debtor. He must at his peril examine the judgment and execution, in order to determine whether the officer is duly authorized to make the sale; but he need not inquire further into the proceedings of the officer and judgment creditor to ascertain if they have been in all respects fair toward the judgment debtor. He may rely upon the officer's authority to sell and his own good faith as to that matter. Blood v. Light, 38 Cal. 654, 99 Am. Dec. 441. The judgment should have been for the defendant.

The judgment is reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. (dissenting from order denying rehearing). I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached in the department opinion. It seems to me that, in connection with an admitted inadequacy of consideration so gross as "to shock the conscience," there are circumstances sufficient to fairly warrant the conclusion of the trial court that the case is governed by the equitable doctrine enunciated in such cases as Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 Pac. 194. The correctness of the views expressed in that case has never been questioned. In fact, they were expressly affirmed and applied in Winbigler v. Sherman, 175 Cal. 270, 165 Pac. 943, and the doctrine of the two cases was recognized and approved in Rauer v. Hertweck, 175 Cal. 278, 165 Pac. 946; the opinion in the last-named case being subscribed by the very justices who concurred in Winbigler v. Sherman, supra.

1. RECEIVERS §35(1)—CREDITOR'S ACTION—VALIDITY OF APPOINTMENT—SHOWING OF EMERGENCY.

In creditors' action to subject certain real property to their claims, appointment of receiver cannot be legally made without formal notice except upon a showing of great emergency.

2. RECEIVERS §47—APPOINTMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF ORDER—INDEFINITENESS.

In creditors' action to subject certain real estate to their claims, an order appointing receiver, without defining scope of receivership or describing the property to be affected thereby, was void on ground of indefiniteness.

3. RECEIVERS §21—APPOINTMENT—VALIDITY OF ORDER.

In creditors' action to subject certain real estate to their claims, an order appointing receiver to cover all property described in the complaints, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is void where, according to the creditor's own showing, it covers property greatly in excess of enough to secure the claims against the judgment debtors.

4. RECEIVERS §6—GROUNDS FOR APPOINTMENT—CONVEYANCE BY DEBTOR—LIS PENDENS.

Where, in creditors' action to subject certain real estate to their claims, the creditors could have protected their interests in the property against future alienation by filing a lis pendens, a receiver was improperly appointed.

5. RECEIVERS §42—APPOINTMENT—BOND.

In creditors' action to subject certain real estate to their claims, an order appointing a receiver, made ex parte, without requiring any bond of the applicant, is void, being in violation of Code Civ. Proc. § 566, requiring such bond; such statute being mandatory.

Vincent Surr and Thos. W. Nowlin, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant Ella M. Murphy from an order appointing a receiver in a creditors' action brought to subject certain real property to their claims. The complaints of the plaintiffs and intervener allege the recovery of certain judgments by them against the defendant Herman Murphy, the husband of the appellant; that said Herman Murphy is heavily indebted and insolvent, and that executions on said judgments have been returned unsatisfied; that conveyances of two valuable parcels of land aggregating 939 acres by Murphy to his wife, and by her to others, as well as a certain deed of trust made by Murphy's predecessor in interest to certain of the defendants, were all made without adequate consideration and with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors. It is further alleged in effect that part of this land has been subdivided into lots, which are being sold on the installment plan, and the court is requested to set aside the conveyances mentioned, so that the property, or as much thereof as may be necessary, may be sold in satisfaction of plaintiffs' demand, and that the defendants account for money received as rents, issues, profits, or purchase price of the property. The answers of the defendants put in issue all of the material allegations of the complaints.

From the record it also appears that early in the proceedings plaintiffs gave notice of a motion for the appointment of a receiver for the real property, which motion after hearing was denied; that, after the evidence in the case was completed and a verdict had been returned by an advisory jury, a second motion for the appointment of a receiver was noticed, but was not in fact made. Four months later, and three months, after the cause was finally submitted for decision, the court made the order appealed from, that—

"T. W. Nowlin be and he is hereby appointed a receiver herein, with his bond fixed at the sum of $5,000."

There was no requirement of a bond from the applicant. The order also set aside the submission, and appointed said Nowlin referee for certain stated purposes.

We have not been favored with the views of plaintiffs in the case, either by briefs or oral argument.

[1] It is obvious that the receiver in this case was appointed without formal notice. Such an appointment, under the established law of this state, cannot be legally made except upon a showing of great emergency. Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 42 Pac. 561. In the present case, the appointment having been made after all the evidence pro and con was introduced, the court was in a position to know whether or not the exigencies of the case necessitated the appointment; and, while even under those circumstances notice of the application is required, still it cannot be seriously maintained that in the case at bar an attempt has been made to deprive the defendants of the management of their property without a hearing (34 Cyc. 124), to avoid which is doubtless the object of the statute. However this may be, there are more serious questions presented by the appeal, rendering unnecessary a decision on this point.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that the order appointing the receiver was erroneous, on the ground of its indefiniteness. It makes no attempt to define the scope of the receivership, or to describe the property to be affected thereby. If it was intended that the order should cover all the real property described in the complaints, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, it would be void for the reason that according to the plaintiffs' own showing it would cover property greatly in excess of enough to secure the claims against the judgment debtors. Nat. Bank v. Kirkby et al., 43 Fla. 394, 32 South. 881; 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1048. If, on the other hand, it was intended that the order should embrace less than all the property described in the complaints, then it must be held void for failure to definitely describe such property. It has been held that a failure to describe with sufficient exactness the premises covered by a receivership is sufficient ground for reversal of the order of appointment. Salisbury v. Wilcox, 128 Cal. 347, 60 Pac. 979. "An order for a receiver ought to state distinctly on the face of it over what property the receiver is appointed." 34 Cyc. 139, and cases cited; Alderson on Receivers, § 140. The order "ought to state so distinctly on the face of it over what property the receiver is appointed that a party may know what it is the officer of the court is in possession of." Crow v. Wood, 13 Beav. 271.

[4] Moreover, it may be said that the plaintiffs could (if they had not done so) have adequately protected their interest in the property against future alienation thereof by filing a lis pendens. Thus in National Union Bank v. Riger, 38 App. Div. 123, 56 N. Y. Supp. 545, which was an action by a judgment creditor to subject certain land to his claim, it was held erroneous to appoint a receiver where there was sufficient equity in the property to satisfy the judgment. The court remarked that in such a case the creditor was adequately protected by the filing of a lis pendens.

[5] As before stated, the order was made ex parte and without requiring any bond of the applicant, and was therefore in clear violation of the provisions of section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that—

In such a case "the court, before making the order, must require from the applicant an undertaking, with sufficient sureties, in an amount to be fixed by the court, to the effect that the applicant will pay to the defendant all damages he may sustain by reason of the appointment of such receiver and the entry by him upon his duties, in case the applicant shall have procured such appointment wrongfully, maliciously or without sufficient cause. * * *

This requirement of the section is mandatory, and where it has not been complied with the appointment is void. Davila v. Heath, 13 Cal. App. 370, 109 Pac. 893; Fischer v. Superior Court, supra; Dreyspring v. Loeb, 113 Ala. 263, 21 South. 73.

For the reasons given the order is reversed.

FIELDING v. ILER et al. (Civ. 2704.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 148(4)—TOLLING STATUTE — ACKNOWLEDGMENT — SUFFICIENCY.

A letter, with reference to continuing a mortgage and not taking out new papers, by one of mortgagor's vendees who assumed and agreed to pay mortgage, written in response to letter of mortgagee, held a sufficient acknowledgment to toll the statute of limitations as to defendant writer.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1170(5)—REVERSAL — TECHNICAL ERRORS — VARIANCE WHICH DOES NOT MISLEAD ADVERSE PARTY.

That the only proof of allegation in complaint that defendants acknowledged "in writing said indebtedness to plaintiff and said mortgage" was a letter signed by one defendant acknowledging existence of mortgage indebtedness did not constitute a variance misleading the adverse party to his prejudice within Code Civ. Proc. § 469, and must be disregarded on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR — 231(3)—OBJECTIONS NOT MADE IN LOWER COURT—CONSIDERATION.

Where the only objection made in trial court to the introduction of a letter was that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, objection of want of sufficient proof of signature is not available on appeal.

4. EVIDENCE — 378(2)—PROOF OF SIGNATURE — SUFFICIENCY.

Plaintiff's testimony that letter was received by her from defendant wife and was the latter's reply to the former's letter of inquiry was sufficient proof of signature of the latter in the absence of specific objection.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 143(6)—MORTGAGES — 280(3) — ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEBT—"PARTY TO BE CHARGED."

The grantee in a deed of mortgaged premises, which contains a clause by which the grantee assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage indebtedness, becomes primarily liable to the mortgagee and is the "party to be charged" within Code Civ. Proc. § 360, as to acknowledgment of indebtedness by such party tolling the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Party to be Charged.]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 85(5)—ABSENCE FROM STATE.

Where time which elapsed between maturity of note and commencement of action to foreclose mortgage securing note was less than 4½ years, and successive absences of one of defendants from the state aggregated more than two years, action as to him was not barred under the four-year statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1) in view of section 351.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by Lydia W. Fielding against Evelyn M. Iler and Edward W. Anderson and wife. Judgment against Anderson and wife, and they appeal. Affirmed.

L. R. Weinmann, of Alameda, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Action for foreclosure of a mortgage given as security for the payment of a promissory note dated December 21, 1908, and payable three years after date. In July, 1909, the defendant Iler, maker of the note and mortgage, conveyed the mortgaged premises to the defendants Anderson, who are husband and wife. This conveyance contained the stipulation:

"That the same was made subject to said mortgage which the parties of the second part therein assumed and agreed to pay."

Thereupon the defendants Anderson entered into possession of the mortgaged premises, and paid interest upon the mortgage debt to the plaintiff from the summer of 1909 until September, 1915. About the middle of December, 1915, the plaintiff wrote the defendants Anderson, calling their attention to the fact that the time was drawing near for new papers to be made out and asked them "to make up a deed of trust instead of a mortgage." Two days before the expiration of the statutory period of limitation on the original promissory note, the defendant Josephine V. Anderson wrote the following letter to plaintiff:

"Dec. 19, 1915.

"Your note of December 11th at hand and I would like to have you continue the mortgage. In regards to taking out new papers for the same that will not be necessary as I had spoken to Mr. Adams in 1913 about that as the five years of the mortgage was up then and he informed me that you would agree to extend the payment of the same every two years and I still have the same paper so that if it is all the same to you I will be to see you on either the 27th or 28th of December, more likely the 27th. With best wishes for a happy Xmas I remain

"Respectfully, Josephine V. Anderson."

About December 27, 1915, defendants Anderson called upon plaintiff and offered to pay interest on the mortgage debt which plaintiff refused to accept.

This action was commenced May 10, 1916. The defendants filed a joint answer, in which they pleaded the provisions of section 337, subd. 1, Code of Civil Procedure, as a bar to the cause of action set forth in the complaint. The trial court sustained the plea of the statute of limitations in favor of the defendant Evelyn M. Iler, maker of the note, and judgment was entered in her favor, but overruled the plea as to both of the defendants Anderson, against whom judgment of foreclosure was rendered, from which they prosecute this appeal.

[1] The letter above set forth contains a distinct admission of the existence of the mortgage indebtedness. For that reason it was a sufficient acknowledgment to toll the statute of limitations as to the appellant Josephine V. Anderson. Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 Pac. 40; Foster v. Bowles, 138 Cal. 346, 351, 71 Pac. 494, 495; Worth v. Worth, 155 Cal. 599, 102 Pac. 663; Southern Pacific Co. v. Prosser, 122 Cal. 413, 52 Pac. 836, 55 Pac. 145.

In the first case above cited the Supreme Court say that such an acknowledgment "is sufficient if it shows that the writer regards or treats the indebtedness as subsisting." In the Foster Case it is said:

"It was not necessary that respondents should promise to pay the indebtedness in order to establish a new date for the statute to commence running as to the mortgage. All that was required was a plain and distinct acknowledgment in writing of the existence of the mortgage."

In our opinion this letter meets the test laid down by the above cases, and is not a conditional promise within the rule of Rodgers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 528, 60 Pac. 42, as claimed by appellants.

[2] The complaint alleged that the "defendants did acknowledge to plaintiff in writing said indebtedness to plaintiff and said mortgage." The only proof of this allegation was the letter signed by the one defendant, Josephine V. Anderson. Appellants claim that this constitutes a fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof. It cannot successfully be maintained, however, that the adverse party was misled to his prejudice by this variance, if any; and therefore it must be disregarded. Code Civ. Proc. § 469; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 724, 127 Pac. 66.

[3, 4] Objection is made to the receipt in evidence of the letter above referred to, upon the ground that the record contains no proof that such letter was either written or signed by Mrs. Anderson. The only objection made in the trial court to the admission of this letter in evidence was that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Under such circumstances, the objection of want of sufficient proof of signature is not available to appellants here. Crocker v. Carpenter, 98 Cal. 418, 421, 33 Pac. 271; French v. Atlas Milling Co., 17 Cal. App. 226, 119 Pac. 203. Furthermore, the respondent testified that the letter was received by her from Mrs. Anderson and was the latter's reply to the earlier letter of inquiry. In the absence of specific objection, this is sufficient proof of the signature to the letter.

[5] The further point is made that the acknowledgment of the indebtedness by Mrs. Anderson is ineffectual because made by a stranger to the original promissory note and mortgage. This contention is without merit. The grantee in a deed of mortgaged premises, which contains a clause by which such grantee assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage indebtedness, becomes primarily liable to the mortgagee. Thereafter he is "the party to be charged," within the meaning of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Williams v. Naftzger, 103 Cal. 440, 37 Pac. 411; Daniels v. Johnson, 129 Cal. 415, 61 Pac. 1107, 79 Am. St. Rep. 123; Lick v. Anderson, 29 Cal. App. 491, 156 Pac. 70.

[6] As to the appellant Edward W. Anderson, the court found:

"That on divers occasions between the 21st day of December, 1911, and the 21st day of December, 1915, said defendant Edward W. Anderson did depart from and absent himself from the state of California, and that the aggregate time covered by the successive absences of said defendant from said state during said period is more than two years, to wit, is approximately two years and six months."

This finding is not attacked as being unsupported by the evidence, but it is claimed it is not sufficient to warrant a judgment against that appellant. With this we cannot agree. The time which elapsed between the maturity of the note and the commencement of the action was less than 4½ years. Successive absences from the state aggregating more than 2 years during that period warranted the conclusion that the cause of action against such appellant was not barred. Code Civ. Proc., § 351; Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 205, 5 Pac. 91.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1919.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF 46—PROPOSED BILL—TIME OF SERVICE—NOTICE OF DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Relative to time for serving for settlement of proposed bill of exceptions for appeal, movants for new trial are chargeable with notice of the denial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 660, by operation of law, for want of prosecution, of their motion for new trial.

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF 46—PROPOSED BILL—SERVICE—LOSS OF RIGHT.

A party failing, in the absence of extension of time, to serve an adverse party proposed bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of denial of motion for new trial, and to present to trial judge the proposed bill of exceptions and proposed amendments thereto within 10 days after service of proposed amendments, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 650, loses right to settlement, unless, on application under section 473, he is relieved by the trial court from the effects of such failure.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 926(1)—PRESUMPTION IN ABSENCE OF PROPER RECORD.

In the absence of proper record, correctness of rulings in admitting evidence must be assumed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by W. T. McArthur against Marshall Paxton and another, executors of Charlotte T. Paxton, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Victor T. Watkins, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action against defendants, as executors of the estate of Charlotte T. Paxton, deceased, to recover for medical services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff to the deceased. Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

The judgment roll is accompanied by a bill of exceptions exhibiting the alleged erroneous rulings of the court made in the course of the trial. This bill of exceptions was settled and allowed by the court over plaintiff's objections, which were embodied in a special bill of exceptions settled at the time.

[1] In considering the appeal, respondent insists that appellants' bill of exceptions should be disregarded for reasons disclosed by the record as follows: The judgment was entered April 12, 1917, and notice thereof served upon defendants on April 14th. Defendants served a notice of intention to move for a new trial on April 24th, which motion, for want of prosecution, was denied by operation of law on July 14th (section 660, Code Civ. Proc.), of which fact defendants must be deemed chargeable with notice (Bernschein v. Whitaker, 175 Cal. 130, 165 Pac. 523). Thirty days thereafter, to wit, on August 13th, defendants served their proposed bill of exceptions, and plaintiff, within due time reserving therein the right to object to the settlement of any bill of exceptions on the ground that the same had not been proposed within the time allowed by law, prepared and served his proposed amendments to said bill on September 1st. Though served on September 1st, the amendments, together with the proposed bill of exceptions, were not delivered by defendants to the clerk, to be presented to the judge who tried the case, until December 15th, at which time the trial judge designated December 22d as the time for the settlement of the bill.

[2] In the absence of any order extending defendants' time, plaintiff's objection to the settlement of the proposed bill of exceptions should have been sustained, for the reason that it was not served within the time allowed by law, nor was it, together with plaintiff's proposed amendments, delivered to the clerk, nor presented by defendants to the court for settlement, upon notice to plaintiff, within the time allowed by law. Indeed, there seems to have been no attempt to comply with the provisions of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, which, in case proceedings for a new trial are pending, require, unless the time for so doing be extended, that the draft of such bill be served upon the adverse party within 10 days after notice of decision denying such motion, and, upon service of any proposed amendments thereto, such bill and amendments must, within 10 days thereafter, as provided in said section, be presented by the parties seeking the settlement of the bill to the judge who tried or heard the case, upon 5 days' notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge. In the case of Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, 81 Pac. 1112, it is said that failure to comply with the requirement that the proposed bill and amendments must, within ten days after service of the proposed amendments, be presented for settlement to the judge who tried or heard the case, deprives the party of his right to have the bill settled, "unless he be relieved from the effect of such failure by the trial court under * * * section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on account of 'mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.'" No such application was made. To the same effect is Whipple v. Hopkins, 119 Cal. 349, 51 Pac. 535, and Smith v. Solomon, 84 Cal. 537, 24 Pac. 286. In our opinion, the court was without jurisdiction to settle the bill of exceptions, and hence the same, in considering this appeal, must be disregarded.

[3] The alleged errors to which counsel for appellants in his brief directs our attention are rulings of the court in admitting evidence. But, in the absence of any proper record exhibiting such errors, we must assume the correctness of the rulings made by the trial court. This being true, we must consider the appeal upon the judgment roll alone, and, so considered, it is not, and indeed cannot be, claimed that any error appears therefrom.

The judgment is affirmed.

BARTON v. CITY OF RICHMOND et al.
(Civ. 2731.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1919.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⇨60(1) —
GROUNDS—WANT OF PROSECUTION.

Although no answer had been filed, where more than five years had elapsed between filing of demurrer to complaint and order dismissing suit for want of prosecution, trial court did not abuse its discretion in making order, though there had been no trial on issues of law raised by demurrer.

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⇨60(1)—WANT OF PROSECUTION—STATUTE APPLICABLE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 583, as to dismissal where action is not brought to trial for five years, applies only where an answer, as distinguished from a demurrer, has been filed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Suit by Daniel Barton against the City of Richmond and others. From an order granting a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution as to the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel Barton, of Richmond, in pro. per.
Chas. A. Gray, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITAIN, J. A suit for injunction to prevent the city of Richmond, a municipal corporation, from issuing certain paving bonds, and in which the Barber Asphalt Paving Company was joined as a party defendant was commenced on February 12, 1912. On March 8, 1912, the Barber Asphalt Paving Company demurred to the complaint. Stipulations to continue the hearing on the demurrer, first to March 25, 1912, then to April 15, 1912, and finally to April 29, 1912, were filed. Upon notice, and on the record of the case and affidavits filed by both parties, a motion to dismiss the action for want of prosecution, as to the Barber Asphalt Paving Company, was made on September 11, 1917, and the order granting the motion was entered.

The appellant contends that, since there had been no trial on the issue of law raised by the demurrer, the court was without jurisdiction to dismiss the action. Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, that, if an action is not brought to trial within five years after answer filed, the action shall be dismissed upon motion. If this power to dismiss for want of prosecution exists after issue of fact is joined, in a proper case the power must also exist after issue of law has been joined. The failure of the plaintiff, within reasonable time, to obtain a ruling upon a demurrer to the complaint, offers no obstruction to a dismissal of the action for want of prosecution.

The appellant further contends that, since no answer had been filed, the court was without power, under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to dismiss the action for want of prosecution. Appellant cites the case of Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 135 Pac. 1002. Mr. Justice Shaw, speaking for the Supreme Court in that case, said:

"Section 583 applies only to the particular instance of delay in bringing the case to trial after answer filed. The court, as we have seen, has general discretionary power, without the aid of legislation, to dismiss an action for want of prosecution. This power remains in full force, affected only by the implied legislative determination of section 583 that two years' delay is not unreasonable where an answer has been filed. Where an answer has not been filed, the court's power remains, as it was before, limited only by a sound discretion."

[1, 2] (1) Where more than five years elapsed between the time of filing demurrer to the complaint and the order dismissing the suit for want of prosecution, the learned court below did not abuse its discretion.
(2) Where demurrer to a complaint has not been brought to hearing with reasonable diligence, upon motion by the defendant the court may dismiss the action for want of prosecution. (3) Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies only to cases where an answer, as distinguished from a demurrer, has been filed.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

IWANAGA et al. v. HAGOPIAN et al.
(Civ. 2565.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1919.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⇨165 — LIABILITY — NATURE OF.

Generally, and at common law, a partnership obligation is joint, and not joint and several.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⇨219(3) — LIABILITY OF DORMANT PARTNER—JOINT LIABILITY.

The rule that a partnership liability is joint, and not joint and several, and that a judgment against less than all the partners upon partnership liability extinguishes the original claim against all, applies to dormant or silent partners, whose connection with the firm is unknown to plaintiff at time of commencement of action.

3. PARTNERSHIP ⇨219(3)—JUDGMENT—LIABILITY—DORMANT OR SILENT PARTNERS.

Under Civ. Code, § 2442, making liability of copartners joint, a judgment against less than all the partners upon a partnership liability extinguishes the original claim against all of the partners, including dormant or silent partners, whose connection with the firm at time of commencement of action was unknown to plaintiff.

4. PARTNERSHIP ⇨219(3)—PARTNERSHIP LIABILITY — ACTION AGAINST LESS THAN ALL PARTNERS—JUDGMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 2442, making liability of copartners joint, in action against less than all the partners upon a partnership liability, the judgment extinguishes the original claim against all; the joint obligation being merged in the judgment, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 414, 989.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by N. Iwanaga and others against A. D. Hagopian and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with instructions.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for appellants.
A. M. Drew, of Fresno, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment by default, the defendants declining to answer after order overruling their demurrer to the complaint.

From that pleading it appears that the plaintiffs had obtained a judgment against Albert D. Hagopian for work and labor performed, and that subsequently, in attempting to satisfy such judgment in proceedings supplementary to execution, they learned for the first time that Jas. D. and Baxter D. Hagopian were copartners of Albert in the enterprise upon which the plaintiffs' labor had been performed. It also appears from the complaint that the said judgment is still unsatisfied, and in this action judgment is prayed as against the copartnership and Jas. D. and Baxter D. Hagopian.

[1] Generally and at common law a partnership obligation is joint, and not joint and several. Accordingly a judgment against less than all the partners upon such a liability extinguishes the original claim against all, for the joint obligation has been merged in the judgment, and, the obligation being joint, the individual partners have not undertaken to be severally liable. 1 Freeman on Judgments, § 231; Wood v. Watkinson, 17 Conn. 500, 44 Am. Dec. 562; 30 Cyc. 596, 599; Bates on Law of Partnership, § 535.

[2] This rule obtains even where the partners not made defendants were dormant or silent partners, whose connection with the firm was unknown to the plaintiff when he commenced his action. 23 Cyc. 1212; Gilmore on Partnership, p. 262.

[3, 4] In some states the rigor of this common-law rule has been relaxed by statutes, which declare the obligations of copartners to be several as well as joint. But in this state the common-law rule has been expressly enacted by section 2442 of the Civil Code, which declares the liability of copartners to be joint, and we have no provision permitting several judgments to be recovered in several actions upon a joint obligation. The extent to which the common-law rule on this subject has been changed by the provisions of section 414 and section 989 of the Code of Civil Procedure is by permitting (section 414) an action brought against the joint debtors, but in which the summons has not been served on all, to proceed to judgment against those served, and (section 989) after judgment so obtained, to bring in any of the defendants not served by an order to show cause why they should not be bound by the judgment. Dobbs v. Purington, 136 Cal. 70, 68 Pac. 323; Bailey L. Co. v. Hall, 110 Cal. 490, 42 Pac. 962; Kelly v. Bandini, 50 Cal. 530, 32. But those sections, while they doubtless remedy to some extent the inconvenience or hardship of the common-law rule, do not go so far as to reach persons not made parties to the original suit, even though such persons were dormant partners, and the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of the action was unaware of their interest. Erwin v. Scotten, 40 Ind. 389.

The defendants' demurrer to the complaint raised this point, and in overruling it we are of the opinion that the court erred. The judgment is therefore reversed, with instructions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer to the complaint.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title. Judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] Plaintiff's claim of title rests upon a tax deed from the state issued for nonpayment of taxes for the year 1908, and unless it is sufficient to divest title, it is conceded the ownership of the property is, as found by the court, vested in defendant. This deed described the property as follows:

"In Los Angeles county, Rancho La Brea, 1.00 acre, Com. 31.980 chs. E. and 17.57 chs. S. of Sta. 6, Ro. La Brea, described in M-20-38."

Plaintiff called as a witness a surveyor, who undertook to identify and locate the land upon the ground. According to his testimony, he did this by running a line 31.980 chains east and 17.57 chains south from station 6, Rancho La Brea, and then, by reason of "M-20-38" found in the deed, he referred to page 38 of Minute Book 20, kept in the surveyor's office, where he found a plat of a strip of land the northeast corner of which was reached by the line which he ran from station 6 of Rancho La Brea. This strip of land, as shown by the plat, was some 75 feet in width, measured north and south, and of sufficient length, measured east and west, to constitute 2 acres, and through the center of which, extending north and south, there was a private right of way some 60 feet in width. Conceding, but not holding, that for the purpose of identifying the land described in this deed reference might be had to such unofficial document in the surveyor's office—as to which, however, we express grave doubts—nevertheless this witness admits that neither from such two-acre plat nor any data connected therewith could he identify which part of the 2-acre plat, found in Book 20-38 of the surveyor's minutes, was covered by the description in the deed, but that he arbitrarily assumed the deed referred to the east half of said strip, for no reason other than that the strip was crossed by the private road and by running the call in the deed he reached the northeast corner of said tract. Upon like arbitrary assumption it could with equal propriety be said the description referred to and covered the north half of said strip. Where, as shown by the evidence, the description in a deed is equally applicable to different pieces of property, so that it cannot be said which it was intended to cover, the description therein, owing to uncertainty, is insufficient as a conveyance of the property. Cadwalder v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43, 14 Pac. 385.

[2] Moreover, the assessment book which, after correction by the board of supervisors, was delivered to the auditor by the clerk of the board, was not accompanied by the affidavit of said clerk, as required by section 3682, Political Code; nor did the clerk at any time subsequent to such delivery, as in Miller v. County of Kern, 150 Cal. 797, 90 Pac. 119, make or cause such affidavit to be attached to said corrected assessment book. As said in Miller v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 516, 70 Pac. 549, such act, thus shown to have been omitted, was essential to the validity of the assessment book, and in the absence of its performance the tax collector had no

[3] The action was commenced on October 5, 1914, and the court, under subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code, required defendant to pay to plaintiff the sum of $64 on account of sums disbursed by plaintiff for taxes, penalties, and costs in pursuit of the state's alleged title to the property, but refused to include in such sum the amount of $15.96, paid by plaintiff on account of taxes levied against the property for the fiscal year 1914-15, and for which year there is some evidence that defendant paid the tax upon said property. However this may be, the tax of $15.96 was not paid under said subdivision 5 of section 3898 in pursuit of the state's title to said property, but was paid on account of taxes levied after plaintiff supposed he had acquired the state's title, and the payment so made was not in pursuit of the state's title, but as owner of said property. It was a voluntary payment, reimbursement for which cannot be had under section 3898.

The judgment is affirmed.

CROWN LAUNDRY & CLEANING CO. v. CAMERON. (Civ. 2523.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1919.)

EXEMPTIONS — 44—PROPERTY EXEMPT—AUTOMOBILE USED IN BUSINESS.

An automobile is not included within Code Civ. Proc. § 690, subd. 6, exempting certain vehicles which may be drawn by "one or two horses" from attachment levy and sale under execution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the Crown Laundry & Cleaning Company against G. E. Cameron, in which defendant's automobile was attached and defendant moved to release the attachment on the ground that the automobile was exempt from execution, and from an order granting the motion, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

George H. Moore and Raymond E. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert G. Payne, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Respondent was engaged in the business of collecting clothes and garments from patrons and returning the same after they had been laundered. In the doing of that work he used a Ford automobile continuously. Plaintiff brought its action in the superior court to recover the sum of $870 from the defendant, alleged to have accrued and to be owing upon contract. It secured a writ of attachment and caused a levy to be made on the automobile of defendant. Defendant appeared and moved to discharge the attachment, claiming that the automobile was exempt from execution. He filed an affidavit, which was not contradicted by any proof offered by the plaintiff, showing facts as to the use made of the machine in his employment, as has been stated in the foregoing, and further showing that he was a married man, having a family of a wife and four minor children, all of whom were supported solely by his labor. The court granted the motion, and the plaintiff has appealed.

The sole question presented is as to whether the automobile was exempt from execution under the provisions of subdivision 6 of section 690, Code of Civil Procedure. In that subdivision it is provided that the following property shall be exempt from execution:

"Two horses, two oxen or two mules, and their harness, and one cart or wagon, one dray or truck, one coupe, one hack, or carriage, for one or two horses, by the use of which a cartman, drayman, truckman, huckster, peddler, hackman, teamster or other laborer habitually earns his living. * * *"

Clearly it appears to us that a motor driven vehicle is not a cart, wagon, dray, truck, coupe, hack, or carriage, as those terms are used in the section. The section plainly says that such exempt vehicles are vehicles which may be drawn by "one or two horses." If the Legislature intended that a motor vehicle should be exempt from attachment, we think that it would have so declared in plain terms, and that for the courts to add to the statute any articles not enumerated would in effect be judicial legislation. Counsel for respondent cites an Iowa case (Lames v. Armstrong et al., 162 Iowa, 327, 144 N. W. 1, 49 L. R. A. [N. S.] 691, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 511), in which it was held there that an automobile was exempt under the terms of the Iowa statute. It is sufficient to say that the statute there considered contained the general term, "or other vehicle," which makes it quite different from the California law. The decision, to our mind, is not applicable. While it is the established policy of the law to construe liberally the exemption statute, such construction cannot go to the extent of adding articles which the Legislature has omitted to include. As said in Stanton v. French, 91 Cal. 276, 27 Pac. 657, 25 Am. St. Rep. 174:

"In the list of property allowed peddlers by statute as exempt from execution, we find no article answering in name or use to a bread box, and a debtor's claims are limited by the words of the statute."

The order appealed from is reversed.

CAPPLER v. COWAN et al. (Civ. 2624.)

1. DEEDS ⇐208(3)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE—POSSESSION BY GRANTEE.

Evidence that a signed and acknowledged deed, conveying land from daughter to mother, was found among mother's effects upon her death was evidence tending to show that the deed had been delivered.

2. DEEDS ⇐208(1)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

In an action to cancel deed conveying property from daughter to mother and found among mother's effects upon her death, evidence held to justify finding that deed had never been delivered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Kate G. Cappler against Mary A. Cowan and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. H. Laine and Jesse H. Evans, both of San Francisco (Chas. S. Wheeler, Jr., of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Arthur H. Barendt, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, quieting her title to a certain lot of land situated in San Francisco and canceling a deed through which Mary A. Cowan, defendant and appellant, claims to deraign title to said lot.

In regard to the facts of the case, the testimony of the plaintiff showed: That in the year 1899, just prior to the making of the deed sought in this suit to be canceled, she had suffered several severe attacks of "heart failure," and, fearing that a recurrence of such attacks might prove fatal, concluded to make arrangements for the disposition of what little property she owned. That desiring to avoid the expense and delay necessarily incident to the orderly probate of her estate, she executed a bill of sale of some mining stock, indorsed the certificate thereof, and executed the above-mentioned deed in favor of her mother, with whom she was then living, and placed these papers in an envelope, upon which she wrote: "To be delivered to Mrs. Mary A. McElwee [the name of her mother] immediately after my death. Kate G. McElwee." That the execution of these documents and the placing of them in the envelope as described was done upon the advice of a notary public, before whom the execution of the deed had been acknowledged, and who was a friend of the plaintiff and her mother. That she placed the sealed envelope containing said documents in a drawer in a cabinet in their home in which were kept all her papers and those of her mother while they were living together. That she explained to her mother what she had done, and that her mother understood that the property was to be hers only in the event of plaintiff's death. That no delivery of the documents was ever made. That in the year 1903 she married, and was absent from California during four years. That upon leaving she placed the sealed envelope in her trunk, which she kept at her mother's home, and explained to her sister (the appellant) that in the event of her death she had made provision for their mother in the manner above described. That while she was absent from California the deed, through the occurrence of a fire, had come into her mother's and appellant's possession. That upon her return to the state, being much improved in health, she at one time concluded to destroy the documents, and they were handed to her for that purpose by her sister, but later, upon reflecting that her mother might still survive her, she decided not to destroy the papers. That thereupon she placed them in her trunk, and did not see the deed again until it was produced by the appellant in court. That prior thereto, however, in May, 1916, and just after the rendition of a judgment unfavorable to the appellant in an action involving this identical lot, she discovered that the deed had been placed of record, and thereupon commenced this action.

[1,2] The single question in the case is that of the delivery of the deed. It is doubtless true that, the document, having been signed and acknowledged by the plaintiff, the finding of it, as testified to by the appellant, among her mother's effects upon her death, would be evidence tending to show its delivery; but we think that the trial court was entirely justified in its conclusion that such evidence was wholly overcome by the testimony introduced by the plaintiff. It is undisputed that the deed was one of gift, and it is not probable under all the circumstances of the case that the plaintiff intended to part with the title to the property while she yet lived, for if she had, and her mother had died before her, the property would have formed a part of her mother's estate, and others besides the plaintiff entitled to share in its distribution. The trial judge, who had before him the handwriting of the indorsement on the bill of sale and the envelope, observed at the conclusion of the trial that they appeared, not only to be in the handwriting of the plaintiff, but also to have been made with the same pen and ink and at the same time. As to this observation the appellant states that it may be entirely correct, and also that the certificate of stock was inclosed in the envelope to be delivered as directed thereon, but argues—no doubt correctly—that it does not follow that the deed was placed in the envelope with the bill of sale. Notwithstanding this, however, we think the fact that the bill of sale and deed were made at about the same time lends strong support of the testimony of the plaintiff as to her intentions at that time and what she did to carry them into effect. Other circumstances tending to corroborate the plaintiff's testimony, if corroboration were necessary, as contended by appellant, are that the plaintiff from the time she made the deed paid the taxes on the property either from rentals received from it or from other funds belonging to her; that she always claimed to own the property, and her title thereto was not questioned by the appellant, or any one else, until litigation over a boundary line between it and adjoining land or some similar litigation between the parties, was decided adversely to the appellant, and at that time, as before stated, this old deed suddenly appeared of record.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. STORKE. (Cr. 640.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\S$ 122(2)—SETTING ASIDE INFORMATION—GROUNDS.

Where a defendant charged with criminal libel was committed for use of words, "Come out in the open, ye hypocrites," an information should not have been set aside from mere fact that it set forth the entire libelous article, it not being alleged in information that any statement contained therein other than that for which defendant was committed constituted a public offense.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 213—COMMITMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 812, 813, 872, it is duty of a magistrate, even though a complaint fails to charge a public offense, to commit defendant for any offense shown upon examination to have been committed, provided there be sufficient cause to believe him guilty thereof, where accused fails to attack complaint as insufficient to justify issue of warrant of arrest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

From an order setting aside an information charging C. A. Storke with the offense of libel, the People appeal. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., E. W. Squier, Dist. Atty., and G. H. Gould, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Santa Barbara, for the People.

W. J. Ford, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the people from an order of court setting aside an information filed, charging defendant with the offense of libel, upon the ground that he had not been properly committed by a magistrate.

The complaint upon which the warrant for the arrest of defendant was issued set forth a part of an editorial article which defendant published in a newspaper, wherein of and concerning the complaining witness, F. H. Lingham, it was said:

"These patriots (meaning the said W. R. Edwardes and F. H. Lingham) have not the odor of 'Lunnun City' (meaning the city of London, England), out of their clothes yet, and would to-day deny the Government (meaning the Government of the United States of America) that protects them, if a dollar balance was on the side of betrayal," which article so published, "in so far as it states that the said F. H. Lingham would deny the government if profit would result to him from such betrayal, is false and untrue, and was published by said defendant willfully and with a malicious intent to injure said F. H. Lingham."

At the hearing before the magistrate the entire article, only a part of which was set forth in the complaint, was offered in evidence, from which it appeared that in referring to Lingham and Edwardes the defendant therein used language as follows: "Come out in the open, ye hypocrites." Thereupon, although the said language was not set forth in the complaint and no charge of libel based thereon, the magistrate, upon the evidence adduced at the hearing, made an order as follows: "It appearing to me that the offense of libel in publishing of and concerning F. H. Lingham at the time and in the manner alleged in the annexed complaint the following libelous words: 'Come out in the open, ye hypocrites,' meaning W. R. Edwardes and F. H. Lingham—has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe that the defendant, C. A. Storke, named in the annexed complaint is guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to same, and committed to the sheriff of the county of Santa Barbara." In due time an information was filed charging defendant with the offense for which he was committed and wherein the entire article which contained the alleged libelous language was incorporated.

[1] In support of the order made respondent insists: First, that the magistrate was without jurisdiction to commit defendant because the complaint upon which the warrant of arrest was issued did not state facts which, if true, constituted a public offense; second, that the magistrate had no jurisdiction to commit defendant for an offense different from that charged in the complaint, unless included in the offense so charged; and, third, that the district attorney had no right to incorporate in the information other matters contained in the article, regardless of whether or not they constituted an offense, since defendant was not committed for anything other than the use of the words, "Come out in the open, ye hypocrites." As to this last contention, suffice it to say that, while the entire article is set forth in the information, it is not alleged that any statement contained herein, other than that for which defendant was committed, constituted a public offense; hence the only offense charged in the information was that for which defendant was committed.

[2] The first and second points may be treated together. Under sections 811, 812, and 813, Penal Code, a magistrate has no jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest without evidence in the form of a complaint, affidavit, or deposition tending at least to show the guilt of the party named in the warrant; and, if a warrant be issued in the absence of such evidence, the petitioner may, under appropriate proceedings, be discharged. Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619. Section 872, Penal Code, provides that when an accused, in accordance with a warrant so issued upon an affidavit or complaint, is brought before the magistrate, and it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate must make an order, signed by him, to the following effect:

"It appearing to me that the offense in the within complaint mentioned (or any offense, according to the fact, stating generally the nature thereof) has been committed, and that there is sufficient cause to believe the within named A. B. guilty thereof, I order that he be held to answer to the same."

It appears from this provision that when the accused fails to attack the complaint as insufficient to justify the issuance of the warrant of arrest, and an examination is had, wherein the facts specified, namely, that an offense has been committed and sufficient cause exists to believe defendant guilty thereof, it is the duty of the magistrate, even though the complaint concededly fails to charge a public offense, to commit the defendant for "any offense" upon said examination shown to have been committed, provided there be sufficient cause to believe him guilty thereof.

In support of his contention respondent cites People v. Christian, 101 Cal. 471, 35 Pac. 1043, People v. Howard, 111 Cal. 655, 44 Pac. 342, and People v. Hudson, 35 Cal. App. 234, 169 Pac. 719. But, in so far as the two former cases sustain his contention, they have been directly overruled in the later case of People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 76 Pac. 1028, wherein the question was almost identical with that presented in the instant case, and which was decided by the Supreme Court in bank. In that case the motion to set aside the information was based upon the claim that the affidavit or complaint upon which the warrant of arrest was issued by the committing magistrate was defective, in that it did not contain a charge of any crime, although it purported to charge the crime of murder. In discussing the point, the court said:

"It is contended that the facts stated do not constitute a legal definition of murder; but, assuming that to be so [italics ours] the appellant could have availed himself of the defect only while he was held under the warrant of arrest founded on the affidavit. And then the objection to the document would have been, not that it was defective as a pleading, but that it did not contain sufficient evidence to justify a warrant of arrest."

And in discussing a like question in People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 27 Pac. 523, also a bank case, the court said:

"Even if the offense charged in the information was, as claimed, totally different from that laid in the complaint [italics ours], it would not affect the sufficiency of the information, since, as we have seen, the information does not depend on the complaint, but upon the commitment, and it does not appear that the order of commitment differed in any respect from the information. * * * It is the duty of the magistrate to hold the defendant to answer for the offense proved, whatever may have been the offense charged"—citing People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 255, 14 Pac. 796.

And in People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 457, the court said:

"The object of the statute in providing for the issuance of a warrant, is, that the defendant may be brought before the committing magistrate, and when he is once there, and an examination of the case is had in pursuance of the terms of the statute, and the defendant is held to answer, a foundation is laid for the filing of an information by the district attorney. The regularity of the proceeding by information did not therefore depend in any manner upon the affidavit on which the warrant of arrest was issued, and had no connection with it."

While it may appear illogical to hold that a commitment made upon a preliminary examination, following a warrant of arrest upon a complaint that states no offense, is a valid act, nevertheless, the statute and cases cited seem to be determinative of the question, and must be deemed controlling upon this court.

The case of People v. Hudson, 35 Cal. App. 234, 169 Pac. 719, cited by respondent, is not applicable to the facts involved in the instant case. The contention there made by the people, as appellant, was that the information should embrace an offense disclosed by the testimony taken before the magistrate, and not follow the commitment, as to which the court, upon the authority of People v. Nogiri, 142 Cal. 596, 76 Pac. 490, decided adversely to appellant, and in doing so quoted an extract (repudiated in the Lee Look Case) from People v. Christian, supra, wherein it was held that where an information charges a defendant with an offense different from that charged in the complaint upon which he was examined, or not included therein, he has had no examination for that offense, and is entitled to have the information set aside upon the ground that he has been illegally committed. The attention of the court was not directed to the Lee Look Case, wherein the court overruled what was said in the Christian Case upon this point.

What we have said renders it unnecessary to determine whether or not the complaint stated a public offense; neither are we concerned with the question as to whether or not probable cause existed for committing defendant. Suffice it to say that the information followed and was based upon the commitment, and, in our opinion, the court erred in holding that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate.

LOUCKS v. MORLEY. (Civ. 2869.)

1. SALES — 274 — RESTAURANT — WARRANTIES OF FITNESS OF FOOD FURNISHED.

In the absence of statute, a restaurant keeper is not liable on ground of implied warranty of fitness of food furnished by him.

2. SALES — 274 — IMPLIED WARRANTIES — STATUTES — "SALE FOR DOMESTIC USE."

Where a customer is furnished food in a restaurant for immediate consumption, transaction is not a "sale for domestic use," and there is no implied warranty of the fitness of the food for consumption, under Civ. Code, § 1775.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Robert G. Loucks against G. F. Morley. From a judgment in favor of defendant, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert G. Loucks, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for the breach of an implied warranty, under section 1775 of the Civil Code of the state of California, for alleged poisoning of plaintiff by reason of his having eaten rice pudding as a part of his meal at the restaurant of defendant, and because of the sickness caused thereby, and his subsequent inability for a long period to practice his profession as an attorney at law.

From the record in this case it appears: That on the 14th day of August, 1911, plaintiff went to the restaurant of said defendant, at about noon of said day, and became the guest of said defendant at said restaurant, and then and there, as such guest, bought and paid for and ate his noonday meal, which consisted of one order each of ham and egg sandwich, rice pudding and tea. That said meal was furnished to said plaintiff by said defendant as a guest at said restaurant, and not otherwise. That about 6½ hours after plaintiff had eaten his said meal, as aforesaid, he became ill, at said time being taken with cramps and an attack of dysentery, which was followed by a continuation of said illness, accompanied by vomiting. That the plaintiff was thereafter seriously ill for a period of 30 days, during which time he was wholly incapacitated for work, or attending to the duties of his profession, and that thereafter, as the result of said illness, he was partially incapacitated for a period of about 6 months, during which time he was intermittently able to attend to his duties about one-third of the time. That since the expiration of said 6 months plaintiff has at times suffered from the effects of said illness, by reason of nervousness and at times loss of memory. It is not alleged or shown that plaintiff made his home at the restaurant, or that he was aught but a casual customer for this one instance only. Defendant contends that section 1775 of the Civil Code does not apply here; that his legal obligation to plaintiff and to the public generally was fully observed by his use of ordinary care in the business; in other words, he says that he was not guilty of negligence.

So far as material here, it is alleged in the complaint, and denied in the answer, that "said defendant did then and there impliedly warrant that all the food, provisions, and meals served at said restaurant and lunchroom were pure, sound and wholesome." The record here consists only of the transcript and appellant's opening brief. The court found, among other things, as follows:

"That the illness of said plaintiff was caused by eating the said rice pudding, and because of some deleterious condition of said pudding, the nature of which this court is unable to find, from the evidence in this case."

"That the defendant did not, at said place, at said or any time, sell provisions or food or meals, except only in the regular course of his restaurant business, and to the guests of the restaurant, same being used as meals for the consumption of the guests as such in said restaurant. That the defendant did not sell provisions for human consumption except and only as above stated. That the defendant did not, then and there, or at any other time or place, impliedly or otherwise, warrant that all or any of the food, provisions, and meals served in said restaurant and lunchroom were pure, sound, and wholesome. That said defendant exercised great care in the preparation of the meals to be served to his guests at said restaurant, and particularly * * * in the selection of the ingredients from which the food served to his guests at said restaurant, as aforesaid, was made up and compounded; * * * in the keeping of said restaurant clean, and in all respects fit and proper as a place for the preparation of, keeping, and serving of meals to guests in a restaurant; * * * in the selection of ingredients from which the rice pudding referred to in plaintiff's complaint was made. That said rice pudding was made from rice, milk, eggs, and cornstarch, all of which were of the best quality. That after the said ingredients were put together, the said pudding was boiled and cooked in a very hot oven, the heat being more than sufficient to destroy any and all germs or bacteria from which ptomaine poisoning could or might result. That immediately after being cooked the said rice pudding was taken and put in a closed, tight, clean, refrigerating box, where the temperature of same was reduced to a very low degree, said pudding remaining in said box at all times up to and within not to exceed 20 minutes of the time when same was served to the guests of the restaurant, including plaintiff. That the room in which all meals were kept, served, and consumed was thoroughly ventilated, the air being withdrawn therefrom by powerful fans, and expelled outside the building, and that in so far as it was possible so to do, the said air was kept pure and wholesome, and that at no time was the temperature of said room allowed to become sufficiently high to permit of the propagation, breeding, or spreading of ptomaine bacteria or germs, or such as would produce ptomaine poisoning. That said defendant was not negligent in any respect in the conduct, management, or operation of his said restaurant, or in the selection of, or the preparation of, food to be served to his guests, and particularly in the selection of the ingredients from which said rice pudding was compounded, and was not negligent in the preparing, cooking, keeping, or serving of said rice pudding."

The said findings are fully sustained by the evidence. It is apparent from the record that defendant's restaurant was clean and sanitary, and that defendant here was absolutely free from any negligence. There was no lack of ordinary care whatever in the handling or sale of the said meal so sold, or any portion thereof. We are therefore confronted with the question—and, indeed, the appellant here so contends—as to whether the sale of the said meal by defendant to plaintiff, under these circumstances, would carry with it an implied warranty of fitness, under section 1775 of the Civil Code. If there is such an implied warranty, it is obvious that there is no legal requirement on the part of plaintiff either to allege or prove negligence; and, indeed, in this case there is no allegation or pretended proof of either an express warranty of quality, or of knowledge on the part of defendant of the unwholesome or deleterious character of the said rice pudding so served, or of any of its ingredients, or, as has already been stated, of defendant's negligence in the premises.

It would seem, from an examination of the authorities in this state, that we are treading virgin soil, for apparently no case involving the issues here presented has ever reached an appellate tribunal in California. While quite a number of common-law cases will be found wherein it is held that a dealer in foods, selling directly to consumers for family use in their own homes, is liable on an implied warranty, as, for instance, butchers selling meat to customers for consumption at home, of which cases Wideman v. Keller, 171 Ill. 93, 49 N. E. 210, is an illustration, there is a surprising dearth of authorities respecting the liability of restaurant keepers on an implied warranty of the fitness of the food furnished by them to their customers. No case, by a court of last resort, has been called to our attention in which it has been held that a restaurant keeper is liable on an implied warranty. Of cases arising under the common law, wherein the liability of restaurant keepers or caterers is involved, we find the following four: Sheffer v. Willoughby, 163 Ill. 518, 45 N. E. 253, 34 L. R. A. 464, 54 Am. St. Rep. 483; Crocker v. Baltimore Dairy Lunch Co., 214 Mass. 177, 100 N. E. 1078, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 884; Pantaze v. West, 7 Ala. App. 599, 61 South. 42; Doyle v. Fuerst & Kraemer, 129 La. 838, 56 South. 906, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1110. In all of these cases the right of action was based on negligence.

Aside from Merrill v. Hodson, 88 Conn. 314, 91 Atl. 533, L. R. A. 1915B, 481, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 917, we know of no case, in a court of last resort, in which an attempt was made to recover upon the strength of an implied warranty for harmful consequences resulting from unwholesome food or drink supplied by the keeper of a restaurant. In this Connecticut case, and likewise in Valeri v. Pullman Co. (D. C.) 218 Fed. 519, it was held that there is no implied warranty of the quality of food furnished by a restaurant keeper to a customer for immediate consumption on the restaurant premises. In this Connecticut case, and likewise the federal court case, the court held that the transaction between a restaurant keeper and his customer is one for the rendition of service, and not a sale; the court in the Connecticut case saying that "the true essence of the transaction is service in the satisfaction of a human need or desire—ministry to a bodily want." The reasons given by these courts for holding that the transaction is not a sale but the rendition of service, are summed up in the language of Professor Beale, as follows:

"As an innkeeper does not lease his rooms, so he does not sell the food he supplies to his guest. It is his duty to supply such food as the guest needs, and the corresponding right of the guest is to consume the food he needs and to take no more. Having finished his meal, he has no right to take food from the table, even the uneaten portion of the food supplied to him; nor can he claim a certain portion of the food as his own, to be handed over to another in case he chooses not to consume it himself. The title to food never passes, as a result of an ordinary transaction of supplying food to a guest; or, as it was quaintly put in one old case, 'He does not sell but utters his provisions.'" Beale on Innkeepers and Hotels, § 169.

There are many cases, some of which are cited by appellant here, that have grown out of the sale of provisions by a dealer engaged in selling food for family use, such as butchers, pastry vendors, and the like; but these cases are clearly not in point. Of the common-law cases, wherein it is held that, in the absence of negligence, a restaurant keeper is not liable for ill health resulting from the unwholesomeness of food furnished by him, Sheffer v. Willoughby, supra, is perhaps the leading case. In discussing that case the court uses the following language:

"In the first of the cited cases the obligations of a restaurant keeper are discussed, and a statement made of the law which very plainly means, and has been generally understood to mean, that the only remedy for the consequences of eating unwholesome food supplied by an innkeeper or restaurant keeper in the regular course of his business is one for lack of due care."

Plaintiff here cites a well-considered Massachusetts case, viz., Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co., 198 Mass. 271, 84 N. E. 481, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 126 Am. St. Rep. 436, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076, as supporting his contention here. We have examined that case carefully, and fail utterly to find any comfort therein for plaintiff. Just one quotation from said case will probably suffice, in support of the statement just made. It is as follows:

"The decisions on the question now before us in the United States, outside of Massachusetts, are not many, and they do not deal with the question at length. There is much in these opinions in conflict with what is now the settled law in England. So far as decisions go, however, there is but one in conflict with that rule. That is the decision in Hoover v. Peters, 18 Mich. 51. In that case it was held that in the sale of food for immediate domestic consumption there is an implied warranty that it is fit to be eaten, although the sale was made by one not a dealer. That is not law in Massachusetts. Howard v. Emerson, supra [110 Mass. 320, 14 Am. Rep. 608]; Giroux v. Stedman, 145 Mass. 439, 1 Am. St. Rep. 472, 14 N. E. 538. No cases are cited in the opinion, and there is a dissenting opinion by Christianity, J., on the ground that to make out a liability in a sale of provisions the vendor must be a dealer, or it must be proved that the defendant knew the provisions to be unsound. * * * It is enough to dispose of this case to say that the plaintiff did not sustain the burden of proof on that issue. * * * Whatever may be the rule in respect to caterers in serving meals, there is no case in which it has been held that in the sale of provisions by a dealer the test of his liability is negligence. If the selection is left to the dealer, due care by him is no defense. He is liable for latent unsoundness that could not be discovered. Wallis v. Russell, supra. And see as to due care in the sale by a dealer of chattels not articles of food, Randall v. Newson, L. R. 2, Q. B. Div. 102. As due care is no defense when the dealer makes the selection, so there is no liability for negligence when a dealer offers several articles of food for sale from which the buyer is to make his own selection. In offering these several articles he impliedly represents that he believes all of them to be fit for food. That is the extent of his liability; no question of negligence is involved. The implied representation of soundness apart, there is no liability on a vendor of food to be selected by the buyer because he did not procure and offer for sale better food than he procured and offered for sale."

A restaurant has been defined as "a public eating place." In the same case it was held that "a restaurant keeper is not, according to ordinary usage, either a merchant or a manufacturer. The fact is that both the sale and the manufacture of foods are minor incidents to the keeping of a restaurant." "It cannot be denied that the eating of food by a customer at a restaurant, in the regular course of business, involves a sale of the food eaten. The price of the food alone is usually not specified, but it is included in a lump sum with the charge for service and use of dishes, chair, and table. It is nevertheless a sale of the food consumed, within the technical definition of that term." San Francisco v. Larsen, 165 Cal. 179, 131 Pac. 366.

ground of implied warranty of the fitness of food furnished by him, such liability can arise only by reason of said section 1775. Our attention has not been called to any other Code section that gives the right of recovery in the absence of negligence. In some of the common-law cases it is said that where a "manufacturer" or "dealer" contracts to supply an article for a particular purpose, there is an implied warranty that the article is reasonably fit for that purpose. Under the principle as thus stated, it has been held by the English courts, and by courts of certain sister states, that a dealer engaged in the business of selling food for family consumption is liable if the food be not reasonably fit for that purpose. (In this connection see the English cases cited in Farrell v. Manhattan Market Co., 198 Mass. 271, 84 N. E. 481, 15 L. R. A. [N. S.] 484, 126 Am. St. Rep. 436, 15 Ann. Cas. 1076.) In this state, however, the principle does not extend to "dealers," but is restricted to "manufacturers." It is provided in section 1769 of the Civil Code that "one who sells or agrees to sell an article of his own manufacture thereby warrants it to be free from any latent defect not disclosed to the buyer, arising from the process of manufacture; and also that neither he nor his agent in such manufacture has knowingly used improper materials therein," and in section 1770 that "one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose, warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose." A restaurant keeper, even though, by mixing ingredients and cooking them, he produces a different article, is not a "manufacturer" in any true sense of the word. New Orleans v. Mannessier, 32 La. Ann. 1075, 26 Cyc. 521, 522; Correio v. Lynch, 65 Cal. 273, 3 Pac. 898. Unless, therefore, an implied warranty in favor of appellant arises under said section 1775, there is no other Code section that aids him, and the judgment and order must be affirmed.

This brings us to the real question in the case: What is the scope and meaning of section 1775? As we have shown, it was held in the Merrill and Valeri Cases—88 Conn. 314, 91 Atl. 533, L. R. A. 1915B, 481, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 917, and (D. C.) 218 Fed. 519—that where a customer is furnished food in a restaurant for immediate consumption the transaction is not a sale but a rendition of service, and that, for this reason, there can be no implied warranty. Aside from this, there is, in our opinion, a stronger ground for holding that no implied warranty on the part of a restaurant keeper arises under Code section 1775. The implied warranty that arises under that section is confined to those who make a business of selling provisions "for domestic use." "Domestic" means "belonging to the house or household; concerning or relating to the home or family." Stand. Dict. The word itself, in its derivation from "domus," a house, suggests its inherent purport. Thus it has been held that servants employed in a hotel are not "domestic" servants. Cook v. Dodge, 6 La. Ann. 275. The "domestic" use of water means the use to which water is applied by the family, or for family use, and includes all use to which water is applied around the home, including the watering of animals there; but it does not include the temporary quenching of the thirst of men or animals at drinking places maintained by the city in public places. Water Supply Co. v. Albuquerque, 17 N. M. 326, 128 Pac. 77, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439. It is the place where the food is eaten or drunk, rather than the fact that it is food or drink, that determines whether its use is a "domestic" use or not. For these reasons we are of the opinion that defendant was not "one who makes a business of selling provisions for domestic use," and that, therefore, section 1775 of the Civil Code is not applicable.

Appellant has cited certain decisions of the New York Supreme Court, criticized by Judge Hand in Valeri v. Pullman Co., supra. These are not decisions by a court of last resort, and we agree with all that Judge Hand says of them. Of the decisions of courts of last resort, cited by appellant, some will be found to be cases where the plaintiff relied upon and alleged negligence, as, for instance, Doyle v. Fuerst & Kraemer, supra, where the court said of defendants' evidence that it "falls short of showing even ordinary care"; others are cases where the defendant sold food to the plaintiff for family or domestic use, as Parks v. Yost Pie Co., 93 Kan. 334, 144 Pac. 202, L. R. A. 1915C, 179, where the defendant was a wholesale maker of pies, who had sold some of its products to a retail concern, which, in turn, sold the pie to Parks as suitable food for himself and family, to be consumed at home. We are satisfied, therefore, that the overwhelming weight of authority, both in England and America, supports our present conclusion, viz., that in such cases as are supported by the facts under consideration here, that "there is no implied warranty of the quality of food furnished by a restaurant keeper to a customer for immediate consumption, since the transaction does not constitute a sale but a rendition of service."

There is, however, another aspect to this case which has not been touched, so far as the record in this case discloses, but which, in view of what we believe to be the importance of this decision, we feel should be touched upon, and that is, that the plaintiff here having elected to rely upon an alleged implied warranty under section 1775 of the Civil Code, that we are confronted, therefore, with the question: "What is the measure of damages in such case?" This question is answered by section 3313 of the Civil Code. The court found "that prior to the time of being taken ill, as aforesaid, plaintiff's average gross income from his profession as an attorney at law was $400 per month; that no evidence whatsoever was introduced or offered as to what his average, or any, income was after the 14th day of August, 1911; and this court is not able to find what amount, if anything, plaintiff was able to and did earn in his profession subsequent to the 14th day of August, 1914." The court further found that "no evidence whatsoever was offered or introduced of the value of said rice pudding at the time at which plaintiff bought his said meal, or of its actual value at said time, or at any time; and no evidence whatsoever was introduced showing, or tending to show, the difference or excess, if any, of the value of said rice pudding over what it would have been at said time had the same been absolutely pure, wholesome and not deleterious; and no evidence whatsoever was introduced of any loss or damage incurred in any effort, in good faith, to use said pudding for the purposes for which it was purchased; and no evidence whatsoever was introduced of what would or might be a fair, or any compensation for any loss incurred by the plaintiff in any effort whatsoever to use said pudding for the purposes for which the same was sold to him." The court further found as a fact "that plaintiff was not damaged by defendant in any sum whatsoever."

Assuming—although in this case we hold to the contrary—that there is an implied warranty on the part of a restaurant keeper, under the exact state of facts presented here, still, in the absence of evidence, as disclosed by the findings just quoted, from which the trial court could arrive at any conclusion as to the measure of damages, we are of the opinion that the trial court was helpless to do anything other than to enter judgment in favor of defendant, as was done in this case.

Judgment and order affirmed.

FINLAYSON, P. J., and SLOANE, J. [1,2] We concur in the judgment for the reason that, in the absence of any showing of negligence, the only ground upon which defendant can possibly be held liable is that of an implied warranty of the purity and quality of the food dispensed by it. The only implied warranty that might be invoked as applicable to the transaction, under the law of California, is that declared in section 1775 of the Civil Code, which applies alone to "one who makes a business of selling provisions for domestic use." The complaint does not allege, and the facts do not show, that the defendant was engaged in the business of selling provisions for "domestic use," or that the transaction in question was a sale for "domestic use." The defendant is a restaurant keeper who dispenses food to be consumed by customers in his place of business, and such was the transaction here complained of. Under a strict and accurate definition, the term "domestic use" does not apply to such sales.

The statute in question, as well as the common-law doctrine on which it is based, lays down a severe rule, which makes the dealer responsible for the consequence of any deleterious quality in his wares, no matter how free from negligence or fault he may be. It ought not to be extended, by judicial implication or construction, beyond its strict legal meaning. If it be said that it is unreasonable to distinguish between a sale of food by a restaurant keeper to be consumed on his own premises and the sale of food by a dealer to be taken home and eaten in the domestic environment of the purchaser, the answer must be found in the maxim "ita lex scripta est"; and one shown to be free from negligence, as was the case here, ought not to be held liable on an implied warranty, unless he is clearly within the letter and meaning of the law as written.

1. MORTGAGES ⇨375—FORECLOSURE—DEFICIENCY—ACTION ON NOTE.

Holder of trust deed given to secure a lien upon real property, after exhausting the remedy by sale and finding that a deficiency exists, may proceed by action to recover the balance due upon the promissory note.

2. COSTS ⇨263—APPEAL—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Where appeal was without merit and appeared to have been taken for purpose of delay, held that respondent recover from appellant the sum of $100 as damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Margaret E. Blythe against Robert N. Lamberth. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Coil and D. H. McDonald, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

R. W. Richardson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal from the judgment. The sole contention made is that the holder of a trust deed given to secure a lien upon real property, after exhausting the remedy by sale and finding that a deficiency exists, may not proceed by action to recover the balance due upon the promissory note. This point was directly decided, long before this appeal was taken, against the contention here urged. Sacramento Bank v. Copsey, 133 Cal. 663, 66 Pac. 8, 205, 85 Am. St. Rep. 242; Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 73 Pac. 745.

[1, 2] The appeal is without the slightest merit, and should not have been taken. The judgment appealed from is affirmed, and, it appearing that the appeal was made for delay, it is ordered that the respondent have and recover from the appellant the sum of $100 as damages.

HOME REAL ESTATE CO. v. WINNANTS
et al. (Civ. 2623.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⇐5—VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL.

Where an order sustaining a demurrer gave plaintiff ten days within which to amend, plaintiff had a right to dismiss his action at any time before expiration of ten days, and a court's order, attempting to vacate such a dismissal and a judgment following such order against plaintiff for the costs, are void and of no effect, under Code Civ. Proc. § 581.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐153—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL OF ACTION.

Where there was a voluntary dismissal of action following the sustaining of a demurrer, plaintiff cannot ask, on an appeal from an order vacating such dismissal, that ruling of lower court on demurrer be reviewed; it being decided that order vacating dismissal was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by the Home Real Estate Company against W. L. Winnants and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Chas. L. Benoist, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles H. Mattingly, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

C. M. Mooslin, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff has taken this appeal from a judgment rendered against it, entered after the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint. The judgment, in so far as it required money to be paid to the defendants, was only for a few dollars as costs incurred by the defendants.

[1] Plaintiff's first contention is that this judgment was erroneously entered because it had, prior to the date of the judgment, dismissed its action. This claim arises because of the following situation, as shown by the record: Defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained and notice of that ruling was given on May 4, 1915. In the order sustaining the demurrer ten days was allowed to the plaintiff to amend. On May 11th, within the ten days mentioned, plaintiff filed with the clerk of the court an order requiring the dismissal of the action. The court later entered an order vacating the dismissal, and on May 18, 1915, rendered the judgment from which the appeal is taken. Appellant's contention is that it had a right to dismiss its action at any time before the final judgment, and that the court's order attempting to vacate such dismissal and the judgment following that order are void and of no effect. In this contention we think that the appellant is right. In Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 Pac. 1091, the court adopts the following quotation from a Texas decision (Scheriff v. Missouri Pacific Ry. Co., 81 Tex. 471, 17 S. W. 39, 26 Am. St. Rep. 828), as correctly stating the law as applied to the California Code provision (section 581, Code Civ. Proc.):

"When a general demurrer to a petition is sustained, and the plaintiff declines to amend, he practically confesses that he has alleged in his pleading every fact he is prepared to prove in support of his action. Therefore, in such a case, nothing remains to be done except to render judgment for the defendant. Since the defendant by his demurrer has admitted all the facts of the plaintiff's case, we see no reason why the judgment should not be regarded as a conclusive determination of the litigation on its merits. So, also, if the plaintiff takes leave to amend, but fails to do so, and judgment is rendered against him for that reason, it is as if he had declined to amend in the first instance. But, when he takes leave to amend, he virtually asserts that he has not set up his whole case in his petition; and, although the judgment is that his petition does not show a cause of action, yet the leave to amend takes from the judgment that quality of finality which is necessary to make it an estoppel, and thus 'sets the matter at large.'"

In this case leave was not denied to the plaintiff to amend its complaint, and its time had not elapsed to make an amendment before it filed with the clerk its order requiring that a dismissal be made. Under the decision above mentioned it would seem in that situation that the case was left open, leaving to the plaintiff the option either to dismiss, amend, or allow its time to expire and judgment to be entered. If it had filed within the ten days any sort of an amendment to its complaint, it is not disputed that it immediately might have required a dismissal to be entered under the permission of section 581, Code of Civil Procedure; and why the same right to dismiss did not exist without the filing of that amendment, up to the time that the ten days expired, we are not able to understand. The only costs that the plaintiff was required to pay as a condition to the dismissal was such costs as the clerk might properly exact for entering the dismissal, and not the costs which might have accrued to the defendants. Such costs could be claimed only by the presenting of a cost bill in due time. (Hopkins v. Superior Court, 136 Cal. 552, 69 Pac. 299.)

[2] The demurrer to the second amended complaint brought into question the matter of the liability of a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale to pay special assessments levied against the property, where the contract imposed no condition of payment upon him. The appellant must concede that by a voluntary dismissal of the action it has put itself in a position where it cannot ask that the ruling of the court on the demurrer be here reviewed. This dismissal we deem to have been regularly made, and conclude that the judgment subsequently entered by the court was made without authority. The latter judgment is reversed.

SNYDER v. DEDERICHs. (Civ. 2350.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — 149(1)—REVIVAL OF DEBT—UNCONDITIONAL PROMISE—STATUTE.

Debtor's letter to wife of creditor, who had told wife that if she could collect money she could have it for her expenses, wherein debtor referred to money which he got from the husband, but without unconditional promise to pay it, stating if he succeeded in collecting money promised he would send an amount, held not such an unconditional recognition of obligation as to take debt out of statute of limitations, which had run, under Code Civ. Proc. § 360.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Emma Snyder against Joseph Dederichs. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. E. Wilson, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and J. H. Ryckman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ingall W. Bull, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint set forth a cause of action based upon an indebtedness which it is alleged defendant, after the statute of limitations had run against the same, in writing acknowledged and promised to pay, thus taking the case out of the operation of the statute.

Upon such issue the court found adversely to plaintiff and gave judgment for defendant, from which the former, claiming such finding is not supported by the evidence, appeals.

Section 360, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, by which to take the case out of the operation of this title, unless the same is contained in some writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby."

Since recovery upon the original promise to pay by defendant was concededly barred, it devolved upon plaintiff to establish facts bringing the case within the operation of the statute quoted. To do this, plaintiff offered in evidence a letter addressed by her to defendant, wherein she referred to a loan of $750 made several years before to defendant by her husband, who advised her, she said, that if defendant was able to meet the obligation she could use the money for her living expenses, and wherein she said:

"I am very badly in need of funds, and trust you will make an effort to pay at least part of the amount."

In reply to this letter defendant wrote plaintiff:

"Your letter received in regard to the money I did get from Willard. * * * Still if I would make money, and see my way through, I would send you some money, and I will the first chance that I make something I will help you. * * * I loaned a party some money which he promised sure by next month I would get $300 of it. Should I succeed in this I will send you sure $150 or $200 of this. At the present time I cannot do anything on account I have not it. I know, Mrs. Snyder, the disposition how you feel, and I hope Willard makes some money soon. He has been working hard always the same as I and you know if I got it I would help you, but it is impossible to do so at the present time."

The case of Powell v. Petch, 166 Cal. 329, 136 Pac. 55, wherein a number of authorities are cited, is authority for the statement that the written acknowledgment of a debt, within the contemplation of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, must be a distinct, unqualified, unconditional recognition of the obligation for which the person making such admission is liable. Tested by this rule, it is clear that there is nothing contained in the letter which can be construed as an unconditional promise on the part of defendant to pay the outlawed debt. While it is true the writer refers to money which he got from plaintiff's husband, there is no unconditional promise to pay the same. On the contrary, he says it is impossible to pay at the present time, but if he succeeds in collecting money promised him he will send her $150 or $200. The case is very similar to that of Van Buskirk v. Kuhns, 164 Cal. 472, 129 Pac. 587, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 932, where the promise was to pay when able to do so. It does not appear that any of the conditions upon which defendant promised to pay, if his language can be construed as a promise, ever happened. Plaintiff's right of action must be measured by the promise made, and, since it is not alleged nor shown that the condition upon which the promise was made was fulfilled, it cannot be claimed that such promise extended the time to sue upon the original obligation. At most, it was a substituted conditional promise and not a renewal of the outlawed original promise upon which the obligation was based. See Curtis v. City of Sacramento, 70 Cal. 412, 11 Pac. 748; Rodgers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 528, 60 Pac. 42.

Appellant has cited a number of authorities from other states, some of which appear to be inconsistent with the views expressed. However that may be, we feel compelled to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court of this state touching like questions.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROSS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2943.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1919.)

1. BREACH OF THE PEACE ⇨19—SECURITY TO KEEP PEACE—POWER OF MAGISTRATE.

The magistrate, in a proceeding under Pen. Code, pt. 2, tit. 1, c. 3 (sections 701-714), entitled "Security to Keep the Peace," has no power other than given in the chapter, which is merely to discharge the person complained of, or order him to give undertaking to keep the peace and, if he does not give it, to commit him.

2. BREACH OF THE PEACE ⇨21—SECURITY TO KEEP PEACE—REVIEW OF MAGISTRATE.

Pen. Code, pt. 2, tit. 1, c. 3 (sections 701-714), entitled "Security to Keep the Peace," making no provision for appeal from order of the magistrate, the superior court acts in excess of jurisdiction in entertaining appeal, and also, assuming the order to be subject of appeal, in making a new order without trial de novo.

Petition of J. Edgar Ross for writ of review against the Superior Court in and for the County of Imperial, and Franklin J. Cole, Judge of said court, to review an order on appeal from a magistrate in proceeding under Pen. Code, §§ 701-714. Order vacated and annulled.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

SHAW, J. Certiorari. Upon an information filed in the recorder's court of the city of Brawley, Imperial county, charging petitioner with threats made to do great bodily harm against one Roy Mitchell and others, a warrant was issued by virtue of which said Ross was arrested and taken before the magistrate, and, upon the charge being controverted, testimony was adduced in relation thereto, as a result of which the magistrate made an order requiring the petitioner, Ross, to "pay a fine of three hundred dollars and invest the same in United States Liberty Loan bonds of the fourth issue, and be imprisoned in the city jail for a period of 90 days, but that, upon your paying your fine as stated and turning same over to your faithful little wife, the jail sentence will then be remitted." Thereupon defendant filed a purported notice of appeal to the superior court of Imperial county. A statement prepared and presented by such appellant was settled and allowed, which, together with the transcript, was filed in the superior court. Upon the matter coming on to be heard, the superior court, without taking any evidence and apparently basing its action upon the statement alone, made an order vacating and setting aside the order made by the recorder's court, and ordered that defendant (petitioner here) be required to give a peace bond in the sum of $500, to remain in force six months from and after October 8, 1918.

[1] The proceeding was one initiated under chapter 3 (sections 701 to 714, both inclusive), of the Penal Code, entitled "Security to Keep the Peace." Section 706 provides that, if just reason to fear the commission of the offense is found to exist, the person complained of may be required to enter into an undertaking to keep the peace towards the people of this state, and particularly the informer, which undertaking shall be binding for six months. And section 707 provides that, if such undertaking is given, the party informed against must be discharged, and, upon failure to give it, the magistrate must commit him to prison, specifying therein the omission to give the undertaking. The magistrate in such a proceeding has no power other than that given in said chapter 3. While such absurd order is not attacked in this proceeding, we may say the magistrate had no power to require Ross to invest $300 in

[2] The order complained of here is that made by the superior court which, on a purported appeal being taken, vacated the same and, without any trial and basing its action solely and alone upon a statement of the case, made a different order. If it was a case properly appealable, then, since it was upon questions of law and it appearing from the record presented to the superior court that the order made was erroneous, it would be the duty of the court to grant a trial de novo. It would have no power to render a new judgment based upon a statement of the case the purpose of which is merely to illustrate the errors of law complained of. But chapter 3, under which the proceeding was had before the magistrate, makes no provision for an appeal in such cases; and in Holliday v. Holliday, 123 Cal. 26, 55 Pac. 703, it is said:

"The magistrate's determination that there is just reason to fear the commission of the offense justifies his order in putting the accused person under bonds to keep the peace, and, in the event of his failure to give the required bonds, then to order him committed to jail. From this order no appeal lies. * * * His conclusion is, so far as the defendant is concerned, a final determination upon the merits of the controversy. * * *

Hence it follows that the superior court acted in excess of its jurisdiction: First, in entertaining the appeal at all; and, second, assuming the order to be the subject of appeal, in making the order complained of without a trial de novo. From the foregoing it is manifest that the order made by the magistrate was wholly unauthorized, since he had no power to make any order other than one requiring Ross to give an undertaking to keep the peace towards the people of this state and particularly towards the party filing the information. Should the magistrate attempt to enforce it, petitioner would be entitled to some appropriate remedy for his protection against such unwarranted action.

The order under review is vacated and annulled.

SIPLE v. KNAPP. (Civ. 2482.)

1. PLEADING $\S$ 182 — ANSWER PLEADING BILL OF SALE—FAILURE TO DENY GENUINENESS—EFFECT.

In an action in claim and delivery for possession of an automobile, where defendant's answer set up a bill of sale signed by plaintiff by an agent and plaintiff did not, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, serve or file an affidavit of denial, such failure constituted an admission of its genuineness and due execution, including the authority of the agent to sign plaintiff's bill of sale, and precluded contrary evidence.

2. PLEADING $\S$ 172—FAILURE TO REPLY IN TIME—RELIEF FROM INADVERTENCE.

Where plaintiff moved for relief under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, from his failure to serve or file an affidavit denying the genuineness of a bill of sale set forth in answer as required by section 448, there must appear some inadvertence, neglect, or mistake of an excusable kind, and the court had discretion to deny relief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by R. A. Siple against E. W. Knapp. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Sprowls and Tom C. Thornton, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John J. Craig and John L. Fleming, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendant. The judgment roll is presented, together with a bill of exceptions, showing the proceedings had in the case.

[1] Plaintiff sued in claim and delivery to recover possession of an automobile or its value. Defendant answered, denying the ownership of the plaintiff or his right to the possession of the machine, and affirmatively alleged that the defendant had purchased for a valuable consideration the automobile from the plaintiff and had received a bill of sale, which was set out in hæc verba in the answer. This bill of sale recited that the plaintiff had sold to defendant the automobile, and was signed: "R. A. Siple, by W. C. Bingham." The plaintiff did not, as is required by section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, serve or file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the bill of sale. At the trial he offered to show that the bill of sale was executed by Bingham without plaintiff's authority, whereupon the defendant objected to the testimony on the ground that the failure to deny the instrument constituted an admission of its genuineness and due execution. The court sustained the objection. Plaintiff was allowed time to present a motion for a relief under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, which motion was thereafter presented and denied, and the judgment followed in favor of the defendant. We think the judgment must be affirmed. The bill of sale purported to be executed by the plaintiff and the authority of the agent to so execute it, we think, was included within the admission resulting upon the failure of the plaintiff to file an affidavit in denial thereof. In Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630, it is said:

"Where the defendant has pleaded a written instrument in defense (not by way of cross-complaint), and the plaintiff has not served and filed an affidavit denying the instrument and has offered no evidence controverting it on any ground, the instrument is to be deemed admitted and must be taken for what it appears on its face to be. But the plaintiff may controvert the instrument by evidence of fraud, mistake, undue influence, compromise, payment, statute of limitations, estoppel and the like defenses, under section 462 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In short, he may by evidence controvert the instrument upon any and all grounds, except that he cannot controvert its due execution nor its genuineness."

The provisions of section 448, Code of Civil Procedure, are very plain.

[2] In order that the motion for relief under section 473 should have been granted, it was necessary that it should be made to appear that there was some inadvertence, neglect, or mistake of an excusable kind. The court had discretion in determining that matter and had discretion to conclude that, under the affidavits presented by the plaintiff, no excusable circumstances were shown. A consideration of the facts shown in the affidavits does not indicate that that discretion was abused.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

ROSS et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 2627.)

STREET RAILROADS — 117(21) — INJURY TO PERSON BETWEEN TRACKS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where, in daytime, a passenger, after alighting from a street car, walked around its rear, and was injured by being struck by the projecting step of a passing car on the other track, while in a space between the tracks wide enough to permit a clearance of 43 inches between passing cars, she was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and a nonsuit was properly granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Florence Ross and husband against the Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Hocker, Eugene E. Morris, and Robert E. Austin, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank Karr, W. R. Millar, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action by husband and wife to recover damages sustained by the wife for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligent operation of an electric street car.

Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, entered upon an order of court granting the latter's motion for a nonsuit made at the close of plaintiffs' evidence.

Defendant was the owner of a double-track electric railway line which crossed North Avenue 59 on a street in Los Angeles known as Pasadena avenue, and over which latter street it operated cars for the transportation of passengers. At the time of the accident in which plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of, she, in the daytime, as a passenger on one of defendant's out-bound cars, operated easterly over the southerly track, was returning from the city of Los Angeles to her home on Avenue 59. When the car on which she was traveling reached Avenue 58, she indicated her desire to get off at Avenue 59, at which point defendant's cars operated in either direction were stopped only upon signals given by passengers that they wished to get on or off its cars at such place. The car was accordingly stopped at the usual stopping place for passengers getting off at said point, and plaintiff alighted on the southerly side of the southerly track, upon which the car was being operated, and walked slowly around the rear of the car, sufficiently near the same to touch it with her hand, intending to cross the northerly or opposite track, which it was necessary to do in order to reach her home north of Pasadena avenue on Avenue 59. When she reached a point in the space separating the two tracks, a car traveling westerly on the northerly track passed, the projecting step of which struck her, knocking her down and causing the injuries which are made the subject of the action. The evidence tends to show that, in passing the car from which plaintiff alighted, the west-bound car on the northerly track gave no warning of its approach or proximity. That its failure so to do constituted negligence on the part of the defendant is conceded.

The order granting defendant's motion for nonsuit was based upon the conclusion of the court that the evidence conclusively established the fact that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which was the direct and proximate cause of the injury received by her. The space between the inner lines of defendant's car tracks was 6 feet and 7 inches, and the overhang of the cars when passing each other reduced this space to 3 feet and 7 inches; that is, overhang of each car was 18 inches. It thus appears that after plaintiff had reached a point corresponding with the edge of the overhang of the car from which she had alighted there was a space of at least 43 inches between that and the steps of the passing car, which constituted a zone of safety from which, as appears from the evidence, she had an unobstructed view for a distance of several hundred feet easterly, and from which point the slightest look or glance by her would have disclosed the proximity of the moving car which was such that rendered it impossible to step forward without colliding therewith; and yet she, with full knowledge that the cars were accustomed to pass each other in the manner shown (save that it was the duty of the motorman to ring the bell when passing), left the zone of safety occupied by her and stepped so near the car then passing immediately in front of her that she was struck by the projecting step. The accident occurred in the daytime. She was familiar with the tracks and conditions of traffic thereon, and there was no congestion of travel upon the street; indeed, so far as shown, she was the only person on that part of the thoroughfare, and hence was not, as in the case of Hammond v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 32 Cal. App. 756, 164 Pac. 50, misled or induced by the acts of others, in crossing in front of the car from which she had made her exit, to hazard a like undertaking in the rear thereof at night. It is obvious from her testimony that had she observed the slightest precaution for her own safety the accident would not have occurred. Brown v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 167 Cal. 199, 138 Pac. 1005. The case presented is not that of a person who undertakes to cross a railway track in front of an approaching car and, owing to an error of judgment as to its distance or speed mistakes his ability to do so, sustains an injury from a collision therewith, in which case the question as to whether or not he is negligent is one for the jury, as in the case of Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 93 Pac. 677; but the facts presented are similar to those involved in the case of Brown v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., supra. We concede the general rule invoked by appellants, and as to which there are few exceptions, that the question of negligence is one to be determined by the jury, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, and this rule prevails even though there be no conflict as to the facts, if persons of rational minds might, from inferences drawn from the evidence, reach different conclusions thereon. Where, however, as said in Hamlin v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 776, 89 Pac. 1109, "the standard of conduct required of persons under given circumstances is so obvious as to be applicable to all persons under such circumstances" that there can be but one rational conclusion drawn therefrom, a question of law is presented. Many of the authorities cited by appellants, not only from this but other states, involve questions as what constituted negligence on the part of the defendants therein, a fact which is conceded to have been affirmatively established in the instant case. Our intention, however, is directed to no case, either in this or other jurisdictions, which sustains the right of a plaintiff to recover for the negligence of a defendant where it is made to appear that the plaintiff neglected to use reasonable or ordinary care for his own safety, the exercise of which would have prevented the injury. As disclosed by the record, it affirmatively and conclusively appears that plaintiff's injury was due to the absence of ordinary care and the want of the exercise of the slightest precaution for her own safety, except for which the accident would not have occurred.

LARIMER v. DE MOTTE et al. (three cases).
(Civ. 2722-2724.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1919.)

EXTRADITION — 40 — EXPENSE AND CHARGES — RETURNED FUGITIVE — "PLACED ON TRIAL."

Pen. Code, § 1557, as amended in 1913, providing that the state shall not pay the expenses of any agent employed to bring back a fugitive from justice from another state, where the "fugitive returned is not placed on trial," means failure to prosecute in cases where the fugitive is returned, and therefore does not relieve the state from liability for the expense of an agent bringing back a fugitive who is let to bail, escapes, and is never brought to trial.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Three actions by David S. Larimer against Marshall De Motte and others, as Members of the State Board of Control, and the State Board of Control. From an order in each case granting a writ of mandate commanding respondents to audit and allow petitioner's claim against the state, respondents appeal. Orders affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants. A. J. Hill, County Counsel, and David R. Faries, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. These appeals involve like questions, namely, whether the state is chargeable with the expense incurred by an agent thereof who, acting under a requisition issued by the Governor, was authorized to receive in custody a fugitive from justice found in a sister state and return him to this state for trial.

It appears in each case that after his arrest the fugitive sued out a writ of habeas corpus in the court of the state where he was apprehended and by such court was released on bail. Pending the hearing of the writ, he made his escape, by reason of which fact the state's agent was unable to return him to this state for trial.

In each of the cases the appeal is from an order granting a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the board of control to audit and allow the claim against the state for the expenditures made by petitioner's assignor in performance of the duties imposed upon him as such agent under the requisition issued by the chief executive.

The solution of the question depends solely upon the interpretation of section 1557, Penal Code, the meaning of which, to our minds, is not open to controversy. As it stood prior to 1913, it read as follows:

"When the Governor of this state, in the exercise of the authority conferred by section 2, article 4 of the Constitution of the United States, or by the laws of this state, demands from the executive authority of any state of the United States, or of any foreign government, the surrender to the authorities of this state of a fugitive from justice, who has been found and arrested in such state or foreign government, the accounts of the person employed * * * to bring back such fugitive must be audited by the board of control and paid out of the state treasury."

"Provided, however, that the state shall not pay the expenses of any such person so employed where the fugitive returned is not placed on trial, but such expense shall be a charge upon the county asking the requisition."

As the law stood prior to the amendment, appellants concede petitioner would be entitled to the allowance, but contend that the intent of the Legislature was to "place a restriction on the use of extradition process by a county so as to require the county to pay the expenses incurred in connection therewith if the extradition papers are secured where the charge is not made in good faith or is not prosecuted." No claim is made that the charge preferred was not made in good faith. The word "returned" seems to have been employed ex industria by the Legislature, and we know of no rule of interpretation which, in construing the amendment, would justify the court in denying to it any effect. Unless so rejected, and construing the language used according to its plain import, it is perfectly clear that by the amendment the Legislature intended the failure to prosecute, in order to relieve the state from the expense of extradition, should be restricted to those cases where the fugitive is returned. Had the Legislature, as claimed by appellants, intended the enactment to apply to cases of the character here involved, it could easily have omitted the word "returned," or said, "unless the fugitive be returned and placed on trial." The language of the statute is clear and explicit. It admits of no interpretation other than the one adopted by the trial court, which was according to the plain import of the language used.

The order in each of the above cases is affirmed.

COVEL v. PRICE. (Civ. 2061.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — §706(5)—USE OF STREETS — AUTOMOBILE COLLISION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action for injuries sustained in automobile collision at street intersection, evidence, showing that plaintiff's automobile had the right of way, and that defendant was driving at an excessive rate of speed for the time and place, held to sustain finding that collision was caused by defendant's negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Marie Covell against Samuel H. Price. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dorn & Parker, of San Diego, for appellant.

Clarence Harden, of San Diego, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Defendant has appealed from a judgment awarding damages against him for an automobile collision. The appeal is taken under the alternative method, and on the sole ground of insufficiency of the evidence. Appellant has failed to print in his brief, or in a supplement thereto, the portion of the record which he desires to call to the attention of the court, as required by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have read the transcript of the evidence, however, and fail to find in it any comfort for appellant.

The evidence is conflicting, as it usually is in an automobile accident case, but the weight of it is unquestionably with the plaintiff. The plaintiff and his witnesses substantially agreed in testifying that the automobile in which plaintiff was riding reached the street intersection first, driving at about 12 miles per hour; that defendant was approaching from the left, at a speed of from 30 to 35 miles per hour, and ran in front of the machine in which plaintiff was a passenger, skidded and stopped, and was, in consequence, then run into by plaintiff's machine with the resultant injury to plaintiff. If the court accepted plaintiff's version of the facts, which it apparently did, showing that plaintiff's automobile had the right of way, and that defendant was going at an excessive rate of speed for the time and place, the conclusion as to defendant's negligence as the cause of the accident was amply sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. Appeal from the judgment of imprisonment following conviction upon a charge of assault with intent to commit murder.

By the information filed by the district attorney, this appellant, in the first count thereof, is charged with having murdered Dale Finnegan; in the second count he was charged with having, on the same day, committed the assault with intent to murder D. C. Huling, who was a police officer. The jury returned a verdict of not guilty as to the charge of murder. Both charges grew out of an occurrence participated in by Huling the police officer, Finnegan, the deceased, and Seeley, the defendant. Seeley and Finnegan were, at the time charged, of the respective ages of 19 and 18 years. Finnegan having been killed, the only two eyewitnesses to the affray who appeared at the trial were Huling, the officer, and the defendant. The officer testified that at about 11 o'clock on a night in April, 1918, he was traversing his beat in the lower part of the city of Los Angeles, and at the moment was on his way to a signal box located near by, for the purpose of "reporting in" to headquarters. On one of the streets included within his beat was a bakery operated by persons known to the officer. Huling testified that as he approached this bakery he noticed two men standing near the same, and that he immediately set about to observe them; that he approached on the opposite side of the street, where it was dark, in the meantime observing that one of the men had entered the bakery and the other had walked some 20 feet up the street, where he stopped. The officer was clothed in his official uniform, with a star, all of which apparel, we may note here, the appellant admitted in his testimony he had observed before the trouble began. Huling testified that he approached the man on the sidewalk, that being Finnegan, and asked him where he was from, how old he was, and his name; that Finnegan told him he was 18 years old and was from Long Beach, and also stated, in response to the officer's question, the direction from which he had come; Finnegan took a return ticket to Long Beach from his pocket, which he showed; that at this time the defendant came hurriedly out of the bakery and was about to pass the officer and the other man without stopping, and that he (the police officer) called to him, "Just a minute, young fellow;" that the defendant was then asked whether he was from Long Beach, too, and he replied, "Yes," and stated his age to be 19 years. The officer then testified as follows:

"I asked him his age, and he said, 'Nineteen years of age.' Then I said, 'Have you boys any guns on you?' I believe those are the words I used. They didn't answer that question, and I proceeded to search this Finnegan, the dead boy. I put my hand on the side of his coat pocket. I felt the revolver in his pocket. I just put my hand on his pocket when the defendant here, he pulled a gun from his right pocket, and he says, 'You turn him loose,' pointing in the direction of Finnegan, and I said, 'Don't be a fool, kid.' I said, 'Drop that gun and throw up your hands.' Of course, he didn't do it. I continued to take this gun off of Finnegan. Just as I got the gun—well, before I had taken the gun from Finnegan's pockets, this boy was just like a prize fighter, jumping this way, and this way, trying to shoot me in the sides. Of course, I caught Finnegan in the back of the coat collar and held him right in between me and the defendant, and he was getting so close to me, just as I had taken the gun out of Finnegan's pocket, that I called to him again, just as I got the gun clear, and I said, 'If you don't drop that gun and throw up your hands, I will shoot your brains out.' Well, he didn't stop. He kept bucking around there, and I snapped the gun a couple of times on him. The gun failed to fire; and, while my hand was extended in front of Finnegan, he shot me through this arm here. I grabbed Finnegan by the coat collar like that, and jerked him down like this. Then I crouched like this, Finnegan between us; so the defendant jumped from that side to the other, and of course I kept out of his way. I felt perfectly confident I could best him, but when he was getting so close, coming up too close, that he could shoot around—I couldn't get my gun, and I couldn't have this gun loose in this man's pocket, because he could put his hand in his own pocket and shoot me out through his coat pocket, so I thought it best to take the gun from his hands. So I extended my hand like that, snapped the gun a couple of times, telling him even the second time to throw up his hands; but he shot me while I was in that position, just about like that, and the bullet went through there and here, and struck me here, and out through my side like that. I fell on the ground—on the sidewalk."

The officer further testified that, after he had fallen to the ground, the appellant continued to shoot, and that he (the officer) was unable to get his own "gun" from his pocket, because his hand seemed paralyzed from a shot, and that while he was lying on the ground the appellant shot him several times more; that he (the witness) finally succeeded in drawing his weapon and supporting it over his arms; whereupon the appellant ran away, the witness firing several shots which failed to take effect. It seems that the officer was wounded in four or five places by the bullets fired by the appellant. Some one of the bullets, apparently one from the gun of appellant, killed Finnegan; hence the double charge as made by the information. The appellant, after his arrest, made a statement to the officers, which was introduced in evidence, in substance generally corroborative of the narrative given by the police officer. However, at the trial he made a different statement as to the occurrence, in which he declared that he did not attempt to shoot the officer until the latter had knocked him down and was upon him on the sidewalk. He admitted at the trial that he fired six shots in rapid succession at the officer. He did not contend in his testimony that the officer had attempted to search him, but declared that the latter had jumped upon him and thrown him to the sidewalk, and that he (the appellant) had then used his weapon to defend himself.

[1-3] The court instructed the jury very fully as to the right of self-defense, and the extent to which a person may go in protecting himself against an unlawful assault, and also advised the jury as to the circumstances under which an officer is justified in making an arrest. The court further advised the jury that "an officer who acts without proper authority stands on the same footing as any person who is not an officer." The case presented, under the testimony and instructions, was one involving the question as to whether the act of the defendant in wounding the police officer was one committed in necessary self-defense. None of the instructions as given is made the subject of objection on the part of appellant, although error is assigned because of the refusal to give quite a number of the instructions proposed on behalf of the defense. The first instruction so offered was to advise the jury that it was unlawful for an officer to search a person, unless he had first lawfully placed him under arrest. As before indicated, the evidence on neither side tended to show that any attempt was being made by the officer to search this appellant. This appellant had no such relation with Finnegan as would entitle him to resort to a deadly weapon to protect Finnegan from an unlawful search, if such it was. The instruction as to the right of an officer to search persons found carrying concealed weapons was properly refused. Instructions intended to advise the jury that, where an unlawful arrest was attempted to be made, any force necessary to prevent its accomplishment was justifiable, did not correctly state the law, and were therefore properly refused. People v. Dallen, 21 Cal. App. 770, 132 Pac. 1064. Other instructions refused, which related to the law of self-defense and which contained correct statements of the rights involved in that defense, were properly refused because the court, in other instructions given, had very fully advised the jury upon that matter. The whole case as presented by the complete record is such as to impress us with the conviction that the verdict and judgment are fully supported and should be affirmed.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. TIME $\S$ 10(4)—EXCLUDING LAST DAY—LIMITATIONS.

Action on bond given by highway contractor under Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, act 2895, requiring action thereon to be brought within six months after filing of claim, may be brought on the succeeding day after the expiration of such six-month period, where day on which period expired was a holiday, in view of Civ. SHAW, J. Action against Chicago Bonding & Surety Company as surety upon a bond alleged to have been given "in accordance with the requirements of an act of the Legislature of the state of California," by the Hudson-Johnson Construction Company, to which, as contractor, certain public highway work was awarded. Judgment went for plaintiff and against the surety company, which appeals therefrom on the judgment roll.

[1] To the complaint said defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was overruled. In addition to this alleged erroneous ruling, appellant claims that the action upon the bond was not commenced within six months after the filing of the verified claim with the California highway commission, by which the contractor was employed. There is absolutely nothing in the record disclosing whether or not the bond was given pursuant to the provisions of act 2895, General Laws 1915, page 1467, wherein it is provided that—

"At any time within six months after the filing of such claim, the person, company or corporation filing the same may commence an action against the sureties on the bond."

Assuming, however, that it was so given, the claim was filed on April 12, 1915; so that the six months expired on October 12, 1915, and the complaint was not filed until the following day. But October 12th was a holiday, and section 10, Civil Code, provides that—

"The time in which any act provided by law is to be done is computed by excluding the first day and including the last, unless the last day is a holiday, and then it is also excluded."

In Diggins v. Hartshorne, 108 Cal. 165, 41 Pac. 287, the court said:

"The statute required the person to whom the contract was awarded to enter into the contract within ten days after the award. The award to Buckman was made November 17th, but, as the 27th of November was Thanksgiving Day, he had the whole of the next day in which to enter into the contract."

So here the last day of the six months within which plaintiff was entitled to commence his action being a holiday, he had all of the succeeding day within which to commence the same.

The complaint alleged—

"That during the course of said work or improvement in said contract provided, plaintiff furnished certain supplies, to wit, hay, to said Hudson-Johnson Construction Company, in the county of San Bernardino, and so furnished said Hudson-Johnson Construction Company for the performance of the work or improvements by them contracted to be done."

Appellant insists that this allegation is insufficient in stating a cause of action within the terms of the bond which, as alleged, was—

"made to inure to the benefit of any and all persons, companies and corporations who performed work or labor of any kind on or furnished materials or supplies for the performance of the said work contracted to be done."

[2, 3] Appellant's argument is based upon the claim that a grain dealer, who furnishes feed for horses used in the performance of such work, is not entitled to recover therefor upon the bond. Conceding this to be true, it cannot avail appellant, for the reason there is nothing in the record even tending to show that the hay was so used, or how it constituted supplies used in the performance of the work. Nevertheless it is so alleged, and since the case was tried and judgment rendered against defendant, we must, in the absence of the evidence, assume that it was satisfactorily made to appear to the court that, however used, it was in the performance of the work called for by the contract. While conceding the complaint defective in several respects, the objections based thereon did not render it subject to the general demurrer interposed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by John Warren and others against Marie Ella Ellis. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Charles L. Brown and Clarence E. Todd, both of San Francisco (Tirey L. Ford, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' second amended complaint without leave to amend.

The action was instituted by plaintiffs, claiming to be the heirs at law of one Mabel Moulton, deceased, for the purpose of recovering a judgment vacating and setting aside certain judgments and decrees previously made in the matter of said estate, and also vacating a certain judgment made and entered in an action theretofore commenced and prosecuted to final judgment by defendant herein against the administrator thereof. The amended complaint sets forth the circumstances under which the various decrees and judgments were rendered. It appears therefrom that on the 17th day of May, 1909, Mabel Moulton, a resident of San Francisco, died intestate. On the 1st day of June, 1909, M. J. Hynes, the then public administrator of the city and county of San Francisco, was appointed administrator of her estate. About two years thereafter and on the 18th day of April, 1911, the respondent herein, Marie Ella Ellis, brought a suit in equity in the superior court against the administrator for the purpose of enforcing specific performance of a certain contract claimed to have been entered into between herself and Mabel Moulton, deceased, whereby said Mabel Moulton agreed to make a will devising and bequeathing her entire estate to respondent in consideration of certain personal services to be, and which were claimed to have been, thereafter rendered.

In this suit in equity the respondent herein was the sole plaintiff, and the administrator was sole defendant. In the complaint it was alleged that the deceased left her surviving no heirs or next of kin. Thereafter, and on December 3, 1912, about three years after the decendent's death, the administrator filed an answer to the complaint in which all the material averments of plaintiff's complaint were specifically denied. Subsequent to the filing of the complaint in this action the respondent herein had also instituted proceedings under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, claiming that she was entitled to the distribution of the estate of said deceased. Thereafter she filed a complaint under these proceedings setting forth her claim of ownership and interest in the estate. This complaint was in substance identical with her suit in equity against the administrator. The representative of the estate filed his answer thereto, and the default of all persons except respondent herein, the administrator, and one other person was entered.

About this time the state of California, upon relation of its Attorney General, filed a complaint in intervention, denying the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that deceased had died intestate, and he claimed an escheat. A compromise was had between the parties. The equity suit then came on regularly for trial, and judgment was given for plaintiff by which it was decreed that the administrator held certain property which was described in the decree and which constituted a portion of the estate of Mabel Moulton, deceased, in trust for the plaintiff therein, who was adjudged to be the owner and entitled to the possession thereof. The trial of this action was had and the judgment rendered pursuant to an order by the lower court authorizing a compromise and settlement of the claim of respondent herein. The order of compromise was based upon a petition filed by the administrator and joined in by respondent and by the state of California, acting through A. B. Nye, its then controller, and U. S. Webb, its Attorney General. This petition was regularly set for hearing, and the order was made directing the litigation to be settled, and the decree above mentioned followed. At the same time judgment was entered in favor of Marie Ella Ellis, respondent herein, in the section 1664 proceeding instituted by her, wherein it was adjudged that the property mentioned in the compromise agreement be distributed to her, and the residue of the estate, consisting of the sum of $6,763.35, and all other property not known, was decreed to have escheated to the state.

What evidence was taken in the equity suit or in the section 1664 proceedings does not appear in this action. Both decrees were filed in June, 1913, and no appeal has ever been prosecuted from either of them, and they have long since become final. Shortly after the entry of these decrees the administrator filed his petition, praying for final distribution in the estate, and thereafter on July 17th of the same year his petition was heard and determined by the court, and a decree of final distribution was made and entered September 2, 1913.

In this decree the judgment in the suit in equity to enforce the agreement to make a will is referred to as being "duly given and made," and the decree likewise specifically refers to the judgment in the proceedings under section 1664, Code of Civil Procedure, which is also therein found to have been "duly given and made." It is further found that Mabel Moulton left her surviving no known heirs or next of kin, and that the real and personal property previously adjudged to belong to Marie Ella Ellis "be and the same is hereby distributed to Marie Ella Ellis," and that the residue of the estate, consisting of the sum of $6,763.35 and all other property not now known, is declared to have escheated to the state. No appeal was ever prosecuted from this decree, and it, too, has long since become final.

The first notice or knowledge had by plaintiffs, or either of them, so it is alleged in their complaint, of any of the decrees and judgments above enumerated was in the month of May, 1914. The original complaint herein was filed on the 8th day of May, 1914. On the 27th day of May of the same year appellants herein, in the matter of the estate of Mabel Moulton, deceased, served and filed a written notice of motion for an order setting aside the judgment made and entered in the proceedings instituted under section 1664, Code of Civil Procedure. The motion was made upon the claim that the judgment was erroneous and void, and that it was taken through mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. The affidavit upon the motion alleged that appellants were the heirs of Mabel Moulton, deceased. On the same date appellants also served and filed their notice of motion for an order to vacate and set aside the decree of final distribution. This notice was likewise accompanied by an affidavit containing statements practically identical with those made on the motion to set aside the judgment in the section 1664 proceedings. These motions were both denied.

As grounds for reversal of the order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint appellants contend:

(1) That the decree in the equitable suit brought by this respondent against the public administrator is of no legal effect, because of the absence of necessary parties defendant.

(2) That the decree in the section 1664 proceedings is void for the reason that it was beyond the power of the court to render such a decree in that proceeding.

(3) That the decree of final distribution does not constitute an estoppel respecting the issues raised by the complaint herein, for the reason that such issues were neither presented nor determined in the proceeding on final distribution.

Respondent, on the other hand, relies upon all of the orders and decrees had in the various proceedings.

[1] It is manifest that, if respondent has deraigned title to the property she holds under any of these decrees, appellants are not entitled to the relief here sought and the judgment must be affirmed. As we are of the opinion that appellants are concluded by the decree of distribution, no useful purpose can follow a discussion of the force or effect of the other decrees, and we will confine our consideration to that decree alone.

[2, 3] The petition for distribution was filed by the administrator of the estate. Its hearing was properly set and notice duly given as provided by law. This is conceded. By the giving of the notice directed by statute the entire world was called before the court, and the court acquired jurisdiction over all persons for the purpose of determining their rights to any portion of the estate. The jurisdiction of the probate court is a jurisdiction in rem; the res being the estate of the decedent which is to be administered and distributed, with regard to the rights of creditors, devisees, legatees and all the world. William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323.

[4-6] The question to be considered upon an application for a decree of distribution is whether the court has authority to determine and dispose of the application. Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine, and it does not depend upon the correctness of the decision made. Jurisdiction existing, mere error of judgment will not vitiate the decree of the court. If error exists, it may be corrected on appeal. Nor does the fact that the error appears on the face of the record alter the fact. Here the validity of the suit in equity and the judgment in the section 1664 proceedings, under which respondent claimed title, were directly passed upon on the hearing for distribution; and, whether erroneous or not, the decree based thereon is binding upon the whole world, and therefore conclusive upon appellants with the same force and effect as though their claims had been presented and disallowed. Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 558, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Goldtree v. Allison, 119 Cal. 344, 51 Pac. 561; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 Pac. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98; Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 523, 31 Pac. 584; Estate of Learned, 156 Cal. 309, 104 Pac. 315; Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 279, 44 Pac. 565.

[7] The decree having become final, it could only be vacated because of extrinsic fraud. No such question is here presented. There must be some end of litigation. The complaint herein contains no allegation of fraud authorizing the interposition of a court of equity in the obtaining of the decree here sought to be set aside, but seeks merely to assail the validity of the judgments on which it is based, and it does not show any ground for relief in equity against the judgment, and the demurrer thereto was rightfully sustained.

This being so, the judgment appealed from should be and it is hereby affirmed.

BROOKE v. GLIDE et al. (Civ. 1939.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 31, 1919.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⇐161—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF PARTNER—CONTRACTS.

Where one of two partners signed a contract to pay a real estate broker a commission on sale of land which partners held as tenants in common, signing such contract in name of partnership, he thereby bound himself individually, where he had no authority to bind his partner; presumption as to joint and several liability created by Civ. Code, § 1659, and not that established by section 1431, controlling.

2. JUDGMENT ⇐238—PLEADING—JOINT AND SEVERAL OBLIGATIONS.

Where a contract is joint and several, so far as parties and pleadings are concerned, the rule is the same under Code Civ. Proc. § 578, as it is where the obligation consists of a tort, and the obligation is joint as well as several, and judgment may be rendered against one of the contractors alone.

3. EVIDENCE ⇐208(1) — ADMISSIONS IN PLEADING—ADMISSIBILITY.

A defendant, who admitted in his answer that he "in form executed the agreement" set up in the complaint, cannot complain of its introduction in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Morris Brooke against J. H. Glide and T. S. Glide, a copartnership doing business under the name and style of Glide Bros., and such persons individually. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the first-named individual appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Seymour, of Sacramento, and Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for appellant.

Downey, Pullen & Downey, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action against defendants, individually and as copartners, to recover a broker's commission alleged to have been earned by plaintiff under a contract of employment entered into between defendants and each of them with plaintiff. Upon a trial of the case judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant J. H. Glide alone. From this judgment defendant J. H. Glide has appealed.

In each of three counts it is alleged that defendants, J. H. Glide and Thornton S. Glide, were partners doing business under the name of Glide Bros., and that "defendants and each of them" employed plaintiff to sell the property in question. The third count alleges that the "plaintiff and said defendants and each of said defendants entered into a written contract for the payment of a commission to plaintiff for the sale of" the ranch known as the Wilcox Ranch. This contract is set out in full, and is signed "Glide Bros., by J. H. Glide." It is also alleged that "said J. H. Glide was duly authorized to make said contract on behalf of Glide Bros." The answer of defendants denies that defendants, or each or any of them, employed plaintiff to assist defendants, or any or either of them, in selling the property in question; and denies that the said J. H. Glide was authorized to make this contract on behalf of the defendants, or any or either of them, or on behalf of Glide Bros., or that he was the agent of Glide Bros. to make this contract. Defendants, however, admit that "J. H. Glide in form executed the agreement in question by signing the same as follows: 'Glide Bros., by J. H. Glide,'" and also admit that the Wilcox Ranch was owned by the defendant J. H. Glide and the defendant Thornton S. Glide as tenants in common. The court finds that the defendants were copartners, and finds that the defendant J. H. Glide signed the contract in question without any authorization from the copartnership or from his codefendant. But finds that the Wilcox Ranch referred to in the complaint was owned by defendants J. H. Glide and T. S. Glide as tenants in common, and that upon the signing of the contract plaintiff "performed all the conditions, covenants, stipulations and agreements in said contract on his part to be performed"; and the defendant J. H. Glide, having upon demand refused to pay the commission in the sum of two thousand dollars, is liable for the payment thereof to the plaintiff.

Appellant claims that this judgment is erroneous for the reason, as he claims, that the obligation sued upon is the joint obligation of the defendants, whereas the finding relates simply to a several obligation of the defendant J. H. Glide. He also claims that the contract "does not support a recovery against J. H. Glide individually, because it is a joint contract and contains nothing creating any several liability."

[1] But the contract (assuming its entire validity) was not, as appellant contends, a joint contract so far as J. H. Glide was concerned. But, so far as he was concerned, it was a joint and several contract. For it was alleged in defendants' answer, and established in the findings, that the Glide Bros., though they were not bound as partners in this transaction, were nevertheless tenants in common of the land in the selling of which the plaintiff earned his commission. Therefore it is not the presumption established by Civil Code, § 1431, as contended by appellant, that should prevail. But the presumption created by Civil Code, § 1659, should control.

"Where all the parties who unite in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, whether past or present, their promise is presumed to be joint and several." Gummer v. Mairs, 140 Cal. 535, 74 Pac. 26; Bell v. Adams, 150 Cal. 772, 90 Pac. 118.

Therefore defendant J. H. Glide, having signed a writing which, upon its face, by reason of the benefit accruing to him therefrom, binds himself severally as well as jointly, should not be permitted to escape his several liability upon the claim that he has also made an improper attempt to bind himself jointly with his brother, T. S. Glide. Having misled the pleader by the manner in which he signed the contract, he should not be permitted to act as though he, and not the pleader, had been misled, and to thus claim a variance in the pleading which as to him is not a material variance.

In the case of Lewis v. Clarkin, 18 Cal. 399, the defendant purchased goods just as the appellant here purchased services, and directed the plaintiff to charge them to the joint account of C. & J., just as the plaintiff here, by the signature of "Glide Bros.," indicated to the plaintiff that the charge for the services would be a joint charge against the two brothers. In that case, as in the case at bar, it was proven that the purchaser of the goods had no authority from his assumed associate to bind him in this matter. The succinct language of the decision, by Cope, J., concurred in by Field, C. J., is particularly applicable to the case at bar:

"It turns out that C. acted without authority from J., and the latter is not therefore liable. But the former is liable, and, as by his act the transaction was made to assume the appearance of a joint liability, we think the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against him in this suit. It was by his improper conduct that the plaintiff was induced to bring the suit in its present form, and the variance between the pleadings and the proof could not have taken him by surprise."

The artificial logic of the old common-law pleading should not be resurrected in this case to enable the defendant J. H. Glide to escape his obligation under a contract in the procurement and performance of which he was actively and beneficially interested.

[2] Where a contract is joint and several, so far as parties and pleadings are concerned, the rule is the same under section 578, Code of Civil Procedure, as it is where the obligation consists of a tort and the obligation is joint as well as several. It has recently been held in this court that, in an action instituted against two joint tort-feasors upon a joint tort, judgment may be given against one of them, and a plea of variance will not be entertained. Haller v. Yolo Water & Power Co., 34 Cal. App. 317, at page 320, 167 Pac. 197.

And as stated by this court in Melander v. Western National Bank, 21 Cal. App. 462, at page 475, 132 Pac. 265, at page 271:

"No reason other than absence of statutory authority can be suggested why the same principle should not as well be applicable in actions on contract, and the cases above examined very clearly establish that, under sections 383 and 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is a rule applicable to the latter class of actions."

In the case of Morgan v. Righetti et al., 5 Cal. Unrep. 397, 45 Pac. 260, the court said in affirming the judgment:

"The only question upon this appeal is whether in an action against two as partners, upon an alleged partnership liability, a recovery may be had against one of the defendants; the court finding that the defendants were not partners, but that appellant is individually liable for the indebtedness alleged in the complaint, and for which judgment was rendered against appellant, E. Righetti, alone."

In that case, under the authority of Lewis v. Clarkin, 18 Cal. 399, and Bailey Loan Co. v. Hall, 110 Cal. 490, 42 Pac. 962, it was held that the defendant, upon proof of his separate liability under the contract, could not escape judgment because the complaint, following the form in which he had created his liability, charged him with a joint liability. See, also, Hartney v. Gosling, 10 Wyo. 346, 68 Pac. 1118, 98 Am. St. Rep. 1005.

[3] Appellant also claims that the court erred in neglecting to rule upon defendant's objection to the offer in evidence of the contract alleged in the complaint.

So far as defendant and appellant J. H. Glide is concerned, no ruling of the court was necessary. The contract was already in evidence under the admissions of the answer that—

"J. H. Glide in form executed the agreement—by signing the same as follows: 'Glide Bros., by J. H. Glide.'"

With this admission as a foundation, the other testimony disclosing the identity of J. H. Glide as one of the Glide Bros., and his interest as a cotenant in the consideration of the contract, established the materiality of the writing as evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF $\S$ 102 — EXECUTION OF DEEDS IN BLANK — AGENT'S AUTHORITY TO FILL IN DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY AND GRANTEE'S NAMES — NECESSITY OF WRITING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1971, being the statute of frauds, where a deed is executed and acknowledged while still in blank, a notary inserting the names of the parties and description of the property must have written authority therefor, notwithstanding Civ. Code, $\S$ 1629, abolishing the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments.

Where the provisions of St. 1850, p. 266, relating to frauds and perjuries, were construed by the Supreme Court, and the Legislature subsequently adopted the same language in Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1971, the Supreme Court is bound by that interpretation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action in ejectment by Ira J. Harris and wife against Samuel Barlow and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank P. Doherty, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bert L. Cooper and A. L. Hickson, both of Pomona, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1, 2] This is an action in ejectment. Judgment was for the defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Plaintiffs' alleged title is based upon a deed executed, signed, and acknowledged while still in blank, in which, in pursuance of an oral authorization thereto, the notary inserted the names of the parties and the description of the property after the grantors had left, and during their absence. This deed was retained by him in escrow, and it is claimed that by reason of the transaction between the parties it was in effect delivered. While still in the possession of the escrow holder, the grantors in said deed notified said escrow holder not to deliver the same. Appellants claim that, since the law abolishing the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments (Civ. Code, $\S$ 1629) the oral authorization to the scrivener to insert the names of the parties and the description of the property was sufficient authority therefor. In Upton v. Archer, 41 Cal. 85, 10 Am. Rep. 266, the deed there under consideration was blank as to the grantee at the time it was signed. The court there said:

"As it could not become the plaintiff's deed until the name of a grantee was inserted, that act could not be performed by an agent, in the absence of the plaintiff, unless his authority was in writing. Storey on Agency, § 49, and notes; Dunlap's Paley on Agency, 157, and notes. The case comes within the sixth section of the statute of frauds."

"No estate or interest in lands, other than for leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted, assigned, surrendered, or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by deed, or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering, or declaring the same, or by his lawful agent thereunto authorized by writing." Stats. 1850, p. 266.

This same language is now incorporated in our Code of Civil Procedure, § 1971, with such slight changes as the use of the words "interest in real property" instead of the words "interest in lands." The provisions of this statute have been construed by this court, and, the Legislature having subsequently adopted the same language, we are bound by that interpretation. As to appellants' contention that the statute abolishing the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments changes the rule, it is sufficient to say that the decision of Upton v. Archer, supra, was not based upon that distinction, but upon the provision of the statute of frauds above set forth.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth S. Blake against James Arp. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, for appellant.
Thomas Scott and J. R. Dorsey, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment after verdict against him for $2,100 with interest on $1,500 thereof from May 27, 1910, at 7 per cent. Plaintiff is the vendee and appellant the vendor of a certain lot in Bakersfield under written contract dated May 27, 1910. Plaintiff alleges the contract, which she sets up in hæc verba in her complaint; that she has paid $1,500 on the purchase price; that she made improvements on said property, but that at the time of the execution of the contract, as an inducement thereto, defendant falsely represented that he owned the title to said land; that plaintiff caused the improvements in question to be made thereon; that at the time of the execution of said contract there was pending an action involving the title to said land, wherein the title of defendant's grantor was attacked; that judgment therein was rendered February 5, 1912, against defendant's grantor; that in June, 1910, a separate and distinct action was brought by the plaintiffs in the last-mentioned suit against the plaintiff and defendant in this suit, based upon the same allegations, and on December 2, 1912, judgment was rendered therein, adjudging that neither plaintiff nor defendant had any title to or interest in said property. Plaintiff alleges that during all times up to the rendition of said judgment of December 2, 1912, she still believed the representations of the defendant that he owned said property. She alleges that the value of the property had increased subsequent to the purchase by her from $7,500, the purchase price, to $14,000; that she made certain improvements thereon, valued at $1,000, and other improvements valued at $970; that she had received nothing of value from defendant. Plaintiff demanded judgment for $8,970, with interest on $1,500 from May 27, 1910. Defendant answered, denying any fraud, admitting the payment of $1,500 to him, admitting the making of improvements valued at $1,000, and affirmatively alleging that these improvements were made by him for plaintiff, and that he had not been paid therefor. By way of counterclaim as to said item, he alleged that the value of improvements alleged by plaintiff to be worth $1,000 was $1,292, and demanded judgment for that amount. He also alleged the making of certain other improvements on the property by him at plaintiff's request, and the furnishing of cordwood, and alleged the value of said improvements and cordwood to be $372.60, and demanded judgment therefor. Upon the trial it was stipulated that the value of improvements made by defendant for plaintiff upon the property was $1,521, and the value of cordwood sold by him to plaintiff was $143, making the total amount thus due from plaintiff to defendant $1,664. As to the second item of $970 alleged by plaintiff, the defendant admits that amount by failure to sufficiently deny it, and plaintiff testified that she had paid "nearly $1,000" on this item. It is therefore admitted that the plaintiff had made improvements on the property valued at $2,491; that she owed the defendant on account thereof $1,521, and also owed him $143 for cordwood. The net value of the improvements made by plaintiff over the amount due the defendant was $837. The amount paid by the plaintiff on account of the property was therefore $2,337. The verdict of the jury was for $2,100. Defendant also claimed $75 per month for the use of the premises, plaintiffs having occupied the same for 21 months. But, as plaintiff was occupying the premises as a tenant of the real owner when the contract was entered into, and had been sued by that owner for the rent, and as defendant had never owned the premises, the court properly refused to submit that question to the jury.

[1] We have thus dealt in detail with the facts for the reason that we are called upon in this case to determine whether or not substantial justice has been done between the parties. We find that the plaintiff has expended upon the faith of the contract, and in reliance thereon and on the representations of the defendant, the sum of $2,337, and that she has recovered judgment for $237 less than that amount. It would appear, therefore, that she has secured judgment for less than is required to compensate her for her loss, which is the usual rule of damages in cases of tort. Civ. Code, § 3300. The complaint is framed upon the theory of an action to recover damages for the fraudulent representation of defendant that he had title. Crane v. Ferrier-Brock Dev. Co., 164 Cal. 676, 130 Pac. 429. It is not an action to rescind, or for breach of contract to convey real estate. The measure of damages for fraud and deceit in the case of an executory contract to convey real estate is that stated in Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 Pac. 729. The only measure of damages given by the court to the jury in the instructions was that for breach of a contract as stated in section 3306 of the Civil Code. Appellant does not attack that instruction. On the contrary, he seems to assert its correctness. The position of appellant on the question of damages is thus stated in his brief:

"Without establishing fraud the plaintiff could not recover. The damages alleged by her were of three kinds: First, the price paid; second, the enhanced value of the property; and, third, the value of improvements. The right to recover the first two is measured by section 3306 of the Civil Code, and the right to recover the last is measured by section 3300 of the Civil Code. It may be conceded that the plaintiff had the right to recover the $1,500 paid on the purchase price, because there was a breach of contract on the part of the defendant in failing to convey the property to the plaintiff. This sum, however, was more than offset by the value of the improvements furnished by the defendant. The value of these improvements and that the plaintiff had not paid for them were both admitted. The plaintiff could escape liability to the defendant for the amount so admitted only by showing that she was justified in constructing the improvements made by the defendant."

As we understand appellant's position, he concedes that, if there were fraud (bad faith) on his part, the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the value of improvements in this action. This might well be under the measure of damages erroneously given the jury by the court:

"The price paid * * * with interest thereon, adding thereto, in case of bad faith, the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed, at the time of the breach. * * *"

If we assume that the improvements enhanced the value of the property by the amount of their cost, and that the property was worth the purchase price at the time of the agreement to purchase, and did not increase or decrease except by reason of said improvements, as we may well do upon the evidence, then the verdict for the return of the purchase price paid, and the value of the improvements, was proper under that instruction.

[2, 3] The plaintiff testified that defendant stated to her as an inducement to enter into the contract of purchase that he owned the title. At the time of his purchase a lis pendens was on record in the case which finally resulted in a judgment against his grantor, and later against himself and his vendee. The jury was justified in finding him guilty of fraud under the circumstances, even though he believed the truth of his assertion (Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2), and they were so instructed by the court. Appellant urges the fact that the evidence was insufficient to show any fraud on his part, for the reason, as he claims, that the plaintiff knew as much about the title as he did, and that therefore his statement was a mere expression of opinion, and cites in relation thereto the following cases: Choate v. Hyde, 129 Cal. 580, 62 Pac. 118, and Rheingans v. Smith, 161 Cal. 362, 365, 119 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1140. But the evidence does not support appellant's position. He claims that respondent, by entering into the agreement with him for the placing of improvements upon the property after having ascertained that the injunction suit against his grantor was pending, "lost her right to rescind and also her right to any damages on account of alleged fraud," and cites in support of that contention Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 270, 48 Pac. 54. This point was not presented by instructions to the jury, and it is not involved in any requested instruction, and the point was therefore waived. Moreover, the evidence of plaintiff was that she was constantly lulled into inaction by the repeated assertion of defendant that he had the title, notwithstanding the allegations of the plaintiff in said suit. Other points urged by appellant are without merit.

In view of the manifest errors acquiesced in by the parties, and the fact that the points urged by the appellant as errors are without merit, and in view of the further fact that it is obvious from the entire case that the defendant cannot convey to plaintiff title to the land she sought to purchase, there has been no miscarriage of justice in awarding the plaintiff the money actually paid to the defendant, with interest, and the additional amount expended by her in improvements on the property.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE v. KINCAID. (L. A. 4673.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 10, 1919.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨143(6)—UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL — SETTLEMENT WITH AGENTS.

Where defendant was receiving lumber from a partnership, in payment of a firm debt to him and without knowing the firm had incorporated, continued to receive lumber from the same parties, they were undisclosed agents of the corporation principal, and where he settled with them he is not liable to the corporation.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨145 — CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

Where, upon transfer of partnership lumber yard business to corporation formed by the partners, the manager for the partnership continued to manage the yard for the corporation, a creditor of the partnership, not notified of the change, who continued to receive lumber from the yard to apply on the debt of the partnership to him, was not liable to the corporation for lumber so received after the incorporation of the firm, the transfer of the lumber to the corporation being void for lack of change of possession under Civ. Code, § 3440.

Department 2:

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Charles I. White against E. H. Kincaid. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1, 2] The plaintiff sued, as assignee of Clark Bros. Lumber Company, a corporation, for lumber alleged to have been sold by said corporation to the defendant, Clark Bros., a copartnership, for more than 20 years had transacted business with the defendant. For 3 years previous to October 10, 1913, they had operated a lumber yard in Los Angeles. In July, 1913, the copartnership owed the defendant about $6,000, evidenced by a promissory note. At that time it entered into an agreement with the defendant to sell and deliver him lumber, and the defendant agreed to credit the purchase price thereof on the promissory note of the copartnership. The defendant procured lumber from time to time at the lumber yard operated by the copartnership, and on October 14, 1914, a settlement was had whereby the sum of $3,300 was credited on said note. The controversy in this case arises over the fact that on October 10, 1913, a corporation was formed under the name and style of Clark Bros. Lumber Company, with a capital stock of 750 shares. W. E. Clark, one of the Clark brothers, held 459 shares, B. W. Clark, the other member of the copartnership, 1 share, and, in addition to these shares of stock 21 shares were issued. W. E. Clark was president, B. W. Clark vice president, and Robert P. Holmes manager. Robert P. Holmes was manager of the copartnership, and continued to manage the same yard for the corporation. The lumber herein sued for was delivered to the defendant at the lumber yard by Holmes. The defendant testified that he was never notified of any change in the management of the lumber yard, and that he continued to get lumber at the yard believing that the same was being delivered to him by the copartnership. Both of the Clark brothers testified that the lumber was delivered to the defendant with the understanding that it was to be charged to the copartnership, but was to be carried on the books of the corporation in the name of the defendant merely for convenience of the copartnership. The trial court found that the lumber was purchased by the defendant from Clark Bros., a copartnership, and was paid for by giving credit upon the note due from the copartnership to the defendant, and that nothing was due from the defendant to the corporation. Respondent correctly claims that, upon the view most favorable to the appellant, Clark Bros. were the agents for the undisclosed principal, the corporation, and that having settled with the agent he is no longer liable to the principal, citing Argenti v. Brannan, 5 Cal. 351; Eldridge v. Finniger, 25 Okl. 28, 105 Pac. 334, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 232. Appellant's position, in part, is thus stated:

"Suppose that Kincaid did not know he was dealing with the corporation, then this was due to the acts and conduct of Clark Bros. by leading him to believe that he was dealing with them, and his complaint should be against them and not against the corporation, whose property he received, used and made a part of his estate."

In short, appellant's contention is that the respondent, having received the property of the corporation, is bound by an implied contract to pay to it the value thereof. But this contention overlooks the fact that under the circumstances, as to the defendant, who was a creditor of and also a purchaser from Clark Bros., copartnership, the transfer from Clark Bros., copartnership, to the corporation was void for lack of a change of possession, and that, therefore, as to the defendant, the lumber still belonged to the copartnership. "Every transfer of personal property * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession * * * and against purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer." Civ. Code, § 3440. Under the circumstances shown by the evidence there is no liability from the respondent to the corporation. He was entitled to rely upon the fact that there had been no change of possession, and to assume that the deliveries to him were made by Clark Bros., with whom he had contracted for the lumber.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by H. L. Berry against Eugene Moulie. Findings and judgment were entered in favor of plaintiff, and subsequently, on motion of defendant, under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, the court vacated its judgment, changed its conclusion of law, and entered a new judgment. From the order and from the new judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Utley & De Lorimier, of San Diego, for appellant.

Harrison G. Sloane, of San Diego, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] Plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by which the plaintiff was to purchase from the defendant his business as a manufacturing chemist and his secret formulas for manufacturing perfumes, soap, and other toilet articles. The contract was partly carried out, the business was moved from Jacksonville, Fla., to San Diego, Cal., and there established. A year later, difficulties having arisen between the parties, they entered into the contract dated June 30, 1915, which is the subject of this action, for the purposes of settling such differences. Plaintiff seeks to enforce this contract by a decree of specific performance. The case was tried, and findings and judgment were entered in favor of the plaintiff. Subsequently, on motion of the defendant, under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court vacated its judgment, changed its conclusions of law, and entered a new judgment. Plaintiff appeals from the order and from the new judgment. Appellant's proposed statement on appeal is printed in the transcript, but this statement is not authenticated in any way, except that there is a minute order of the court printed in the transcript declining to settle the statement. This statement cannot be considered on appeal. The contract is set up in hæc verba in the findings. It will be necessary to call attention only to certain features thereof to show the impossibility of enforcing a specific performance thereof. The defendant thereby transferred and assigned all of the property described in the previous agreement, dated June 17, 1914, and agreed, in addition thereto, upon payment of a certain sum of money, "to immediately deliver possession of all and singular the formulas, receipts, and prescriptions in writing for the manufacture of perfumes and other toilet articles referred to in said contract of June 17, 1914, and herein referred to, and said party of the second part [the plaintiff] does hereby assume the control, ownership, and management thereof, and does hereby agree to carry on and conduct the business of the manufacture and selling of perfumes and other toilet articles referred to in said several contracts, and to employ the party of the first part [the defendant] as manufacturer of perfumes and other toilet preparations at a salary of $5 per day for each and every day's work that the said Eugene Moulie may perform in such capacity, such employment to continue until the said payments herein provided to be made by the said party of the second part are fully paid." Then follows the agreement that the parties "will treat each other with all due courtesy, respect, and friendship, and that any differences that have heretofore existed in the minds of either of them shall be forgotten and disregarded in their intercourse in business, and that they will each endeavor to so conduct and deport themselves as to earn and secure the mutual respect and esteem of the other." The plaintiff agrees to employ a person "of sufficient intelligence to acquire a knowledge of said business, but that such employment shall not be deemed permanent until the party of the first part [the defendant] shall have had an opportunity of testing the capabilities of such employé's fitness for his or her duties." It is further agreed that the plaintiff should have complete control of the business of selling and disposing of all the perfumes, etc., and that the sole function and duty of the defendant "shall be to prepare the said toilet articles and to distill and to prepare the said perfumes; in other words, his position shall be that of a manufacturing chemist of the articles and perfumes to be manufactured and prepared." Plaintiff agreed that he would use every effort to make the business profitable and successful, and that he would carry the trade-marks and name of "E. Moulie Floral Perfumery," and that all perfumes and toilet articles prepared, manufactured, and sold shall bear such name and trade-mark, and that in the event that the business be sold one of the conditions of such sale shall be the perpetuation in the business so sold of the name of 'E. Moulie Floral Perfumery' and every trade-mark adopted by him." The court found as a fact "that defendant did not on the 29th day of June, 1915, have, nor has he since had, any written formulas, recipes, or directions for the manufacture of the perfumes, soaps, toilet articles, and preparations mentioned in said written agreement; that defendant is able to reduce the same to writing, but that he would, in order to reduce the same to writing, be required to perform personal services and exercise his individual skill for a period of three weeks." The court also found that plaintiff was willing to employ the defendant, but that the defendant refused to perform any services whatsoever for the plaintiff. The difficulty of enforcing such a contract specifically is well illustrated by the first judgment entered in the case, wherein it was decreed that the defendant within 30 days should "write out or cause to be written out and authenticated when so written out 150 formulas, recipes, and prescriptions for the manufacture of perfumes and other toilet articles mentioned in, and referred to in, said contract dated the 29th day of June, 1915, and that he shall deliver the same to said plaintiff." It was provided that upon writing out such formulas defendant was to receive $1,622, but in the event that he did not do so, the plaintiff should be released from the payment of that amount. The defendant was also enjoined from engaging in the business of manufacturing perfumes, etc., within the state of California for the period of five years.

[2, 3] Under the plain language of section 3390 of the Civil Code, the agreement could not be specifically enforced. That portion of the decree which sought to compel the defendant to deliver or write out secret formulas is impossible of enforcement. The agreement to deliver such formulas was "an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable." Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 8. The contract itself was uncertain as to the secret formulas, and apparently the evidence was equally so. The secrets remained within the breast of the defendant, and he alone would know whether or not he had complied with the judgment which required him to deliver the formulas. The agreement specifically provided for the employment of the defendant at $5 a day. This agreement "to employ another in personal service" could not be specifically enforced by the defendant. Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 2. That being true, there was no such mutuality of remedy as would permit specific performance. Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 657, 59 Pac. 146, 47 L. R. A. 334; Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Occidental Oil Co., 144 Cal. 528, 78 Pac. 25; Pacific, etc., Ry. Co. v. Campbell, etc., 153 Cal. 116, 94 Pac. 623. Without further discussion it is apparent that the first judgment was not supported by the findings. It appears from the recitals in the new judgment that, when the court announced its order vacating the previous judgment, the parties in open court in effect assented to a judgment which was not authorized by the findings or by the pleadings, and is only proper because of that consent. The judgment recites:

"Thereupon in open court plaintiff, through his attorneys, Utley & De Lorimier, demand that they be relieved from all further dealings with said defendant, and that all plaintiff's obligations under that certain contract hereinafter mentioned be canceled and set aside, said defendant through his attorney, Harrison G. Sloane, consenting thereto, on condition that defendant also be relieved of all further dealings with said plaintiff, and that all his obligations under said contract be canceled and set aside."

Wherefore it was decreed:

"That the plaintiff, H. L. Berry, is entitled to rescind said contract of June 29, 1915; that neither the obligations of defendant nor the plaintiff under said contract can be specifically enforced; that plaintiff, H. L. Berry, is entitled to be relieved, and he is hereby relieved, of all further obligations under said contract and of all the future conditions specified therein; that defendant, E. Moulie, is entitled to be relieved, and he is hereby relieved, of all further obligations under said contract and of all the future conditions specified therein; that each of said parties hold and retain such moneys or material goods as they now have in their possession."

As we have already said, the statement on appeal cannot be considered. Therein it is sought to show that there was some error in these recitals in the judgment, and that as a matter of fact plaintiff did not consent to such provisions. Upon the record before us, we must hold that that portion of the judgment now objected to was entered by consent.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — BREACH BY VENDOR — FAILURE TO FURNISH CERTIFICATE OF TITLE.

Where a vendor contracted unqualifiedly to furnish purchaser an unlimited certificate of title by a named title company, failure to do so, though due to the refusal of company to make certificate, will be regarded as a breach, and purchaser not forced to accept, in lieu of said certificate, a certificate under the Torrens law.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by W. H. Taggart against Frank A. Graham. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bischoff & Thompson, of Escondido, for appellant.

H. W. Scheld, of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The court in this action rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $500, with interest and costs. The appeal is taken from such judgment and is presented on the judgment roll and a brief bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff contracted to purchase from defendant certain real property. He paid $500 on the execution of the contract and was to pay the further sum of $2,200 at a later date. The contract contained this agreement:

"And the party of the first part (the defendant) on receiving such payment, at the time and in the manner above mentioned, agrees to furnish to the party of the second part an unlimited certificate of title of the Union Title Company of San Diego as of such date, showing title to said premises to be vested in the party of the first part free from all incumbrances. * * *

Plaintiff alleged in his complaint:

That he paid the $500, and that he "has stood ready, willing, and able to perform all of the covenants in said contract contained, and has so informed the defendant, that he would pay the defendant the sum of $2,200, remaining due on said contract, at any time that the defendant would deliver the said property to the plaintiff with a certificate of title made by the Union Title Company of San Diego, Cal., as agreed to be done by the defendant herein; that defendant, at no time, has ever offered to comply with the terms of said contract, in this, that the defendant would give the plaintiff a title to the said property under certificate of title from said Union Title Company of San Diego, but, on the contrary, the defendant has refused and still refuses so to convey said property to the plaintiff under said title so agreed upon."

It was further alleged by the plaintiff that, in lieu of the certificate of the Union Title Company, the defendant had demanded of the plaintiff that he accept a certificate under the Torrens land registration law, which defendant would not accept. The answer admitted that the certificate of the Union Title Company could not be furnished because of the refusal of said title company to make a certificate on the land in question, the refusal, as alleged, being based upon the fact that such title company would not issue certificates on land registered under the Torrens law. It was also alleged in the answer that no tender was made on the part of the plaintiff of the $2,200, the second payment to be made under the contract. There was no demurrer to the complaint, and by the allegations of the answer it was admitted that the defendant could not comply with his contract had a tender been made, in the particular of furnishing a certificate of title from the Union Title Company.

The court made findings in which it determined, among other things, that the property described in the contract was registered under the Torrens land act, and that the defendant was the holder of a registrar's certificate showing title to be vested in himself and wife free and clear of incumbrances and that the defendant had deposited a grant deed in due form with the Union Title Company conveying said property to the plaintiff, and that, although requested so to do, the Union Title Company had refused to furnish a certificate of title. These findings are supported by the evidence, as it was shown by officers of the Union Title Company that it was a fact that that company had refused to make any certificate of title upon the property in question because only of the fact that the land was registered under the Torrens land law. Premising his argument upon the fact that such refusal became then an arbitrary refusal on the part of the title company to furnish the certificate, appellant insists that where such is the case, and where a marketable title is available and offered to be transferred, the other contracting party may not insist upon the particular term of the contract as to the certificate to be supplied. He cites a number of cases, some California decisions, the general type being those where an architect of the owner arbitrarily refuses to issue a certificate showing the amount of work done by the contractor, even though the contract provides for the presentation of such a certificate as a condition to payment, the contractor constructing the work may, nevertheless, collect. These decisions, of course, are sustained on the ground of agency between the owner and his architect; the act of the agent being deemed the act of the principal. Counsel cite one case, Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253, 24 N. E. 195, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634, which in its abstract text tends to sustain their contention. However, in that case the provision was that the defendant's title should be passed upon by a "lawyer or conveyancer" selected by the defendant, and it was said that an unreasonable refusal to make an examination of the title would not prevent the enforcement of the contract. We think, however, that a close analysis of any of the cases decided with the result contended for will show by the facts that an agency existed, by implication at least, between the contracting party, who agreed to furnish the certificate, and the person who was to furnish it. In this case the defendant contracted to prove good title by the certificate of an established title company. He contracted unqualifiedly to do this. It may have been that the plaintiff was not satisfied to accept the certificate of any other person or corporation, or a certificate issued under the Torrens land examination law. Certainly it was a matter about which the plaintiff had the right to contract; and, it being apparently an essential condition imposed upon the defendant (and voluntarily assumed by the latter), there is no good reason why a failure to comply therewith should not be regarded as a breach of the contract. We think the court was right and that the judgment should stand.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Action by Annie Veirs against Frank Roberts and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Barham, of Santa Rosa, and R. A. Long, of Willows, for appellants.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title brought by plaintiff against her brothers and sisters and the administrator of her mother's estate.

The questions involved in the appeal turn on the validity of a deed made by the plaintiff's mother to her of the property described in the complaint.

On March 2, 1881, William R. Roberts, Sr., died, leaving his belongings which were all community property, to Mary J. Roberts, his widow, and to his children. Out of the proceeds of her share of the estate, as distributed, Mary J. Roberts in the year 1888 purchased the property now in controversy for $3,500. In the year 1907 she made and delivered to her daughter, the plaintiff, a deed of gift of said property, and included in the gift the furniture and personal effects in the home. From the time of the purchase of said property by Mary J. Roberts until the time of her death she and the plaintiff lived upon it. At the time Mrs. Roberts delivered to the plaintiff the deed above referred to, she said to her, according to plaintiff's testimony: "Here is the deed to the place. Put it away and keep it until I tell you to have it recorded." The deed accordingly remained unrecorded until April, 1915, eight months before the death of Mrs. Roberts, at which time, upon the suggestion of her mother, the plaintiff placed it on record. The former's expressed desire to delay the recordation of the document was due, according to testimony given by the plaintiff, to her mother's wish to avoid discussion among the members of the family and consequent annoyance to herself. No question is raised as to the delivery of the deed. The defendants rely on the claim that the evidence shows that Mary J. Roberts was incompetent at the time the deed was executed, and that the deed was the result of undue influence exercised by the plaintiff over her mother, and they also contend that under the provisions of section 1386 of the Civil Code Mrs. Roberts had no legal right to make a transfer of the property.

[1, 2] As to the questions of incompetency and undue influence, an examination of the record discloses that there is an abundance of evidence to sustain the findings of the court in favor of the plaintiff. Several intimate friends and acquaintances of the deceased testified that Mrs. Roberts up to about the time of her death was of sound mind, "a strong-minded woman," a "particularly bright woman," "a positive woman," and that they had never observed in her any indication of weakness of mind, or any indication that the plaintiff or any one else exercised an undue influence over her. A typical witness upon this subject was C. C. Belden, who testified:

"I knew Mrs. Roberts 15 or 20 years. I have had business transactions with her in purchasing land. I was very friendly with her, and had many conversations with her about business and other matters. She was a particularly bright woman, I would say, and her mind I would consider sound. I never saw anything that indicated any weakness of mind, or that she was under the control or dominion of Annie Veirs. She told me that was her intention; that she was going to deed the property to Annie Veirs. She told me that Annie had spent much of her time in taking care of her, and she thought the least she could do for Annie was to deed her the home place."

Mary C. Burnett, another witness, testified:

"I knew Mrs. Roberts intimately for about 40 years, and visited her very frequently. She told me in 1907 that she had deeded the property to Annie. She said Annie was delicate; that she wanted to look out for her; that she was the most delicate child she had. Annie always lived at home with her. Mrs. Roberts appeared to be of very sound mind. Her death was caused by cancer, which she had removed from her face. She was very positive in her opinions, and I never saw anything indicating that she was under the control of any person."

Other evidence was to similar effect, and fully justified the finding of the court on the questions of competency and undue influence.

[3] The remaining contention of the appellants is that the property in question, being proceeds of community property of Mrs. Roberts and her predeceased spouse, must be regarded as held by her in trust for their children, and that the attempted conveyance of it to one of them to the exclusion of the others was a violation of the rights of the latter. This contention is based upon subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code. That section provides, in part, as follows:

"When any person having title to any estate * * * dies without disposing thereof by will, it is succeeded to and must be distributed, unless otherwise expressly provided in this Code, * * * in the following manner: * * * (8) If the deceased is a widow, or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate or any portion of it, was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such deceased spouse. * * *"

The most cursory reading of the above quotation from section 1386 makes it apparent that it has no reference to the situation presented in this case, for two reasons: First, the property concerned in this litigation formed no part of the estate of Mrs. Roberts at the time of her death; and, second, the subdivision quoted in part provides a rule of succession to a certain character of property when the owner thereof shall die intestate and leaving no issue. It fully recognizes the right of the owner to dispose of such property either by gift inter vivos or by last will and testament, which right was exercised in this case.

It follows from what we have said that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\S$ 110(31)
—INFORMATION IN LANGUAGE OF STATUTE—LIQUOR LAWS.

Information charging the selling of and the keeping of a place for the selling of alcoholic liquors in violation of Wyllie Local Option Law, §§ 13, 14, though required by good practice to designate the supervisorial district within which the alleged violations are alleged to have occurred, is sufficient if it follows the language of the act, and charges that the illicit sale was made in no-license territory.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1167(1) — APPEAL —

In prosecution for selling and distributing alcoholic liquors and keeping place where such liquors are kept for sale in no-license territory, where there was no proof but that the sale of the liquors was in dry territory, the failure of the information to designate the supervisorial district within which the offense took place was not prejudicial, under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Scherrer & Guthrie, of Independence, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Upon an information containing two counts, defendant was convicted of a violation of sections 13 and 14 of the Wyllie Local Option Law (Stats. 1911, p. 599). He appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The first count of the information charged that the defendant, "on the twelfth day of August, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, at the said county of Inyo, state of California, * * * and within the boundaries of no-license territory, did then and there willfully and unlawfully sell, serve, and distribute alcoholic liquors to Oliver Roberts," etc. The second count charged that defendant, on the same day, "at the said county of Inyo, state of California, * * * and within the boundaries of no-license territory, did then and there willfully and unlawfully keep and conduct a place where alcoholic liquors were then and there kept for the purpose of sale and distribution. * * *" Appellant attacks both counts, claiming that in neither count are sufficient facts stated to constitute a public offense, and hence his objection to the reception of any evidence in support thereof should have been sustained. Appellant insists that each count of the information should have designated the supervisorial district within which the alleged offense was committed, and that failure so to do renders both counts fatally defective. The offense was charged in the language of the statute, which, as a general rule, is held sufficient. Ex parte Anixter, 166 Cal. 762, 138 Pac. 353. Conceding the better practice in such cases is to describe the supervisorial district or unit within which such infractions are alleged to have occurred, nevertheless, "where the information, merely following the language of the act, charges that the illicit sale was made in 'no-license territory,' that ought to be a sufficient statement of the offense to inform the defendant of the particular offense against which he is thus required to defend." People v. Perry, 25 Cal. App. 337, 143 Pac. 798. The offense charged was not in conducting a place where liquor was kept for sale, nor the selling of the same, but in doing such acts in no-license territory in Inyo county, without proof of which latter act the accused would be exonerated. Moreover, as shown by the evidence, the place where the defendant kept the liquors so sold was at his residence in Lone Pine, which was dry territory, and since the proof was addressed to no other place or sale other than that made therefrom, we would be constrained to hold, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, that, upon an examination of the evidence, the failure to designate the supervisorial district did not result in a miscarriage of justice, nor, indeed,

[3] At the close of the people's testimony, defendant's motion to dismiss as to the second count of the information for want of sufficient evidence was denied, and this ruling is assigned as error. There is nothing in the contention, since the witness Oliver Roberts testified that at three different times on the day alleged in the information he went to the home of defendant in Lone Pine and bought alcoholic liquors. Upon such occasions Roberts did not enter the house, but upon applying to the defendant for the purchase of such liquors the latter went into his house and brought out the bottles containing the same and delivered them to Roberts in exchange for money. This evidence was strongly corroborated by the testimony of two other witnesses standing outside some 20 feet distant from the house. It is true that evidence was offered in behalf of defendant that tended to contradict the people's witnesses; but, at most, this merely raised a conflict, in passing upon which it was the sole function of the jury to determine.

[4] Error is predicated upon a number of rulings made by the court in admitting and rejecting evidence. In arguing these assignments of error, appellant not only gives no reasons for his contention, but the excerpts from the evidence, quoted in his brief, are made without any reference to the context or connection in which such questions and answers thereto were given. In the case of People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 Pac. 770, it is said:

"We again repeat what we have said before, that we will not examine alleged errors presented in this way. It is due to this court from the members of the bar to point out clearly and concisely the rulings complained of as erroneous and the reasons why they are so, with reference to authorities, if any. In case counsel will not take the trouble to do so, we shall deem the matter as of not sufficient importance to merit notice in an opinion"—citing People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 297, 52 Pac. 833.

This court will not, in the absence of appellant's counsel assigning any reason or ground for his claim that the court erred in the rulings, or making any statement other than that the court erred in sustaining or overruling objection to the following question and answer, assume the burden of examining a voluminous record in order to determine whether such rulings are correct. Suffice it to say, there is nothing in appellant's brief showing the rulings made to be erroneous.

An examination of appellant's claims of misconduct, both of the district attorney and the trial judge, shows that they are wholly without merit; indeed, trivial, and merit no consideration.

[5] The evidence on behalf of the people, which, as shown by their action, the jury believed, was ample to justify the verdict that defendant was guilty as charged in both counts of the information, and examined in the light of appellant's brief the record discloses no prejudicial error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The appellate court will not interfere with a finding of fact of the trial court based on evidence directly in conflict.

2. INSURANCE §132 — INDEMNITY INSURANCE—COVER NOTE AS PRESENT CONTRACT.

A cover note, issued by an indemnity company and countersigned by the company's duly authorized representative as policies were required to be before becoming effective, being the memorial of a prior oral contract of indemnity insurance which the parties intended to take effect as stated in the note, was itself a contract of present insurance.

3. INSURANCE §141(2)—INDEMNITY INSURANCE—ISSUANCE OF COVER NOTE—WAIVER OF PAYMENT OF PREMIUM.

Where a valid present contract of indemnity insurance was made, and the insurer extended credit for 60 days, and unconditionally delivered its cover note, it thereby waived payment of the premium as a condition precedent to liability.

4. INSURANCE §634(1)—INDEMNITY INSURANCE—COMPLAINT—PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS.

Complaint, alleging that defendant indemnity insurance company made a valid present contract and extended plaintiff credit for 60 days, and unconditionally delivered him a cover note, and that within 60 days plaintiff offered to pay the premium, and was at all times ready, willing, and able to pay, and that plaintiff promptly notified company of accident and injury covered by the policy, was sufficient, though not alleging generally plaintiff had performed all terms and conditions of cover note and policy form.

5. INSURANCE §638 — INDEMNITY INSURANCE—COMPLAINT—ALLEGATION BY IMPLICATION—NONPAYMENT.

Complaint on indemnity insurance policy that insurer refused to receive the tendered premium, denied liability, refused to defend claim and suit for damages against insured, who was compelled to pay a judgment obtained against him, etc., held sufficiently to allege by implication that the insurer had not paid to the insured the amount claimed.

Action by F. M. Jones against the International Indemnity Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley & Lachmund and A. E. Cooley, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

John D. Murphey, of Berkeley, and Albert E. Carter, of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action brought by plaintiff against defendant to recover the amount plaintiff was compelled to pay in satisfaction of a judgment, obtained against him, and which he claims defendant should pay, under the terms of its policy of liability insurance theretofore issued to him. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals.

The amended complaint alleges that on the 14th day of July, 1916, plaintiff applied to the duly authorized agent of defendant for liability insurance covering plaintiff's automobile in the sum of $10,000; that the defendant by its said agent, in consideration of a premium to be paid within 60 days from July 14, 1916, by plaintiff, agreed to, and did, insure plaintiff from the said 14th day of July, 1916, for one year, and did then and there issue to plaintiff a covering note, signed by defendant's agent and dated July 14, 1916, providing insurance for a period of ten days from its date, and subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the policy forms as issued by the company on the risk of plaintiff. No policy of insurance other than the covering note was ever issued.

The defendant in its answer denied that plaintiff applied to its agent for liability insurance "on the 14th day of July, 1916, or at any time prior to the 18th day of July, 1916," and alleged that the cover note was obtained by plaintiff by fraud and concealment after an accident had happened to him.

The date of the transaction is material, for on the 17th day of July plaintiff, while driving his said automobile, ran into and injured one Meyer Marcovits. On the 19th day of July plaintiff went to the office of defendant's agent and procured the covering note, but did not say anything about the happening of the accident. He notified the company in writing, on the 21st, that the accident had occurred.

Marcovits brought an action against Jones for the damages for the injuries suffered by him, and secured judgment, which, with costs and expenses, amounted to $1,568.65, the amount sued for in the present action.

[1] The vital issue in the case is raised by the defendant's denial as to the date of the issuance of the covering note. A very strong circumstance in the case is found in the fact that the document bears date July 14, 1916. The plaintiff's evidence, corroborated by the testimony of his son, and of his stenographer, further supports the finding of the trial judge that it is correctly dated. The evidence of defendant's agent and other witnesses may well challenge the correctness of the statements, but the most that can be said on the point is that there is a direct conflict of the evidence. Under the well-known rule, the appellate court will not interfere with the finding of the lower court under such circumstances.

What we have said disposes of appellant's contention that the cover note was secured by concealment after the accident. Furthermore, the trial court found "that no act or representation of the plaintiff was done or made with any fraudulent intent whatever."

Counsel for appellant contend that, assuming there was no concealment, and that the covering note was valid, no insurance commenced thereunder until after the accident, because the note was made "subject to the terms and conditions" of appellant's policy form, one of which provides that "this insurance shall not commence until this policy has been countersigned by the company's duly authorized representative." This action, however, is not based on the policy but on the cover note. Law v. Northern Assurance Co., 165 Cal. 402, 132 Pac. 590.

[2] The cover note was so signed, and the fact that it was not delivered until after the accident is immaterial. It purports to take effect prior to the date of that occurrence, and the evidence establishes that it is the memorial of a prior oral contract for such a cover note agreed to in its essentials, and which the parties intended should take effect as stated in the note. Crawford v. Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co., 125 Cal. 609, 58 Pac. 177. It has long been established that such a covering note is itself a contract of present insurance. Law v. Northern Assurance Co., supra.

The cover note, as before stated, was subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the policy form as issued by the defendant company on the risk of plaintiff. The language used served to make the policy form a part of the covering note. The policy form was not set forth in, or made a part of, the complaint. The complaint contains no general allegation that plaintiff has performed all of the terms and conditions of the cover note, and of the policy form issued by defendant, on his part to be performed. Appellant contends, therefore, that the complaint lacked essential and necessary allegations and was fatally defective in that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to aver such performance (citing Raulet v. Northwestern, etc., Co., 157 Cal. 235, 106 Pac. 292; Allen v. Home Ins. Co., 133 Cal. 29, 65 Pac. 138; Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 660, 84 Pac. 182, 25 L. R. A. [N. S.] 6), and was therefore subject to the general demurrer interposed in the court below, which was overruled.

[3, 4] The plaintiff claimed and alleged a valid, present insurance contract with the defendant, and that defendant extended him credit for 60 days and unconditionally delivered the cover note. Defendant thereby waived prepayment of the premium as a condition precedent. Raulet v. Northwestern, etc., Ins. Co., supra. The complaint further alleged that within 60 days plaintiff offered to pay the premium, and that he was at all times ready, willing and able to pay. Plaintiff promptly notified defendant of the accident and injury to Marcovits. On the face of the complaint no other or further conditions precedent on the part of the plaintiff appear. The general demurrer was therefore properly overruled. In the cases cited the complaints showed that there were certain conditions precedent, the performance of which was not alleged.

[5] The complaint fails to allege that defendant has not paid to plaintiff the amount claimed. However, from the allegations that defendant refused to receive from plaintiff the tendered insurance premium, denied any liability under the policy, refused to defend the claim and suit for damages brought against plaintiff, and that plaintiff was compelled to pay the judgment obtained against him, "whereby plaintiff has been damaged by reason of defendant's failure to comply with the terms of its policy" in the amount specified, such nonpayment can be implied. Curtiss v. Bachman, 84 Cal. 218, 24 Pac. 379; Richards v. Travelers' Insurance Co., 80 Cal. 506, 22 Pac. 939.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is affirmed.

Action by Jay Ransch against James Arp. From a judgment entered against defendant after default, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, for appellant. Geo. E. Whitaker and Rowen Irwin, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal taken from a judgment entered against the appellant after default taken because of his failure to answer the complaint of plaintiff.

Appellant urges as ground for reversal the points presented under a demurrer which he interposed to the complaint. The grounds of demurrer were, first, that neither of the two alleged causes of action were sufficiently stated; and, second, that two causes of action were improperly joined, to wit, one upon an open book account, and one for the value of premises alleged to have been tortiously obtained and held. Plaintiff in his first alleged cause of action stated his case as follows:

"That the said defendants are indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,575 upon an open book account accruing within four years last past. That the said defendants have not paid said sum of $1,575, nor any part thereof."

In the second cause of action it is recited with some detail that plaintiff was the owner of certain described premises in the city of Bakersfield and entitled to the rents thereof, and that defendants (there being two others besides this appellant) had, on a certain date, claiming the right thereto, entered into possession of the premises and refused to pay rent; that thereafter plaintiff's title to the real estate was quieted by a judgment of the superior court, and allegations as to the value of the premises being $75 per month were included, and the total asked for was the same sum as that alleged in the first cause of action, to wit, $1,575. The demurrer of appellant being overruled and no answer being filed, default was duly taken, and the court then made its judgment, reciting that appellant and one of the other defendants had failed to answer the complaint, and that the third defendant had stipulated for judgment in the sum of $1,050, and that the order of the court would be and was that plaintiff recover from the three defendants the said sum of $1,050, with interest and costs.

[1, 2] Assuming that the first alleged cause of action was not sufficient in its statement of facts, it is conceded that the second was, and that under the second count more money was demanded than that for which judgment was entered. Appellant having defaulted, he is not, therefore, in a position to complain. Neither do we think that the special ground of demurrer, that of misjoinder of causes of action, had merit. Plaintiff recited the facts respecting the manner in which defendants obtained possession of the premises and sued only for the value of the use thereof, without damages. As we understand the rule, it is permissible for a party to waive a tort and sue upon the implied contract resulting thereunder, where no special damages are made the subject of the cause of action. We think that the second cause of action presented by the complaint should be so considered.

[3, 4] Moreover, the objection as to misjoinder of causes of action was one which constituted a special ground of demurrer only. If we were to concede that the position of appellant was well taken as to that matter, nevertheless we could not say upon this record that it was made to appear that justice had miscarried. In such case section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution requires that the judgment be affirmed.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Action by Margaret Cullen and Merinda Foster against William H. Foster. Judgment for plaintiff Merinda Foster and for defendant as to plaintiff Margaret Cullen, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. E. Vermilyea and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In this appeal, prosecuted by defendant on the judgment roll, he upon highly technical grounds asks for a reversal of a judgment which, while against him as to Merinda Foster, was, as to the plaintiff Margaret Cullen, in his favor.

[1] The complaint is in two counts, the first alleging that defendant is indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $1,475 for money had and received by him for their use and benefit, which sum, though demanded of defendant, he refused to pay to plaintiffs. In the second count, the subject of which is the same indebtedness, the transactions and evidentiary facts out of which the indebtedness arose are set out at length. Appellant makes no attack upon the sufficiency of either of these counts in stating a cause of action, but insists that, since it was alleged that defendant was indebted to both plaintiffs, the court could not render judgment for one only. "The rule," says appellant, "is that where two or more persons join as plaintiffs in an action at law, all must recover or none." We do not so understand the law. Indeed, section 578, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"Judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants; and it may, when the justice of the case requires it, determine the ultimate rights of the parties on each side, as between themselves."

[2, 3] Appellant, in support of his contention, relies upon McDonald v. Porah, 136 Cal. 301, 68 Pac. 817, and Weinreich v. Johnstone, 78 Cal. 254, 20 Pac. 556. Neither of these decisions is applicable to the facts in the instant case. In the first it was merely held that, since the husband was a necessary party in an action against the wife, judgment should not be taken against her without service upon such necessary party. The second case was an action upon a promissory note alleged to have been given to a copartnership. The proof was that the note was made to one of the partners in his individual capacity, and, as he was not a party plaintiff, it was held no cause of action was stated in his favor; hence section 578, supra, was not applicable. Moreover, defendant in his answer denied that he was indebted as alleged to plaintiffs, or indebted to either of them. In the absence of the evidence, which is not brought up, we may assume that the issue so presented was tried, in response to which the court found that defendant was indebted to the one in whose favor judgment was given. The findings, sufficient to support the judgment, are responsive to the issues tendered by the allegations contained in the first count and answer thereto.

[4, 5] The subject of the action was the net proceeds of the sale of a parcel of real estate, which, in the second count, plaintiffs alleged had been by Mrs. Cullen conveyed to Mrs. Foster for the purpose of enabling the latter to effect a sale thereof, the proceeds derived therefrom to be for the use and benefit of the grantor, to whom Mrs. Foster agreed to pay the same. In response to this allegation, the court found that at the time of commencing the action Mrs. Foster was the owner of the property in question, and that on June 19, 1913, defendant, as attorney in fact and agent of Mrs. Foster, and for her use and benefit, sold the same. Appellant's complaint as to this finding is that it is inconsistent with the plaintiffs' allegation, and hence error. We do not think so; but, conceding so much, defendant was not prejudiced by reason thereof. As shown by the record, he wrongfully obtained and appropriated to his own use money derived from the sale of a parcel of real estate, made under a power of attorney given him by Mrs. Foster, in which property she alleged her mother, Mrs. Cullen, had a beneficial interest. The effect of the finding was that, regardless of the capacity in which Mrs. Foster held the title, she was, for the purpose of obtaining redress for defendant's wrong, the legal owner thereof, and hence the court adjudged that the defendant pay the proceeds so wrongfully withheld to Mrs. Foster, to whom his obligation was due. Whether she responded to the one for whom she claimed to be trustee was a question with which he was in no wise concerned. In our opinion, the provisions of section 578, Code of Civil Procedure, are as applicable to the second count as they are to the first. In no event is he shown by the record to have been prejudiced by the rulings made. The judgment is affirmed.

HABEAS CORPUS $\hookrightarrow$ 30(1)—ERRORS—REFUSAL TO ISSUE SUBPENA.

Refusal to issue a subpoena for a witness by a committing magistrate or by the superior court is not ground for the release of a prisoner on habeas corpus, since an abuse of the court's discretion therein is mere error and does not go to the question of jurisdiction.

Original petition by Harley Noyes for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Harley Noyes, in pro. per.

HART, J. The petitioner, who is confined in the Folsom state prison on a judgment of conviction and sentence for the crime of statutory rape, has, in propria persona, presented to me an application, by way of a petition, to be released from said imprisonment on the ground that he was denied a fair and lawful hearing before the committing magistrate who preliminarily examined the charge against him and committed him for trial therefor to the superior court, in that the said magistrate refused, upon the request of the petitioner, to issue subpoenas for certain witnesses and thus require them to appear and testify at the preliminary hearing in his behalf. Accompanying the petition and made a part thereof is a transcript of the proceedings of the preliminary hearing of the charge before said magistrate.

The refusal to issue a subpoena for witnesses by a committing magistrate, or even the refusal to cause one to be issued for a like purpose by the superior court, is not a ground for the release of a prisoner on habeas corpus. Discretion in that regard may be abused and error thereby committed, and thus a person examined or on trial on a criminal charge deprived of a lawful hearing or trial; but such abuse of discretion either by the magistrate or the superior court is mere error, which does not go to the question of jurisdiction to make the order of commitment or to impose judgment of sentence, and therefore is not reviewable in a proceeding under a jurisdictional writ. Matter of Jacobs, 176 Pac. 698.

It is proper to say that the transcript of the proceedings which took place before the magistrate at the preliminary hearing of the charge of which the petitioner was later convicted in the superior court, and for which he is under the restraint of which he here complains, discloses that, before the date of the examination, the prisoner exercised very little, if any, diligence in the matter of procuring the attendance of witnesses at the hearing to testify in his behalf. Moreover, it further appears from said transcript that the magistrate ordered a recess of the hearing for the purpose of giving certain witnesses named in court by the petitioner an opportunity to be present and testify in his behalf. However, as first stated above, the petition shows no legal ground for the issuance of the writ of habeas corpus, and, accordingly, the application therefor will have to be denied, and it is so ordered.

BROWN v. CHEVROLET MOTOR CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2722.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨330(3)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—OWNER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

Proof of ownership of automobile and its use at the time of the accident under owner's permission establishes a prima facie case against owner of responsibility for resulting injuries.

2. WITNESSES ⇨246(1), 269(15)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—EXAMINATION BY COURT.

In action against owner of automobile for injuries on ground that driver of automobile at time of accident was the agent of the owner, where owner's manager as plaintiff's witness testified to ownership of car, establishing prima facie case of agency of driver at time of injuries, any facts as to the nature of the agency was permissible on cross-examination to overcome the presumption arising from the prima facie case, and proper subject of inquiry by the court on direct examination.

3. TRIAL ⇨165—MOTION FOR NONSUIT—EVIDENCE DURING CROSS-EXAMINATION.

On the determination of motion for nonsuit, all the evidence produced on behalf of plaintiff, both on direct and cross examination, must be considered; the evidence elicited during cross-examination being regarded as plaintiff's evidence, and not as the evidence of party cross-examining.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨301(1)—NEGLECT OF AUTOMOBILE BORROWER—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

The relation of principal and agent between owner of an automobile and the driver making owner liable for driver's negligence does not result from the mere borrowing of the machine by the driver, though he is an employé performing duties in another part of the state.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨301(1)—NEGLECT OF AUTOMOBILE BORROWER—LIABILITY OF OWNER—ESTOPPEL.

Automobile dealer is not estopped from denying that automobile negligently driven by borrower was being used in its business by reason of having obtained manufacturer's or dealer's license under Motor Vehicle Act, § 9, by signing application providing for cancellation upon violation of provisions thereof, in view of section 32, such statute not making driver of licensed automobile the owner's representative, and not prohibiting use of registered machine by borrower or making owner liable for borrower's negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Joseph A. Brown against the Chevrolet Motor Company of California and another. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, and H. L. Breed, of Oakland, for respondents.

HAVEN, J. Appeal from judgment of nonsuit rendered in an action for damages for personal injuries tried before a jury. The injuries are alleged to have been suffered by reason of the negligent driving by one West of an automobile owned by the defendant and respondent Chevrolet Motor Company of California, a corporation. West, the driver of the car, was named as a defendant in the complaint, but no service of summons was made upon him, and the case proceeded to trial against the motor company as the sole defendant, whose motion for nonsuit was granted at the close of the plaintiff's case.

Appellant urges two grounds for reversal of the judgment:

(1) In order to prove the agency of the driver of the automobile for the defendant company, and the consequent liability of that company, plaintiff called as a witness its president and general manager, and proved by him that the automobile which caused the injuries complained of was then being used by West under the permission of said manager, and that it then bore the license number issued to the defendant company under a manufacturers' or dealers' license. The defendant's ownership of the automobile at the time of the accident was admitted by the witness on cross-examination.

During the direct examination of this witness, in response to questions propounded by the court, and upon cross-examination by defendant's counsel, further facts were elicited as to the relations between West and the motor company and the nature of the permission under which the automobile was being used at the time of the accident. It then appeared that Mr. West was employed by the defendant company as a traveling salesman to visit prospective dealers in that part of the state of California north of Sacramento and in southern Oregon; that he had no duties in connection with the defendant company in the vicinity of San Francisco; that on the Saturday afternoon preceding the day of the accident he asked the general manager of the company for permission to have a car on Sunday to take his family and mother out for a ride, which permission was granted to him. The manager testified that no other conversation took place between himself and Mr. West as to the use of the car. The accident occurred in San Mateo county while the car was being used on this Sunday pleasure excursion.

[1, 2] Under the recent case of McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 Pac. 417, and many authorities in other jurisdictions, proof of ownership of the automobile and its use at the time of the accident, under the permission of such owner, established a prima facie case of responsibility for the resulting injuries as against such owner. Appellant insists that, having established a prima facie case, any evidence in conflict therewith was a part of the defense, and that it was the province of the jury to weigh such conflicting evidence and to determine therefrom the ultimate liability of the defendant. The evident answer to this contention is that the fact which plaintiff sought to prove by the manager of the defendant company was the agency of the driver of the automobile at the time of the accident. Having elicited on direct examination information sufficient to establish a prima facie case of such agency, plaintiff could not properly object to further evidence on the same subject on cross-examination, which would overcome the presumption arising from the proof of the prima facie case. Any facts as to the nature of the agency were proper subjects of inquiry upon cross-examination, or by the court during the direct examination.

In a somewhat similar case the Court of Appeals of New York has recently said:

"The presumption growing out of a prima facie case, however, remains only so long as there is no substantial evidence to the contrary. When that is offered, the presumption disappears, and, unless met by further proof, there is nothing to justify a finding based solely upon it. Matter of Carroll v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 218 N. Y. 435, 113 N. E. 507 [Ann. Cas. 1918B, 540]. Here the presumption arising from the fact of ownership was entirely destroyed by the other evidence." Potts v. Pardee, 220 N. Y. 431, 116 N. E. 78.

[3, 4] Evidence elicited on cross-examination is regarded as testimony on the part of the party calling the witness, and not as evidence of the party cross-examining. Upon the determination of a motion for a nonsuit, all of the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiff, both on direct and cross examination, must be considered. Taking all this evidence into consideration, it appeared without conflict that at the time of the accident the automobile was being used by West solely in a pleasure excursion, for which purpose it had been borrowed by him from the defendant company. The fact that he was an employé of the defendant company, performing duties in another part of the state, did not alter his relations as a borrower of the machine. Appellant's brief contains a statement that the plaintiff attempted to prove that West was engaged on business of the defendant company on the day of the accident. Our attention is not called, however, to any portion of the record sustaining this assertion, for which reason it cannot be considered.

The liability of an owner of an automobile for the negligence of its driver depends on the existence of the relation of principal and agent between the two. This relation does not result from the mere borrowing of such automobile. Hence it is uniformly held that the owner is not responsible for injuries resulting from the negligence of a driver whose only relation to the owner is that of borrower. Berry on Automobiles, §§ 601, 684, 685; Hartley v. Miller, 165 Mich. 116, 130 N. W. 336, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 81; Chamberlain v. California Edison Co., 167 Cal. 500, 504, 140 Pac. 25; Segler v. Callister, 167 Cal. 377, 139 Pac. 819, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 772; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057. In the case of Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161, relied upon by appellant, the ownership of the automobile by the defendant was in controversy. Neither the owner of the automobile nor the driver was called as a witness by the plaintiff. Their testimony as to the ownership of the automobile was submitted as a part of the defendant's case, and was said to be "not without its suspicious or improbable features." It was held to have been the function of the jury to determine whether or not such testimony was sufficient to overcome the presumption arising from the proof of the holding of the license by the defendant. In the instant case there is no dispute as to the ownership of the automobile by the defendant; nor does any conflict arise between this admitted fact and the testimony of defendant's manager as to the nature of the permission under which the machine was in use at the time of the accident. In our opinion the motion for nonsuit was properly granted.

[5] (2) The second ground for reversal urged by appellant is that the respondent was estopped from denying that the automobile which caused the injuries complained of was then being used by said respondent in its business. This for the reason that the automobile was then operated under a manufacturers' or dealers' license, obtained by the defendant company under section 9 of the motor vehicle act (Stats. 1915, p. 397). The section referred to provides:

"Every manufacturer of, or dealer in, motor vehicles may make application to the department, by mail or otherwise, upon a blank provided by the department, for a general distinguishing number or symbol, instead of registering each motor vehicle owned or controlled by him. * * * And the said department shall grant the application if satisfied of the facts stated in the application, and shall issue to the applicant a certificate of registration containing the name and business address of the applicant and the general distinguishing number or symbol assigned to him; * * * and every motor vehicle owned or controlled by such manufacturer or dealer shall be regarded as registered under such general distinguishing number or symbol until sold or until let for hire or loaned for a period of more than ten successive days."

The application made by respondent to the motor vehicle department for a license under the provisions of the above section was introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, and contained the following agreement signed by the respondent:

"It is agreed by the applicant that in consideration of the issuance of this certificate of registration the number plates issued therewith shall be used only in connection with the business of the purchase and sale of motor vehicles and for no other purpose, and it is further specifically agreed that the said number plates shall not be used upon motor vehicles in the rental, taxicab, stage, trucking or transportation service, or in any commercial business other than that of manufacturer or dealer in motor vehicles, and that the said number plates shall remain continuously in the possession of the applicant. It is still further specifically agreed that upon failure to observe any of the provisions of this agreement the certificate of registration issued to the applicant may be canceled by the motor vehicle department, and that the number plates issued therewith shall be returned to, or may be taken possession of by, the motor vehicle department."

Appellant argues that, inasmuch as the manufacturers' or dealers' license obtained under the above application contained certain concessions to the licensee not made to the owner of a single automobile, the recipient of such a license is bound by the above agreement, and is thereby estopped from claiming that an automobile bearing such license number was used otherwise than in the conduct of its business.

To sustain this contention reliance is placed upon the case of Cargill v. Duffy (C. C.) 123 Fed. 721. In that case the owner of a licensed cab let the same, together with the horse and harness, by the day, for a fixed price, to a driver, to be used by him for the purpose of carrying passengers for hire in the streets of New York. It further appeared that the owner of the cab had applied for and received from the city of New York a separate badge for each cab owned, by him, and that when he rented the cab he furnished the driver with such hackman's badge. The ordinances of the city of New York with regard to the operation of cabs and hacks are set forth at length in the opinion. Among other provisions, it is prescribed that—

"Every licensed owner or driver of any hackney * * * shall wear conspicuously on the left breast of the outer coat a metal badge * * * having engraved thereon the words 'Licensed Hack' and the number of such licensed hackney cab, said badge to be issued to and belong to said owner, and to be issued by him to any driver representing him, and for whom he shall be responsible."

Under these facts it was held that the owner of the cab made the cab driver his representative, and so held him out to the world, and was estopped as to the plaintiff from asserting the contrary, or setting up his contract with the driver. The liability of the owner was predicated on the fact that—

The cab was "managed by a driver upon whom he [the owner] had placed a badge of authority which said to such injured person: 'This driver represents the owner of the cab and for the acts of the driver, such owner is responsible.'"

The issuance of this "hackman's badge," and its use under the provisions of the ordinance and the authority of the owner of the cab in the business of carrying passengers for hire, distinguish the above-cited case from the one now under consideration. The English cases discussed in the opinion are also distinguished by similar differences of facts and statutory provisions.

In Trombley v. Stevens-Duryea Co., 206 Mass. 516, 92 N. E. 764, the facts very closely resemble those here involved. There, as here, the evidence introduced by plaintiff consisted entirely of proof of the nature of the injuries received and damage suffered, the number of the registration tag attached to the automobile at the time of the accident, and the certificate of registration, corresponding with that number, showing that the automobile was registered in the name of the defendant. The defendant rested at the close of plaintiff's evidence and moved for a directed verdict in its favor, which was granted. Plaintiff's exceptions to this directed verdict were overruled by the appellate court. It was held that the proof of the certificate of registration, in which defendant's name appeared under the number corresponding to the number of the car, was competent evidence either of defendant's ownership of the automobile or of his absolute right to its exclusive possession and management. The opinion then proceeds:

"But, to recover, the plaintiff also was required to offer some evidence of the defendant's responsibility for the driver's negligence. The Legislature might have said that whenever a registered automobile was operated on the public ways, the person, firm, or corporation named in the certificate should be liable prima facie to other travelers for accidents caused by its mismanagement. The statute, however, goes no further than to provide that for the purposes of the issuance, transfer, and revocation of certificates, and the enforcement of the penal provisions of the act, automobiles shall be identified by their register number, and their owner or owners ascertained from the certificate. The common law, therefore, controls, and there is no presumption, from his mere physical possession, that the person operating the automobile was the servant or agent of the corporation. He may have hired or borrowed it or wrongfully appropriated it to his own use, and in neither event would the defendant be chargeable with his misconduct. Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 90 N. E. 392, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 442 [134 Am. St. Rep. 648]."

Under a similar statute and somewhat similar facts, the Supreme Court of Rhode Island reached the same conclusion in Colwell v. Aetna Bottle & Stopper Co., 33 R. I. 531, 540, 82 Atl. 388. In the later Massachusetts case of Gould v. Elder, 219 Mass. 396, 107 N. E. 59, cited by appellant, the automobile was registered in the name of the son, but was owned by his father. It was used in connection with a garage business of which the father was found to be the owner. The statute of Massachusetts required automobiles to be registered in the name of the owner. It was found, therefore, that the automobile from the driving of which the injuries were received was not legally registered, and that its operation on the highway was illegal. For that reason the owner was held liable, while in the earlier Massachusetts case, in which no such fact appeared, the owner was absolved from liability.

Upon careful examination of the provisions of the California motor vehicle act, we are unable to find therein any provisions which made illegal the operation of the automobile by West under the circumstances of this case. The only penalty prescribed in the application blank, upon which appellant relies, is that, upon failure to observe the provisions thereof, the certificate of registration issued may be canceled by the motor vehicle department. The motor vehicle act itself in section 32 thereof provides that "any person violating any of its provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." The following sections provide for special penalties for the violation of several designated sections of the act. We do not find, however, any provision of the act which can be said to have been violated by the respondent company when it loaned its automobile to its employé, West, for the purpose of a pleasure excursion. Indeed, as pointed out by respondent, the provision of section 9 of the act that the registration there provided for shall be effective as to every motor vehicle so registered "until sold or until let for hire or loaned for a period of more than ten successive days" seems to imply a statutory permission for the loaning of such vehicle under the license for any period less than ten days. Nor does the California act contain any provision similar to that of the New York ordinance making the driver of a licensed automobile the representative of the owner thereof. In the absence of any such statutory provision, either creating a liability against the owner for use of a registered vehicle by a borrower thereof, or prohibiting such use, we are unable to perceive how it can successfully be contended that the respondent company represented West to be its agent in the operation of the automobile upon the day of the accident in such a manner as to constitute the basis of an estoppel against such respondent.

Judgment affirmed.

39 Cal. App. 704
McARTHUR v. JOHN McARTHUR CO.
et al. (Civ. 1878.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1919.)

1. COSTS ⇐ 3—STATUTORY REGULATION.

The matter of costs is the subject of statutory regulation.

2. CORPORATIONS ⇐ 189(14)—STOCKHOLDER'S SUIT—ATTORNEY'S FEES AS PART OF "COSTS."

An attorney's fee as part of the "costs" cannot be recovered in an action for an accounting charging individual defendants with fraud, conspiracy, and misappropriation of funds of defendant corporation, in which plaintiff's decedent was a stockholder.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Costs.]

3. COSTS $\hookrightarrow$ 32(1)—ATTORNEY'S FEE—AWARD TO LOSING PARTY.

The award of an attorney's fee as part of the costs to the losing party against the winning party was improper; the court having held that plaintiff really had no cause of action against defendants, but that they should afford her some compensation in bringing the action by paying her attorneys for their services.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. E. Barber, Judge.

Action by Mary McArthur, as administratrix of the estate of Archibald McArthur, deceased, against the John McArthur Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff for attorney's fees, defendants appeal. Reversed.

W. D. Tillotson, of Redding, for appellants.

Theodore A. Bell, of Los Angeles, and Braynard & Kimball, of Redding, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff brought the action for an accounting, charging the individual defendants with fraud, conspiracy, and misappropriation of the funds of the corporation defendant, in which the decedent, Archibald McArthur, was a stockholder. The answer denied all the allegations of misconduct, and the court found in favor of the defendants upon all the material issues, but declared that the books of the corporation had been unscientifically kept, although "the method of bookkeeping employed has been substantially the same as that which has been maintained by said corporation ever since its organization, and that because of the unscientific system of bookkeeping the court finds that the plaintiff is excusable for bringing this action, and for that reason reasonable attorney's fees should be allowed attorneys for plaintiff." The trial court concluded that $2,000 was a reasonable amount of said fees and entered its judgment accordingly.

This judgment is certainly unique. We would be glad to know if there is any statute or any decision of the highest court of any state that justifies it. Our attention has not been called to any authority that supports it. Indeed, respondent's counsel have made no argument in this court whatever in the cause, and the reason, no doubt, is that they would not willingly contend for something that their judgment does not approve. It must have been the result of an inadvertence on the part of the trial judge that the award was made, and it is altogether probable that he would have corrected it if the opportunity had been presented.

[1] The rule is, of course, that the matter of costs is the subject of statutory regulation. The consideration is fully discussed by Justice Hart in Murphy v. Casey, 13 Cal. App. 781, 110 Pac. 956, and Duley v. Pea- cock, 17 Cal. App. 418, 119 Pac. 1086, and no necessity exists to add anything as to the general proposition.

[2] Again, there is no law in this state authorizing in this class of cases the imposition of an attorney's fee as a part of the "costs" that may be recovered. Furthermore, it has been held by the Supreme Court that the act of the Legislature in providing attorney's fees in a certain class of cases is unconstitutional and void. Builders Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193, 11 Ann. Cas. 712.

[3] But, beyond all this, the attorney's fee was awarded to the losing party and against the winning party. This cannot be done. Hering v. Simon, 77 Neb. 60, 108 N. W. 154.

The court held, in other words, that the plaintiff really had no cause of action against the defendants, but, nevertheless, they should afford her some compensation for her mistake in bringing the action by paying her attorneys $2,000 for their services.

Of course, if such a rule should prevail, it would multiply litigation and afford a bonanza to enterprising attorneys who are more mindful of the emoluments than of the honor of the profession. However, there can be no serious contention that the judgment for the attorney's fee can be upheld, and it is therefore reversed.

7. LOST INSTRUMENTS ¶6—ACTION TO ESTABLISH LOST DEED—NECESSARY PARTIES.

In action to establish lost deed brought against grantor's subsequent grantee, it was unnecessary to make the representative of the grantor's estate a party to the action, since the decree does not adjudicate any rights of such estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by Martin H. Farnham against Edmond L. Huston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Scott, of Oakland, for appellant.

I. I. Brown, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. This is an action to quiet title and to establish a lost deed. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, from which defendant appeals. The execution and delivery of the deed in controversy and the existence of a consideration therefor are conceded by appellant, but it is insisted that there was no sufficient proof of the contents or character of the document to warrant its restoration. The evidence as to these matters may be summarized as follows:

Robert M. Ford testified that he was an attorney at law; that Mrs. Huston, the grantor in the disputed deed, and Mr. Farnham, the grantee, came to his office together the day before the execution of the deed; that Mrs. Huston then stated that she wished to have a deed made out to Mr. Farnham of certain property in East Oakland, and then left with the witness a copy of the deed to herself of the property referred to "for me to get the description"; that, on the afternoon of the same day, he personally typed the deed by filling in the blank spaces on "one of the ordinary 'Hardy' forms of bargain and sale deed," which he had in his office; that he was sure it was a bargain and sale deed, and, to the best of his recollection, he used the particular form referred to; that the description which he inserted in the deed was taken from the deed by which Mrs. Huston herself obtained title to the property; that, after being informed that the deed was lost, he obtained the description, which was inserted in the copy of the deed sought to be restored, from the county recorder's record of the same deed, and personally compared such description with the record just prior to the time this suit was filed; that, independently of the record, he remembered that the property described in the deed was on Fifteenth street, between Third and Fourth avenue, "on the north side I believe"; that Mrs. Huston and Mr. Farnham returned to his office the following day, and he then showed them the deed which he had prepared, and that, to the best of his knowledge, the copy of the deed attached to the complaint as "Exhibit A" is a true copy of the deed he prepared, and represents the contents of such deed. Floyd R. Gray, a notary public, testified that Mr. Ford, Mrs. Huston, and Mr. Farnham called at his office and presented a deed made out; that Mrs. Huston signed the deed before him and acknowledged it; that he then placed his seal on the document and made his record of the transaction in his notarial book. He then produced such book and read therefrom the following record:

"Date, April 3, 1916. Executed by Martha E. Huston. Executed to Martin H. Farnham. Character of instrument, Deed. Consideration, $10.00. Date of instrument April 3, 1916. Legal fees, 50 cents."

Contemporaneously with the execution of the disputed deed, the parties thereto entered into a written agreement as to the consideration moving to the grantor. This agreement was prepared by the same attorney who prepared the deed and at the same time. It was admitted in evidence and contains the following recital:

"That whereas said Martha E. Huston has this day granted, sold and conveyed to said Martin H. Farnham, (subject to a life estate reserved to said Martha E. Huston) certain property on the north side of East 15th street, Between 3rd and 4th avenues, in Oakland, Alameda county, California, as appears by a deed duly executed this day. * * *"

[1, 2] Evidence to establish a lost deed must be clear and certain. The legal execution of the document must be proved, and its contents must be established "not literally but substantially." It is not necessary, however, "that the witnesses should be able to testify with verbal accuracy to its contents; it is sufficient if they are able to state it in substance." Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 43, 73 Pac. 803, 806. In the instant case, the date of the deed, the names of the parties, and the expressed consideration are supplied by the notarial record. The description of the property is identified by the testimony of the attorney who prepared the deed to the effect that he copied it from another deed, with the record of which he subsequently made comparison. Appellant claims that it does not clearly appear that the deed was a grant. The testimony of the witness Ford is positive and uncontradicted that it was a bargain and sale deed, and the contemporaneous agreement signed by Mrs. Huston recites that she "has this day granted, sold and conveyed to said Martin H. Farnham" certain property, which was identified as being the same property as is described in the deed in controversy. We perceive no reason why the evidence above set forth should not have been regarded as a sufficient compliance with the rule requiring the substantial contents of a lost document to be established with clearness and certainty.

The property to which respondent's title was quieted by the decree is described in the first paragraph of the complaint as "commencing at a point on the northeastern line of East 15th street." It is then alleged that Martha E. Huston conveyed "the above-described property" to respondent by a deed, a copy of which is annexed to the complaint as Exhibit A. The description of the property as contained in such exhibit is as follows:

"Commencing at a point on the northwestern line of East 15th street (formerly Madison street), distant thereon 112 feet 6 inches northwesterly from the northwestern line of Fourth avenue (formerly Patton street), and running thence northwesterly along said line of East 15th street 37 feet 6 inches; thence at right angle northeasterly and parallel with Fourth avenue 100 feet; thence at right angle southeasterly and parallel with East 15th street 37 feet 6 inches, and hence at right angle southwesterly and parallel with Fourth avenue 100 feet to the northwestern line of East 15th street and the point of commencement. Being a portion of lots 7 and 8 in block 75 as said lots and blocks are delineated and so designated upon that certain map entitled Higleys Map of Clinton, of record in Liber B of Deeds at page 537 in the office of the county recorder of said Alameda county."

The findings and decree restore the deed as it appears in the exhibit, but quiet respondent's title to the property as described in paragraph 1 of the complaint. A variance is claimed between the description of the property as alleged in the body of the complaint and the proof furnished by the restored deed with its differing point of commencement. The court found, however, "that the land described in said Exhibit A is the identical land described in paragraph 1 of the complaint herein." We are of the opinion that the evidence supports this finding, and that the trial court did not err in quieting respondent's title to the property as described in the body of the complaint. The deed was restored as originally prepared and executed. No attempt was made to reform it. The witness Ford testified:

"There is an error in the description as shown by the records; but whether that error was in the deed to her or the record, I don't recollect just how that occurred, but the word 'northwestern' in the top line, and the word 'northwestern' in the ninth line, should both be 'northeastern.'"

It was proved that the same error persisted in the subsequent deed from Mrs. Huston to appellant, who is her surviving husband, which deed the latter introduced in evidence. Appellant also testified that he knew of no other property which his wife had besides this house. As already stated, the attorney who prepared the deed was instructed to take the description from the deed by which Mrs. Huston herself acquired title to the property. It thus appears that the grantor intended to convey the only property which she owned in the knowledge of her husband. An examination of the description contained in the restored deed discloses that the point of commencement must be corrected from the northwestern to the northeastern line of East Fifteenth street in order that any effect may be given to the subsequent calls of the deed. The second call runs northeasterly parallel with Fourth avenue, and the third call proceeds, at a right angle, southeasterly and parallel with East Fifteenth street. The directions of these lines show that the only possible course of East Fifteenth street is in a northwesterly and southeasterly direction, and that there can be no northwesterly line of such a street. By correcting the error in accordance with the testimony of the witness Ford a consistent description is obtained. Otherwise the proved intention of the grantor must be disregarded.

[3-5] "The rule is, that effect must be given to the intention of the parties, when it can be gathered from the instrument." Wagenblast v. Washburn, 12 Cal. 208, 212. "And the entire description contained in the instrument should be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention." Serrano v. Rawson, 47 Cal. 52, 55. A false term in a description will be rejected when necessary to effectuate the intention of the parties. White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 514, 524, 23 L. Ed. 938; Hamm v. City of San Francisco (C. C.) 9 Sawy. 31, 46, 17 Fed. 119. In Walsh v. Hill, 38 Cal. 481, these rules were applied to the correction of an erroneous starting point as being inconsistent with the other calls of a deed.

[6] Appellant introduced in evidence a subsequent deed from such grantor to himself of an undivided one-half interest in the property in controversy. This conveyance was a gift deed in form, and the trial court found that it was executed "in consideration of love and affection and such considerations as are expressly set forth on the face of the said deed, and for no other considerations." We cannot say that this finding is unsupported by the evidence, notwithstanding that the appellant testified that such deed was made in consideration of his turning over to his wife a fraternal life insurance policy upon his life. That transfer was made over a month before the deed was executed. Appellant further testified that he had no knowledge of the execution of the lost deed to respondent at the time the deed to himself was executed. It also appears that the husband and wife executed mutual wills in favor of each other contemporaneously with the execution of this deed. Mrs. Huston has since died, and her estate was in process of administration at the time of the trial. Construing this evidence most favorably for appellant, a conflict arises between the recitals of the deed and the statements of appellant. This conflict was resolved by the trial court against the appellant, and we may not disturb its finding.

[7] It was not necessary that the representative of the estate of Mrs. Huston should have been made a party defendant in the action. Even if a proper party, he was not a necessary party, as the decree does not adjudicate any rights of that estate.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 612(2, 3)—RECORD ON APPEAL—AUTHENTICATION.

Under Supreme Court rule 29 (176 Pac. xii), the judge alone is authorized to authenticate the papers used at the hearing below and required to be furnished the appellate court by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 951, and this must be done by incorporating them in the bill of exceptions, or in accordance with the provisions of section 953a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by B. F. Patterson against A. H. Rutherford and another. From an order taxing costs of the named defendant after judgment that defendants recover their costs incurred in the action, the named defendant alone appeals. Affirmed.

Zabala & Sargent, of Salinas, for appellant.

Hugh R. Osburn, of King City, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order made in the superior court of the state of California for the county of Monterey taxing the appellant's costs after judgment in the action that he and the other defendants recover their costs and disbursements incurred in the action.

Respondent objects to a consideration of the appeal upon its merits: First, because it does not appear by the certificate of the clerk of said superior court to the transcript that any undertaking on appeal has been given, or that the same has been waived by stipulation as required by section 953 Code of Civil Procedure; and, second, that the transcript contains no bill of exceptions, and the papers contained therein are not authenticated in any way as the papers used on the motion in the trial court, as provided for by rule 29 of the Supreme Court (176 Pac. xii).

The appellant sets out in the transcript a copy of the notice of appeal and the order, the memorandum of costs, judgment, notice of motion to tax costs, and certain other papers and records in the case, to which a certificate of the clerk is appended that they are full, true, and correct copies of the originals on file and of record in his office.

Section 951, Code of Civil Procedure, requires the appellant to furnish the court with a copy of the notice of appeal, a copy of the judgment or order appealed from, and all papers used on the hearing in the court below.

Rule 29 of the Supreme Court provides how the papers are to be authenticated, and is as follows:

"In all cases of appeal to this court from the orders of the superior courts the papers and evidence used or taken on the hearing of the motion must be authenticated by incorporating the same in the bill of exceptions except where another mode of authentication is provided by law."

It has been held repeatedly that the judge alone is authorized to authenticate the papers used at the hearing, and this must be done by incorporating them in the bill of exceptions, or in accordance with the provisions of section 953a Code of Civil Procedure. Herrlich v. McDonald, 80 Cal. 472, 22 Pac. 299; San Diego Bank v. Goodsell, 137 Cal. 420, 70 Pac. 299; Hertel v. Emireck et al. (Sup.) 174 Pac. 30.

The appellant having failed to comply with rule 29 of the Supreme Court or with provisions of section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, in providing a proper record which may be considered by an appellate court, we are compelled, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, to assume that the order appealed from was properly made.

This conclusion, as it disposes of the appeal, makes it unnecessary for us to discuss any other points raised in the briefs.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

DEEDS 176—BUILDING RESTRICTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In action to enjoin landowners from erecting buildings upon a certain lot on the ground of noncompliance with building restrictions, evidence held insufficient to show that there were any building restrictions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by C. M. Wilcox, as administrator of the estate of Merle L. Wilcox, deceased, and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, against Harry E. Varney, Amelia Lombardi, Ernest Kirkpatrick, and Carrah Kirkpatrick. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jensen & Jensen and Chas. H. Brock, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Earl D. Killion, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit granted on the ground that "the facts do not make out any cause of action against the defendants, or either of them, in behalf of plaintiffs, or either of them." Both parties to this action contend that the court granted the said judgment on two grounds: (1) That the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and (2) that at the trial plaintiffs failed to make out a case against the defendants, or either of them. In this they are both wrong. The record discloses the following facts: (1) That a demurrer, general and special in terms, was interposed to plaintiffs' second amended complaint, which is the complaint set out in the transcript, and the same was overruled; (2) that on the day of trial defendants objected to the introduction of any testimony on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. This was denied. The court took all the testimony that plaintiffs desired to offer, and at the close of plaintiffs' case granted the motion referred to herein.

The action is one asking for an injunction enjoining the defendants, and each of them, from permitting certain buildings to remain upon a certain lot, and ordering them to remove same therefrom, and for damages because of noncompliance with certain "building restrictions." It is alleged in the complaint, and denied by the answer:

"That, pursuant to a general plan of improvement for the benefit of all lots in said tract, and for each of said lots, uniform building restrictions were by the plaintiff Title Insurance &

Trust Company placed thereon; that each and every lot sold in said tract was by the plaintiff Title Insurance & Trust Company sold and conveyed by recorded deed, each lot subject to uniform building restrictions inserted in the deed thereof, in words and figures following, to wit: 'That said premises shall be used for residence purposes only; that no building or structure whatever other than a private residence with the customary outbuildings, including a private stable, shall be erected, placed, or permitted on said premises, or any part thereof, and that any such residence shall cost and be fairly worth not less than fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00), and shall be located not less than 25 feet from the front line of said premises, and said building shall face the front line of said premises; that no part or parts of any outbuilding or private stable which may be erected upon said premises shall extend more than 50 feet from the rear line of said premises; that no intoxicating liquors of any character shall be bought, sold, or kept for sale on said premises or any part thereof; that said premises, or any part thereof, shall not be sold, conveyed, leased, rented to or occupied by any person of African, Japanese, or Mexican descent: Provided, that a breach of any of the foregoing conditions shall cause said premises to revert to the said grantor, its successors or assigns, each of whom, respectively, shall have the right of immediate re-entry upon said premises in the event of any such breach: Provided also, that a breach of any of the foregoing conditions, or any re-entry by reason of such breach, shall not defeat or render invalid the lien of any mortgage or deed of trust made in good faith and for value as to said premises, or any part thereof, but said conditions shall be binding upon and effective against any owner of said premises whose title thereto is acquired by foreclosure, trustee's sale, or otherwise: Provided, further, that all and each of the restrictions, conditions, and covenants herein contained shall in all respects terminate and end and be of no further effect, either legal or equitable, and shall not be enforceable after January 1, A. D. 1920.'"

We have gone over the record in this case carefully, and we fail to find any evidence to support these allegations.

The evidence shows that the Southern Pacific Company, a creditor of the plaintiff Title Insurance & Trust Company, conveyed certain lands, including those claimed by the defendants herein, to it, and that a certain "syndicate," composed of Weddington, Cooper, and Rose E. Whitley, conveyed to it certain other lands, and that the Title Insurance & Trust Company held all of these lands in trust, but had nothing to do with negotiating the sales. It appears from the evidence that all the lands contained in the Lankershim tract were sold pursuant to "a general plan of improvement." Counsel in putting his questions used the word "restrictions" as, for instance:

"Q. You say all these lands were sold pursuant to a general plan of improvement for the benefit of all the lands in the tract? A. Yes, sir. Q. And these restrictions were contained in all the deeds? A. Yes, sir."

We are at a loss to know what it was that counsel was referring to in the last question. There was some discussion between counsel and the court, in which there was some reference to a "certificate of title" and "some deeds," but no certificate of title, or anything purporting to be such, is disclosed by the evidence here. We assume, however, that it was something contained in these that was referred to in asking the said question. That we are correct in this assumption is probably proven by the following testimony:

"Q. Mr. Greene, with reference to the restrictions on the lots in the Lankershim tract, were all the restrictions uniform as to the residence lots? A. Yes, sir. Q. The same as alleged in the complaint? A. Yes, sir. Q. In the deed shown here — Mr. Bowman: I object to that. Q. Do you know whether or not there were uniform building restrictions on all the residence lots in the tract? Mr. Bowman: I object to that. The Court: The same ruling. There is only one way here to prove that in the face of objection, and that is by the production of the documents. Mr. Jensen: Documents to prove that there were restrictions? The Court: The document was in writing, and the only way it can be proved is to produce the paper. Mr. Jensen: There is no paper to show the general plan of the improvement. We will have to show that by the testimony of the witnesses."

The only evidence there is of the so-called "restrictions" is that shown by plaintiff's Exhibit 1, but that does not contain any reference to lot 15 in block 8 of said tract, which is the lot in controversy here. There is no evidence to show that any of the land conveyed to either of plaintiffs here by others than the "syndicate" was subject to said, or any, restrictions, and so far as these defendants, or any of them, are concerned, the only evidence that they, or any of them, knew of said, or any, restrictions is the following testimony of the witness Weddington:

"Q. Did you speak to either or any of the defendants with reference to building restrictions before they began building on the lot? A. I did. Q. What did you tell them? A. I spoke to Mr. Kirkpatrick about his building. Q. What did you tell him, if you remember? A. Mr. Wilcox came to see me and said— The Court: Never mind what Mr. Wilcox told you; you are asked what you told Mr. Kirkpatrick. A. I told Mr. Kirkpatrick what Mr. Wilcox told me. Mr. Bowman: Just a moment; I would like to know whether he is testifying as the messenger of Mr. Wilcox or in some other capacity. The Court: If you want it in, all right. You have no objection to the question. You are asked as to what you told Mr. Kirkpatrick. Mr. Bowman: I withdraw the objection. A. I told Mr. Kirkpatrick Mr. Wilcox had come to see me and said that his house did not comply with the restrictions at that time. And I looked it over and measured the distance from the rear line, and that's all I told him."

By what stretch of imagination can that be construed to prove plaintiffs' said contention? We are of the opinion that in this it wholly fails. There is no proof that the defendants, or either of them, had any deed, except as shown by the pleadings; that is there is no evidence offered to sustain the allegations of the complaint which are denied in the answer. We are left totally in the dark as to this deed or its contents, covenants, or restrictions.

Thus confronted, we are of the opinion that is is wholly immaterial here whether the alleged "restrictions" constitute a "covenant running with the land," or a "condition subsequent," and that the judgment of nonsuit was properly granted.

Judgment affirmed.

Violation of Motor Vehicle Act, requiring vehicles approaching intersection of street, road, or highway to keep to the right of and run to and beyond the center of such intersection, in turning to the left, constitutes negligence.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 705(4)—USE OF STREETS—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—CUTTING CORNERS.

Automobile driver is liable for collision with motorcyclist, where accident would not have taken place but for automobile driver's violation of Motor Vehicle Act, prohibiting the cutting of corners in turning to the left at street intersection, though accident occurred after he had turned into the intersecting street 15 or 20 feet from the curb line of the street along which he had been driving.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Pedro Perez against M. B. Hartman. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Charles H. Mattingly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hutton, Jensen & Fogel, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained as a result of defendant's negligence in operating an automobile on Porter avenue. Judgment went for defendant, from which, and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

In addition to denying defendant's alleged negligence, the answer set up contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, as to which, however, the court made no finding, nor, indeed, was any finding made touching the issue of defendant's negligence.

The finding of the court which appellant attacks for want of sufficient evidence to support the same is that the collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's automobile occurred, not on Porter avenue, but on Brand boulevard, approximately 15 or 20 feet from its intersection with Porter avenue, as a result of which plaintiff was seriously injured, but that said collision and the resulting injury to plaintiff was not due to any negligence on the part of defendant. In other words, the finding is to the effect that defendant's negligence, if established, was not the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury.

While the evidence touching the question is meager, it appears therefrom that Porter avenue (hereinafter designated as the avenue), some 45 feet in width, is intersected at a right angle by Brand boulevard (hereinafter designated as the boulevard), which is 100 feet in width. Immediately before the accident wherein the injury was sustained, plaintiff, operating a motorcycle, was traveling southerly on the right side of the avenue, and defendant was driving his auto on the right side thereof, going northerly. The speed was such that, if continued along said avenue, they would have passed each other at about the center of the boulevard. When defendant reached a point in the avenue corresponding with the southerly line of the boulevard, into which he intended to turn, he, instead of crossing over beyond the center thereof and entering the same on the right side, turned sharply across the avenue and along a line corresponding with the southerly line of the boulevard. When defendant changed his course from the line in the avenue along which he was traveling, plaintiff, traveling at a speed of some 15 or 20 miles, and at right angles to the line in which defendant was crossing the avenue, had reached a point in the boulevard. It thus clearly appears that if defendant had observed the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1913, p. 639), which require that "all vehicles approaching an intersection of a street, road or highway with the intention of turning thereat, shall, in turning to the right, keep to the right of the center of such intersection, and in turning to the left shall run to and beyond the center of such intersection, passing to the right thereof, before turning such vehicle toward the left," he and plaintiff would have safely passed each other on the avenue at a point between the lines of the intersecting boulevard.

[1] Defendant's failure to comply with these provisions constituted negligence. The court, however, found that such negligence did not contribute to plaintiff's injuries, because, as found, the collision occurred at a point on the boulevard distant approximately 15 to 20 feet from the curb line on the avenue. This finding is based upon defendant's testimony to the effect that, as he crossed the avenue and reached the line of the boulevard, he saw a team driven southerly thereon approaching his line of travel from the north, and distant some 30 feet from the line on which he crossed, immediately behind which team he saw plaintiff, who, in crossing the boulevard intersection, seemed to be about to pass to the right of said team, at which time defendant's attention was attracted in the opposite direction; that, when he had reached a point on the boulevard some 20 feet from the curb line of the avenue, he felt a shock to his car caused by the impact, and, looking towards the front thereof, saw that the left side lamp was broken and the motorcycle under the car, while plaintiff was found lying back of a lamp post some 5 or 10 feet back of the point where the collision occurred. There was other testimony to the effect that the motorcycle was struck by the auto while within the lines of the avenue, and plaintiff thrown forward to the lamp post where he was found. This evidence, however, was disregarded by the learned trial judge, who accepted as satisfactory the theory, based upon defendant's testimony, that at a point 5 or 10 feet from the lamp post, plaintiff's motorcycle, which defendant did not see, collided with the left front lamp, breaking it, leaving the motorcycle under the car and plaintiff lying crosswise of the parkway between the curb line and sidewalk, behind a lamp post opposite from the car, at a point which it seems he could not have reached, except upon the theory that he was projected on the line of a curve.

[2] However, accepting the testimony at the value accorded it by the trial court, and assuming that the accident occurred on the boulevard some 15 or 20 feet from the curb line of the avenue, it is, nevertheless, in our opinion, clear that in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff—and there is no evidence nor finding of such fact—the collision would not have occurred, had defendant proceeded, as he should have done, along the right side of the avenue to a point beyond the center of the intersecting boulevard and then turned into it on the right side thereof. To us it seems immaterial that the collision occurred on the boule-ward, if the wrongful act of defendant in crossing the avenue in front of plaintiff's line of travel forced him in the exercise of due care to swerve his cycle to the boulevard in an effort to escape the threatened injury. It was defendant's negligent act that created the dangerous situation, to escape which plaintiff in the exercise of due care was forced from his line of travel on the avenue, causing him to collide with defendant's automobile. The findings complained of are not supported by the evidence.

The judgment and order are reversed.

FIRST NAT. BANK OF CORONA v. COPLIN. (Civ. 2509.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING — 134(1) — APPLICATION OF DEPOSIT TO DEPOSITOR'S DEBT.

The right of a bank under Civ. Code, § 3054, to enforce its lien upon a deposit and appropriate it in the extinguishment of the depositor's matured indebtedness, is not dependent upon the consent of the depositor.

2. BANKS AND BANKING — 134(1) — APPLICATION OF DEPOSIT TO DEPOSITOR'S DEBT — SECURED AND UNSECURED NOTES — STATUTE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there shall be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by mortgage, a bank could not enforce its lien by applying a deposit in cancellation of a note secured by a mortgage, but could apply it only to an unsecured note.

3. COSTS — 260(4) — FRIVOLOUS APPEAL — DAMAGES.

Where plaintiff bank held depositor's note secured by a mortgage upon hay, and after applying the deposit on an unsecured note attached the hay for balance due thereon, plaintiff's entire claim was secured by the hay, and defendant was not prejudiced by such application of deposit, and his appeal is frivolous, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 957, the court must add to the costs such damages as may be just.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by the First National Bank of Corona against J. B. Coplen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. R. Freeman, of Willows, and McFarland & Irving, of Riverside, for appellant.

Walter S. Clayson, of Corona, and A. H. Winder, of Riverside, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On March 22, 1917, plaintiff held two notes made to it by defendant, one for $1,200, secured by mortgage upon 150 tons of hay, the other, unsecured, for $2,000, and both of which were then due. Defendant was a general depositor in said bank and at the time had on deposit therewith $393.38, which sum the bank, without notice to him, applied upon the unsecured note of $2,000. Upon learning of this fact, defendant telephoned the bank he wanted the deposit applied in liquidation of the secured note, with which request the plaintiff, upon the ground that it had already been credited as stated, refused to comply. Thereupon, on the following day, plaintiff brought this action to recover the balance of said note and attached the property held by it as security for the $1,200 note. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] That "a banker has a general lien, dependent on possession, upon all property in his hands belonging to a customer, for the balance due to him from such customer in the course of the business," is declared by section 3054, Civil Code; and that a bank may, in the exercise of the right to enforce such lien, appropriate the money in its possession belonging to a customer in the extinguishment of the customer's matured indebtedness, is declared in the case of Melander v. Western National Bank, 21 Cal. App. 462, 132 Pac. 265, and cases cited therein. To hold the right to so apply the deposit is dependent upon the consent of the depositor would destroy the right given.

[2] As stated, one of the notes was secured by a mortgage, and under section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, providing that there shall be but one action for the recovery of any debt secured by mortgage, the bank could not enforce its lien by applying the deposit in cancellation of the secured debt. McKean v. German-American Sav. Bank, 118 Cal. 334, 50 Pac. 656; Gnarini v. Swiss-American Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 Pac. 726. Hence, the only note of defendant held by the bank upon which it was entitled to apply the general deposit was in liquidation of the unsecured note.

[3] As stated, the $1,200 note was secured by a mortgage upon a certain quantity of hay, and, after applying the deposit toward the liquidation of the $2,000, plaintiff caused an attachment to be levied upon the hay mortgaged as security for the former note. Thus, by mortgage and lien under execution of the writ of attachment, plaintiff's entire claim against defendant was secured by the hay; hence it is impossible to conceive how defendant could have been prejudiced by the application of this deposit in the manner stated. There is no merit in the appeal, and the circumstances are such as to render it apparent that the appeal was taken for delay. The declared policy of the law is in opposition to the prosecution of such appeals.

Section 957, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that—

"When it appears to the appellate court that the appeal was made for delay, it may add to the costs such damages as may be just."

While courts in the exercise of the power so given are loath to impose the penalty prescribed for the prosecution of a frivolous appeal, nevertheless, when it is apparent that the appeal is taken merely for delay, they should, as contemplated by the provision quoted, impose penalties to discourage such litigation from adding unnecessarily to the congestion now existing in the courts. It is therefore ordered that, in addition to the costs of the appeal, respondent recover from appellant the sum of $100 as damages on account of the appeal herein having been "made for delay."

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Frances M. Holroyd against the Gray Taxi Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert Choynski and James Raleigh Kelly, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Murphy, Robert W. Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The appeal is from a judgment for the plaintiff in a suit for damages for personal injuries. It was against the Gray Taxi Company, a corporation, appellant, and Charles E. Eagleson, who was in the employ of the defendant at the time the plaintiff received her injuries. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury. The award was for $1,134, interest and costs.

The plaintiff, a woman of sturdy health, but somewhat past middle age, on August 12, 1915, alighted from a south-bound municipal street car on Van Ness avenue when it stopped at Bush street. She crossed Van Ness avenue towards the east to the northeast corner of the street intersection, and then turned south on the east side of Van Ness avenue, crossing Bush street. Before reaching the south side of Bush street she was struck by a taxicab belonging to the appellant and driven by the appellant's codefendant. She sustained serious injuries. She was confined to the hospital for a considerable time, and further time elapsed before she was able to return to the employment from which she earned her livelihood.

[1, 2] On behalf of the appellant it is urged that the evidence was insufficient to support the court's finding that the defendant was guilty of negligence and further, that it was insufficient to support the finding that the plaintiff herself was not guilty of contributory negligence. Numerous quotations are made in the appellant's brief from evidence of witnesses, including the plaintiff herself, from which it is argued that the appellant's contentions are well founded. In the brief of the respondents other excerpts are quoted from the evidence to support both of the questioned findings. Upon this subject, the case falls directly within the rule that where there is a conflict of evidence, the judgment of the lower court will not be disturbed, nor will the appellate court undertake to weigh the conflicting evidence.

The appellant maintains that the lower court erred in sustaining an objection to a question addressed to the chauffeur defendant by his counsel, reading as follows:

"Now, Mr. Eagleson, I understand you to say that you have been a chauffeur six years, during which time you had had an opportunity to observe the habits and customs of people in approaching an automobile. What has been your observation and experience of people when suddenly confronted with an automobile?"

On behalf of the appellant it is argued that the chauffeur, if permitted to answer the question, would have testified, in effect, that "a pedestrian, suddenly becoming aware of the approach of a moving vehicle, will, almost invariably, jump backwards," and that this evidence would have tended to explain the action of the chauffeur in attempting to drive his machine in front of, rather than behind, the plaintiff as she was crossing Bush street.

[3] If that was the purpose of the question, it was certainly an improper one. What others may have done when confronted with a sudden danger could not possibly establish a custom by which the plaintiff in this case would have been bound. If the purpose was to show why, when confronted with the sudden appearance of the pedestrian in front of the automobile, the defendant turned to one side or the other, a direct question would have obviated the objection based upon the ruling of which complaint is made, if such evidence would be admissible. The ruling of the lower court was without error.

We have examined the entire record in this case, and we are satisfied that the judgment of the lower court was correct.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. PLEADING $\S$ 205(2) — DEFECTIVE PLEADING — GENERAL DEMURRER — OBJECTIONS REACHED.

If a complaint fails to state any fact or facts essential to a recovery, the defect may be reached by general demurrer, but if all the essential facts are stated, but stated imperfectly or defectively, the defect can only be reached by special demurrer particularly designating the specific point at which it is aimed.

3. PLEADING $\S$ 34(7) — DEFECTIVE STATEMENT — OBJECTION FIRST RAISED ON APPEAL.

Where lease made part of complaint provides that defendant reserved an option to purchase pasture, when ready for pasturage, at the market price in Imperial Valley, an allegation that defendant had an option to purchase "the stock pasture at the price for cornstalk pasture in Imperial Valley at the time the cornstalks are ready for pasture," and that defendant exercised option when pasture was ready, held sufficient on objection first raised on appeal.

4. PLEADING $\S$ 34(7) — AMBIGUITY — OBJECTIONS ON APPEAL.

In action to recover for sacks furnished defendant by plaintiff for plaintiff's share of defendant's crops under crop-sharing agreement, in violation of agreement whereby defendant was to furnish such sacks, complaint failing to allege that sacks were furnished at the special instance and request of defendant held sufficient on objection first raised on appeal.

5. TRIAL $\S$ 404(1) — FINDINGS — CONSTRUCTION.

In action to recover for defendant's failure to purchase pasture after notifying plaintiff of the exercise of an option for such purchase "at the market price in Imperial Valley," court's finding of a current market price was sufficient without use of the words "Imperial Valley."

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by B. K. Singh and others against the C. H. & O. B. Fuller Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Freeman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James W. Griffin, of Holtville, and J. S. Larew, of El Centro, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by defendant upon the judgment roll from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs.

By a written lease to terminate January 1, 1917, made a part of the complaint, defendant demised to plaintiffs 320 acres of land in Imperial county for the purpose of growing a crop of corn thereon, the lessor, as rent, reserving one-fourth of the corn, to be piled on the land at a place designated by it, and one-fourth of the cornstalk pasture. The lease contained a provision as follows:

"It is further agreed and understood by the parties hereto, that the party of the first part [defendant] shall have the right to purchase the second parties' [plaintiffs] three-fourths of the stock pasture at the market price for cornstalk pasture in Imperial Valley at the time the cornstalks are ready for pasture."

The complaint, in substance, alleged that when said 320 acres of cornstalks was ready for pasture, defendant, in response to plaintiffs' inquiry, informed them that it elected to exercise its option to purchase said three-fourths interest in said pasture at the current market price; that at a time more than one month prior to the expiration of said lease plaintiffs had an opportunity of selling the pasture for $4.50 per acre, which, except for defendant's exercise of said option under the terms of said lease to purchase the same, they would have sold and received therefor the sum of $1,012.50. For a second cause of action the complaint alleged that defendant failed to furnish the necessary sacks for the part of said crop belonging to defendant by reason of which fact plaintiffs furnished the same for defendant, to wit, 475 sacks required in the sacking and care of defendant's share of said crop; that the reasonable value of said sacks was $59.37. In its answer defendant denied that it informed plaintiffs that it elected to exercise said option, but alleges that defendant advised plaintiffs that they could sell said pasture to other parties, provided that possession of said premises must be surrendered January 1, 1917, and denied that plaintiffs could have sold said pasture for any sum whatsoever, and denied that it elected to exercise its option to purchase the pasture at the current price or at any other price. And defendant, while admitting it did not furnish sacks for its share of said crop of corn, denied that it requested plaintiffs to furnish the same, and denied that plaintiffs furnished 475 or any sacks for its portion of said corn, at defendant's instance and request.

Upon the issues so presented the case was tried, and the court found that defendant did, some six weeks before the termination of said lease, exercise its option reserved therein to buy plaintiffs' interest in said cornstalk pasture, "pursuant to defendant's option provided for in said lease," notwithstanding which fact defendant neglected and refused to pasture the same until the expiration of such lease, and since the expiration thereof has received the benefit of said pasture and the whole thereof, but paid plaintiffs nothing therefor; that the reasonable value of plaintiffs' three-fourths interest in said pasture was the sum of $1,012.50. As to the sacks, the court found that defendant failed to furnish sacks necessary for its one-fourth of the crop of corn, and plaintiffs furnished the same to defendant, the reasonable value of which was $59.37.

No demurrer was interposed to the complaint, and appellant, upon the judgment roll alone, now for the first time insists that the first count of the complaint fails to state a cause of action. This is based: First, upon the failure of the complaint to allege nonpayment; and, second, upon the fact that the option given defendant was to purchase the pasture "at the market price for cornstalk pasture in Imperial Valley at the time the cornstalks are ready for pasture."

[1, 2] As to the first contention, the complaint alleged that—

"Defendant * * * refused and still refuses to pay the plaintiffs the market value of plaintiffs' interest in said pasture, to wit, the said sum of $1,012.50, or any part thereof."

In the absence of a special demurrer directing attention to such imperfect or defective pleading, the statement in the complaint that defendant "refused and still refuses to pay plaintiffs" is a sufficient allegation of nonpayment. Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 197, 23 Pac. 1094.

"If a complaint fails to state any fact or facts essential to a recovery, the defect may be reached by a general demurrer. If, however, it states all the essential facts, but states them improperly or defectively, the defect can only be reached by a special demurrer, particularly designating the specific point at which it is aimed." Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 158, 11 Pac. 888.

To the same effect is Tehama County v. Bryan, 68 Cal. 57, 8 Pac. 673, where it is said:

"Where a complaint states all the facts essential to a recovery, but states them imperfectly, a demurrer, to be effectual, must be special, and directed against the very defect apparent."

[3] The second point is likewise, and for the same reasons, without merit. Conceding the facts to be imperfectly pleaded, it nevertheless appears from the copy of the lease made a part of the complaint that defendant had reserved an option to purchase the pasture when ready for pasturage, at the market price thereof in Imperial Valley, and if the allegations of the complaint are inconsistent with such fact, the defect should have been reached by a special demurrer for ambiguity or uncertainty. In the absence of such demurrer, the complaint upon an attack made for the first time on appeal will be construed as sufficient in alleging that defendant had an option to purchase "the stock pasture at the market price for cornstalk pasture in Imperial Valley at the time the cornstalks are ready for pasture," which option, it is alleged, defendant, at the time the pasture was ready, duly exercised. By reason of such act defendant became obligated to pay plaintiffs the market price for such pasture in Imperial Valley, notwithstanding which fact and repeated demand therefor made, as alleged in the complaint, "defendant neglected and refused to pasture the same until after the expiration of said lease, and refused and still refuses, to pay to plaintiffs the market value of plaintiffs' interest in said pasture, to wit, the sum of $1,012.50, or any part thereof," but at the expiration of the lease, it is alleged, it appropriated the use and benefit thereof to itself. All of these facts the court, in substance, found to be true.

[4] As to the sacks, for which recovery was had, it may be conceded the facts pleaded in the second count of the complaint are likewise imperfectly pleaded, since it is not alleged that they were furnished at the special instance and request of defendant. But it is alleged that they were furnished, which implies that defendant accepted the same and appropriated them to its own use and refused to pay therefor. Indeed, defendant, by its answer, admits such allegation, justifying its refusal to pay upon the ground that nothing contained in the lease required plaintiffs to furnish said sacks to it. While the count as a pleading is imperfect and subject to special demurrer, it is not, in the absence of demurrer and after judgment, subject to the objection urged.

[5] It is manifest from the foregoing that appellant's attack upon the findings, which are to be construed most strongly in support of the judgment, is without merit. The court found that plaintiffs, prior to the expiration of the lease, had opportunity to sell the same at the "current market price, to wit, the sum of $4.50 per acre." The words "current market price," used by the court, referred to and had reference to such market price in Imperial Valley, and the fact that the court did not use the words "Imperial Valley" is immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARR v. CITY OF GLENDALE et al.
(Civ. 2792.)

1. JUDGMENT ⇨370—VACATION—SURPRISE.

Plaintiff is not entitled to have judgment rendered against her vacated on the ground of surprise under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, by reason of order permitting defendants to amend answer, where defendants waived their right to amend and elected to stand upon their answer, leaving the issues exactly as they were at the beginning of the trial.

2. JUDGMENT ⇨359—VACATION—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Judgment for defendant will not be vacated under Code Civ. Proc. § 663, providing for the vacation of a judgment and the entering of a new one where it is not in accordance with the findings, on ground of error in admission of evidence, where it is admitted that the findings are adverse to plaintiff.

3. JUDGMENT ⇨336—VACATION—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where court errs in admission of evidence, the remedy of parties against whom judgment is rendered is a motion for new trial or an appeal, and not motion to vacate judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing for vacation of judgment on account of excusable neglect, inadvertence, or surprise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Winifred F. Marr against the City of Glendale and others. Judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate judgment rendered against her upon the trial of the action, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

Winifred F. Marr, in pro. per.

W. E. Evans and Evans, Abbott & Pearce, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order of court denying her motion to vacate a judgment rendered against her upon the trial of an action.

The motion purports to have been made pursuant to the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and is based upon the ground of mistake, surprise, and excusable neglect, in support of which, other than the records and files, plaintiff offered affidavits.

As disclosed by the record, it appears that pending trial of the action the court made an order granting defendants leave to amend their answer by denying certain allegations of the complaint. Assuming the amendments to be made, and after certain evidence was received thereunder, defendants withdrew their motion to amend, and elected to stand upon their answer as made. Thereupon the court set aside the order permitting the amendment. The trial proceeded to completion, when findings were made adverse to the plaintiff, and judgment rendered thereon for defendants.

[1] From what we are able to glean from the confused statement of plaintiff, who appears in propria persona, she claims to have been prejudiced by the ruling of the court in permitting the amendment, thus raising new issues, to meet which she was not prepared. At the time, however, the court, recognizing that necessity therefor might arise, stated that he would grant her time within which to procure her evidence touching the issues raised by the amended answer. Defendants' waiver of their right to amend, and their election to stand upon their answer, left the issues exactly as they were at the beginning of the trial; hence we are unable to see how plaintiff could have been surprised to her prejudice by the rulings of which she complains.

[2, 3] A further complaint is based upon the claim that, notwithstanding the admissions contained in defendants' answer, the court, upon the evidence received on the theory that the answer would be amended, based thereon certain findings adverse to plaintiff. Conceding this to be true, the error, if plaintiff was prejudiced thereby, could not be reached by a motion of this character. Her remedy was a motion for new trial or an appeal. The mere vacation of the judgment, which she sought, would leave the findings standing upon a completed trial upon which it would be the duty of the court to enter judgment in accordance therewith, and that necessarily and concededly must be adverse to plaintiff. Section 663, Code of Civil Procedure, provides for the vacation of a judgment and the entering of a new one where it is not in accordance with the findings; but that is not this case. Appellant, conceding the findings to be adverse to her, simply, asks that the judgment be vacated. While appellant may have just cause for complaint, due to erroneous rulings made by the court in the course of the trial, or based upon the fact that the findings are not within the issues or not supported by the evidence, such errors cannot be reviewed upon a motion to vacate the judgment, made under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, on account of excusable neglect, inadvertence, or surprise.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KHAIR DIN. (Cr. 636.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 11, 1919. Rehearing Denied March 8, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court April 10, 1919.)

1. JURY §99(3)—CHALLENGES—OPINION.

A challenge in a homicide case to a juror who had an opinion that the accused in traveling out of the state used an infrequented way, question whether accused was fleeing from state after killing, being material, should have been allowed, under Pen. Code, § 1073.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1166½(8)—PREJUDICIAL ERROR—CHALLENGE TO JURORS.

Where an accused exhausted his peremptory challenges, and thereafter challenged a juror for cause, which challenge was denied, error in not allowing a previous challenge to a juror for cause, thus requiring a peremptory challenge, must have been prejudicial.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §419, 420(1)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—HOMICIDE.

In a homicide case in which a question as to the route taken by defendant in leaving state was material, testimony of a deputy sheriff that he "got information from good authority that defendant was traveling by a certain route" was hearsay and inadmissible.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §419, 420(1)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In a homicide case, where it was important as to route taken by defendant, a Hindu, in going out of state after killing, testimony of a deputy sheriff that "this Hindu" had been seen on a certain road, and "It is his description; I know from the simple fact I got it was a Hindu," should have been stricken as hearsay.

5. HOMICIDE §171(3)—EVIDENCE—FINDING OF ANOTHER BODY.

In a prosecution for the killing of a certain person, a witness for the state was properly allowed to testify that the body of another person was also found at the place of the killing.

6. HOMICIDE §338(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In homicide case, it was not error to admit evidence that body of person other than one defendant was charged with having killed was found at scene of killing, where defendant's attorney stated before the jury that "the case of H. [the other person killed] has already been tried, and a verdict of not guilty rendered against this defendant."

7. CRIMINAL LAW §1141(2)—APPEAL—DUTY TO SHOW ERROR.

It is duty of counsel of accused to refer to contents of record showing rulings of court, wherein it is claimed that court erred in refusing to permit counsel for accused to cross-examine witnesses.

8. CRIMINAL LAW §419, 420(2)—HOMICIDE §157(1)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—STATEMENTS MADE IN PRESENCE OF ACCUSED.

In homicide case, reference to statements by third persons in presence of accused, to which accused made answer, where the terms of the conversation were not given, was not improper, where tending to show some misunderstanding between accused and deceased.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Khair Din was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Reversed.

O. V. Willson, of El Centro, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of murder of the first degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The victim of the alleged murder was one Fared Bakhsh, and the date of the alleged killing was August 13, 1917. It appears that another man named Hassen Ali was killed at the same time, but this prosecution was for the killing of Fared Bakhsh. Hassen Ali, together with one Chanda Kahn and the defendant, were living on a ranch in Imperial county of which they were lessees. The evidence tends to show that Chanda Kahn was not at the ranch at the time of the killing. No witness has been produced who saw the tragedy enacted or who was on the place at the time. The defendant did not testify, but his defense is that he was not there at that time. On the morning of August 14th a man who visited the ranch found the dead body of Fared Bakhsh lying on the ground a short distance away from the ranch house, and the dead body of Hassen Ali was found on a bed in the house. The evidence shows that on August 17th the defendant appeared at Tia Juana, in Mexico, more than 100 miles away from the ranch where the killing was done, and there took the stage to Ensenada. A few days later he was arrested at Ensenada, and afterwards on extradition proceedings was brought back across the border to Imperial county. When arrested at Ensenada he denied that his name was Khair Din, and denied that he had lived in Imperial county. The prosecution endeavored to show that the defendant went by way of Mexicali to Tia Juana on foot by an unfrequented road. By what has been said it will be seen that the conviction was had upon circumstantial evidence.

The first assignment of error is that the court erred in denying the challenge for cause to the prospective juror Fred Guntermann. One G. G. Gonzales, a deputy sheriff of Imperial county, engaged in search for the defendant on and after August 14th. Guntermann testified that he lived near Calexico, which is a town in Imperial county adjoining Mexicali, a town on the Mexican side of the line. Guntermann testified that he discussed the matter of the murder with Gonzales, who went to get the defendant across the line. Guntermann further testified as follows:

"Q. Have you any knowledge as to which way he went to Ensenada? A. What was spoken of at the time; he didn't take the steamer and he didn't take the stage, and, knowing the roads, I don't think I ought to be on here. Q. Would that fact that you have now in mind concerning the route of his going, would that be apt to influence you in weighing his testimony on the witness stand as to the route which he says he took at that time; what you have in your mind now would be apt to influence you? A. I think it would. Q. It could not be removed by his evidence, the evidence on his behalf? A. I rather have an opinion formed at the time. * * * Q. You have no personal knowledge of how the defendant got to Ensenada? A. I have an idea. Q. Of your own personal knowledge or what some one told you? A. Just a suspicion at the time. I know he didn't go the route which most any one would have gone, and, knowing the trails as I know them, I formed an opinion what trail he took. Q. Do you have any personal knowledge at this time as to the particular route or trail he took to Ensenada? A. I know he didn't travel the highway; he didn't take the general route down there; he didn't go by stage or go by boat. Q. That is what you have been told? A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you an opinion now as to whether he is guilty or innocent? A. No; nothing definite. Q. Is it what you might call an impression? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Don't you think, Mr. Guntermann, you could listen to the testimony in this case and base your verdict solely upon this testimony, and not upon any suspicion that you might have entertained at any particular time? A. It would depend upon the evidence. Q. Suppose there wasn't any evidence as to how he got to Ensenada? A. I would have my own opinion then."

"For the existence of a state of mind on the part of the juror in reference to the case, or to either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party, which is known in this code as actual bias." Pen. Code, § 1073.

From the testimony of Guntermann, as above stated, it is our opinion that defendant's challenge to Guntermann was well grounded and should have been allowed. Upon its denial he was peremptorily excused by the defendant. The record shows that the defendant exhausted his peremptory challenges, and thereafter challenged a juror for cause, which challenge was denied. Under the circumstances shown by the record, the error of the court in denying the challenge to Guntermann was substantially injurious to the defendant. It was so held under similar circumstances shown in the case of People v. Riggins, 159 Cal. 113, 112 Pac. 862. Concluding its comments upon the facts in that case, the court said:

"The right to a fair and impartial jury is one of the most sacred and important of the guaranties of the Constitution. Where it has been infringed, no inquiry as to the sufficiency of the evidence to show guilt is indulged, and a conviction by a jury so selected must be set aside."

In People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 196, 48 Pac. 75, 77, the court said:

"If the defendant feared to put himself upon trial before the jurors whom he had challenged, it was his duty to have availed himself of the liberal aid which the law affords, and to have excused them from the box. If, in so doing, he lessened the number of his peremptory challenges to such an extent that it appears they were exhausted before the completion of the jury, he may well be heard to urge in argument that by reason of the erroneous ruling the number of his peremptory challenges was improperly curtailed, and he was deprived of a legal right."

[3, 4] The defendant further claims that the court erred in refusing to strike out as hearsay evidence certain answers given by the state's witness, G. G. Gonzales. The statement of Gonzales which defendant sought to strike from the record was in substance that Gonzales "got information from good authority" that defendant was traveling on the Picacho Pass, going west; also, on cross-examination, after the witness had stated that it was reported to him that "this Hindu" had been seen on the road from Mexicali to Tia Juana, defendant's counsel asked: "Do you know whether it was this Hindu or another one, or a Mexican?" The witness replied: "It is his description; I know from the simple fact I got it was a Hindu." Defendant's counsel moved to strike out this answer as hearsay. Both rulings were erroneous.

[5, 6] F. C. Kemp, a deputy marshal of the city of El Centro, testified that, upon hearing of the death of Fared Bakhsh on the 14th of August, he went to the ranch where the defendant lived. He found the dead body of Fared Bakhsh lying near a bridge east of the ranch house. Near that place he found several empty shells of a .32 caliber automatic pistol. Defendant claims that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the witness Kemp concerning the finding of the body of Hassen Ali, and in refusing to permit counsel for the defendant to cross-examine the witness concerning other results of his investigation of the premises than what had been testified to by him in answer to questions put by the district attorney. The witness testified as follows:

"Q. Did you make any investigation to determine who had killed Fared Bakhsh? A. I did. Q. What did you do? A. I was told there were three men living on the ranch; that one of them they found dead and was identified as one of the three; it was Hassen Ali, and I immediately looked for Khair Din and Chanda Kahn. Q. At the time you found the body of Fared Bakhsh, did you find the body of Hassen Ali? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where was it? Mr. Willson: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial in this case. Q. The purpose of that is to show that Hassen Ali didn't kill Fared Bakhsh. Mr. Willson: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Mr. Simon: I am not charging this defendant with the killing of Hassen Ali in this case; I am not trying him for the killing of Hassen Ali, and you know it. The Court: Overruled. A. The body of Hassen Ali was on the bed in the house. Q. State whether or not he was dead at that time. A. He was."

The court did not err in overruling defendant's objection to the question inquiring about the location where the body of Hassen Ali was found, and we cannot see that the testimony was prejudicial to the defendant. A little later in the record we find that, without objection from the prosecution, the attorney for the defendant stated before the jury that "the case of Hassen Ali has already been tried, and a verdict of not guilty rendered against this defendant." The jury would naturally infer from such statement that the defendant had been charged with the murder of Hassen Ali and had been acquitted. The circumstances of this case could not very well have been tried without bringing to light the fact that when those premises were examined the bodies of two dead men were found there; indeed, that fact had been developed by the evidence without objection from the defendant.

The evidence showed that Fared Bakhsh had come to his death by means of shots fired from a .32 caliber gun, and that the defendant had such a gun.

[7] Counsel for defendant have not given us any reference to the contents of the record showing the rulings of the court wherein it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to permit counsel for the defendant to cross-examine the witness concerning other results of his investigation of the premises than what had been testified to by him on direct examination. This it was their duty to do. People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 Pac. 770. We find, so far as our reading has enabled us to trace the matter, that substantially all of the questions asked by the defendant's attorney on that subject were answered and permitted to remain in the record. It has not been made clear to us that the defendant has any ground of complaint with respect to that cross-examination.

[8] By the testimony of Chanda Khan, a witness for the prosecution, it appeared that this witness and the defendant had leased the land on which they were residing and had taken into partnership Hassen Ali; that Hassen Ali had borrowed some money from Fared Bakhsh, who lived on a neighboring ranch; that Fared Bakhsh and his partners had borrowed some oil and grease from Khair Din and his partners which they had not promptly returned; that Khair Din had insisted that the return of the oil and grease be demanded; and that some unfriendly words had passed between Khair Din and Hassen Ali relating to that matter. This brings us to the next assignment of error, which is that "the court erred in permitting the witness Chanda Khan, whom the defense contended committed the murder, to testify and give hearsay evidence in order to show the malice of defendant toward Fared Bakhsh." The witness had referred to a conversation between Hassen Ali and their lessor, Mr. Meserve, in which Hassen Ali said to Mr. Meserve, "I owe some money to Fared Bakhsh, and I want my interest to be mortgaged to him." Defendant's attorney interposed an objection to this, unless it was shown that the witness was present at the conversation. Thereupon the following appears in the record and is the evidence to which the assignment of error applies:

"Q. Did Hassen Ali report to you the conversation he had with Mr. Meserve in regard to signing this lease? Mr. Willson: Objected to as hearsay. The Court: Overruled. A. Yes, sir; the following day he said that he had mortgaged to Fared Bakhsh his interest in the lease, for the crop, rather. Q. Go ahead. A. Hearing this, Khair Din said, 'Well, I don't like this kind of work, because I had some kind of misunderstanding with Fared Bakhsh heretofore, and you have given him full authority to act hereafter and that won't do.'"

It will be observed that the witness, in the answer to which appellant excepts, did not attempt to state the terms of the conversation as reported to him by Hassen Ali. The important element in the testimony was that Hassen Ali, in the presence of the defendant, stated that he had mortgaged his interest in the lease to Fared Bakhsh, and that the defendant expressed dissatisfaction with that transaction. This was admissible, together with the other testimony tending to show that there had been some misunderstanding between defendant and Hassen Ali, and between the defendant and Fared Bakhsh, and that threats to kill Fared Bakhsh had been made by the defendant.

Because of the court's error in denying defendant's challenge to the proposed juror Guntermann, and because, under the facts shown by the record as above stated, the error resulted in the denial of a substantial right of the defendant in the selection of the jury, the judgment is reversed, and the order denying a new trial is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action in interpleader by City of Los Angeles, against George W. Kautz, A. L. Dechene, R. H. McCray Company, and another. From the judgment rendered, defendant R. H. McCray Company appeals. Affirmed.

J. Ira Courtney, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Adams, Adams & Binford, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action in interpleader. The appellant is the defendant R. H. McCray Company, and the respondent is A. L. Dechene. The city, by resolution approved November 6, 1914, employed the contracting firm of Kautz & Gabler to excavate earth and rock for the purpose of making a roadway in Elysian Park, a public park of the city. Appellant R. H. McCray Company rented to Kautz & Gabler a steam shovel which was used by the latter on the roadway. There being due from the city to Kautz & Gabler the sum of $310.20, and there being due from Kautz & Gabler to the McCray Company the sum of $200 rental, the McCray Company served on the city a notice in writing that its rental for the use of the steam shovel had not been paid. This was attempted to be done pursuant to section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, in order to establish an equitable lien on the fund. The city paid the money into court, and the question at issue was whether the money belonged to Dechene or to the McCray Company. Dechene claims as assignee of Kautz & Gabler.

[1, 2] The principal question here turns upon the construction to be given to sections 1183 and 1184, Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant's contention is that section 1184 is not limited to persons who furnish labor or materials for the work, but that, on the contrary, it includes one who furnished the contractor a steam shovel to be used in the performance of the work. If the contract had been for work to be done upon private property, and if appellant were endeavoring to enforce a lien upon that property for the amount due him for the use of the steam shovel, we do not doubt that his claim would come within the provisions of section 1183, as amended in 1903. It is there provided, among other things, that all persons furnishing appliances, teams, and power contributing to the construction or repair of a wagon road shall have a lien upon the property for the value of the use of such appliances, teams, or power. Section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "any of the persons mentioned in the preceding sections, except the contractor, may at any time give to the owner a notice that they have performed labor or furnished materials, or both, to the contractor" stating certain specified facts concerning the claim. "Upon such notice being given it shall be lawful for the owner to withhold, and in case of property which, for reasons of public policy or otherwise, is not subject to the liens in this chapter provided for, the owner or person who contracted with the contractor, shall withhold from his contractor sufficient money due or that may become due to such contractor to answer such claim and any lien that may be filed therefor, including the reasonable cost of any litigation thereunder." These provisions of section 1184 were originally enacted prior to the time when section 1183 was so amended as to include a lien for the value of the use of such appliances, teams, or power. Notwithstanding that other amendments have been made to section 1184, the Legislature did not see fit to extend the terms thereof describing the instances in which by giving said notice an equitable lien may be imposed upon the money due or to become due to the contractor. In 1909 a section numbered 1183a was added to the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it was provided that such persons so supplying power might give written notice of the same character and effect as that which persons so furnishing materials are entitled to give, as provided in section 1184 of that Code. Section 1183a was repealed in the year 1911. It is clear that the right here claimed by appellant cannot be sustained unless it exists under the terms of section 1184, to which we have referred. Those provisions, however, are in terms limited to those who have "performed labor or furnished materials" used in the work of construction and have not been extended so as to include a claim and notice of the kind here relied upon by appellant.

The judgment is affirmed.

GAMBLE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 2690.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ☞397—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION—AWARD—STAY OF EXECUTION.

The Industrial Accident Commission, being a court of limited jurisdiction, cannot take cognizance of an application for an order staying execution on a judgment entered on its award brought by one who had not joined in any proceedings before it nor had questioned the validity of its award prior to final adjudication and affirmance by the upper courts.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ☞417(3½)—JURISDICTION OF SUPERIOR COURT—RESTRAINING ISSUANCE OF EXECUTION ON AWARD OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION.

Equity has jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin a successful claimant before the Industrial Accident Commission from enforcing the award by execution or other process.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ☞417(3½)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—JURISDICTION TO RESTRAIN EXECUTION OF AWARD OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION.

The superior court is not deprived of jurisdiction to restrain execution on an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 84, subsec. "d," providing that no court shall have jurisdiction to annul any order, decision, or award of the commission or suspend or delay the operation or execution thereof, where application is made by a stranger to proceedings before the commission on an extrinsic showing that enforcement of the judgment would be a fraudulent violation of the judgment creditor's contract with such applicant.

Petition by George Gamble against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Alameda and others for writ of mandate against the Superior Court and its Judge, and against the Industrial Accident Commission. Petition dismissed as to Industrial Accident Commission, and granted as to the Superior Court and Judge.

W. G. Deal and J. Early Craig, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Frank Mitchell, Jr., of Hayward, for respondent Superior Court, Alameda County.

Chris. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

RICHARDS, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to be directed to the superior court of the county of Alameda and Hon. Joseph S. Koford, one of the judges thereof, commanding said court and judge to entertain and pass upon the merits of a certain action pending in said court, numbered 54504, and entitled "George Gamble, Plaintiff, v. Helen Angus and White Gulch Mining Co., a Corporation, Defendant," and also commanding the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California and the members thereof to stay execution upon a certain award and the judgment entered thereon in a certain proceeding instituted by said Helen Angus before said commission, fixing at the sum of $5,000 the liability of the said White Gulch Mining Company, a corporation, for the death of her husband as an employé of said corporation.

The facts upon which the petitioner relies for the relief sought in this application are briefly these: Wm. Angus was prior to October 30, 1914, the president and superintendent of the White Gulch Mining Company, of which the Pacific Coast Casualty Company was the insurance carrier. On said last-named date said William Angus met with an accident while in the employ of said mining company from which his death ensued. He was at that time the owner of 12,000 of the total issue of 100,000 shares of the capital stock of said mining corporation, which was community property, and to the ownership of which his widow, Helen Angus, in due court of probate succeeded. Within the time allowed by the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 279), said Helen Angus instituted proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission against said White Gulch Mining Company and its insurer to fix liability for the death of her husband. While said proceeding was pending before the commission Helen Angus offered to sell her said holding of stock in said corporation to George Gamble, the petitioner herein, for the sum of $7,500, but said Gamble informed said Helen Angus that he would not purchase said stock if said White Gulch Mining Co. was required to pay anything on account of any liability growing out of the death of her husband; whereupon said Helen Angus represented and promised to said petitioner that she would not look to said White Gulch Mining Company for or on account of said liability; and, relying upon her representations and promises in that regard, the petitioner purchased her said stock, paying therefor the sum of $7,500, and he is still the owner and holder of said stock. That, notwithstanding her said representations and promises, said Helen Angus has proceeded to obtain an award from said commission against said White Gulch Mining Company for the sum of $5,000, and has proceeded to cause a certified copy of the findings of the commission and of said award to be filed in the office of the county clerk of the county of Mariposa, and a judgment for said sum against the said White Gulch Mining Company to be entered thereon, upon which judgment she now threatens to have an execution issued and enforced against the property of said corporation, to the petitioner's irremediable injury.

The foregoing facts were presented in the complaint filed in the superior court of the county of Alameda in the action above referred to as having been instituted therein, and thereupon petitioner, as plaintiff therein, moved said court for the issuance of a preliminary injunction restraining said Helen Angus, as one of the defendants therein, from causing to be issued an execution upon the judgment entered upon the award of the commission, and taking any further proceedings for the enforcement thereof. The Hon. Joseph S. Koford, as judge of said court, refused to consider or pass upon the merits of said motion upon the sole ground that the said court had no jurisdiction of said matter, by reason of the provisions of subsection "d" of section 84 of the Workmen's Compensation Act; that thereupon the petitioner herein presented an application, setting forth substantially the same facts to the Industrial Accident Commission, praying for an order of said commission staying execution upon said judgment entered upon its award as aforesaid, but said commission also refused to entertain said application upon the ground that it had no jurisdiction in relation to the matters set forth therein. Thereupon this proceeding was instituted by the petitioner herein.

[1] As to that portion of this petition wherein the petitioner seeks to have a writ of mandate issued directing the Industrial Accident Commission to entertain and act upon the matters set forth in his application filed with that body, the subject may be briefly dismissed. We are entirely satisfied that the attitude of said commission, as set forth in its return herein, is based upon a correct view of the powers and jurisdiction of that tribunal under the act of its creation; that it is a court of limited jurisdiction, and is wholly without power or authority in matters of general jurisdiction without the scope of the Workmen's Compensation Act; that the petitioner herein, not having been a party to any proceeding before said commission in connection with its award in favor of Helen Angus and against the White Gulch Mining Company, and not having questioned the validity of said award prior to the final adjudication of the same by said commission, and its affirmance by the Supreme Court of the state of California, and also by the Supreme Court of the United States, the said application of said petitioner was in the nature of a new and original proceeding based upon extrinsic facts appearing upon the face of his said application, which were wholly without the jurisdiction of the commission to hear or determine. This being so, the application herein must be denied in so far as it relates to the respondent Industrial Accident Commission and the members thereof.

[2] In so far as the application herein seeks the issuance of a writ of mandate directing the superior court of Alameda county and the said judge thereof to entertain and hear upon the merits all matters arising out of the institution and pendency before it of the case of Gamble v. Angus et al., No. 54504, above referred to, a more serious question is presented. The said action is in form and in the nature of the relief sought therein an equitable proceeding, wherein the plaintiff seeks to have the defendant Helen Angus enjoined from proceeding to collect by execution or other process a judgment against a corporation in which the plaintiff is a large stockholder, which judgment the plaintiff alleges in substance to have been obtained by fraud, and the enforcement of which will result in irremediable injury to the plaintiff. The sufficiency of said complaint as a pleading is not before us, since the proper forum for assault upon it by way of demurrer or otherwise is the court wherein the action is pending. With respect to said action we are of the opinion that it is one of a class of actions which courts of equity have heretofore and elsewhere taken cognizance of, and assumed jurisdiction and power to grant relief in. Givin v. Times, etc., Pr. Co., 114 Fed. 92, 52 C. C. A. 40. It is, however, the contention of the remaining respondent herein, the superior court and the judge thereof, that said court has been bereft of whatever jurisdiction it might have formerly possessed in matters of this character by virtue of the terms and effect of subsection "d" of section 84 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, which, so far as applicable to the question before us, reads as follows:

"No court of this state (except the Supreme Court and the District Courts of Appeal to the extent herein specified) shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct or annul any order, decision or award of the commission or to suspend or delay the operation or execution thereof, or to restrain * * * or interfere with the commission in the performance of its duties."

In considering the application to be given the foregoing provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act to the facts of the case before us, it is to be noted that neither the Industrial Accident Commission nor any of its members is a party to the action pending in the said superior court, and that in such action no attempt is being made to review, reverse, correct, or annul any order, decision, or award of the commission, or to restrain or interfere with the commission in the performance of its duties; and it is to be further noted that said action has not been instituted by a person who was a party to any proceeding before said commission or to any award which it has made, or to any judgment which has been obtained upon the making of such award; nor was said action brought by any person who would have been entitled to appear before said commission in the said proceeding before it, or to apply therein for a rehearing or reversal of its award, or to have obtained relief therefrom by way of a writ of review issued out of the supreme or appellate courts. The question before us, reduced to its final analysis, is as to whether the phrase in the foregoing provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act assuming to deny to the courts of this state jurisdiction "to suspend or delay the operation or execution" of any order, decision, or award of the commission is to be given such breadth of application as to cover a case wherein a stranger to the proceeding theretofore pending before said commission seeks in a court of equity, upon a showing of extrinsic facts, to restrain the party who has obtained such award and who has caused to be entered a judgment thereon, from enforcing such judgment by execution in fraudulent violation of her contract not to obtain and not to enforce such award and judgment to the plaintiff's injury.

[3] We are of the opinion that a reasonable and proper interpretation of this clause of the Workmen's Compensation Act does not lead to its extension thus far; for to hold otherwise would be to so construe it that no agreement or arrangement made by a stranger to the record with the applicant obtaining an award from the commission, to the effect that it would not be enforced to his injury, could be availed of in a court of equity otherwise rightfully empowered to enjoin the violation of such an agreement. Suppose, for example, that the party obtaining an award against an employer enforceable against the latter's property should agree with another, not a party to the proceeding, for a consideration to be applied on account of the award, to release a certain specified portion from the employer's said property from the effect of the award and of any execution to be issued thereon, and, having received such consideration, should proceed to levy upon such released property; would the person thus fraudulently affected be powerless to seek and obtain relief in a court of equity by virtue of this clause of the Workmen's Compensation Act? Or that the execution of this award were attempted to be levied upon property standing in the name of the employer, but of which the entire equitable interest and ownership was in another; would that other be cut off from seeking equitable relief against the sale of his property upon such execution by the terms of this clause in the act? We are not disposed to give to its terms a construction which would thus utterly divest courts of equity from entertaining actions of the character of those above indicated. The instant case falls in this category, and is one over which the superior court, which is the respondent herein, has jurisdiction, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

It follows that as to it and the said judge presiding over it the writ should issue.

The petition herein, as to the Industrial Accident Commission and its members, is dismissed, and as to the said superior court and the judge thereof is granted. Let the writ issue accordingly.

MISSION BREWING CO. v. RICKERT
et al. (Civ. 2880.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨272—AGREEMENT TO DISMISS.

Where a chattel mortgagee agreed, "in consideration of this agreement, and what hereafter follows, to withdraw foreclosure proceedings," etc., followed by a covenant on part of mortgagor to use beer of mortgagee in a certain city, he was not estopped from subsequently proceeding with the foreclosure, where mortgagor failed to use mortgagee's beer as agreed.

2. NEW TRIAL ⇨64—OMISSIONS IN FINDINGS.

A new trial may be denied for omitting to find on an issue, if finding, though in favor of movant, could not have changed result.

3. CONTRACTS ⇨137(1)—PARTIAL ILLEGALITY—ENFORCEMENT.

A separation of the good consideration from that which is illegal in a contract will not be made where party asking to enforce contract is himself the one who has made and breached the illegal consideration.

4. CONTRACTS ⇨137(1)—PARTIAL ILLEGALITY OF CONSIDERATION.

If there are several considerations for one promise, some of which are legal and others illegal, the promise is wholly void, as it is impossible to say which one of the considerations induced the promise.

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨287—DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT—SECURITY.

Where a chattel mortgagee entered into executory agreement to dismiss foreclosure proceedings, consideration being certain additional security and a covenant on part of mortgagor to use mortgagee's beer, mortgagee, on failure of mortgagor to use its beer, could disregard agreement to dismiss and proceed with the foreclosure and obtain a deficiency judgment and disregard the additional security furnished, as resort could not be had to the additional security without recognizing the contract to dismiss.

6. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨287—FORECLOSURE—DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT—SECURITY—HYPOTHECATION.

Where, in consideration of a promise to dismiss an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage, a contract of sale of other property was given mortgagee, to be held as additional security, such additional security need not be exhausted before a deficiency judgment can be entered in an action to foreclose the mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Mission Brewing Company against Fred Rickert and others. From a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and an order denying his motion for new trial, the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stephen Monteleone and Edwin M. Parker, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Wadham & Munkelt, of San Diego, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to foreclose a mortgage on personal property owned by defendants Rickert and Widmaier. The defendant Piwald, according to the allegations of the complaint, claims some interest in the property, and because of that fact is joined as defendant. The complaint is in the usual form. The defendant Rickert denies all the material allegations of the complaint, and by way of separate defense alleges that the defendants Rickert and Widmaier and the plaintiff herein entered into an agreement by the terms of which, among other things, it was provided that the present action should be withdrawn and the defendant Ralph Piwald permitted to assume the payment of the note sued on here and to secure which the mortgage here sought to be foreclosed was given. By way of further defense it was alleged that, by virtue of certain contracts entered into on June 23, 1913, between defendant Rickert and one John Crockett, on one side, and one Wilson Chamberlain on the other, the latter agreed to sell, and the said defendant Rickert and the said Crockett agreed to buy, certain described real property for the sum of $20,000; that thereafter, and prior to the 18th day of November, 1913, said defendant and said Crockett paid thereon the sum of $5,000; that thereafter the said Crockett assigned and transferred all his interest therein to A. Widmaier, and that thereafter the defendants Rickert and Widmaier assigned and transferred all their right, title, and interest therein to plaintiffs as security for the payment of a promissory note made to plaintiff for the sum of $2,500, and interest, and, as a part of the same transaction, these defendants delivered the chattel mortgage sought to be foreclosed here; that on or about November 20, 1913, these same defendants "transferred" to one R. M. Piwald all their interest and estate in, and right and title to, the Sunset Café at Ocean Beach, and at the same time conveyed to the Union Title & Trust Company, a corporation, for said Piwald, all their interest in said property, all subject to the interest in, or lien upon, said property of said plaintiff; that it was understood and agreed by said defendants and said Piwald, and said Union Title & Trust Company, and said plaintiff, that the mortgaged property, together with defendants' interest in said mortgage, so transferred to the Union Title & Trust Company, should be held, and continued to be held, by plaintiff as security as aforesaid. Defendants, "on information and belief," further alleged that the Union Title & Trust Company, the said plaintiff and said Piwald entered into a written contract with said Wilson Chamberlain, by virtue of which it was agreed that Chamberlain would make a new contract for the sale of the land to Piwald, for the sum of $15,000, and that Piwald should immediately assign such contract to plaintiff as security for the payment of said promissory note; and that the same should take effect of, and be substituted for, said contract between said Chamberlain and said defendants—although the defendant Rickert did not, for a long time after the making of the contract last referred to, know of its execution or existence, and that the same was made without his consent. On information and belief defendant Rickert further alleges that upon the execution of said new contract with Chamberlain the said plaintiff consented to the rescission and annulment of said first contract, and that said first contract between the defendant Rickert and Crockett and said Chamberlain was annulled and rescinded, all without his knowledge or consent. He further alleges that the latter contract is in full force and effect, and held by plaintiff as security for the payment of said note; and that plaintiff, by this action, is attempting to foreclose only a part of the property had by said plaintiff as aforesaid.

The defendant Piwald denies the material allegations of the amended complaint, excepting paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof. He further alleges that in December, 1913, the defendants Rickert and Widmaier sold and transferred their interest in and to all the personal property described in the mortgage here sought to be foreclosed; that by bill of sale transferring and selling said personal property to them they "warranted and guaranteed" the title thereof, and undertook to protect him from any obligation or debt due or owing by them—other than said indebtedness set out in said bill of sale, which did not include the amount sought to be secured by the alleged chattel mortgage; that he immediately took possession of said property, and ever since he has been in possession thereof.

The issues framed by the foregoing alleged facts were the propositions before the court for adjudication, and were tried by the court without a jury. The court found for the plaintiff on all the material issues, and entered a decree of foreclosure of said chattel mortgage. There was a motion for new trial, which was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying motion of defendants Rickert and Widmaier for a new trial. From the foregoing statement it appears, as appellant contends, that by his answer he tenders two separate defenses: (1) That the plaintiff is estopped from proceeding with this action; and (2) that respondent by this action is attempting to foreclose its lien upon only a portion of the property which is held as security for the payment of the note referred to herein. The action was commenced on October 27, 1913. The agreement just referred to was executed on November 17, 1913.

[1] This case must stand or fall by the proper construction placed on the said contract, i. e., whether that contract is an "executed contract" or an "executory contract." If the former, the judgment entered was error. If the latter, then the judgment here is correct. The agreement, by its own language, tells us the class to which it belongs. It says:

"* * * The said first party * * * agreeing in consideration of this agreement, and what hereafter follows, to withdraw foreclosure proceedings," etc.

The italicized words, "and what hereafter follows," refer to, or rather embrace, certain executory covenants on the part of Rickert and Widmaier, and by them to be performed. The performance of these covenants, so to be performed by said Rickert and Widmaier, as well as "this agreement," constituted the consideration for respondent's agreement to dismiss the action. For this reason the consideration for respondent's agreement to dismiss was, in part at least, executory. We have no difficulty in giving the contract this construction, regardless of the evidence; but, when viewed in the light of all the evidence before us, any doubt which might have existed disappears.

From the evidence here it conclusively appears, without conflict, that "the cardinal thing" that led the Mission Brewing Company to enter into the contract was the promise of the defendant Rickert to use their beer in Los Angeles; and, according to the testimony of the same defendant, he never used any of their beer in Los Angeles. To the question, "Have you ever used their beer in Los Angeles?" he answered, "No, because I could not get the amount of money they want put up—this brewery I was indebted to in Los Angeles." Nowhere in the record is this contradicted. On this point alone plaintiff was entitled to judgment.

[2-4] The point is made by appellant that the failure of the court to find on issues presented by him in his special defense made necessary a re-examination of the "issues," and that consequently the defendant Rickert was entitled to a new trial. The point is not well taken. It has been repeatedly held that—

"Even when the court has omitted to find upon a material issue, a new trial will be denied if on the evidence the findings must have been adverse to the party asking a new trial. By parity of reasoning a new trial may be denied if a finding in favor of the party asking a new trial (upon a particular issue) could not have changed the result." Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 42, 11 Pac. 489; Hoover v. Wasson, 11 Cal. App. 596, 105 Pac. 945.

The evidence, as has already been stated, shows conclusively that defendants never complied with their part of said contract, and hence they have never been at the place where the withdrawal of the foreclosure proceeding could have been rightfully demanded by them.

Appellant contends that the clause in said contract (Defendants' Exhibit A), providing that plaintiff would withdraw the proceeding to foreclose—in other words, would dismiss the action on condition that defendant should use the beer of the Mission Brewing Company in Los Angeles—is void and not binding upon defendants. He admits he did not comply with this part of it. He then argues that that clause is "separate and distinct" from the provisions concerning the withdrawal of the foreclosure proceeding; hence the entire agreement is not rendered void by the above provision alone. Here appellant is seeking to enforce respondent's promise to dismiss the action—a promise that is based partly upon legal consideration and partly upon the alleged illegal consideration. The rule is that the separation of the good consideration from that which is illegal will not be made where the party seeking to enforce the contract is himself the one who has made and breached the illegal consideration. Saratoga County Bank v. King, 44 N. Y. 87; 13 C. J. pp. 512, 513, § 470. If there are several considerations for one promise, some of which are legal and others illegal, the promise is wholly void, as it is impossible to say which one of the considerations induced the promise. 13 C. J. p. 513, § 471.

[5, 6] Another point urged by appellant is that respondent here is not entitled to a deficiency judgment against appellant for the reason that it foreclosed its mortgage only on a portion of its security. This is based on the presumption that appellant's theory of the case has been sustained by the evidence. This is not the case. The respondent could not have legally resorted to the foreclosure of this "other property" without, by so doing, recognizing the contract, Defendants' Exhibit A. It has not done so. It has been kept from so doing by appellant's failure to perform his part of the contract. Respondent was therefore strictly within its rights in disregarding the said "agreement" and proceeding with the foreclosure according to law. Assuming, without so holding, that the respondent did in fact hold this "other property" as security for the payment of the note here sued upon, still this "other property" need not be exhausted before deficiency judgment can be entered. Its assignment was a contract of hypothecation, and an action to foreclose which is not an action for the recovery of the principal debt. Merced Bank v. Casaccia, 103 Cal. 641, 37 Pac. 648; Ehrlich v. Ewald, 66 Cal. 97, 4

Pac. 1062; Savings Bank of St. Helena v. Middlekauff, 113 Cal. 463, 45 Pac. 840; McArthur v. MaGee, 114 Cal. 126, 45 Pac. 1068; Hawley v. Brownstone, 123 Cal. 643, 56 Pac. 468; Kraft v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 73 Pac. 745.

In view of what has been said we think it unnecessary at this time to pass upon the point raised by respondent, viz. that the defendant Ralph M. Piwald has not been made a party to this appeal, not having been served with any of the notices "required for the motion for a new trial, nor on appeal; nor has a copy of appellant's brief, as required by rules of this court"—and we refrain from so doing. This phase of the case renders immaterial the other points discussed on this appeal.

The judgment and the order of the court denying the motion for a new trial are, and each of them is, hereby affirmed.

39 Cal. App. 649
BONNER et al. v. LEHFELDT et al.
(Civ. 2695.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 8, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶907(2) — OMITTED EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption is that the record exhibits all matters material to a consideration of the points presented, and not that evidence other than that incorporated in the bill of exceptions would support the findings in question.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶837(9) — MATTERS PRESENTED SUBSEQUENT TO APPEAL—CONSIDERATION.

Where appeal from order was taken while motion to vacate order was under submission, matters contained in bill of exceptions subsequent to date of order cannot be considered.

3. EXECUTION ¶420 — SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—AUTHORITY AND JURISDICTION OF REFEREE—WAIVER.

While, in proceedings supplementary to execution, the better practice would have been to follow the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 638-645, where the referee was appointed by the court under section 719, as shown by order, and appellant, alleged debtor of judgment debtor, appeared before referee, any objection as to appointment, authority, or jurisdiction of the referee was waived.

4. EXECUTION ¶402 — SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDING—FUND SUBJECT—EVIDENCE.

In proceeding supplementary to execution, where money in the hands of alleged debtor of judgment debtor to the amount of the judgment was ordered paid to sheriff, evidence held not to warrant conclusion that money was payable to judgment debtor or his general creditor.

5. EXECUTION ⚡402 — SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDING—PARTIES.

Where, in proceeding supplementary to execution to subject money in hands of alleged debtor of judgment debtor to payment of judgment, it appeared that money was payable to W., not a party, court erred, where W. was not brought in, in directing alleged debtor to pay the money.

6. CREDITORS' SUIT ⚡13—EXECUTION ⚡358 — SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS — NATURE AND PURPOSE.

The statutory proceedings supplementary to execution are designed to take the place of a creditors' bill, but if for any reason they do not afford adequate relief the old remedy lies, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 720.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Andrew Bonner and another against Henry A. Lehfeldt. From an order supplementary to execution, directing V. Tremain, as debtor of defendant judgment debtor, to pay the amount of a judgment to the sheriff, Tremain appeals. Reversed.

Samuel R. Davis and W. H. Morrissey, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, of San Francisco, for respondents.

BRITTAİN, J. The appeal is from an order supplementary to execution directing the appellant, as debtor of the judgment debtor, to pay the amount of a judgment to the sheriff. The plaintiff's affidavit follows the ordinary form in which the rendition of the judgment is set forth, together with the issue, levy, and unsatisfied return of execution. It was averred that Tremain, appellant, was a debtor of the judgment debtor in an amount exceeding $50, and that he refused to apply the money in his hands to the satisfaction of the judgment. The order of examination, based on these averments, directed Tremain and Lehfeldt, the defendant, to "appear before E. M. Levy, the commissioner appointed by me," at a time and place stated, "to answer concerning the same." Tremain appeared and testified he had agreed to lend Lehfeldt and his wife $4,000 to construct a building on a lot in San Francisco. The Lehfeldts executed a note and mortgage on the property to secure the loan, and it was agreed the proceeds of the loan should be advanced in four installments, of $1,000 each, when the frame of the building was up, when the brown coat of plaster was on, when the building was completed, and 35 days thereafter. It was further agreed that all of the payments were to be made by checks drawn by the lender to the order of Lehfeldt and his wife, and by them indorsed to the order of J. W. Wright & Co., real estate agents in San Francisco. Wright & Co. were to use the checks to pay the building bills for Lehfeldt's account. Pursuant to this agreement, and coincident with the execution of the note and mortgage, Tremain drew, but did not sign, the checks. Lehfeldt and his wife immediately indorsed the checks to the order of Wright & Co. The first two checks were signed and delivered by Tremain at the appropriate times to Wright & Co. Wright notified Tremain "they had sold out the Lehfeldt property. Mr. Tremain said that he had paid $2,000 under the mortgage; that he had still $2,000 that he was willing to pay, provided he was in every way protected from all liability against every one."

Some days after hearing this evidence, the commissioner read to Tremain his proposed findings, and the latter stated that they were correct "with certain exceptions, and should be amended to set out and show the Wright transaction; that Mr. Levy agreed to make these corrections, and thereafter, in the absence of Mr. Tremain, he made corrections; that Mr. Tremain did not see the findings and report of Mr. Levy after they had been corrected." The report of the commissioner in substance follows the foregoing facts, but contains the additional statement:

"The said money was a fund to be used to pay for the building built on said lot of land; * * * that the said V. Tremain did not deny the indebtedness, but he specifically admitted that he has the money in his possession belonging to said Henry A. Lehfeldt, the judgment debtor herein, nor does said V. Tremain claim any interest in the said money or property adverse to the judgment creditors herein or adversely to said Henry A. Lehfeldt."

Upon the recommendation of the commissioner the order from which the appeal was taken was made.

In the bill of exceptions it was clearly specified that the evidence was insufficient to show that Tremain admitted that he had in his possession money belonging to Lehfeldt, and insufficient to show that at any of the times necessary to support the order he had any money belonging or payable to Lehfeldt. The assignments of error were sufficient to present fairly the question of the propriety of the order made by the lower court under the facts stated.

[1] It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the record shows affirmatively that there was other evidence than that incorporated in the bill of exceptions, and therefore that this court must presume the omitted evidence would support the finding of the commissioner to the effect that Tremain had in his possession money payable to Lehfeldt. On the contrary, the presumption is that the record exhibits all matters material to a consideration of the points presented. Couson v. Wilson, 2 Cal. App. 181, 83 Pac. 262;

Polkinghorn v. Riverside, etc., 24 Cal. App. 615, 142 Pac. 140.

[2] There were incorporated in the bill of exceptions certain affidavits and other documents presented to the lower court on a motion to vacate the order from which the appeal is taken. After the motion was presented, and while it was under submission, this appeal was taken. Under such circumstances, the matters contained in the bill of exceptions subsequent in date to the order before this court cannot be considered. Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 Pac. 898. Argument based on such matters is without force.

[3] While not questioning the power of the court to appoint a referee under section 719 of the Code of Civil Procedure in such matters, the appellant maintains that in this case there was no referee appointed, and therefore no jurisdiction in Mr. Levy to conduct the examination, nor in the court to make the order for payment.

While the better practice in such cases would be to follow the provisions of sections 638-645 of the Code of Civil Procedure regarding references and trials by referees, the order in this case showed that the commissioner was appointed by the court. Any objection to the appointment, authority or jurisdiction was waived by the appearance of Tremain before the referee. Shain v. Peterson, 99 Cal. 486, 33 Pac. 1085.

[4, 5] From the appellant's testimony, it appears affirmatively, and the referee found, that the money in Tremain's hands constituted a special fund to be used for a specific purpose. It was to be paid at fixed times to J. W. Wright & Co. It further appears that Tremain was willing to pay the $2,000 "provided he was in every way protected from all liability against every one." There was no other evidence upon the subject. This evidence warranted neither a finding nor a conclusion that the money was payable to Lehfeldt, or to a general creditor of Lehfeldt. In respondents' brief it is asserted that the judgment was for millwork furnished for the house which was to have been constructed under the terms of the agreement to which reference has been made. There is nothing in the record to indicate that this statement, even conceding its truth, was before the referee or the court below when the order appealed from was made. If it had been, the result would not have been changed. The money being payable to Wright & Co., in their absence, no order to pay it to respondents could have protected Tremain against their claim.

ry to execution are designed to take the place of a creditors' bill, but where, for any reason, they do not afford adequate relief, the old remedy lies. Phillips v. Price, 153 Cal. 146, 94 Pac. 617; Code Civ. Proc. § 720. All known adverse claimants to a fund sought to be reached by a judgment creditor should have an opportunity to be heard; otherwise they would not be bound by the order, nor would the holder of the fund. Deering v. Richardson-Kimball Co., 109 Cal. 73, 41 Pac. 801.

The affidavit and order of examination depended on the existence of the fact that Tremain had in his possession property of the judgment debtor. If, under a creditors' bill containing the same allegations, it should have been shown that the money was payable to Wright & Co., the court would have ordered Wright & Co. to be brought in, or judgment would have been rendered for the defendant.

"No court can adjudicate directly upon a person's right, without the party being * * * actually or constructively before the court." Mallow v. Hinde, 12 Wheat. 193, 6 L. Ed. 599.

SMITH v. LEHFELDT et al. (Civ. 2696.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 8, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Robert H. Smith against Henry A. Lehfeldt. From an order supplementary to execution, directing V. Tremain, as debtor of defendant judgment debtor, to pay the amount of a judgment, Tremain appeals. Reversed.

Samuel R. Davis and W. H. Morrissey, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel J. Jones, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It is stipulated that in all substantial respects the record is the same in this case as in the case of Bonner and Le Page v. Lehfeldt, 179 Pac. 722, this day decided by this court (Civ. No. 2695).

It is further stipulated that "the appeal in this case be heard upon the papers set out in this stipulation and the record contained in the transcript on appeal in the case of Andrew Bonner and Louis Le Page v. Henry A. Lehfeldt." On the authority of that case, the order appealed from must be reversed.

The order is reversed.

PEOPLE v REDMAN. (Cr. 632.)

1. BURGLARY — 22—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION — 86(3) — PARTICULARIZATION OF PLACE AND OWNERSHIP.

An information for burglary in particularizing the place where the crime was committed need go no further than to allege that it was committed in the particular county, and need not allege particular ownership of the building entered.

2. BURGLARY — 28(6)—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION — 175—PARTICULARIZATION OF PLACE AND OWNERSHIP—VARIANCE.

Where information for burglary particularizes by specific allegation location of place where offense was committed, or particular person owning building, prosecution cannot show ownership was otherwise than that alleged, or location different, without vitiating its case by a variance between the allegations and proof.

3. BURGLARY — 28(5, 6)—INFORMATION—LOCATION OF PLACE AND OWNERSHIP—VARIANCE.

Where an information for burglary charged that the garage entered was "located on the San Joaquin fruit ranch near the San Joaquin Fruit Company," but the owner testified that she lived on a ranch called Irvine ranch, just above the San Joaquin fruit ranch, and defendant admitted visiting the garage, though it was not shown as to who actually owned the premises in question, but it appeared that they were neither owned by nor were in the possession of defendant, there was no variance.

4. CRIMINAL LAW — 683(1)—PROOF OF INTENT—REBUTTAL EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for burglary, to rebut proof of apparent intent to steal, which the circumstances of defendant's discovery by the owner of the property shown by the prosecution suggested, it was competent for defendant to testify he had been told by his companion that the companion owned the property and had the right to sell it.

5. CRIMINAL LAW — 1170(1) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The duty of the appellate court is not to reverse a conviction for error in excluding defendant's proof rebutting his apparent criminal intent, unless it can be said that he has been so prejudiced that the result is a miscarriage of justice.

6. CRIMINAL LAW — 1137(6)—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—CONSENT TO RULING.

Statement of counsel of defendant charged with burglary that he was satisfied with the court's ruling excluding proof rebutting defendant's criminal intent apparent from the circumstances under which he was discovered held a consent to the ruling, leaving defendant without ground to complain.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

L. Redman was convicted of burglary, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Douglas L. Edmonds, C. L. Welch, Frank Dominguez, Paul W. Schenck, and Richard Kittrelle, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment of imprisonment and from an order denying a motion for new trial.

Appellant was convicted of the crime of burglary, the information alleging that on the 22d day of April, 1918, in the county of Orange, state of California, he did, "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously, enter the outbuilding, to wit, the garage of M. G. Mastich, located on the San Joaquin ranch, near the San Joaquin Fruit Company, in said county and state, with felonious intent to commit the crime of larceny." The witness Katie Mastich testified that she lived on what was called the "Irvine ranch, just the place above the San Joaquin Fruit ranch"; that she saw the defendant there on the 22d day of April, 1918; that there were on the premises a house, garage, and other outhouses; that on the morning in question she heard an automobile drive up, and that the defendant came to the door of the house and knocked, and that she made no response; that he then went over to the garage, and finally went back to the automobile, in which there was another man, and that the two went away; that pretty soon they came back, and that defendant again knocked at the door, and, the witness having made no response, the two men drove away again a short distance and then came back and stopped nearby, where they remained talking for a time; that defendant then came to the door of the garage, accompanied by the other man, and that the witness heard the noise of the breaking of the garage door; that she secured a small rifle which was kept in the house and walked out to where the men were, and found defendant just in the act of putting a sack of beans, which he had taken from the garage, into the automobile; that the defendant exclaimed upon seeing the witness with the gun, "My God, lady, don't shoot; I will put them all back;" that he did put the beans back, and then proceeded to beg the witness to allow him to go free, stating that he had been in the hospital, out of work, and had a mother to support; that meanwhile the second man had disappeared; that the witness made note of the number of the automobile, and allowed the defendant to leave the place at that time. He was later arrested. She was asked as to whether defendant said anything about "the other fellow," and replied: "He said it was the other fellow's fault; the other fellow showed him where the beans were and how easy it was to get them."

[1-3] The first point made by appellant is that there was a fatal variance between the allegations of the information and the proof made, particularly that the information charged that the garage entered was "located on the San Joaquin ranch, near the San Joaquin Fruit Company," whereas Mrs. Mastich testified that she lived on a ranch called "Irvine ranch, just the place above the San Joaquin Fruit ranch." If we were required to say that by this evidence a different place was indicated from that alleged in the information, defendant's point would be good. However, any uncertainty as to that matter was cured by the defendant's own testimony. Defendant admitted visiting the garage, and he was asked by his counsel this question: "You went out to the place that has been designated as the San Joaquin ranch?" to which he replied, "Yes, sir." Moreover, it was not essential that the prosecution should have gone further in particularizing the place where the alleged crime was committed than to allege that it was committed in the county of Orange, nor to allege particular ownership of the building entered. People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 Pac. 389; People v. Mendoza, 17 Cal. App. 157, 118 Pac. 964. It may be admitted that where the prosecution does particularize by specific allegation the location of the place where a burglary has been committed, or as to the particular person owning the building, they cannot show that the ownership was otherwise than that alleged or the location different, without rendering their case open to the objection as made by appellant here of a variance between the allegations and proof. However, we have indicated that no such variance existed here. While it was not shown as to who actually owned the premises in question, it did sufficiently appear that they were neither owned by, nor were they in the possession of the appellant at the time of the commission of the alleged crime.

[4-6] Defendant, notwithstanding the incriminating statements made to Mrs. Mastich at the time the latter confronted him with a rifle, sought at the trial to show that his motive in taking the beans was wholly innocent; that he was led to believe by Olsen, his companion, that the latter owned the beans; and that he was taken to the place by Olsen for the purpose of purchasing them. He was asked to state what conversation he had with Olsen prior to going to the Mastich place, respecting the sale of the beans, to which question the court sustained an objection on the ground that, as stated in the objection, the testimony would be incompetent, hearsay, and self-serving. The court was in error in its conclusion as to the extent that a defendant may go in rebutting proof of apparent intent which the circumstances shown by the prosecution suggests. And it was competent for the defendant to testify, if such was his desire, that he had been told by Olsen that he (Olsen) owned the beans and had the right to sell them. However, our duty is not to reverse a case for such error, unless it can be said that the defendant has been so prejudiced in his rights as that the result is a miscarriage of justice. We find on an examination of the transcript that defendant was allowed to state that he was proposing to buy the beans of Olsen, and that while at the garage they dickered as to the price. Then, when the witness was stopped by the prosecuting attorney as he was about to make statements of what Olsen told him, the court, after indicating that he would sustain the objection, made quite a lengthy statement to counsel for defendant, inviting the citation of authorities under which the testimony was offered, to which counsel for defendant replied, "I am satisfied with the ruling." This statement of counsel, we think, was a consent to the ruling of the court, which would leave him without ground to complain thereof.

We have examined carefully the entire transcript of the evidence submitted and all of the points suggested by appellant. We are satisfied that no such prejudicial error is shown as to entitle defendant to a new trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

REAL v. KERN COUNTY. (Civ. 2511.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 13, 1919.)

1. TAXATION ⇨ 821(4)—SALE FOR TAXES—INVALIDITY OF TAX DEED — REFUND FROM COUNTY—TIME FOR CLAIM.

If the words "refunded in accordance with section 3804," found in Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, providing for presentation by a purchaser of a tax deed, the sale having been determined to be void, of claim against the county for refund of the amount paid into its treasury, are to be construed as including the provision of section 3804 that the verified claim, to be effective, must be filed within three years after making the payment, such limitation as to time does not begin to run until the court has determined the purchaser is not entitled to an award of the property purporting to be conveyed by the void tax deed.

2. TAXATION ⇨ 820 — PURCHASER OF VOID TAX DEED — AMENDMENT OF STATUTE — EFFECT ON RIGHT TO REFUND.

Rights of purchaser of void tax deed, though purported conveyance was made prior to amendment of Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, when the statute without limitation of time declared such a purchaser entitled to a refund of the money paid whenever the court determined the deed to be void, were to be measured by the statute as it existed when the court adjudged he was not entitled to an award of the property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by C. E. Real against the County of Kern. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Dorsey, Dist. Atty., of Bakersfield, for appellant.

C. E. Arnold and Matthew S. Platz, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $1,440.82, which sum, in addition to accrued taxes, interest, costs, and penalties, he, in January, 1911, paid into the county treasury of Kern county as the purchase price of certain land then sold and conveyed to him by the state, title to which land it claimed to have acquired by reason of delinquency in the payment of taxes thereon for the fiscal year 1904 and proceedings thereafter had and taken pursuant to law.

Thereafter, in December, 1913, an action was instituted involving the validity of the deed so received by plaintiff, wherein it was, in November, 1916, adjudged that said deed was void as a conveyance of title to plaintiff, and the same ordered canceled and annulled. In January, 1917, plaintiff, in accordance with the provisions of section 3898, Political Code, as amended in 1913, presented to the board of supervisors a duly verified demand and claim for a refund of the amount so paid, which claim the board rejected. Defendant's general demurrer to the complaint, wherein the above facts were set forth, was overruled, and in answering it defendant admitted the same, but alleged that plaintiff did not present his claim within three years after the making of the payment, by reason of which fact the cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 3804, Political Code.

The case was submitted without evidence and judgment rendered upon the pleadings for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

Subdivision 5, added to section 3898, Political Code, by amendment in 1913, among other things, provides that if in an action at law the court determines a sale and conveyance by tax deed from the state to a purchaser void, by reason of which fact the property is not awarded to the party to whom the deed is made—

"the said purchaser may also present a claim against the county, in the manner provided by law, for a refund of the amount paid into the county treasury as the purchase price of such property in excess of the amount for which he may have been reimbursed for taxes, penalties, and costs as herein provided, and such excess shall be refunded in accordance with section 3804 of this Code."

Section 3804, Political Code, among other things, provides:

"No order for the refund of taxes, penalties or costs under this section shall be made except upon a verified claim, * * * verified by the person who has paid said tax, * * * which * * * claim must be filed within three years after the making of the payment sought to be refunded."

Basing its argument upon the two provisions quoted from section 2898 and 3804, appellant contends: First, that plaintiff having paid the purchase money in 1911, his claim for a refund thereof was not filed within three years, as required by section 3804; second, that as the purported purchase and conveyance of the land was made to plaintiff by the state in 1911, he cannot avail himself of the act of 1913, since to uphold his right so to do would give the statute a retroactive effect.

[1] As to the first proposition, section 3804 relates to erroneously collected taxes and provides for a refund thereof by the board of supervisors upon the filing of a verified claim therefor at any time within three years after making the erroneous payment sought to be refunded. Under section 3898, however, there can be no claim for a refund of the money paid for the deed until the court adjudges the same void. Not till then can it be said there has been an erroneous payment, to a refund of which the party making it is entitled. Hence, assuming that the words "refunded in accordance with section 3804," found in section 3898, are to be construed as incorporating therein the provision in the latter section to the effect that the verified claim, in order to be effective, must be filed within three years after making the payment, we are constrained to hold that such limitation as to time does not begin to run until the court has determined that the purchaser is not entitled to an award of the property purporting to be conveyed by a void tax deed. It is apparent that the purpose of the Legislature in adopting the amendment embodied in subdivision 5 of section 3898 was to provide a means for the recovery of money to which the state had no legal or equitable right. The validity of tax deeds has been a fruitful source of litigation, and where such cases, though promptly commenced, are prosecuted to the higher courts, three years rarely suffice for a determination of the question. Hence to hold that the three-year limitation contained in section 3804 begins to run from the date of the execution of such invalid deed would nullify the intent of the Legislature in enacting the provision and deprive an aggrieved party of a right which it was clearly the purpose of the Legislature to accord him.

[2] Neither, to our minds, is there any merit in appellant's second proposition. As stated, no right existed in plaintiff as a purchaser of the property to have a refund of the purchase price made until the deed was declared invalid. This was in November, 1916, at which time the statute, without limitation of time in the application thereof, declared a purchaser of land from the state by tax deed entitled to a refund of the money paid therefor whenever the court determined such deed void. Plaintiff's rights, notwithstanding the purported conveyance was made prior to the enactment, were to be measured by the statute as it existed when the court adjudged he was not entitled to an award of the property. The subject of the provision is the right accorded at the time of such adjudication, which right was unaffected by the fact that the purported sale was made prior to the amendment.

The judgment is affirmed.

KLOKKE INV. CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT
IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUN-TY et al. (Civ. 2818.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 13, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 10, 1919.)

1. PROCESS —108—MAILING IN ADDITION TO PUBLICATION.

Where the affidavit supporting an order for publication of summons does not show that the residence of defendant is known, Code Civ. Proc. § 413, requiring the mailing of summons to a defendant whose residence is known, does not apply.

2. PROCESS —108—PUBLICATION—SUFFICIENCY—MAILING IN ADDITION TO PUBLICATION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 413, as to mailing summons to defendant whose residence is known, is satisfied by a mailing in the ordinary way without registering the letter.

3. COURTS —78—RULES OF COURT—OPERATION AND EFFECT—ACTS GIVING JURISDICTION.

Since the acts necessary to give jurisdiction as specified by statute cannot be added to or limited by a rule of court, compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 413, in mailing summons to a defendant whose residence is known will not be affected by failure to observe a rule of court requiring such mailed documents to be registered.

4. PROCESS —158—ORDER FOR PUBLICATION—SETTING ASIDE.

Where, under Code Civ. Proc. § 416, the court acquired jurisdiction by completed service by publication, and the order for such publication was not made inadvertently, or through mistake or fraud, the court is without power to set aside the service under section 937, providing that an order made out of court, without notice to the adverse party, may be vacated or modified, without notice, by the judge who made it.

5. MANDAMUS —31—ACTION OF COURT—REFUSAL TO PROCEED WITH CAUSE.

Where a superior court refuses to proceed to hear a cause, in which it has obtained jurisdiction through proper service by publication and proof thereof, a writ of mandate will issue to compel it to proceed to a hearing of the cause.

Original proceeding in mandate by the Klokke Investment Company against the Superior Court in and for the County of Los Angeles and John W. Shenk, Judge thereof. Demurrer to petition overruled, and peremptory writ of mandate issued.

W. W. Butler, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Joseph L. Lewinsohn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Proceeding in mandate to compel the superior court to proceed to a hearing of a cause in that court pending. An alternative writ was issued and return made thereto. There is no material dispute as to the facts.

Petitioner herein was plaintiff in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on real estate. R. Lewis was named as one of the defendants in that action. Service was made upon R. Lewis by publication. The affidavits upon which the order for publication was made showed that an exceedingly diligent search had been prosecuted on behalf of the plaintiff in the endeavor to find the said R. Lewis in the state of California, and that said search had been unavailing. It was not shown by any of the affidavits that the residence of the said R. Lewis was known, and therefore no showing was made which required the judge of the court to order that a copy of the summons and complaint be deposited in the post office and be directed to the person to be served at his place of residence, as is provided by section 413, Code of Civil Procedure. The court did insert in its order the statement that the residence of the said Lewis might be known to two of her codefendants, and, following that statement, ordered that copies of the summons and complaint be addressed to the said Lewis in care of the two defendants, both of whom resided in the city of Los Angeles. Publication was duly made and proof furnished thereof, upon which the default of the defendant Lewis was entered.

Thereafter Lewis appeared specially in the court and moved to vacate and quash the service of summons upon several alleged grounds. It was urged on the motion that the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the defendant Lewis, in that she was a resident of the state of New York; for the further reason that neither the affidavits nor the order for publication of summons showed that plaintiff had a good cause of action against the defendant; that the person who should mail the copy of summons and complaint, as required by the order, was not named; and, further, that said summons and complaint so mailed were not sent in registered packages. This motion was by the court denied, and, the cause being called for hearing before another judge, the motion was renewed, and the court sustained the same and refused to hear the case as against the defendant R. Lewis. Petitioner then filed his petition for mandate to compel the court to proceed.

[1] It must be conceded that the affidavits upon which the order for publication of summons was made stated ample and sufficient facts to sustain the order. Under the showing presented to the court at the time the order was made, no facts appeared from which the court was required to order a mailing of the summons and complaint. Nevertheless the return as made by the plaintiff, after publication of summons, showed that it had literally complied with the order of the court in mailing copies of the complaint and summons in care of the two codefendants of the defendant Lewis; that such mailed summons and complaint were addressed as required by the court and deposited in the mails with postage prepaid.

[2, 3] It is said that a rule of the superior court required such mailed documents to be registered. Assuming that the case was one within section 413, Code of Civil Procedure (where the residence of the defendant is known), the statute was satisfied when the mailing was made as therein required. The acts necessary to give jurisdiction, as specified in an act of the Legislature, cannot be added to or limited by rule of court. The court in its order for publication recited that it appeared from the affidavits presented and from the verified complaint that a cause of action existed against this defendant, and as the files of the court were before the judge who made the order, we must presume that his conclusion on that matter was properly made.

[4] The main contention urged on behalf of the respondents is that the superior court and any judge thereof had power to quash the service of summons and set aside the order permitting the same to be made by publication, regardless of the fact that such order for publication, when made, was sufficiently supported by affidavits showing the requisite facts. This, because section 937, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that—

"An order made out of court, without notice to the adverse party, may be vacated or modified, without notice, by the judge who made it; or may be vacated or modified on notice, in the manner in which other motions are made."

We are not prepared to concede that an order for publication of summons, duly made, after judicial investigation of facts, is such an order as may fall within the provisions of the section noted. However, for the purposes of this proceeding, we may admit that it is. Nevertheless, where action is invoked under section 937, Code of Civil Procedure, either by the motion of the court itself or by application of a party, it by no means follows that the ex parte order may be set aside without being grounded upon any reason except that the court concludes differently than it has upon its first decision. An order inadvertently made, or under mistake, or a showing that it has been fraudulently procured, may certainly be set aside under the authority given by said section 937, but not otherwise. Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 402, 9 Pac. 648. We quote from that decision:

"Where the judgment of a court has been deliberately exercised in a cause, and a final result reached as a conclusion thereof, there are good reasons why it should not be disturbed except by the formal methods prescribed by statute, but rulings, orders, and even judgments inadvertently made are not the result of judgment, but of oversight, neglect, or accident, and are subject to correction by the judge or court making them."

See, also, People v. Curtis, 113 Cal. 68, 45 Pac. 180.

In this case there can be no pretense that the judge who made the order for publication of summons against Lewis acted inadvertently or through mistake, or that he was imposed upon. No such showing was made on the motions to quash the service of summons and, as we have before stated, the order for publication was fully supported by the affidavits furnished to the court prior to the signing thereof. After service of summons had been made by the publication thereof, the court acquired jurisdiction to proceed as against Lewis:

"From the * * * completion of the publication when service by publication is ordered, the court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings. * * *" Section 416, Code Civ. Proc.

[5] And so it follows that, at the time the motions to quash the service of summons were made, jurisdiction was shown by the record before the court and by a record which was complete and sufficient as to the requisites involved. The court acted without authority in refusing to proceed, and the order attempting to quash the service of summons was void.

This matter was submitted upon the demurrer of the respondents (which demurrer presented the question of law as to the sufficiency of the facts stated in the petition to entitle the petitioner to the writ) and upon the answer filed at the same time.

The demurrer to the petition is overruled; and it is ordered that peremptory writ of mandate issue, requiring the respondent court to proceed to a hearing of the cause and to determine the issues thereof as to the defendant Lewis; petitioner to recover its costs.

3. PLEADING — 214(1)—ADMISSIONS—DEMURRER.

General demurrer to complaint impliedly admits allegations thereof.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 119(2)—DISCHARGE OF SURFACE WATER—RIGHTS OF UPPER OWNER.

Upper owner may not by artificial means collect surface waters into a single channel, where they had not flowed before and precipitate them in a single volume upon the servient tenement.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 118—SURFACE WATER — DISCHARGE UPON LOWER LANDS—NATURAL CHANNEL.

Where surface waters are discharged upon land of lower owner through a natural channel, the lower owner has no right to interfere with the flow thereof.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 154(2) — SURFACE WATER—DRAINAGE—RIGHTS OF UPPER OWNERS.

Where the proprietor of land constructs drainage system to benefit the entire tract, and thereafter divides the tract into small parcels and sells same to different owners, purchasers of the lower land buy the property subject to the right of the upper owners to have their land drained by discharge of water upon the lower lands according to the drainage system so constructed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Ernst Kallenberg and others against Emery M. Long and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Clarence N. Riggins, of Napa, for appellants.

Edward S. Bell, of Napa, and P. O. Solon, of St. Helena, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. The plaintiffs sued for damages caused by damming back surface waters and for injunction against further interference with their flow. The complaint was in two counts based upon different theories of the plaintiffs' right to maintain the action. A general demurrer to the complaint and to each cause of action was sustained as to both causes of action, and, upon plaintiffs' refusal to amend, judgment was entered for the defendants. The plaintiffs appeal.

All the facts are set forth in the second count. The demurrer went to the root of the case. If upon all the facts the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain their suit, it would be idle to send the case back for further proceedings by the application of a technical rule of pleading applied to a partial statement of facts in the first count. This is the typical case where upon a single series of facts the plaintiffs are in doubt upon which of several theories they might recover, not one where in the different counts they seek to recover for several infractions of distinct rights.

Disregarding the legal phraseology, the essential facts are that formerly a water course extended in a general easterly direction from the hills on the westerly side of the Napa Valley to the Napa river. This water course carried the surface waters from adjacent lands sloping towards it, and in its course it passed through the lands now owned by the plaintiffs to, and thence through, the lands now owned by the defendants.

Formerly the plaintiffs' and defendants' lands, with other lands west of plaintiffs' lands and higher on the slope, were owned by a single proprietor. On the east or lower side of defendants' lands runs, in a general northerly and southerly direction, the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. West of the plaintiffs' lands, and separated from them by lands originally part of the entire tract, but now held by third parties, runs the county road between St. Helena and Calistoga. About 25 years ago, while all the lands were in one ownership, the proprietor, at a point west of plaintiffs' lands, dug a ditch from the natural water course southeasterly along the county road to the present southeasterly boundary of what are now the lands of the plaintiffs and the defendants, and thence along the boundary to and across the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

It is alleged that by this ditch all the water flowing in the natural water course, of course, above the opening of the ditch, was diverted so as to run through the ditch. The ditch also drained the surface waters from the southeastern part of the tract, which must have been a part, at least, of the defendants' lands, and possibly a part of the plaintiffs' lands. If nothing else had been done, the surface waters below the opening of the ditch would have continued to flow in the old natural water course. At the time the ditch was opened "for the purpose of providing for the drainage of the surface waters from the remainder of the tract, and disposing of the surface waters thereof, the owner also constructed a covered drain" across the tract northeasterly to a point on what is now the plaintiffs' land. In constructing the covered drain he used the channel of the natural water course. From the end of the drain the waters it carried drained along the channel of the water course over the lower portion of the plaintiffs' lands and the defendants' lands to the Southern Pacific tracks, where they flowed into a ditch necessitated by reason of the obstruction of the natural water course by the railroad tracks, east of and below the defendants' lands. At the time the drain was built the owner "arranged that the surface water of said tract which had, up to this time, drained into said water course, should continue to drain into the same, by placing tiling through the said tract connected with said covered drain in such a manner that it would drain said surface waters into the same so that the surface water from the entire tract was drained off of said land along the channel of said water course." It is further alleged that "said surface waters from said tract had always been drained therefrom along the channel of said water course." From the opening of the covered drain on the plaintiffs' land the water flowing in the old channel during the greater part of each year was open, obvious, and in plain sight. The drainage system was continuously in use from its construction until the winter of 1916-17, when the channel of the old water course was dammed by the defendants. The dam caused the surface waters to be backed onto plaintiffs' lands to the injury of the trees of a growing orchard.

In 1906 the owner of the land between the county road and the railroad tracks, having subdivided the tract, sold the lower, eastern portion of it to the defendants. Thereafter he sold the remaining portions to other persons, from whom the plaintiffs acquired their lands more than 5 five years before this action was commenced.

The appellants base their claim of right upon three theories: First, it is maintained that by the dam the surface waters which have always been accustomed to flow from the plaintiffs' to the defendants' lands were turned back. To this the respondents urge that in plaintiffs' first cause of action, which was drawn on this theory, the failure to allege that the waters flowed naturally constituted a fatal defect. Secondly, the appellants rely upon the theory that the dam was an obstruction to an easement reserved by implication upon the division of the land formerly held in single ownership. To this the respondents reply that in this state, when what would otherwise be the servient tenement is granted without express reservation of the easement, no servitude by implication is impressed upon the land granted. Third, the appellants maintain that the dam was an obstruction of a natural water course, or, if it did not amount to a water course, of a natural channel through which surface waters have been accustomed naturally to flow. In opposition to this, the respondents rely upon the plaintiffs' allegations to show the existence of an artificial system of drainage, the result of which was to deprive the channel of its characteristics as a natural one, and the plaintiffs of any right to relief. A decision upon this ground will necessarily dispose of the contentions relating to the formal statement in the first cause of action. We will discuss, therefore, only the second and third questions presented.

In the brief of the respondent counsel cite many cases from other states and from England in support of the theory that, where the owner of lands divides them and conveys without express reservation what would otherwise become the servient tenement subject to a servitude appurtenant to the remaining portion, the grantee takes the land free from the servitude. In effect, it is admitted that under section 1104 of the Civil Code, if the dominant tenement is first conveyed with its appurtenances, the deed carries the easement, but it is argued that under section 1084, and we may add section 1105, of the Civil Code, the conveyance without express reservation passes to the grantee a title in fee simple absolute, free from all claims of the grantor. It is further argued that any other rule would permit the grantor of such a deed to derogate from it by making unreserved claims upon the grantee.

The fallacy of this contention is demonstrated by a consideration of three instances not involving easements. When the owner of two coterminous parcels of land retains one and conveys by deed of grant the other, if respondents' theory of the conclusiveness of the grant is sound, if both parcels are riparian in character, and the grantor retains the lower parcel, he could not prevent his grantee from diverting the flowing waters to which he, as riparian owner, would be entitled, nor could he require his grantee to join him in maintaining the boundary fence between the two tracts; neither could he, as against his grantee, insist upon his right of lateral support for the land he retained. By granting one of the two coterminous parcels the grantor does not divest himself of any right which is appurtenant to the other, even though such appurtenance may constitute an easement, if it was in use and clearly apparent to the grantee of the servient tenement at the time of the grant.

[1, 2] If the matter were entirely open, we would determine this question adversely to the respondents. Despite the ingenuity of the argument presented on behalf of the respondents in this regard, however, the question is not an open one. The rule that, "where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of the entire estate sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the tenement or portion sold with all the benefits and with all the burdens that appear at the time of the sale to belong to it as between it and the property which the grantor retains," has become a rule of real property in this state as forceful as the rule in regard to the rights of lower riparian owners or the mutual obligations of coterminous owners. Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, 129 Pac. 593; Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 7, 158 Pac. 1025. If at the time of the division of the entire tract there existed the right to discharge water in the way it was discharged from the upper lands to the lower lands of the defendants, the defendants' conveyance carried with it the implication of a reservation of the servitude.

[3] Upon the third point, since the demurrer was general, and not for ambiguity or uncertainty, and since the plaintiffs allege that the water course dammed by the defendants was a natural water course, we might rest our decision upon the implied admission of the defendants. As the case must be sent back for further proceedings, we do not base our decision upon the narrow ground, but deem it our duty for the guidance of the lower court, as well as of counsel, to declare the law applicable to the case directly presented by this appeal.

The distinction between a natural water course, that is, one in which waters other than surface waters flow, and a natural channel, as a swale, into which surface waters drain and by which they are carried away, is of no importance in this case. If the division line between the upper and lower lands on a slope follows the contour of the hill, and there are no lateral depressions, the water from the upper land must naturally flow across the division line for its entire length. If, on the other hand, the division line does not follow the contour, or if there are, as is usually the case, lateral depressions along the slope, the surface waters, seeking the lowest level, flow first towards, and then through such depressions. In the present case, if there had been no change made by the sole proprietor of the lands, all the surface waters of the particular basin would have flowed through the channel from the lands of the plaintiffs to those of the defendants. The sole owner did change the flow of the surface waters. By his first ditch he relieved the channel of all surface waters in the basin above the opening of the ditch, and these waters were carried to the south and around the lands of both the plaintiffs and the defendants. The defendants therefore were not hurt by having the amount of water discharged through the channel upon their lands reduced. After this reduction in the amount of water carried through the natural channel, the sole owner covered that channel for a portion of its length, or utilized the channel by building in it for a portion of its length the covered drain, the lower end of which was in the bed of the channel above the defendants' lands. If, instead of building a covered drain, he had narrowed the natural channel by building levees and had permitted the water to spread out in the natural channel below the levees on the plaintiffs' lands, so that the discharge upon the defendants' lands would have been the same, the character of the natural channel below the levees where it entered upon the defendants' lands would not have been changed. There is no difference in principle where the waters flowing in the channel were confined within the covered drain, if they were permitted again to spread out for the whole width of the original natural channel before it reached the upper boundary of the defendants' lands.

[4, 5] While an upper owner may not by artificial means collect the surface waters into a single channel where they have not flowed before and precipitate them in a volume upon the servient tenement (Rudel v. Los Angeles County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400) upon this appeal involving the pleadings only, it appears that the drainage system in its entirety caused the discharge only of a part of the same surface waters as flowed originally through the natural channel dammed by the defendants. In other words, regardless of changes made 25 years ago on and above the plaintiffs' lands, from the complaint it appears the surface waters flowing through the natural channel onto defendants' lands were thus accustomed naturally to flow there. If such was the fact, the defendants had no right to interrupt such a natural flow to the plaintiffs' injury.

[6] If there were doubt in regard to the flow being a natural flow of surface waters, under the rule that, where the sole proprietor conveys lands burdened with a servitude, the reservation is made by implication, it must be held that the respondents accepted their conveyance subject to the easement. In this case it appears that for some 15 years prior to the acquisition by the defendants of their lands the waters were discharged upon those lands openly and obviously, as they were for more than 10 years after the conveyance was made to the defendants; that the drainage system was one made for the benefit of the entire tract, and its use was necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the upper proprietors. The case is directly within the principle announced in Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, 129 Pac. 593.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer to the complaint, and to take such further proceedings as may be proper to determine the substantial rights of the parties.

MCGILLIVRAY v. HAMPTON. (Civ. 2416.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⚡134(9) — PERMITTING SPREAD OF FIRE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for the destruction of hay by fire starting on defendant's land, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant negligently suffered the fire to extend beyond his land contrary to Pol. Code, § 3344.

2. EVIDENCE ⚡215(3)—ADMISSION—LETTER—QUANTITY OF HAY DESTROYED.

Letter from plaintiff, whose hay had been burned by fire negligently permitted to spread from defendant's land, stating that the fire "utterly destroyed some over 30 tons of my hay," held not an admission that only 30 tons had been burned.

3. DAMAGES ⚡226—DESTRUCTION OF HAY—COMPUTATION OF TONS BURNED.

In action for destruction of plaintiff's hay by fire negligently permitted to spread from defendant's land, court properly calculated amount of hay burned by taking acreage involved and estimates of witnesses as to yield per acre.

4. DAMAGES ⚡188(2) — MARKET VALUE OF HAY—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit for destruction of hay by fire negligently permitted to spread from defendant's land, evidence held insufficient to support finding of a market value of $8 a ton of the hay destroyed.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1122(2)—REVISION OF FINDING OF FACT—POWER OF COURT.

The appellate court has no power to revise a finding of the value per ton of the hay destroyed by fire and sued for, which finding is unsupported by any evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Nettie McGillivray against R. L. Hampton, deceased. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Walter S. Clayson, of Corona, for appellant.

Charles H. Seccombe, of Oakland, for respondent.

JAMES, J. In this action a recovery was allowed to the plaintiff for the value of 45 tons of hay at $8 per ton. Defendant has appealed.

[1] The hay was destroyed by fire, which, starting on the land of the defendant, spread into the hayfields of the plaintiff. It is claimed that the defendant negligently allowed the fire which had started on his land to extend to the land of the plaintiff. It is the contention of appellant that the evidence was insufficient to justify the conclusion of the trial judge that negligence was shown as against the defendant. The further points are made that the finding of the court that 45 tons of hay was destroyed, and that it was of the value of $8 per ton, are not sustained by the evidence; appellant asserting that but 30 tons of hay was shown to have been destroyed, and that the reasonable market value was not shown to be greater than $6 per ton. The appeal being by the alternative method, we are left to such quotations as are made in the briefs to determine what the evidence was. It appears that the defendant was not present on his lands at the time the fire was discovered, but his foreman was there. How the fire was started is not shown. Under the provisions of section 3344, Political Code, a person is liable not only where he negligently sets out fire on his own ground, but also for "negligently suffering any fire to extend beyond his own land." When the foreman of the defendant discovered the fire burning, he, with the assistance of several persons, proceeded to attempt to put it out along the line where the land of defendant bordered that of the plaintiff. One witness testified that the men fighting the fire "apparently put it out; it seemed to be out of fuel." McCoy, the foreman, testified:

"We put it out; we thought we had put it out, and watched it there until almost 12 o'clock, when we left for dinner. And we went on to dinner, and it was still burning over to the west and north, and the only place we thought there was any danger of its getting out was on the east, because there was roads on the west and plowed land on the north."

Another witness testified:

That when the men left for lunch "the fire was smoldering along the east line where they put it out; there was no blaze apparently at the time;" that it was smoking.

The further fact appears that after the men had had their lunch and returned to the ground the wind had shifted to the west, and the fire was then on the land of the plaintiff. Notwithstanding further efforts of the men to control the fire, it destroyed the hay of the plaintiff. There was no testimony shown from which it can be gathered that the wind which was blowing was of an unusual kind. The land of the defendant was westerly of that of the plaintiff, and hence it can be seen that a westerly wind would blow from the land of the defendant toward the land of the plaintiff. Undoubtedly this wind fanned into a blaze the smoldering fire which the witness testified was left along the east line of defendant's land, and carried it across the line. This evidence, appellant insists, fails to show any negligence on the part of defendant. This position could be taken with more assurance if it did not appear, as we have noted, that when the foreman of the defendant left the ground for lunch the fire was still smoldering along the line of the plaintiff's property. Such being the case, we think that the matter of determining whether defendant by his servants discharged the obligation of using ordinary care to extinguish the fire was one resting in the judgment of the trial court, and that it must be said that there is some evidence to sustain the conclusion arrived at. While the foreman did testify that the fire was apparently out, it at once appears as a reasonable deduction from the testimony of the other witness who saw the fire smoldering that the foreman was not diligent in making his observation to determine whether the fire was in fact extinguished before he left the field. The finding that the defendant was negligent must be sustained.

[2, 3] The court calculated the amount of hay for the burning of which damages were awarded by taking the amount of acreage involved and the estimates of witnesses to the amount of the yield per acre. Appellant insists that the court was not justified in doing this, because the plaintiff, in a letter to the defendant prior to the suit, had claimed only that 30 tons were burned, instead of 45. This letter was a letter written for the purpose of securing an amicable settlement, but it did not definitely state that only 30 tons of hay was burned. The letter was, in part, as follows:

"I hear at same time their fire burned and utterly destroyed some over thirty tons of my hay. I depended on it to sell, and had been offered $8 per ton. Will you please make the loss good to me."

This letter did not amount to an admission that only 30 tons of hay had been burned, and the court was authorized to determine the fact as to that matter as the evidence showed it. The method adopted by the judge in computing the total tonnage destroyed was not objectionable.

[4, 5] As to the finding of the court that the hay destroyed had a market value of $8 per ton, we have searched the record in vain to find evidence to support it. None of the testimony placed the value at a greater sum than $8 for baled hay; one witness stating that it was worth "$8 or $9." The cost of baling was proved to be $1.75 per ton. The price of $8 per ton as fixed by the trial judge for unbaled loose hay is not supported by a word of testimony. We were much puzzled to understand how the court could have arrived at the figure stated in its findings as the ton price of hay until we read in the transcript a statement of the remarks of the judge in summing up his conclusions; and after we had read that statement we were more surprised than puzzled. We quote the dialogue between the court and counsel:

"Mr. Clayton: You are establishing the value of $8 for unbaled hay? The Court: I think so. Of course, when a witness testifies as a matter of opinion, he is giving himself more leeway than when he testifies to a fact. He is simply giving his opinion, and when he testifies there is a little bias in favor of the side that calls the witness, and that is invariably noted by the courts in hearing the testimony of such witnesses. Of course, this is not a part of the record, but hay has been very high in this country for two or three years, hasn't it? Any hay would command a pretty good price. Is that true? I think $8 is probably— The lady puts the value at how much? Mrs. McGillivray: I was offered $8. The Court: $8 will do for the time being until I am reversed by a higher court."

The statement of Mrs. McGillivray, volunteered in answer to the court's question, referred to no particular time, but her testimony given earlier in the trial showed that the only offer of a higher price than $8 for baled hay received by plaintiff was after the fire occurred—how long does not appear. We regret exceedingly in this case to be compelled to verify the prophecy of the trial judge by ordering a reversal of the judgment, especially for the reason that the amount involved is small and much delay has been occasioned by the protracted course of this litigation over a few tons of hay. If we were authorized to modify the judgment, we would adopt that course; but the error complained of goes to a finding of fact which we have not the power to revise.

MARKER v. WILLIAMS. (Civ. 2083.)

1. SALES 472(3), 473(1)—CONDITIONAL SALES—INNOCENT PURCHASERS.

The vendee under a conditional sale of personal property until conditions are performed has no interest in property which he can transfer as against vendor, even to an innocent purchaser for value.

2. FIXTURES 21—REFRIGERATION PLANT—"TRADE FIXTURE"—VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

A complete refrigeration plant in a hotel, none of machinery, pipes, or boxes constituting any part of support of building or any of its walls, so that its removal would do no more than leave brackets attached to walls and apertures in walls requiring plastering thereof, would constitute a "fixture," under Civ. Code, §§ 660, 1013, as between grantor of hotel and grantee, relying in good faith on appearances and without notice of anything to the contrary, yet it was not so incorporated that it could not be detached, under section 1019, as a "trade fixture."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fixture; Trade Fixtures.]

3. FIXTURES 9—MACHINERY—CONDITIONAL SALES.

Purchaser of hotel, who was told that lessee had installed refrigerating plant therein and had paid therefor, was thereby given such notice that it might be a trade fixture, that he could not claim to be innocent purchaser of refrigerating plant, on ground that it was part of real estate, as against one who had installed it under conditional contract of sale.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Rebecca Marker against Frederick J. Williams. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Macfarland and Fairbanks & Macfarland, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Tyrrell, Abrahams & Brown, A. L. Abrahams, and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against the defendant for conversion of certain personal property. The facts are as follows, so far as necessary to an understanding of the issues raised on appeal:

Defendant acquired, by purchase, title to real estate upon which was situated, as part thereof, a hotel building, in which had previously been installed machinery and appliances constituting a refrigerating plant for the hotel. This machinery was of a character and so attached to the premises as to obviously pass with the title as part of the real estate, as between grantor and grantee, in the absence of any conditions or reservations in the deed. The defendant claims to be a purchaser for value of the real estate, without notice of any fact to inform him or put him on inquiry as to any adverse claim to the machinery of the refrigerating plant. The plaintiff, at the time of bringing this action, claimed the ownership of the refrigerating plant as the assignee of a conditional sale contract with former lessees of the hotel property, whereby plaintiff's assignor had delivered and installed in said building for such lessees the machinery and appliances in question, reserving the title thereto until such time as deferred payments on the purchase price were made. The tenants defaulted in their payments under the sale contract, and subsequently under their lease contract, but remained in possession of both the refrigerating machinery and the hotel until they were ousted from the real estate and their leasehold was terminated by proceedings in court instituted by the defendant, who took possession of the premises, including the refrigerating plant. There were other transactions involving a second conditional sale of this machinery by plaintiff to other tenants of the hotel, who, in turn, defaulted in both their deferred payments to plaintiff and their rents to defendant, and who were dispossessed by defendant, leaving him in possession of the entire premises; but no question seems to be raised as to any change thereby as to the legal status of the respective rights of the parties. The issue presented, it seems agreed, is squarely as to the relative rights of one claiming the title as personalty, reserved under a conditional sale contract, as against another claiming the same property as a fixture previously attached to real estate, which he has purchased for value and without notice of any adverse claim to the fixtures as personalty. The case was tried in the superior court on an agreed statement of facts, and the findings conform to the statement. The only question of error arises upon the conclusion of the trial court that the facts sustained a judgment for plaintiff.

It is conceded that the plaintiff is possessed of all the rights of the original vendor of this property under the conditional sale contract; but appellant contends that such rights were lost, or, at least, that the plaintiff is estopped from asserting the same by reason of her assignor having affixed the machinery to the real property so as to make it a part of the realty, and under circumstances calculated to mislead, and which in this case did mislead, an innocent purchaser to buy the realty in the belief that the refrigerating plant was an integral part thereof. Under the law governing conditional sales, as recognized in this state, it is clear that, if appellant can defeat the judgment against him at all, it is only on this ground.

[1] It is the established law, under our court decisions, that the vendee under a conditional sale of personal property, until the conditions are performed, has no interest in the property which he can transfer, as against the vendor, even to an innocent purchaser, for value. He cannot divest the conditional vendor of his interest by any act or omission to act not authorized by such vendor. Appellant's case, then, is predicated upon two considerations of fact: (1) Were the conditions and manner of installing this refrigerating plant in the hotel building such as to justify a purchaser of the real property, without notice, in treating it as an integral part of the hotel building? (2) Was the defendant here an innocent purchaser for value and without notice?

[2] As shown by the agreed statement of facts, the refrigerating plant comprised a gas compression pump, 5-inch bore by 5-inch stroke, set on concrete base, in which are imbedded six bolts, the gas pump fastened thereto by bolts and nuts; an electric five horse power motor resting on blocks attached to the concrete floor by bolts and screws, and the motor attached to the base by lag screws; a double ammonia pipe condenser, consisting of a coil of 1½-inch ammonia pipe, six pipes high, about 10 feet long, set into a rack, and attached to the brick walls by bolts put through the wall; piping in racks attached by bolts and screws; a centrifugal brine circulating pump, attached to four bolts sunk into the concrete floor, and fastened thereto by nuts; brine pipes fastened to the walls by nails or bolts, and running through the partition walls of the basement; pipes connected by ordinary connection with water and sewer outlets, with other similar appliances attached to the floors and walls in like manner, and all connected up, so as to constitute a complete refrigerating plant for use of the hotel building. None of the machinery pipes or boxes constitutes any part of the support of the building, or any of its walls; the removal of said machinery, piping, and boxes from the building would leave the brackets attached to the walls, and would leave apertures in the walls, and would leave the walls, in one or two places, requiring the plastering thereof.

We are of the opinion that the character of the machinery, the use for which was intended in connection with the hotel, the manner in which it was installed, and the apparent intent of its annexation, filled all the requirements of sections 660 and 1013 of the Civil Code to constitute it a fixture, as between the grantor and a grantee relying in good faith on appearances, and without notice of anything to the contrary. Yet it was not so incorporated into the hotel building as to be necessarily an integral part of it. It could be removed without serious injury to the real property, and might, under the definition of section 1019 of the Civil Code, be detachable as a trade fixture.

[3] But was the defendant an innocent purchaser without notice? It is recited in the agreed statement of facts:

"That prior to and at the time of said purchase the defendant inspected said premises, and was shown said refrigerating plant, and was told by Geo. W. Fox, from whom he purchased said property, and by the president of the Golden Bay Hotel Company, the lessee thereof, that said lessee had installed said refrigerating plant, and paid for it in full; and thereupon the defendant purchased said property, believing and relying upon said statement, and without any notice or knowledge whatsoever of any ownership or claim of ownership in or to said refrigerating plant of or on behalf of plaintiff or her assignors."

It may be conceded that if the defendant had relied in good faith on merely what he saw in the inspection of the premises, or if on inquiry of the owner and the lessees he had been informed that the refrigerating plant had been built in originally as a part of the hotel building, and, relying upon this information, had bought the property in the belief that the refrigerating plant was a part of the real property, he would be entitled to all the protection due to an innocent purchaser for value and without notice. But he was informed that the tenants then in possession of the hotel, and operating it, had installed this machinery. That at once was notice that it had the earmarks of a trade fixture; that it was so situated as to be subject to detachment as personal property and removal from the building before the termination of the leasehold. In other words, the information that he received was such as to suggest that the refrigerating plant might not be irretrievably attached to the real estate. He at least knew that it was not installed by or for his grantor as part of the original construction of the building. He took the property apparently subject to such rights as the tenants might have. Did he not further take it subject to such claims as the original vendor might have reserved against the tenants? Was he justified in accepting, without further investigation, the statement of these people that they had paid for it, when he knew it had been installed under circumstances consistent with the retention of its character as personalty by a conditional vendor? In other words, if he had notice which suggested that this machinery was not what it appeared to be—an integral part of the real property—he was bound, in due caution, to consider all the contingencies which might apply to personal property so installed, and among these was the very likely circumstance of its having been purchased under a conditional contract of sale.

The law of California very properly favors the conditional contract of sale. It has become very largely a factor in the purchase and sale of personal property, and, too, of that class of machinery and appliances commonly used in connection with real estate. It should be the policy of courts to afford every proper protection to upholding the conditions of such sales, both in the interest of the buying and selling classes. It should be borne in mind that the question here is not whether the defendant had notice of a conditional sale contract, but only whether he had notice that the character of personalty might still attach to this machinery. Conceding the force of reasoning and weight of authority presented by counsel for appellant in behalf of the equities of one who purchases real property, relying in good faith on the presumption that machinery affixed thereto so as to appear to have become an integral part of the realty passes with his deed, we are not prepared to hold, under the facts of this case, that the appellant has brought himself sufficiently within such conditions as to justify a reversal of the conclusions reached by the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

ADAMSON v. PAONESSA et al. (L. A. 4627.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1919.
Rehearing Denied April 17, 1919.)1. SUBROGATION $\S$ 33(2)—EXTENT OF RIGHT.

Payment by the surety of a contractor with a city for street work pursuant to its obligations as surety works a subrogation in its favor to any rights possessed by those whose claims it paid, but gives no further rights.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 373(2) — STREET IMPROVEMENT ACT—RIGHTS OF MATERIALMEN AND LABORERS.

Despite Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1184, under Street Improvement Act, $\S$ 19, the rights of materialmen and laborers were limited to a personal recovery against the contractor with a city to do street work, and to a recovery on the bond given by the contractor's surety, and they had no rights against the moneys or bonds due from the city on completion of the work.

3. ASSIGNMENTS $\S$ 87—PRIORITIES—RIGHT OF SUBSEQUENT ASSIGNEE WITHOUT NOTICE.

As between successive assignees of a chose in action, such as the right of a contractor with a city to the agreed compensation for street work done, the assignee who first gives notice to the debtor will have the preference, even if his assignment was subsequent in time, if, at the time of taking it, he had no notice of the prior assignment.

4. ASSIGNMENTS $\S$ 88—RIGHT IN BONDS ASSIGNED AS SECURITY.

Where contractor with city to do street improvement work, after assigning his right to the agreed compensation, certain bonds, to his surety, also assigned such right as security to one making advancements who had no notice of the prior assignment, the surety, standing in the contractor's shoes, has still an interest in the bonds awarded to the subsequent assignee, who first gave notice of assignment to the city.

5. CONTRACTS $\S$ 147(2)—CONSTRUCTION WITH REFERENCE TO FACTS—INTENTION.

The language of a contract must be construed with reference to the particular facts of the particular case, and if the intention of the parties is clearly evident, and they have actually given expression to it, however inapt the expression, effect must be given their intention.

6. ASSIGNMENTS $\S$ 72 — CONSTRUCTION OF LANGUAGE.

In determining whether a provision of a contract between a surety company and a contractor to do street work for a city constituted an assignment of certain bonds to the surety, the language must be construed as if the question were one between the surety and the contractor alone.

7. ASSIGNMENTS $\S$ 41 — ASSIGNMENT TO SURETY BY STREET CONTRACTOR.

Application of contractor to do street work for a city for bond from a surety company held sufficient, as an assignment, to entitle the surety company to claim and receive as against the contractor certain bonds due to be issued on completion of the work.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Interpleader suit by John Z. Adamson against George C. Paonessa, Charles W. Lloyd, and the National Surety Company. From judgment for defendant Lloyd, defendant National Surety Company appeals. Judgment modified by striking out a portion, and new trial ordered on a single issue.

Curtis & McNabb, of San Bernardino, and Benjamin E. Page and Arthur C. Hurt, both of Los Angeles (Arthur F. Coe, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles (F. C. Austin, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in an interpleader suit in favor of one of the defendants and claimants as against the other defendant and claimant. There is practically no conflict in the evidence, and the material facts are as follows:

One Paonessa entered into a contract with the city of Colton for the doing of certain street work under the Improvement Act of 1911. Stats. 1911, p. 730. As a condition of the contract he was required by the statute to give, and did give, a surety bond for the payment of claims for materials furnished or labor rendered in the doing of the work. The appellant, National Surety Company, was the surety on this bond. In order to obtain the bond the contractor, Paonessa, made a written application to the surety company which, by its terms, constituted a contract between them. The portion of this application contract material here reads:

"All payments specified in the above-mentioned contract [i. e., the contract with the city of Colton for the doing of the work] to be withheld by the obligee until the completion of the work shall, as soon as the work is completed, be paid to the company [i. e., the surety company], and this covenant shall operate as an assignment thereof, and the residue, if any, after reimbursing the company as aforesaid, be paid to the applicant after all liability of the company has ceased to exist under said bond."

No notice of this assignment, if it be such, was given to the city of Colton, or, so far as appears, to any one else, until shortly before the commencement of this litigation.

While the work was in progress the other defendant, the respondent here, one Lloyd, advanced certain sums of money to the contractor, Paonessa, and took from him an assignment of all his rights under the contract, all without notice of the prior assignment to the surety company and in complete ignorance of it. This assignment Lloyd filed with the city clerk immediately.

The proceedings under which the contract was let provided, as permitted by the statute, for payments in street improvement bonds. Upon the completion of the contract, the city authorities, recognizing Lloyd as the assignee of Paonessa, delivered to him the warrant and assessment for the payment of the work, and the city treasurer was about to issue to him street improvement bonds in payment when the surety company demanded of the city treasurer the issuance of the bonds to it. This was the first notice to the city authorities of any claim of assignment to the surety company.

In the meantime Paonessa had failed to pay claims approximating $10,000 for material and labor furnished and rendered in completing the contract. The surety company was obligated under its bond to pay these claims and did so. No claim is made by the respondent that such payment was not pursuant to the obligation of the bond and in strict accord with it.

Upon the surety company demanding the issuance of the bonds to it and Lloyd insisting that they be issued to him, the city treasurer interpleaded the two claimants and deposited the bonds in court. A trial was had and judgment was rendered against the surety company in favor of Lloyd that the bonds be delivered to the latter.

The contention of the surety company that the judgment is erroneous and that it is entitled to the bonds, or at least to sufficient thereof to reimburse itself for the amounts which it paid to materialmen and laborers, is twofold.

[1, 2] The first ground advanced is that, by virtue of its payments as surety for Paonessa of the claims against him for materials and labor furnished, it acquired by subrogation an equitable lien upon any moneys or bonds due under the contract in payment for the work superior to any assignment or other disposition which Paonessa might have made. There is no doubt but that the payment by the surety company pursuant to its obligations as surety would work a subrogation in its favor of any rights which the claimants had whose claims were paid. It is equally clear that the subrogation would give no further rights than this. What rights, therefore, had these materialmen and laborers against the moneys or bonds that were due under the contract on the completion of the work? If they had none, and if their rights were limited to a personal recovery against Paonessa and to a recovery upon the bond given by the surety company, it is clear that there was nothing upon which the subrogation could work. Such we believe to be the case under the Improvement Act of 1911, under which the work was done.

The only provision in the act of 1911 providing security to materialmen and laborers for the payment of their claims is section 19. This section requires that every contractor to whom a contract is awarded under the act must file with the superintendent of streets a good and sufficient bond inuring to the benefit of any and all persons performing labor on or furnishing materials used in the work or improvement. There is no provision which gives such claimants any right or lien, equitable or otherwise upon money or bonds coming to the contractor. In particular, there is no provision in the act authorizing or permitting the retention by the municipality, or by the owners whose lands are assessed, of anything which may be due the contractor in order to pay the claims of materialmen or laborers, or permitting the deduction of the amount of such claims from anything that may be due the contractor. We are constrained to believe that it was the intention of the statute that parties furnishing materials or labor to a contractor doing work under a contract let in accordance with this act must look solely to the contractor's personal responsibility and to the bond which the statute requires him to furnish.

This construction of the statute is strengthened by a consideration of the method of payment contemplated by it. It contemplates that the contractor be paid directly by the property owners whose property is assessed for that purpose, each paying for himself his own assessment, and this whether the payment be in money or in bonds. It is true that any property owner may discharge the assessment on his property by making payment to the city treasurer, but the act clearly contemplates that the city treasurer in such case is merely acting as a convenient means or conduit whereby the property owner may make payment to the contractor. Essentially the payment is one by each property owner directly to the contractor.

It is manifest that under such circumstances there is no single fund out of which the contractor is to be paid, and it is likewise clear that, in view of the fact that payment may be made to the contractor without the interposition of the city treasurer or any other city official or common conduit of payment, any right to have moneys or bonds coming to a contractor retained in order to meet claims against the contractor would be quite impracticable. The act provides no machinery by which the amount to be retained from the payment by the property owner can be ascertained or he be notified of the amount he is to retain.

The result so arrived at is not affected by the provisions of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section, as amended in 1911, provides for the giving of notice by any person who has performed labor or furnished materials under a contract, and then continues as follows:

"Upon such notice being given it shall be lawful for the owner to withhold, and in case of property which, for reasons of public policy or otherwise, is not subject to the liens in this chapter provided for, the owner or person who contracted with the contractor, shall withhold from his contractor sufficient money due or that may become due to such contractor to answer such claim and any lien that may be filed therefor including the reasonable cost of any litigation thereunder."

This provision is clearly applicable only to cases where the contractor is to be paid either by the owner of the property upon which the work is done, or by the person, public or private, by whom the contract was made. It cannot be applied where payment is not to be made in that manner, but is to be made by a number of different persons not parties to the contract, each of whom pays independently his separate share of the amount due.

Right here also lies the difference between the present case and the line of authorities cited by appellant's counsel, beginning with Prairie State Nat. Bank v. United States, 164 U. S. 227, 17 Sup. Ct. 142, 41 L. Ed. 412. In those decisions the facts are essentially the same as in this, with the exception that either by statute or by the contract itself a fund was in effect reserved for the benefit of materialmen and laborers whom the contractor might fail to pay. In other words, the materialmen and laborers had a right as against a certain fund in addition to any recovery against the contractor or his surety. Under such circumstances, if the surety paid their claims, he would be subrogated to their rights against such fund. Such, however, is not the case here, as there is no fund against which the materialmen and laborers have a right.

[3] The second point made by the appellant is that, by virtue of the provision heretofore quoted of the application contract executed by Paonessa, he assigned to the appellant his right to the bonds subsequently to become due him under the contract, and that this assignment, being prior in time to the assignment by Paonessa to Lloyd, is prior in right.

Passing for the time being the question as to the sufficiency of the contract provision as an assignment by Paonessa, it does not follow that because it is prior in time it is necessarily prior in right to the subsequent assignment to Lloyd. The surety company neglected to give immediate notice of the assignment to it, and before it gave such notice Lloyd had taken an assignment for a valuable consideration without notice or knowledge of the prior assignment, and had given notice of his own assignment. The rule in such a case is well established. It is thus stated in Widenmann v. Weniger, 164 Cal. 667, 672, 130 Pac. 421, 424:

"The effect of such successive assignments and the rights of the successive assignees without notice, with respect to each other, were considered and decided in Graham Paper Co. v. Pembroke, 124 Cal. 117 [56 Pac. 627, 44 L. R. A. 632, 71 Am. St. Rep. 26]. There is some conflict of authority on the subject, but this court approved and followed the English rule stated as follows: 'As between successive assignees of a chose in action, he will have the preference who first gives notice to the debtor, even if he be a subsequent assignee, provided at the time of taking it he had no notice of a prior assignment.'"

The judgment of the lower court, therefore, in directing the delivery of the bonds to Lloyd, was correct and to that extent is affirmed.

[4] The judgment of the lower court, however, goes further than this. The court found and its judgment decrees, that the surety company has no right or interest in the bonds. The evidence at the trial showed without conflict that Lloyd took his assignment by way of security for advances. It follows that as between himself and Paonessa he was not the absolute owner of the bonds. Paonessa still had an interest in them. If, then, the application contract executed by Paonessa did in fact amount to an assignment by him to the surety company, the latter stood in the former's shoes, and had, and still has, an interest in the bonds, and the finding of the court to the contrary is not supported by the evidence. This brings us to the question of the sufficiency of the application contract as an assignment by Paonessa to the surety company. If it amounts to an assignment, the finding that the surety company has no interest in the bonds is contrary to the evidence, and the decree of the court to the same effect is in that particular incorrect.

[5-7] Considering this question, certain it is that, as applied to these bonds, the language of the application contract is exceedingly inapt. The subject-matter of the purported assignment is described as "all payments specified in the above-mentioned contract to be withheld by the obligee until completion of the work." But, as we have seen, there are no payments to be withheld. The provision in question is one very evidently intended for cases of contracts containing the ordinary provisions for the retention of a part of the contractor's compensation to answer for claims against him. Such is not this case. Nevertheless the language must be construed with reference to the particular facts of the particular case, and if the intention of the parties is fairly evident, and they have actually given expression to it, no matter how inapt that expression may be, effect must be given to their intention. Furthermore, the language must be construed as if the question were one between the surety company and Paonessa, and between them solely. Looking at the matter from this point of view, we believe that as between Paonessa and the surety company the language in question, inapt though it is, would be sufficient to entitle the latter to claim and receive the bonds in dispute as against the former. It is fairly evident that it was the intention of the parties that the surety company, in order to secure it against its liability on the contractor's bond, should have the right to receive on the completion of the contract any payments that might be coming to him. The designation of such payments as "payments to be withheld by the obligee until the completion of the work" seems to us to be rather a case of imperfect description than one where the parties have actually failed to give expression to their intention, so that it is beyond the power of the court to give effect to it by construction. It follows that the surety company did have an interest in the bonds to be delivered to and held by Lloyd, and that the finding and decree of the lower court to the contrary are not in this respect correct.

While there is no conflict in the evidence bearing on the point under immediate discussion, and the facts establishing the rights of the parties appear clearly and without dispute, yet there is no finding in accordance with the evidence upon which this court can direct a modification of the decree in this respect. A further hearing upon this point is necessary in order that such finding be made.

The judgment of the lower court is therefore modified by striking out the portion which decrees that the appellant has no right or interest in the bonds, and a new trial is ordered on the single issue as to whether or not as between himself and the surety company the respondent Lloyd holds the bonds as absolute owner or by way of security merely.

Both prior to the commencement of the litigation and at the time of the trial respondent Lloyd offered to account to the surety company for any balance which he might receive from the bonds after the satisfaction of his own advances. This was all that the surety company was entitled to. Accordingly, although the judgment is reversed in part and a new trial is directed as to one of the issues, it is ordered that appellant pay the costs of appeal.

In re HENRICHS' ESTATE.

AHRENS v. ASTON et al.

(S. F. 8801.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 27, 1919.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION §71(4) — PRESUMPTION — RELATIVES NEARER THAN FIFTH DEGREE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 28, relating to disputable presumption that things have happened according to ordinary course of nature, etc., there is a very strong presumption that a decedent left relatives nearer than the fifth degree.

2. WAR §10(2) — PROBATE PROCEEDINGS — DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE — CLAIM BY ALIEN ENEMY.

A German, claiming the entire estate of a decedent as in fourth degree of relationship against distributees of estate in fifth degree of relationship, having presented certificates and records of relationship in support of his motion for continuance until after the war, was entitled to a reasonable time in which to prepare and present his case, which involved continuance until peace was declared and communication with Germany re-established.

3. WAR §10(2) — ALIEN ENEMIES — RIGHT TO DEFEND PETITION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—STATUTE.

Under the Trading with the Enemy Act, § 7, subd. "b" (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, § 3115½d), where persons claiming as rightful distributees of decedent's estate presented petition for distribution and forced case to hearing, thus, in connection with their notices, summoning all the world to admit or deny their claims of heirship, citizen of Germany claiming nearer kinship to decedent had right by motion for continuance until peace between two countries to defend his rights in courts of this country.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William J. Henrichs, deceased. From a decree of distribution to Euclid Aston and others, Robert Ahrens appeals. Judgment reversed, with instructions.

Gustave Gutsch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

True Van Sickle, of Oakland, for respondent Aston and others.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for respondent Hynes.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a decree of distribution by which the whole estate, consisting of $11,778.71 in money, was distributed to the respondents, five children of Anna Fredericksen Aston. It is conceded that the distributees were related to the decedent in the fifth degree. The court finds that they were the grandchildren of decedent's predeceased aunt, Maria Gertrude Ahrens Fredericksen. Robert Ahrens claims to be a son of a brother of said Maria Gertrude Ahrens Fredericksen, and of decedent's mother, Anna Bernardina Elisabeth Ahrens, thus being related in the fourth degree and entitled to inherit the entire property of the decedent. Both claim to be related to the decedent through his mother. Among the papers of the decedent was a certificate of the marriage of decedent's parents, certifying that "Henrich Gerhard Henrichs, single, born in Blexun, Oldenburg, 31 years of age, 337 Walker, tinsmith, and Bernhardine Ahrens, single, 30 years of age, of Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg, 337 Walker Street, were married" February 8, 1863, at the German Evangelic Lutheran St. Matheus Church on Walker street, New York; a certificate of birth and baptism on November 15, 1863, at New York, of a son of Henrich Gerhard Henrichs, 287 Eleventh street, born in Blexen, Oldenburg, and Anna Marie Bernhardine, née Ahrens, his wife, who was baptized on February 18, 1864, and received the name of Johann Wilhelm; and also the certificate of confirmation, showing that Johann Wilhelm Henrichs was born on November 15, 1863, and was confirmed April 14, 1878, in the Evangelic Lutheran St. Paulus Church of San Francisco. The last two certificates are of the birth and confirmation of the decedent.

In connection with appellant's motion for a continuance certain records were presented which it was contended established appellant's relationship to the decedent. The record of baptisms of the Catholic Community at Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg, showed that Anna Bernardina Elisabeth Ahrens (also spelled Arens), was born on August 22d and baptized on August 24, 1831, daughter of Bernard Friedrich Ahrens (also spelled Arens), and Maria Gertrud, née Horstmann, shoemaker in Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg. It is claimed by appellant that Anna Bernardina Elisabeth, born August 24, 1831, is the mother of the decedent. The name is slightly different, the birthplace is the same, and the age and year different from that set forth in the marriage license and birth and confirmation certificates found among the papers of the decedent. The same record of baptisms of the Catholic church at Neuenkirchen showed two other children of the same parents, namely, Catharina Juliana Josephina, born April 15, 1827, and Maria Gertrud Elisabeth Ahrens, born January 25, 1830. The trial court found that Maria Gertrud Ahrens Fredrickson was an aunt of the deceased and the grandmother of respondents. As tending to show that the above-named Bernard Friedrich Ahrens and his wife, Maria Gertrud, née Horstmann, were the maternal grandparents of decedent, we have not only the similarity of the name of one child, Anna Bernardina Elisabeth Ahrens, to the name of the mother of the deceased, as stated in the marriage and birth certificates found among the papers of the decedent, but also the fact that another child of the same parents, Maria Gertrud Elisabeth Ahrens, the grandmother of respondents, is shown by the record to be a sister of Anna Bernardina Elisabeth Ahrens, who is found by the trial court to be a sister of decedent. Assuming it to be established that Bernard

Friedrich Ahrens, and his wife, Maria Gertrud Horstmann, were the grandparents of decedent, appellant claims that his father, Clemens Joseph Ahrens, is their son, and thus decedent's uncle. To establish this fact, he produces from the same church book of the Catholic Community of Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg, the certificate of birth of Clemens Joseph Ahrens, son of Johann Bernard Ahrens (also spelled Arens) and Anna Gertrudes Catharina, née Horstmann, his wife, shoemaker, at Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg, on October 2, 1823. The name of the father is stated as Johann Bernard Ahrens instead of Bernard Friedrich Ahrens, and the name of the mother is stated as Anna Gertrudes Catharina Horstmann Ahrens, instead of Maria Gertrudes Horstmann Ahrens. The names of the father have in common the name Bernard Ahrens, and of the mother, Gertrud (or Gertrudes) Horstmann Ahrens, while in both certificates the occupation shoemaker at Oldenburg is given for the father. In the certificate of marriage of appellant's father (1849) the latter's father's name is given as Bernard Ahrens, and not Johann Bernard Ahrens. It certifies that Clemens Joseph Ahrens, cigarmaker at Vlotho, is a son of Bernard Ahrens at Neuenkirchen, Oldenburg, 26 years old at the date of the marriage, February 18, 1849. This would correspond with the date of the birth (October 2, 1823), given in the birth record above quoted, and is significant in that the name "Johann" is omitted in giving the name of the father, which would indicate that, although in 1823 the father went by the name of Johann Bernard, he later used the name Bernard. Appellant produced a certificate of the death of Joseph Clemens Robert Ahrens, cigarmaker at Vlotho, which stated that he died August 9, 1856, at the age of 36 years 1 month and 2 days. Proof of the alleged relationship of appellant to decedent turned in large measure upon whether it could be shown that Johann Bernard Ahrens was the same person as Bernard Friedrich Ahrens. Similarity of names, residence, age, and wife's name tend to show that fact. Appellant moved for a continuance under the following circumstances: The administrator of decedent's estate filed his final account and petition for distribution May 21, 1917. The testimony of residents of San Francisco was introduced, tending to show that respondents were the only heirs of the decedent. This evidence consisted largely of declarations of the decedent and of the mother and grandmother of respondents. The case was continued from time to time at the request of the attorney who now represents the appellant. Finally, on September 11, 1917, counsel for appellant filed a written notice of appearance for the appellant, who claimed to be the sole heir of decedent. After several continuances for that purpose, having secured from Germany through the Swiss Legation, which represented the interests of the United States in Germany during the war, the certificates and affidavits of appellant used on the motion for a continuance, on November 23, 1917, a motion was made that the case be continued until after the termination of the war, or until appellant's inability to produce evidence was removed. The appellant is a native and citizen of Germany and has always been a resident thereof. It was stated in the affidavit that it would be impossible during the continuance of the war between Germany and the United States to secure full proof of the heirship of the appellant, but in connection with his application the various certificates above mentioned were presented to the court, together with the affidavit of the claimant that he was a first cousin of the decedent, giving in detail the family history showing that relationship. The motion for continuance was denied, and on April 1, 1918, the court distributed the property to the respondents. It being admitted that the respondents are related to the decedent in the degree in which they claim, the question presented at the trial was whether all other relatives of nearer degree were dead.

[1, 2] The presumption that decedent left relatives nearer than the fifth degree is very strong. Section 1963, subd. 28, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Roach, 76 Cal. 294, 18 Pac. 407. Respondents contend that the affidavits presented do not conform to the requirements of an affidavit for continuance, in that it is not shown what evidence could be secured. Section 595, Code Civ. Proc. Even if we assume that this rule controls where we are dealing with the appellant's fundamental right to be heard, appellant does show the certificates and records above set forth, and it is admitted that they are not certified so as to entitle them to be received in evidence, and their importance as evidence is not denied. If we concede the right of an alien enemy to appear in our courts, it is evident that the appellant could not properly prepare and present his case, based necessarily, as he states, upon the testimony of witnesses to be procured in Germany, while a condition of war existed between Germany and the United States. We will not undertake to pass upon the merits of appellant's claim upon the motion for continuance. Claiming to be the sole heir of the decedent, he desired an opportunity to present his evidence, and by the ruling of the court he was prevented from so doing. He does present record evidence which he believes shows his relationship and which, supplemented by proof, no doubt readily obtainable in time of peace, might fully establish his claim, or be met by proof which might readily defeat it. Under these circumstances appellant was entitled to a reasonable time in which to prepare and present his case, and this involved a continuance until peace was declared and communication with Germany re-established.

[3] Respondents contend that appellant, an alien enemy, was not entitled to be represented by counsel or to appear in this litigation, and therefore claim the right to have the case decided solely upon the evidence presented by them. If their contention is sustained, it means that upon presenting prima facie evidence that all other kin in nearer degree and of the same degree as themselves are dead, they can secure title to property without having their witnesses undergo cross-examination, and in the absence of the conflicting claims and evidence of appellant. It is conceded, however, that an alien enemy has the right to appear in a case where he is made a defendant. Section 7, subdivision "b," of Trading with the Enemy Act, passed by Congress on October 6, 1917 (chapter 106, 40 Stats. L. 416 [U. S. Comp. St. 1918, § 3115½d]), provides in that regard as follows:

"Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the prosecution of any suit or action at law or in equity in any court within the United States by an enemy or ally of enemy prior to the end of the war. * * * And provided further, that an enemy or ally of enemy may defend by counsel any suit in equity or action at law which may be brought against him."

Under our practice in a proceeding on distribution, by publication of the necessary notices, all the world is summoned to admit or deny the claims of heirship advanced by the petitioner. In this case, the petition for distribution, having been filed, notice of the hearing thereof having been given, the appellant was required to present his proof of heirship at the time fixed, failing in which he was bound by the decree, the effect of which, if he was the sole heir, was to divest his title to the estate and vest it in the distributees. The appellant could have waited—indeed, he desired to wait—until the war was over, before presenting his claim of heirship. But the act of the respondent heirs, against his wishes and desires, in presenting their petition and forcing the case to a hearing, followed by the decree in their favor, had the effect of depriving an alien enemy of his property without an opportunity to be heard. It is unnecessary to consider whether or not the alien enemy was a defendant in an action at law or in equity in a technical sense, because it was evidently the purpose of Congress to permit an alien enemy to maintain his rights in the courts of the country against an actual assault thereon, as in this case. But see sections 1063, 1716, Code Civ. Proc.

If it should be the policy of the government to forfeit or otherwise dispose of the property of an alien enemy, then this property, if inherited by the appellant, is subject to such disposition, and the effect of the decree in this case was to deprive the United States government of any relief with reference thereto. And in this connection it may be observed that the Trading with the Enemy Act was amended November 4, 1918, to provide (section 1, subd. "c"):

"If the President shall so require any money or other property including * * * choses in action, and rights and claims of every character and description * * * belonging to * * * an enemy * * * which the President after investigation shall determine * * * belongs or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered or paid over to the alien property custodian, or the same may be seized by the alien property custodian; and all property thus acquired shall be held, administered and disposed of as elsewhere provided in this act."

Under the extraordinary circumstances shown by the affidavits of appellant and of his attorney, it was an abuse of discretion to refuse the continuance.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to continue the application for distribution of the estate until after peace is declared between Germany and the United States, and a reasonable opportunity has been thereafter granted to appellant to secure testimony upon which he relies to establish his claim to heirship.

1. PARTNERSHIP — 324—SUIT FOR ACCOUNTING AND DISSOLUTION—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

In suit between partners for an accounting and dissolution of the firm, temporary injunction was properly granted as an ancillary measure, to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of the case on its merits.

2. INJUNCTION — 135, 161—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

Granting, denying, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve a preliminary or temporary injunction rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, on a consideration of all the particular circumstances of each individual case.

3. INJUNCTION — 146—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION — COMPLAINT — DENIAL BY VERIFIED ANSWER.

A temporary injunction will not usually be granted on the complaint alone, when defendant files a verified answer specifically denying all its material allegations; but there may be peculiar circumstances justifying temporary injunction, even in the face of the absolute denials of the answer.

4. INJUNCTION — 147—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—DENIAL OF COMPLAINT—CONSIDERATION OF NEW CIRCUMSTANCES.

Where, on hearing of application for temporary injunction, defendant having filed verified answer specifically denying all the material allegations of the complaint, additional and peculiar circumstances are shown by testimony or by affidavits, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may consider such circumstances.

5. PARTNERSHIP — 324—SUIT FOR ACCOUNTING AND DISSOLUTION — TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

In suit between partners for an accounting and dissolution, where defendant's affidavits admitted the creation of the firm, and then merely set up matter constituting an avoidance of the averments of the complaint, rather than an absolute denial, and plaintiff filed a counter affidavit controverting defendant's affidavits, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff temporary injunction to preserve the status quo.

6. INJUNCTION — 158—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—ORDER—EFFECT.

Granting or denial of a preliminary injunction does not amount to an adjudication of the ultimate rights in controversy, but merely determines that the trial court, balancing equities, concludes that defendant should or should not be restrained from exercising rights claimed by him pending a trial on the merits.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by F. W. Kendall against W. R. Foulks. From an order granting a temporary injunction, and from an order refusing to dissolve it, defendant appeals. Orders affirmed.

Henry O. Wackerbarth, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. Burton Ceruti, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. The complaint in this action is in two counts. For the purposes of this opinion, it is necessary for us to consider only the allegations of the second count. In this count the plaintiff alleges, in effect, that on November 5, 1914, he and the defendant entered into a partnership agreement, for the purpose of engaging in the business of carting and hauling. At the time of the creation of the partnership the defendant was purchasing a motor truck under an installment contract. It was agreed that each of the parties should pay the vendor of the truck $50 per month from his own funds, until the balance of $750 due on the truck was paid. Plaintiff was to "drive and use said truck in said partnership business, for which services" he should receive, "out of the income of said business, the sum of $60 per month." After the payment of the balance due on the truck, and a further payment to defendant of $275 in certain installments, plaintiff was to become a joint owner of the truck with defendant. The parties agreed to share the cost of maintaining and repairing the truck. The complaint further alleged plaintiff's performance of all acts agreed by him to be performed under the partnership agreement, and that defendant had, from time to time, procured, obtained, secreted, and applied to his own use the receipts and profits of the business, aggregating a sum of money far in excess of his own share thereof; that he had deprived plaintiff of plaintiff's share thereof; that defendant had failed to apply moneys so received to the costs of the business, or to meet any of the payments to the vendor of the truck, as provided in the partnership agreement. It was also alleged that under said agreement plaintiff was entitled to the exclusive use and possession of said truck, and was charged with the duty of operating it; that on November 7, 1915, defendant fraudulently and by trick and device obtained possession of the truck, and ever since has maintained the exclusive possession of the truck, and has prevented the plaintiff from having access to the same, from participating in the partnership business, from discharging his duties in said business, and from participating in any of the profits; that defendant still collects the partnership debts and appropriates the proceeds to his own use, to the exclusion of plaintiff and greatly exceeding the proportion to which defendant was entitled, to the detriment of the firm's business and to plaintiff's injury. The complaint alleged that plaintiff is without adequate remedy at law, and that by reason of the acts complained of he has suffered and will suffer irreparable injury. The prayer of the complaint is for an accounting, for a dissolution of the partnership and a sale of its property, with a division of the proceeds between the partners, and for an injunction restraining defendant from interfering with plaintiff's possession and use of the truck and from interfering with the debts, moneys, or other property and effects of the partnership.

After an order to show cause, a temporary injunction was granted plaintiff, which purported to maintain the rights of the respective parties in statu quo pending the hearing of the merits. The hearing of the application for an injunction pendente lite was had upon the allegations of the complaint and the affidavits pro and con of the respective parties; no answer having been filed at the time of the hearing of the application.

The defendant appeals from the order granting the injunction, and also from an order refusing to dissolve the same; but, inasmuch as neither the motion to dissolve nor the order refusing to dissolve appears in the record, we need discuss only the appeal from the order granting the injunction.

[1, 2] Appellant's first point is to the effect that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for an injunction, nor does it appear therefrom that the plaintiff was without an adequate remedy at law, or that he had or would suffer irreparable injury. In considering this point, we must bear in mind the purpose for which the action is brought, and the object of the temporary injunction. The suit is being prosecuted for an accounting and for a dissolution of the partnership. The injunction is ancillary thereto, being granted in order to preserve the status quo pending the outcome of the case on its merits. This is a proper subject for the remedy of a temporary injunction. Raisch v. Warren, 18 Cal. App. 655, 124 Pac. 95; 2 High on Inj. (4th Ed.) § 1342; 30 Cyc. 725. However, we need not decide whether the complaint, in itself, states facts which, standing alone, suffice to support a temporary injunction. It is a rule so universally followed and so often stated as to need only to be referred to that granting, denying, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve a preliminary or temporary injunction rests in the sound discretion of the trial court upon a consideration of all the particular circumstances of each individual case. White v. Nunan, 60 Cal. 406; Marks v. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., 121 Cal. 53, 53 Pac. 362; Piper v. Hawley, 175 Pac. 417; 22 Cyc. 746. A careful consideration of the opposing affidavits of the respective parties, in connection with the complaint itself, satisfies us that the court below did not abuse its discretion in granting the injunction complained of.

[3-5] The appellant further urges that the injunction was improperly granted, because of the fact that the defendant met the complaint by affidavits denying the material allegations of the complaint. It may be conceded that the general rule is that a temporary injunction will not be granted upon the complaint alone, when defendant files a verified answer specifically denying all the material allegations of the complaint. Crandall v. Woods, 6 Cal. 449; Gagliardo v. Crippen, 22 Cal. 362. But this court has also held that there may be peculiar circumstances in a case justifying a temporary injunction even in the face of the absolute denials of the answer. De Godey v. Godey, 39 Cal. 157, 166; McCreery v. Brown, 42 Cal. 457. And where upon the hearing of the application, additional and peculiar circumstances are shown by testimony or by affidavits, the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may take these circumstances into consideration. Coolot v. C. P. R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 65; Hiller v. Collins, 63 Cal. 235; 2 High on Inj. (4th Ed.) §§ 1508, 1509. In the present case the affidavits of defendant admitted the creation of the partnership, and then merely set up matter which constituted an avoidance of the averments of the complaint, rather than an absolute, unequivocal denial. See 22 Cyc. 947. Furthermore, the plaintiff filed a counter affidavit controverting the affidavits presented by the defendant. Here, again, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion in granting the temporary injunction, after taking all the circumstances before it into consideration.

[6] Finally, appellant urges that specific performance of a partnership contract will not be decreed, and that an injunction cannot be granted to prevent a breach of a contract which will not be specifically enforced. But these rules do not apply to the case before us, since specific performance is not sought or given by the relief here granted. The relief sought is an accounting and dissolution, and the injunction simply preserves the subject-matter of the action to await the final disposition of the cause on the merits.

"The granting or denial of a preliminary injunction does not amount to an adjudication of the ultimate rights in controversy. It merely determines that the court, balancing the respective equities of the parties, concludes that, pending a trial on the merits, the defendant should or that he should not be restrained from exercising the rights claimed by him." Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal, etc., Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MORISAWA. (Cr. 2200.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 18, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §48, 50—INSANITY—IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE.

In order to establish defense of insanity in a criminal prosecution, it must be proved by preponderance of evidence that at time of committing act accused was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of mind, temporary or otherwise, as not to know nature and quality of act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong; and an irresistible impulse to commit an act which one knows is wrong or unlawful does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1160—REVIEW—APPROVAL OF VERDICT—INSANITY.

Where evidence in a criminal case was such that question of insanity was one for jury, and for trial court on motion for new trial, which was denied, an appellate court may not question correctness of conclusion reached.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

R. Morisawa was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. N. Vallandigham, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, and J. Charles Jones, of Sacramento, for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree for the killing of one N. Daitoku. He appeals from the judgment pronounced upon such conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The killing was admitted, and the defense was insanity. Complaint is made of the instructions given by the trial court as to the test of insanity. Upon this matter the instructions were in accord with the well-settled law of this state, being substantially to the effect that insanity interposed as a defense in a criminal prosecution means such a diseased and deranged condition of the mental faculties as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, in relation to the act with which he is charged; that in order to establish the defense, it must be proved by a preponderance of evidence that, at the time of committing the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, temporary or otherwise, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong; that if the defendant at the time he fired the shot at the deceased, if he did so fire, understood the nature of his act, and knew it was wrong and deserved punishment, he is legally responsible for his act, if committed as charged in the information; that the true test of insanity is whether at the time of committing the crime he was conscious that he was doing what he ought not to do; and that if the defendant was in that mental situation in which he did not appreciate the act he was committing, and he did not know it was wrong to do it, that, of course, would be a legal defense.

Counsel for defendant, as we understand it, claims that the instructions were erroneous in not including in addition to the elements stated, the element of "power" on the part of the defendant "to adhere to the right and avoid the wrong," "the power to govern his body." In other words and as it was put by the appellant in People v. Hoin, 62 Cal. 120, 45 Am. Rep. 651, "the mere intellectual knowledge of right and wrong is not enough to defeat a defense of insanity, unless with such knowledge the defendant also has the volitional power to choose the one instead of the other; * * * the power to do or not do the killing under the guidance of such knowledge." In the Hoin Case it was said by the court: "Such irresistible impulse to commit an act which he knows is wrong or unlawful * * * does not constitute the insanity which is a legal defense." This is now so firmly settled in California as not to require discussion. People v. Hoin, supra; Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 101 Cal. 342, 35 Pac. 856, 36 Pac. 813; People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 343, 38 Pac. 945; People v. Hubert, 119 Cal.

216, 223, 51 Pac. 329, 63 Am. St. Rep. 72; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 255, 262, 46 Pac. 1073; People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 11, 52 Pac. 112; People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 482, 489, 56 Pac. 251; People v. Methever, 132 Cal. 332, 64 Pac. 481.

[2] There is no merit in the claim that the evidence was such as to compel a conclusion that defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the homicide. The evidence was such that the question was one for the jury, and for the trial court on motion for a new trial, and an appellate court may not question the correctness of the conclusion there reached.

Examination of the record shows that the defendant was accorded every substantial right by the learned judge of the trial court, and that there is no good reason for a reversal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. HALL et al.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1011(1)—REVIEW—JUDGMENT ON CONFLICTING TESTIMONY.

The Supreme Court cannot interfere with the judgment of the trial court, based on testimony substantially in conflict.

2. DEDICATION §44 — STREET — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a city's action to quiet title to a strip of land across defendants' tract, as a street, evidence held to justify findings that the street, as extending across the land, never became dedicated to the public use.

3. DEDICATION §20(5) — STREET — CASUAL USER.

Something more than a mere casual user of a strip of land by the public as a street must be shown before any valid dedication will be implied.

4. DEDICATION §15 — INTENT — STREET.

There must be an intention on the part of the owner to devote the property to the public use before dedication of street is shown.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the City of San Diego against M. Hall and Etta Hall. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. B. Cosgrove, S. J. Higgins, and M. R. Thorp, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This action was brought by the city of San Diego to quiet its title across block 404 of Horton's addition. It was stipulated that the fee belongs to the defendants, but the city took the position that by use of this property for many years the public had obtained an easement for the extension of Horton avenue, a street 75 feet in width. Judgment was given in favor of the defendants, and the city appeals.

The map accompanying the record indicates that block 404 was one of the subdivisions of an addition placed upon the market some years ago. It is bounded upon all sides by dedicated streets. Horton avenue leads into Upas street, which bounds block 404 on its southerly side. The theory of the plaintiff is that Horton avenue was used by residents in that part of the city, and by the public generally, and that with the knowledge of the owners of the aforesaid block that part of block 404 which would have been a part of Horton avenue extended became a public highway by user.

The substance of the decision appears in the following findings:

"That said premises are not any part of Horton avenue in said city of San Diego, and have never been used by said city or by the public, or by any one, as a part of, or as a continuation of, Horton avenue in said city. That said defendants and their predecessors in interest have never used any part of said premises for street or highway purposes, and the same have not been used with the actual knowledge of the defendants, or the defendants' predecessors in interest for street purposes, and that there has been no adverse user of said premises or any part thereof by the plaintiff or by the public in general.

"That no part of the land described in plaintiff's complaint is a public street known or called Horton avenue, or any other street, or any part of a public street within the corporate limits of the city of San Diego."

[1, 2] The theory of the appellant is that these findings are not supported by the evidence, but that the uncontradicted testimony shows a user of this strip sought to be condemned. Our examination of the voluminous transcript, however, convinces us that the court acted in accordance with abundant testimony on behalf of respondents, and that this is one of those cases in which, there having been a substantial conflict in the testimony, this court may not interfere with the judgment. Some of the witnesses, called on behalf of respondents, testified that while there was a road wide enough for a wagon to traverse, extending in a general northerly and southerly direction across block 404, its location changed from year to year according to the fancy of those who had occasion to drive there, and that when grain was growing on the property residents in that part of the city went around the standing crop. Witnesses both for the plaintiff and the defendants testified that the roadway commonly used by people in that vicinity passed far to the west of the strip sought by the city to be condemned. Others testified that those crossing block 404 never used Horton avenue at all, but came in from a point far to the westward of Horton avenue as that street is delineated on the filed map presented in evidence. This testimony, if believed, would, of course, justify findings to the effect that Horton avenue, extended across block 404, never became dedicated to public use.

[3, 4] The record also fails to show that there was a user of any definitely delimited portion of block 404 continuously and adversely for five years with the knowledge of the owners or by their consent, direct or implied. This lack of proof supports the judgment, because something more than a mere casual user must be shown before any valid dedication will be implied. The rule upon this subject—a rule to the measure of which appellant's testimony fails to reach—was well expressed by Mr. Justice Sloss, speaking for the court in bank, in the case of F. A. Hihn Co. v. City of Santa Cruz and Union Traction Co., 170 Cal. 436-447, 150 Pac. 62-68:

"In order to constitute a valid dedication, there must be an intention on the part of the owner to devote his property to the public use. California Navigation Co. v. Union Transportation Co., 126 Cal. 433, 46 L. R. A. 825, 58 Pac. 936; Niles v. Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 572, 58 Pac. 190. It is true that this intent may be inferred from long acquiescence in a use by the public. 13 Cyc. 455. But where land is uninclosed and uncultivated, the fact that the public has been in the habit of going upon the land will ordinarily be attributed to a license on the part of the owner, rather than to his intent to dedicate. 13 Cyc. 484."

It follows that the judgment must be, and accordingly it is, affirmed.

SAECKER v. COHN. (L. A. 4747.)

1. EVIDENCE 335(1)—PATENTS—RECORDATION.

Since a patent from the United States for land may be recorded without acknowledgment under Civ. Code, § 1160, the record thereof is evidence of its contents, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1919, 1951.

2. PUBLIC LANDS 41—"CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE"—RECEIPT.

Receipt given at the receiver's office showing full payment for land purchased from the United States is a "certificate of purchase" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, providing that a certificate of purchase of lands sold by the United States, issued by the receiver of the United States land office, is prima facie evidence that the holder of the certificate is the owner of the land described.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Certificate of Purchase.]

3. EVIDENCE 181, 183(6)—RECORD OF RECEIPT—SECONDARY EVIDENCE—FOUNDATION.

Record of receipt given purchaser of land from United States is inadmissible as proof of the contents of the receipt, in the absence of preliminary proof of the loss of the original and the accuracy of the copy.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 231(5)—FAILURE TO URGE SPECIFIC OBJECTION—WAIVER OF ERROR.

Error in admission of secondary evidence without proper foundation will be disregarded on appeal where objection to the evidence on such ground was not raised in lower court.

5. NAMES 16(3)—TAXATION 758—IDEM SONANS—TAX DEED—SUFFICIENCY—RECITALS.

Tax deed reciting that property was assessed to "O. T. Kelley" is void, under Pol. Code, § 3785, where in fact property was assessed to "Charity S. Kelley"; former name not being idem sonans with the latter.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION 22—UNINCLOSED LAND USED AS PASTURAGE—INTERRUPTED USAGE.

Possession of wild uninclosed land by use thereof as pasturage during a few days in the spring and a few days in the fall held not that continuous and notorious adverse possession, which is necessary to give notice to the owner that some other person is claiming land, where on two occasions during the five-year period preceding the action there was an interval of an entire year when the land was wholly unoccupied and where there was no proof that the land was being occupied by others during such time.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; M. T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by H. J. Saecker against C. Cohn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant.

The complaint alleges a cause of action to quiet the title of plaintiff to a certain quarter section of land described, situated in Kern county. The answer denied the plaintiff's ownership, and alleged that the defendant is the owner of the premises under a tax deed from the state of California, that the plaintiff claims title adverse to the defendant, and asks that the defendant's title be quieted as against the claim of plaintiff. It also avers that the action is barred by section 318 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The court found that the defendant is the owner of the land, that the plaintiff has no title thereto, and that the plaintiff's action is barred by section 318 aforesaid. Thereupon judgment was given for the defendant. It is claimed that the findings in favor of the defendant are not sustained by the evidence.

[1-4] The defendant interposes the preliminary objection that the evidence does not show any title in the plaintiff, citing Williams v. San Pedro, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 49, 94 Pac. 234. The plaintiff claims title under one John F. Maio. To prove the acquisition of the title by Maio from the United States the plaintiff offered in evidence the record of deeds in the office of the county recorder of Kern county, showing the record of a document purporting to be a receipt given at the "receiver's office at Visalia, Cal.," dated April 14, 1893, by R. L. Freeman as receiver, to John F. Maio, for $198.13, as full payment for the quarter section in question at $1.25 per acre. The defendant objected to the admission of the record on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. This objection was overruled, and the record admitted as evidence. A certificate of purchase or location of lands sold by the United States, issued by the receiver of the United States land office of the proper district, is prima facie evidence that the holder of the certificate is the owner of the land described therein. Code Civ. Proc. § 1925; Witcher v. Conklin, 84 Cal. 499, 24 Pac. 302. A patent from the United States for land may be recorded without acknowledgment, and consequently the record thereof is evidence of its contents. Civ. Code, § 1160; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1951, 1919. But this receipt, although a certificate of purchase within the meaning of section 1925 (Witcher v. Conklin, supra), is not a patent. We know of no law authorizing such receipt to be recorded, at least unless its execution is acknowledged, nor of any authority for the proposition that such record can be admitted as proof of the contents of the receipt, in the absence of the preliminary proof of the loss of the original and of the accuracy of the copy, as in other cases of secondary evidence. The objection was in the general form that the evidence was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial." It would have been both material and relevant if it had been competent, and it would have been competent if the preliminary foundation had been laid as above indicated. The objection that no sufficient foundation had been laid was not made nor was the defect we have stated pointed out to the court below. Indeed, it is not argued in the briefs. Therefore, even if we concede, although we by no means decide, that a defect in plaintiff's proof, if vital, inherent, and incurable, might be good cause for affirming a judgment given for the defendant upon an affirmative defense, without inquiry into the merits of the plaintiff's appeal, we should disregard the error. We mention it solely because we find it necessary to reverse the judgment for the defendant and remand the case for a new trial, and the point might then become important to the plaintiff.

[5] The defendant claims title to the land under a tax deed from the tax collector of Kern county to L. Cohn and also by adverse possession under color of title. The validity of the tax title depends upon the deed made by the tax collector to the state of California in 1904, based upon a sale of the land for the taxes of 1898. The land was assessed in 1898 to Charles F. Maio, but no tax was levied against this assessment, because the valuation was all absorbed by a mortgage deduction. The mortgage interest was assessed to Charity S. Kelley, and a tax was levied thereon, for the nonpayment of which the tax sale was made. The law in force at the time of the sale, and at the time of the execution of the deed to the state in 1904 required this deed to recite "the name of the person assessed." Pol. Code, § 3785. The deed to the state aforesaid recited that the property was assessed in the year 1898 to "O. T. Kelley." This name cannot be said to be idem sonans with "Charity S. Kelley," and it follows that the recital is erroneous with respect to the name. For this reason the deed is void, and the defendant can maintain no valid claim of title thereunder. Henderson v. De Turk, 164 Cal. 296, 128 Pac. 747.

The defendant's claim of title by adverse possession is based upon the following facts which the evidence in his favor tends to show: The tax collector, acting under the above-mentioned deed to the state which we have held to be void, sold the land to L. Cohn, and in pursuance of such sale executed a deed therefor to him on June 17, 1907. This deed was recorded on July 6, 1907. The affairs of L. Cohn with respect to this land were conducted by the defendant C. Cohn, who was his agent for that purpose. On May 23, 1914, L. Cohn conveyed the land to the defendant, who thereafter acted for himself.

In July, 1907, the defendant, as agent for L. Cohn, leased the land to the Kern County Land Company for grazing purposes for the remainder of that year. From that time until the trial the lease was orally renewed from year to year. The occupancy of the land, which it is claimed amounts to adverse possession, was maintained solely by the Kern County Land Company under these leases. At the time of the first lease and until the fall of 1912, the land was uninclosed. In the fall of 1912, about two years before this action was begun, the land company erected a fence which inclosed this and other lands in its possession in one inclosure; the whole area being about 1,000 acres. Prior to this inclosure the land constituted a part of a large tract of open country about 20 miles long and 9 miles wide, all of which was unimproved and uncultivated, and was used only for grazing, and was not suitable for any other purpose. The adverse possession which it is claimed existed during this period by reason of the occupancy of the land company consisted of the use by it of this land for grazing sheep and cattle thereon.

The defendant rests his case upon the question of adverse possession on the decision in Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431. In that case, as in this, the land was not inclosed or cultivated, and no one resided upon it. The surrounding country was open, uninclosed, uncultivated, and unimproved. The adverse claimant and his grantors herded their sheep upon the land during the grazing season of each year, that is to say, from February to July. During the rest of the year the land was "not pasturable" for sheep and was entirely unoccupied. The court said, referring to subdivision 3, § 323, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 573:

"We think that pasturing during the pasturing season is 'appropriate use, according to the particular locality and quality of the property.' To pasture the land when it was 'not pasturable' would not only be not an appropriate use, but an impracticable one. In the case of cultivation, there is an interval of several months between the harvesting of one crop and the preparation of the soil for another. And there would be just as much sense in holding that the interval destroyed the continuity of the possession in the one case as in the other. * * * It is sufficient that the use is in accordance with the usual course of husbandry in the locality."

Upon this reasoning it was held that the defendant had made out a case of adverse possession.

[6] The proof in the present case does not come up to the measure of that which was made in Webber v. Clarke. The land company was pasturing sheep and cattle over that region of the country, which included this particular tract of land. This stock was kept in charge of herders. The agent of the company testified in general terms that he had sheep on the land during the grazing season; that is, during the time there was feed there, in each year of the period in question. But on cross-examination, when he was asked to give the details of this occupation, he stated that he pastured the land for a few days in the spring and a few days in the fall each year, with the exception that he could not say that he had stock on the land at all in the fall of 1908; that he had no stock on the land in the spring of 1909, but had some cattle there in the fall of 1909; that in 1911 he had sheep thereon in the spring, but no stock whatever there in the fall of that year nor until the spring of 1912. During the time when he was pasturing the land with sheep or cattle, they would remain thereon only for seven or eight days, in the spring or fall as the case may be. It thus appears that he had sheep on the land in the fall of 1908, and that there was no use whatever of the land thereafter until the fall of 1909, nor during the time from the spring of 1911 until the spring of 1912. On two occasions, therefore, during the five-year period next before the beginning of the action, there was an interval of an entire year when the land was wholly unoccupied by the tenant of Cohn. Furthermore, in the present case there is no proof that during the long intervals when the land company was not pasturing the land other people were not occupying the same. Such occupancy is wholly insufficient to constitute that open, continuous, and notorious adverse possession which is necessary to give notice to the owner thereof that some other person is claiming his land. There is no evidence that the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest had any knowledge whatever of the use or occupation of the land company, or of the claim of Cohn. The proof was substantially the same as that considered in De Frieze v. Quint, 94 Cal. 653, 660, 30 Pac. 1, 28 Am. St. Rep. 151, and which the court there held was insufficient to prove adverse possession. The court there said that to set the statute of limitations in motion and constitute adverse possession the occupancy of the land—

"must be sufficiently open and notorious to notify an ordinarily prudent owner of its existence, and of its hostile character, unless he is otherwise actually notified of these facts; and to be available against persons dealing with the owner for the land, the occupancy must be of such a character, at least, as should put them upon inquiry as to the title of the occupant, * * * and the burden of proving all the essential elements of an adverse possession, including its hostile character, is upon the party relying upon it."

It follows that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the defendant had acquired title to the land, either under the tax deed or by adverse possession.

The judgment is reversed.

ELLIS v. BONEBREAK. (L. A. 4799.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1919.)

NEGLIGENCE — 142—ABSENCE OF SPECIFIC FINDING OF NEGLIGENCE—EFFECT.

Though the general allegation of negligence in the complaint is sufficient to support a judgment, the cause must be reversed, where there is no specific finding of negligence and the probative findings made do not lead to the inevitable conclusion of negligence.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Roy Ellis against A. S. Bonebreak. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Richard A. Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment for $500 obtained in an action for personal damages. The findings of fact, which are supported by the evidence, are in substance as follows: On the 22d day of July, 1915, plaintiff, accompanied by a lady, was walking in a westerly direction on the north side of Hammel street, in the county of Los Angeles. Hammel street is a public highway, and is without the limits of any incorporated city or town. The pedestrians were walking "just a little north of the center of the highway," the lady being at plaintiff's right. Defendant, who was driving a motorcar, approached them from the rear. According to the findings "the defendant was not operating his automobile on the wrong side of Hammel street, and was not operating it at a careless or dangerous rate of speed, but was operating it at the rate of 20 miles an hour. As the defendant approached the pedestrians he saw them in front of him for more than a block, and did not sound any horn until he was within 100 feet of them, when he did sound a horn loud enough for them to hear if they had been paying strict attention. He did not, however, slacken the speed of his automobile at that point, but continued at the same speed until he was within about 25 or 30 feet" of the pedestrians. Meantime neither of them had changed position on the highway, nor had they indicated in any manner that they had heard the blowing of the horn. Thereupon he immediately slackened his speed, again sounded the horn, and swerved to the left for the purpose of passing them. When the automobile was somewhere between 6 and 15 feet of them, the lady leaped to her right and avoided injury. The plaintiff, who looked around at that time, leaped to the left in front of the automobile, and as soon as the defendant saw that the pedestrians were changing their course, he immediately put the brakes on the machine and stopped it as quickly as it was possible for him to bring it to a standstill. It was further found that—"If the plaintiff and Bertha Liebig had continued in their original course, he would have passed around them in the course he took by swerving to the left, and neither of them would have been injured."

It was also found that there was plenty of room on the street for the defendant to have swerved farther to the left than he did, thus avoiding the plaintiff. The plaintiff was struck by the machine, and received injuries which need not be here enumerated, for the reason that no point is made by appellant that the judgment is excessive. As conclusions of law from the facts found the court determined that plaintiff was entitled to recover from defendant in the amount named.

Appellant insists that the cause must be reversed because there was no formal finding of negligence on the part of the defendant. Respondent contends that the probative findings support a conclusion that the defendant was guilty of negligence. With this latter theory we cannot agree. While it is true that the complaint does contain a general allegation that all the injuries were caused proximately by defendant's negligence and without any carelessness on plaintiff's part, the specific averments were that the automobile was driven at excessive speed and on the wrong side of the street, and that no warning was given. The court found against these alleged instances of negligence. If we assume that the general allegation of negligence was sufficient to support a judgment, nevertheless we are confronted by the fact that there was no specific finding of negligence. The probative findings as made do not lead to the one inevitable conclusion of negligence; therefore the absence of a specific finding upon that subject compels this court to order the case to the superior court for another trial.

VARNEY BROS. & CO v. ABBOTT et al.
(Civ. 2562.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨757(1) — BRIEFS — REQUISITES.

Where on appeal the parties have failed to print in their briefs such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, and no part of the clerk's transcript containing the judgment roll has been printed, and the evidence is incompletely set forth in the briefs, the appellate court will not search the typewritten transcripts.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1073(7) — HARMLESS ERROR — JUDGMENT.

A defendant cannot complain of a judgment rendered upon an open account against it, because the evidence showed there was an account stated by the parties, claimed by defendant to be for $913, where the amount of the judgment did not exceed $804, the amount claimed in the complaint, and the record showed that defendant stipulated that the account stated by plaintiff was correct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Varney Bros. & Co. against H. S. Abbott and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant H. S. Abbott appeals. Affirmed.

Ault & Chase, of Calexico, for appellant.
Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1] The appeal of the defendant H. S. Abbott from the judgment in this case is presented upon a typewritten reporter's transcript and a typewritten clerk's transcript under the alternative method of presenting records on appeal. It has been held many times by the Supreme Court and by the several District Courts of Appeal that those courts will not search the typewritten transcripts where the parties have failed to "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Code Civ. Proc. § 953c. In this case no part of the clerk's transcript containing the judgment roll has been printed, and the evidence is very incompletely set forth in the briefs. In the brief for appellant it is said that "the solitary ground of appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings." But counsel have not set out any part of the pleadings so as to show what were the issues; have not set out the terms of any of the findings; have not pointed out the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient to sustain any one of the findings.

Appellant informs us that the judgment was rendered upon an open account of the plaintiff corporation against the defendant partnership and its members. He claims that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment upon that account for two reasons: First, that the evidence showed that there was an account stated by the parties; and, second, that there had been a novation whereby another agreement and a promissory note executed by the debtor took the place of the pre-existing account.

[2] So far as the first point is concerned, it is clear that appellant has no ground of complaint against the judgment, for he claims that the account stated was in the sum of $913.22, whereas he says that the amount asked for in the complaint was $804.37. We are likewise informed by the briefs that the amount of the judgment did not exceed the amount thus claimed in the complaint. The record, as far as printed in respondent's brief, shows that it was stipulated on the part of the defendant that the account as stated by plaintiff was correct.

Those portions of the evidence contained in the brief for appellant when supplemented by those portions set forth in the brief for respondent, show that negotiations took place between the defendant and some of its creditors, including the plaintiff, which negotiations, if they had been carried to completion according to their apparent intention, might have substituted a new obligation for the original indebtedness. But a part of the evidence thus presented tends to show that those negotiations did not result in a complete transaction, and that the parties did not do all of the things necessary to constitute a new agreement.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 1887.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 3, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 3, 1919.)

1. DEEDS ⇨90 — CONSTRUCTION.

In construing a deed to ascertain the interest that was conveyed, the entire instrument must be considered.

2. DEEDS ⇨144(1) — CONSTRUCTION — CONDITIONS — RE-ENTRY CLAUSE.

The claims of a reversionary interest will be upheld, although conveyance does not contain a re-entry clause, where the language of the conveyance plainly imports that the grant conveys only a conditional fee.

3. DEEDS ☞97—CONSTRUCTION—CONFLICT BETWEEN GRANTING AND HOLDING CLAUSES.

Where there is a conflict between the granting and the holding clauses, the granting clause will prevail.

4. EASEMENTS ☞1—CONDITIONAL FEE OR EASEMENTS.

Where property was conveyed to city upon express condition that the city use the property for excavation and as a waterway and drain, and for no other purpose, the city acquired a conditional fee and not merely an easement in the property.

5. REMAINDERS ☞17(3)—ADVERSE POSSESSION.

No adverse possession can ever be acquired as against a remainderman so long as the life tenant or the party who holds the conditional fee is in possession, or has not been ousted for conditions broken.

6. ADVERSE POSSESSION ☞8(1)—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—PUBLIC CHANNEL.

Land situated within the boundaries or exterior lines of a waterway and drain cannot be acquired by adverse possession; the use thereof for the purpose of waterway and drain being a public use under Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 12.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION ☞8(1)—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO—PUBLIC USE.

Where city has conditional fee in land for purpose of waterway and drain with the right to excavate for such purpose, the right to the use of land within the boundaries of waterway constructed by city, for purpose of supports for a platform and small building used as a paint shop, cannot be acquired by adverse possession.

8. QUIETING TITLE ☞52—SUFFICIENCY OF JUDGMENT—LAND NOT IN DISPUTE.

In action to quiet title against adverse claims, where defendants disclaimed interest in a portion of the land, no finding or judgment was required as to such portion of the land.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ☞877(4)—REVIEW—ERRORS REVIEWABLE.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff appealing from judgment for defendant cannot complain that judgment was not sufficiently certain as to the interest of one of the defendants, where such defendant did not appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by A. Martin against the City of Stockton and another, in which defendants filed cross-complaint. Judgment for defendants and cross-complainants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter and R. C. Minor, both of Stockton, for appellants.

Daniel V. Marceau and O. B. Parkinson, both of Stockton, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to quiet title to a certain parcel of land in the city of Stockton. The defendants answered and filed a cross-complaint, by which it appears that they claim title to a portion of the property, the city claiming a conditional fee, and Kile the reversionary interest; but both disclaiming any interest or claim in or to the residue of the land described in plaintiff's complaint. The court found in accordance with the contention of defendants and cross-complainants, and from the judgment in their favor the appeal has been taken. The trial judge, Hon. J. A. Plummer, gave careful consideration to the questions involved, and he filed a written opinion which presents a clear and comprehensive view of the law of the case, and we adopt it as the opinion of this court, as follows:

"The testimony shows that the premises in controversy are situated within the boundaries or exterior lines of that certain waterway passing through the city of Stockton, known as and called 'Miner's Channel.' On behalf of the plaintiff, it is alleged and shown by the testimony that he and his grantors have, for more than 20 years preceding the commencement of this action, occupied a portion of said lots by building and maintaining on such portion a platform and small building used as a paint shop; the supports to said platform and building resting upon the real estate above described. But, during said period of time, the structures referred to have not interfered with the uses and purposes to which the city of Stockton has devoted said channel.

"It also appears from the testimony that Miner's Channel, for more than 50 years, has been used as a drain, or waterway, and has been, during that period of time, necessary for the purpose of draining a large portion of the city of Stockton, and obviating the recurrent floods of the winter seasons; that, during said period of time, said Miner's Channel has been and still is devoted to the uses herein set forth; that said channel has been and now is necessary for such purposes and, during all of said period, has been necessary for the conserving of the public health and safety of a large portion of the residents of Stockton.

"It further appears by the testimony that on or about the 20th day of September, 1879, Joseph Kile, then the owner of the premises involved in this action, executed and delivered to the defendant city a certain grant, bargain, and sale deed, conveying all of the disputed premises to the defendant city, the material portions of which instrument of conveyance are as follows:

"Now, therefore, the said party of the first part * * * has granted, bargained and sold, conveyed and confirmed, and (subject to the conditions, limitations and restrictions hereinafter expressed) does hereby grant, bargain and sell, convey and confirm, unto the said party of the second part, and to its successors forever, all those certain portions of lots seven (7), nine (9), eleven (11) and fifteen (15) in block number seventy-four (74), east of Center street, which lie north of the southerly line of Miller's Slough or Channel.'

"The said portions of said lots 7 and 9 are the premises involved herein. Said deed contains the further provision and condition:

"Providing, however, and this conveyance is made and accepted upon this express condition, limitation and restriction, that said party of the second part, and its successors forever, shall use said premises for excavation, and as a waterway and drain only, and for no other purposes whatsoever; and provided further that said party of the second part shall bulkhead the sides of said channel adjacent to the above described premises, as soon as said channel shall be excavated through the same, and shall thereafter maintain said bulkhead at the expense of the party of the second part,' etc.

"The testimony shows that, following the execution and delivery of the deed just set forth, the city proceeded to bulkhead the sides of said channel, and has ever since said date maintained the granted premises as required by said deed of conveyance and used the same in accordance with the conditions and limitations required by said instrument.

"Plaintiff claims title by adverse possession (asserting that he and his grantors have held the premises openly, notoriously, and under claim of right and ownership), and that, if he is not entitled to be awarded a full fee in the premises, his claim of title be adjudged valid and be quieted, as against the defendant Kile, as to the fee in said premises; and, as against the city, subject only to the right of the city to use said channel for a waterway or drain (i. e., limiting the right or ownership of the city to an easement only).

"It is also insisted that, by reason of the fact that no re-entry clause was inserted in said deed from Joseph Kile to the city, no reversionary interest is now owned or possessed by the defendant Kile, who is the successor to whatever title, if any, belonged to said Joseph Kile after the execution of the instrument of conveyance by Joseph Kile to the defendant city.

[1-3] "In order to ascertain just what the deed (of Joseph Kile) means, and what interest was conveyed to the city, the entire instrument must be considered. It is not material that a re-entry clause is not included in a conveyance, before the court will uphold the claim of a reversionary interest, if the language of the conveyance plainly imports that the grant conveys only a conditional fee. Where there is any conflict between the granting and the holding clauses in this particular, the rules of interpretation require that the granting clauses shall prevail. But in the instrument under consideration the granting clause contains (as hereinbefore stated) the following words: 'Subject to the conditions, limitations and restrictions hereinafter expressed.' The limitations and conditions thereafter expressed in the instrument became, by the very words just quoted, as much a part of the granting clause of the deed from Joseph Kile to the city of Stockton as though they were set forth letter by letter in the granting clause. And when we look at the holding clause, we find that the deed specifies and particularizes the purposes for which it is granted, and the conditions and limitations imposed upon the city.

plaintiff that, if a reversionary interest exists in the defendant Kile, the city obtained only an easement, and that plaintiff's claim of title by adverse possession should be held good as against the defendant Kile. But this claim is not borne out by the deed under consideration. The granting clause is the same as in any ordinary deed of conveyance, transferring title from Joseph Kile to the city, of the real estate embraced within the description of the premises, as fully and completely as words can accomplish. The condition attached does not change the fee to an easement, but it does vest in the city a conditional fee, which the city and its grantees may hold and enjoy forever, with the right to use the same for the purposes conveyed, and to remove any portion of the earth therein contained, subject only to the limitation as to the place of disposal of the dirt removed. The fact that the conveyance is conditional does not transform the ownership of the city from a fee to an easement. The language of the deed from Joseph Kile to the city is almost identical with that used in the deed the construction of which was involved in the case of Papst v. Hamilton, 133 Cal. 632, 633, 66 Pac. 10, where it was held that such a deed transferred a conditional estate and left in the grantor a reversionary interest, which interest he might assert in the event of an abandonment of the purposes for which the conveyance was made, or of a failure to comply with the conditions, and insist upon forfeiture as fully and completely as though a re-entry clause had been specifically set forth in the instrument of conveyance. The doctrine of that case has been reaffirmed in Fitzgerald v. County of Modoc, 164 Cal. 490, 493, 129 Pac. 794, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1229.

[5] "Irrespective of the conclusion to be arrived at herein as to the respective rights between the plaintiff and the defendant city, it is clear from the foregoing that, following the case of Pryor v. Winter, 147 Cal. 554, 82 Pac. 202, 109 Am. St. Rep. 162 (see, also, Potrero Nuevo L. Co. v. All Persons, 29 Cal. App. 754, 755, 743, 156 Pac. 876, A. H. A.) the plaintiff has acquired nothing, either by the act of himself or his grantors, as against defendant Kile. No adverse possession can ever be acquired as against a remainderman, so long as the life tenant or party who holds the conditional fee is in possession or has not been ousted for conditions broken.

"The testimony in this case shows that the compliance by the city of Stockton with the conditions of the deed from Joseph Kile (under which it claims title) has been continuous, consistent, and fully in accordance with the requirements of that deed.

"The second question for determination herein is: Has the plaintiff, by reason of the use of the premises, in the manner set forth, by himself and his grantors for a period exceeding 20 years, acquired any rights therein against the city?

"That Miner Channel, for the purpose of a waterway and a drain, has been for more than 50 years devoted to a public use, and that the use to which it has been devoted is a public use, is clearly established by the testimony, and the law relating to such projects. Billings Sugar Co. v. Fish, 40 Mont. 256, 106 Pac. 565, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 20 Ann. Cas. 264-272 (and note, p. 273, A. H. A.); Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 12, etc.

[6, 7] "In some states, the doctrine is admitted that title to property devoted to a public use may be acquired by adverse possession; but in this state no such principle prevails. Whenever the subject has come before the court for final determination, it has been held and decided that no rights can thus be acquired in and to the public property, or property devoted to a public use, or owned by a municipality for public uses. The mere fact that the municipal officers have been either ignorant of, or indifferent to, the public rights of a municipality, does not enable any trespasser thereon to acquire any ownership therein, or divest the city of one particle of its fee in the estate involved. Nor can the claim of a split or divided fee in and to the premises involved in this action be admitted. The existence of such a doctrine in this state is denied in Patton v. City of Los Angeles, 169 Cal. 521, 147 Pac. 141 (which case is cited with approval in Central Pacific Co. v. Droge, 171 Cal. 40, 32, 151 Pac. 663). But were such a doctrine a rule of decision in this state, it could not be applied, under the circumstances, to the case at bar. Here, the city has an absolute right to go upon the premises and dig up and remove the soil. This is utterly inconsistent with any rights claimed by the plaintiff to rest any structure thereon, and this court knows of no authority by which any one can acquire title to real estate by inclosing the air which circulates above it. That is all that plaintiff could or can claim in this action, where the undisputed right of the city to remove everything beneath the air clearly exists. The fact that Miner Channel crosses a large portion of the territory included within the limits of the city of Stockton, and that a number of other persons are claiming rights against the city under similar conditions, has caused the court to give this matter careful and thorough consideration.

"It follows, from what has been said, that the city of Stockton owns a conditional fee in the premises involved herein; that the defendant Kile is the owner of a reversionary interest in the same premises; that no adverse possession has been acquired against his reversionary interest; that, the property being devoted to a public use, no rights as against the city have been or can be acquired by the plaintiff; and that the prayer of the complaint should be denied."

To the authorities cited by Judge Plummer we may add: Howard v. Oroville School District, 22 Cal. App. 544, 135 Pac. 689, and City of Daly v. Holbrook, 178 Pac. 725.

In considering the foregoing opinion of the trial judge, it must, of course, be understood that his attention was directed to the question of whether title by prescription could be acquired as against the city. He did not have in view the doctrine of estoppel whereby even a municipality is sometimes precluded from claiming title to real property. Such was the case of City of Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 373, 35 Pac. 1002. No such claim was made herein, nor was there any evidence to support it.

[8] Appellant complains that no judgment was entered in his favor for the portion of the lots which, it was admitted, he owns. Since, however, defendants disclaimed any interest therein and admitted that plaintiff was and is the owner thereof, no finding thereon was required and no judgment was necessary. His action was to quiet his title against the adverse claims of defendants; but, the latter having disclaimed any interest whatever as to a portion of the property, the action might have been dismissed as to that. But, at any rate, in view of the whole judgment roll there can be no future controversy between the parties to this action as to the questions involved in this litigation.

[9] Appellant, of course, cannot complain that the judgment is not sufficiently certain as to the interest of J. M. Kile. As long as the latter is satisfied with that judgment, the former should be contented.

We find no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem.

In re MASH. (Civ. 2480.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 3, 1919. On Rehearing in Supreme Court, in Bank, April 4, 1919.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐61—DISBARMENT—REINSTATEMENT.

The District Court of Appeal will reinstate attorney who has been disbarred for delinquencies in past life if convinced that there has been a reformation and that he will, in the future, be a law-abiding citizen and show a proper regard for the duties and responsibilities of his profession.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐61—DISBARMENT—APPLICATION FOR REINSTATEMENT—NATURE.

Application for reinstatement by attorney previously disbarred is not in the nature of an application to relieve applicant from punishment or to give him an opportunity to reform, and is not to be regarded as a motion to vacate order revoking previous order admitting him to practice, but is to be considered as an application for admission on examination or production of license of another state, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 276, 279; in either case a good moral character being essential to admission.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐3, 4—ADMISSION TO PRACTICE—COURT OF APPEALS—GOOD CHARACTER.

The power to admit persons to practice law is vested exclusively in the District Court of Appeals, which is required to determine from the testimonials produced whether applicant is of good moral character.

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT — 7—ADMISSION TO PRACTICE—DECISION OF DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS—REVIEW.

The Supreme Court will not interfere with the finding of the District Court of Appeals as to moral character of applicant for admission to practice, unless the record and proceedings in that court show that an error of law led to the decision, or the evidence was wholly insufficient to establish the good moral character of the applicant, or so slight as to be grossly inadequate.

In the matter of the application of Samuel L. Mash for reinstatement as attorney at law. Application granted. Petition for rehearing before Supreme Court denied.

Samuel M. Shortridge, of San Francisco, for applicant.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, of San Francisco, for respondent San Francisco Bar Ass'n.

WASTE, P. J. This is an application by Samuel L. Mash for an order restoring him to the roll of attorneys and counselors at law, entitled to practice in the courts of this state.

It appears from the record that the applicant heretofore, upon the presentation to this court of a license to practice law granted to him by the Supreme Court of the state of Iowa, was admitted to the bar of this state, and that subsequently such license to practice law was revoked, for the reason that the applicant concealed from this court certain delinquencies in his past life which this court held it was his duty to disclose, and which if disclosed would have led this court to deny his application, the statute law of this state requiring that only persons of good moral character shall be licensed to practice law in its courts.

[1] In considering the present petition the decisive question to be determined is whether Mash is at the present time a man of good moral character, and a fit and proper person to practice law and to be intrusted with the duties and accorded the privileges incident to that practice. The applicant is now advanced in years; and, while the record discloses serious delinquencies in his past life, he has produced to this court the testimony of many citizens of this community, including that of business men, judges, reputable members of the bar, ministers of religion, which shows a complete reformation, and that for more than three years last past Mash has lived an upright, industrious, and honorable life, and is a man of good moral character. This having been admitted at the hearing, it is our opinion that neither the vindication of the integrity of the bar, nor the maintenance of a proper standard of legal ethics, requires the permanent exclusion of the applicant from the practice of the law. In a matter of this kind, as in others, there may well be a locus penitentiae; and, where the present conduct of an attorney satisfies the court that the continuance of his disbarment is no longer necessary, it should not be required. This view we regard as in accord with the spirit of our institutions, as evidenced by our reform schools, and our parole system as applied to persons convicted of offenses against the law, which have satisfactorily demonstrated that wrongdoers, if given an opportunity, are frequently capable of reforming. In considering an application such as the present, while of course we cannot ignore past delinquencies, we must accord prime importance to the present manner of life and conduct of the applicant; and if we are convinced that there really has been a reformation, and that the disbarred attorney will in the future be a law-abiding citizen, and show a proper regard for the duties and responsibilities of his profession, we will lift the ban that past lapses necessitated placing upon him. People v. Payson, 215 Ill. 476, 74 N. E. 383; People v. Essington, 32 Colo. 168, 75 Pac. 394; In re Simpson, 11 N. D. 526, 93 N. W. 918; In re Burris, 147 Cal. 370, 81 Pac. 1077.

The application is granted.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing of this matter before the Supreme Court is denied.

[2, 3] The application to the district court is not to be regarded as a motion to vacate the order previously made by that court revoking its original order admitting Mash to practice law. That order stands unaffected. His present application to that court is to be considered as an application for admission to the bar, either on examination in open court and "testimonials of good moral character," under section 276 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or for admission on production of a license from a sister state "and satisfactory evidence of good moral character," under section 279, Code of Civil Procedure. In either case a good moral character was essential to his admission. The power to admit persons to practice law is now vested exclusively in the District Court of Appeal, and consequently it is to that court that the "satisfactory evidence," or the "testimonials," as the case may be, are to be produced, and it is for that court to determine whether they are sufficient to establish the moral character required. Such a decision is a finding upon a question of fact.

[4] Our functions in such a case are supervisory only. We have no original authority to admit persons to practice law. Hence, we should not interfere with the decision of the District Court of Appeal upon such question of fact, unless the record and proceedings in that court show that an error of law led it to the decision, or that the evidence was either wholly insufficient to establish the good moral character of the applicant, or so slight as to be grossly inadequate.

The fact that we refuse to order the matter transferred to this court for a rehearing is, of course, not to be understood as an indication that we have examined the evidence and have found it sufficient, or that we are satisfied of the fact, or that we have any opinion on the subject except that evidence was produced to that court, which, if believed and given full effect according to the tenor, would support the finding of that court.

It should always be kept in mind that in determining such a question the District Court of Appeal is not considering an application to relieve the applicant from punishment or to give him an opportunity to reform, but that its sole object is to determine whether or not the character of the applicant is such that he should be admitted to an office of trust and recommended to the public as a trustworthy person fit to be consulted by others in matters of confidence. A certificate of admission to practice law is a standing affirmation that he is of that character, and it invites others to enter into intimate confidential relations with him. The interest and safety of those who may be thus led to consult him should be regarded as the end to be accomplished. Upon the record we must assume that the District Court of Appeal considered the case upon these principles.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by G. A. Lathrop and others against Mary F. Francis. From an order refusing to dissolve an attachment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. Arnold and Matthews S. Platz, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Geo. E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from an order refusing to dissolve an attachment for $15,600.

Plaintiffs are trustees in liquidation of the West Virginia Oil Company. From the allegations of the complaint it appears that on June 10, 1911, defendant sold to one E. S. Good an option to purchase certain described land in Kern county; that in the following month said Good agreed to sell said option to the West Virginia Oil Company; that on July 29, 1911, defendant and Good entered into a written contract whereby she agreed to sell and he promised to buy all of her right, title, and interest in and to said property for a certain sum, a part of which, namely, $10,000, was then and there paid; that on January 9, 1912, E. S. Good executed and delivered to West Virginia Oil Company an assignment of all his interest in the last-named contract; that on January 29, 1912, a certain supplementary contract was executed by Mary F. Francis and the West Virginia Oil Company modifying the contract of July 29, 1911, by extending the time of payment of certain of the installments of the purchase price; and that thereupon the corporation paid to Mrs. Francis $5,000 principal and $600 interest on the purchase price of $70,000. This sum, together with the $10,000 previously paid, nominally by Good, but really by the corporation, his assignee, makes up the sum of $15,600, for recovery of which the respondents insist was stated a cause of action justifying the issuance of the writ of attachment.

Under the contracts set forth in the complaint the oil company entered into possession of the property and expended $70,000 in an endeavor to develop oil. Both before and after the acquisition by the West Virginia Oil Company of Mr. Good's interest, Mrs. Francis had represented to that corporation that her right, title, and interest in said land was unincumbered by any claims or contracts; whereas, there was at all said times an outstanding contract, executed by defendant's predecessor in interest, giving to one Fox a lease with an option to purchase, and the existence of said agreement was not known to the corporation before it had made the payments above described and had expended the $70,000 for development. Upon hearing of the defect of the title the officers of the corporation refused to make further payments, and on October 1, 1912, Mrs. Francis notified the West Virginia Oil Company, in writing, that all of its right, title, and interest to the land had been forfeited. Thereafter she re-entered into possession of the property and held it at the time of the institution of the action.

There were allegations that the false representations regarding title were fraudulently made by Mrs. Francis. The plaintiffs demanded and prayed judgment for the $15,600 paid under the contracts and for the $70,000 expended in development work.

Respondents concede that the action for the $70,000 is not based upon a contract for the direct payment of money by the defendant. Their position is that they have joined, as they have the right to do, an action sounding in tort with one based upon an implied contract (subdivision 8, § 427, Code Civ. Proc.; Jones v. Steamship Cortes, 17 Cal. 487, 79 Am. Dec. 142); that when defendant chose to rescind, as they claim, the written agreement of sale, there at once arose an implied contract to repay the installments of the purchase price and interest; and that such an agreement is one upon which suit may be brought and attachment may be levied for the amount involved.

[1] Defendant's counsel insist that the complaint is fatally defective, in that it does not state facts sufficient to show that defendant has made any breach of her contract, and in this behalf they assert that any allegations concerning her representations of unincumbered title to the land are attempts to vary the terms of written contracts by averments of oral statements, because by her writings she promised not a full title but only such right, title and interest as she possessed. But this is not an action to rescind a contract. It is asserted that defendant has repudiated the contracts evidenced by the writings, and the part of the pleading with which we are here concerned has only to do with the alleged implied contract to repay the money received under the agreements now claimed to be canceled.

[2] Large portions of the briefs of appellant's counsel are devoted to discussions of the alleged infirmity of plaintiffs' pleading. In this connection it is sufficient to call attention to the rule that a motion to discharge a writ of attachment cannot be made to perform the office of a demurrer. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 142 Cal. 134, 75 Pac. 653; Pajaro Valley Bank v. Scurich, 7 Cal. App. 732, 95 Pac. 911.

VALENTINE v. HEAD CAMP, PACIFIC JURISDICTION, WOODMEN OF THE WORLD. (S. F. 7852.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE — 755(2) — FRATERNAL INSURANCE — WAIVER OF BY-LAWS — POWER OF LOCAL CAMP CLERK.

In view of laws of defendant mutual fraternal organization, held, that local camp clerk was nothing more than a special agent of defendant with defined powers known to members, so that he could not waive any requirements of the law of the organization or by any act or course of conduct create an estoppel against defendant.

2. INSURANCE — 756(1) — FRATERNAL INSURANCE — SUSPENSION OF BENEFIT CERTIFICATE.

The local camp clerk having no power to waive requirements of law of defendant society as to time of payment of assessments or consequences thereof, failure of insured to pay assessments as required operated ipso facto to remove him from good standing and suspend his benefit certificate.

3. INSURANCE — 761 — FRATERNAL INSURANCE — REINSTATEMENT.

Statement in application for reinstatement in defendant fraternal organization, "I certify, warrant, and represent that I am in good sound bodily health," was one upon the literal truth or fulfillment of which validity of contract depended, and amounted to a warranty, so that there was no effective reinstatement where warranty was absolutely false.

4. INSURANCE — 763 — FRATERNAL INSURANCE — WARRANTY IN APPLICATION FOR REINSTATEMENT — FALSITY — ESTOPPEL.

In view of limitations upon the powers of local camp clerk under laws of defendant fraternal organization, he could not by any course of conduct or possession of knowledge of insured's bodily health bind defendant in such manner as to estop it from defending upon the ground that warranty of insured as to bodily conditions in application for reinstatement was false.

5. INSURANCE — 763 — FRATERNAL INSURANCE — REINSTATEMENT — EFFECTIVENESS — ESTOPPEL.

The rights of the parties became fixed upon death of insured, and retention by local camp clerk of defendant fraternal order of money paid by insured's wife upon attempted reinstatement, made a few days before insured's death, at which time the Head Camp had no knowledge of the payment, would not constitute a waiver or estoppel on the part of defendant to dispute effectiveness of reinstatement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by Flora A. Valentine against the Head Camp, Pacific Jurisdiction, Woodmen of the World. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Robinson & Robinson and Harry L. Price, all of Oakland, and J. C. Nichols, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Stanley Moore and Geo. K. Ford, both of San Francisco, and Wilder Wight, of Oakland, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover upon a fraternal benefit certificate issued by defendant to her husband, Clarence A. Valentine, which provided for payment to her upon his death, if then in good standing, of the sum of $3,000. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff by the trial court and we have here an appeal by defendant from such judgment.

The defendant is a mutual fraternal organization maintained on the lodge plan, purely for the mutual benefit of its members, and, among other things, to provide and maintain, by means of assessments on its members a benefit fund from which is paid to designated relatives or dependents of each deceased member who is in good standing at the time of his death, such sum, either $1,000, $2,000, or $3,000, as is specified in his benefit certificate. It consists of a national or supreme body known as the Head Camp, and local organizations or lodges, known as camps. As is usual in this kind of association, the supreme authority of the association is vested in the supreme body, the Head Camp, which at its Head Camp sessions composed of the officers of the supreme body, delegates from the local camps, and past head consuls, made its laws, elected its officers, etc. The matters of the issuance of benefit certificates, levy of assessments, etc., were in the hands of the Head Camp; the business relative thereto being conducted by the officers of the Head Camp in accord with the provisions of the constitution and by-laws adopted by the Head Camp sessions. The collection of the assessments was in the hands of the local camps, and particularly of the clerks of the local camps, who received from the members of their respective camps amounts due for assessments and local camp dues, forwarding the former as collected to the proper Head Camp officers, who were required to keep the accounts showing the situation as to each member.

Mr. Valentine became a member of defendant association in the year 1901, his benefit certificate being dated January 16, 1901, and subsequently affiliated with the local camp at Oakland, Cal., known as "Bay Tree Camp, No. 640." He died on August 22, 1912. The controversy in this case is as to his good standing as a member of defendant association at the time of his death, the terms of his benefit certificate expressly providing, as required by the constitution of the order, that the beneficiary is entitled to "participate in its benefit fund after his death when in good standing and not otherwise," and that the certificate will not be in force at any time when the member stands suspended and is not in good standing pursuant to the constitution and by-laws "now in force or hereafter regularly adopted and in force at the time of his death." To remain in good standing it was imperatively required by the constitution and by-laws of the order that the member pay to the clerk of his camp every assessment levied and called during the month in which it is payable; failure to do this ipso facto putting the member out of good standing. This requirement, which was one essential to the maintenance of the mutual benefit fund from which assessments were to be paid, was emphasized by repeated provisions in the constitution and by-laws of defendant, as well as in the benefit certificates issued by it. Apparently the only exception provided was one for the benefit of a member who, while in good standing, becomes sick or disabled, and while still in good standing properly notified the clerk of the local camp thereof. Such a member may be carried by such local camp for a limited time; the latter remitting to the Head Camp from the local camp funds the amount of his assessments as the same accrue. This provision, however, has no materiality here. From May, 1911, until two days before his death, Mr. Valentine was continuously delinquent in his payments on account of assessments to the clerk of the local camp, making small payments on account thereof from time to time to the clerk of the local camp to some time in June, 1912. The clerk of the local camp, in violation of the laws of the order, had continued to carry him as in good standing to August 1, 1912, at which time several assessments remained unpaid by him, the amount of all of which, however, except that due for July, 1912, had been advanced for him by the clerk of the local camp, and forwarded by such clerk to the Head Camp to his credit, with the result that, in so far as the Head Camp was informed, he was regularly paying his assessments as required by the laws of the order. The amount of the assessment due in July, 1912, was not so advanced by the clerk, nor forwarded to the Head Camp. On August 14, 1912, such clerk in his report sent to the Head Camp reported Mr. Valentine as delinquent for failure to pay the July assessment. So far as appears in the record, this was the first intimation to the Head Camp of any delinquency at any time on the part of Mr. Valentine; the reports theretofore received showing him as regularly paying all assessments. On August 17, 1912, while engaged in his trade as a carpenter, he fell from a ladder a distance of about 20 feet. His neck was broken by this fall. The full extent of his injury was not at once known, and in view of the findings of the trial court it will be assumed that it was not known until after August 20, 1912. He was taken to a hospital, where he remained until August 22, 1912, when he died as a result of the injury. On August 19, 1912, Mrs. Valentine paid to the clerk of the local camp all amounts accruing for assessments and dues to September 1, 1912, including the July assessment, the total so paid being $23.20. On August 20, 1912, she paid such clerk the further sum of $2.95 as advanced assessment for September, 1912. The law of the order provided that a suspended benefit member could become reinstated within a limited time after his suspension by complying with certain specified conditions, and not otherwise, one of which was the delivery by the member to the clerk of the local camp of an application for reinstatement, certifying, warranting, and representing that he was then "in good, sound bodily health," and another of which was the payment of all arrearages. The benefit certificate in terms provided, as required by the laws of the order, that if any assessment was not paid within the time allowed, "then this certificate shall be null and void and continue so until he is reinstated as required by the Head Camp constitution and by-laws of his camp." When the payment of August 19th was made by Mrs. Valentine, the clerk of the local camp informed her that a reinstatement application must be signed by Mr. Valentine and delivered to him, and he furnished Mrs. Valentine a form for that purpose, which he himself had filled in with name and date. It was not the form prescribed by the laws of the order, the difference being in the omission of a final paragraph to the effect that the member agreed that the representation of present sound bodily health is a strict warranty, and that, if his death occurred within one year as the result of any disease with which he was then afflicted, no beneficiary shall be entitled to receive benefits. The constitution provided in effect that no reinstatement could be accomplished except by the presentation of an application in the exact form required thereby. Mrs. Valentine procured Mr. Valentine's signature to this application so furnished and delivered it to the clerk the next day. This application, as required by the law of the order, stated:

"I, C. A. Valentine, a delinquent and suspended benefit member, hereby request to be reinstated, and offer herewith all arrearages of benefit assessments, equalization payment and camp dues. I certify, warrant, and represent that I am in sound bodily health. * * *

When the payments were made and the application for reinstatement was delivered by Mrs. Valentine to the clerk of the local camp, the latter was informed by her of the accident and that Mr. Valentine was seriously injured. The evidence fairly shows that there was then no attempted concealment of any of the facts from the clerk, and that no one then knew that the neck was "broken." But the clerk did know from the information given him that Mr. Valentine was not in "sound bodily health." Unquestionably his sympathies were with Mrs. Valentine in the effort to put Mr. Valentine in good standing. The amounts paid by Mrs. Valentine in August, 1912, were never forwarded to the Head Camp by the local clerk, but appear to be still in his custody. This was doubtless due to the almost immediate death of Mr. Valentine. His statement that he informally offered to return the money is disputed by Mrs. Valentine. However, he did within a day or two of Mr. Valentine's death advance Mrs. Valentine $50, none of which has been returned. No Head Camp officer had any notice or knowledge of any attempted reinstatement until after the death of Mr. Valentine. At the time Mr. Valentine became a member of the order the constitution of defendant provided in express terms, as it has ever since, that "camp clerks and bankers are by this constitution expressly made agents of the camp and of the several members thereof, and not agents of the Head Camp." As amended and revised at the Head Camp session in 1910, which it will be observed was prior to any delinquency on the part of Mr. Valentine, the constitution was made to provide with relation to "every benefit certificate" "that no agent or representative of this society nor any officer or member of a local camp has the right or power, by any statement, agreement or promise, or by any method of transacting business with its members, to waive a strict observance and compliance with the laws, rules and regulations of this society as set forth in this constitution, and by-laws of his camp, and such amendment or alteration therein as may be hereafter made." It was expressly declared in the section including this provision, among others, that the conditions enumerated "shall apply to every benefit certificate and shall be binding on both the members and this order." Section 118. At the same time it was provided in section 130 that noncompliance with any of the conditions named in the laws of the society shall be an absolute bar to any claim on the benefit fund thereof "under or by virtue of any benefit certificate that may have been issued, or that may hereafter be issued to an applicant, or by reason of any steps taken by an applicant to entitle him to the same, or by a subordinate camp or member thereof, and no officer or member of the Head Camp has any authority to change, alter, modify, or waive the foregoing requirements, or the consequences thereof in any manner."

The theory upon which the trial court awarded judgment to plaintiff was twofold, being: First, that the imperative conditions and provisions of the laws of the order and the benefit certificate in the matter of the payment of assessments, etc., were waived by defendant by the course of conduct in receiving payments from Mr. Valentine from May, 1911, notwithstanding his delinquency, with the result that he was in good standing at all times up to the time of his death; and, second, that if out of good standing because of nonpayment of assessments, he was reinstated August 20th, and died in good standing.

[1] It cannot be doubted that the laws of the defendant constituted a part of the contract between Valentine and defendant (see Butler v. Grand Lodge, 146 Cal. 172, 175, 79 Pac. 861), or that Valentine was charged with full knowledge of the provisions of the constitution of defendant (see Supreme Lodge v. Price, 27 Cal. App. 607, 616, 150 Pac. 803). These propositions are so well settled as to require no citation of authority. In this connection it must further be held that the express provisions written into the constitution of defendant in 1910 to the effect that no officer or member of a local camp or of the Head Camp has any power or authority to waive any of the requirements of the constitution or the consequences thereof in any way were applicable. As we have seen, under the terms of the original contract, the power to amend the constitution and by-laws was expressly reserved, and the question of good standing at the time of death was to be determined in accord with the provisions of the constitution and by-laws as they then were or might be subsequently amended. The amendments, as applied to Valentine's case were prior to any delinquency and were not such as to impair any vested right. They were mere regulations of the internal affairs of the society, in no degree affecting any right of the insured under his contract or in any way impairing the substance of his contract. They simply put into clear and unambiguous express provisions of the constitution a limitation upon the power and authority of any officer or member of a local camp, or any officer of the Head Camp, to waive any of the requirements of the contract. Perhaps this limitation was fairly inferable before, but in view of the amendments we need not discuss that question. The power of the Head Camp to make such amendments applicable to those already members and to the benefit certificates of such members, in so far as all future conduct was concerned, cannot be doubted. We have in mind the rule enunciated in many states, including this state (see Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge, 2 Cal. App. 624, 628, 84 Pac. 271), to the effect that alterations in the laws will not be construed to operate retrospectively unless the intent that they shall so operate clearly appears. But we give to these amendments in applying them to Valentine's case no real retrospective or retroactive operation. And we further are of the opinion that the intent to make the amendments applicable to every benefit certificate outstanding was clearly and definitely expressed. In addition to these express provisions of the amendments we have the provision of the constitution that was in force when the benefit certificate of Valentine was issued, to the effect that camp clerks are not agents of the Head Camp, but only agents of their local camps and of the several members thereof.

In view of these provisions it cannot be held that the local camp clerk was, to use the language of Marshall v. Grand Lodge, 133 Cal. 686, 692, 66 Pac. 25, 27, "anything more than a special agent of defendant with defined powers which were known to the members." Whatever force there may be in the theory, that, notwithstanding a provision declaring a local camp officer to be the agent of the members, and not of the Head Camp, the law will nevertheless hold him to be the agent of the Head Camp for the transmission of money properly paid him by a member in accord with the law of the society (see Knights of Pythias v. Withers, 177 U. S. 260, 20 Sup. Ct. 611, 44 L. Ed. 762), both principle and the great weight of authority preclude a conclusion that, in the face of the provisions of the constitution we have quoted, the local camp clerk could waive any requirement of the law, or, by any act or course of conduct, create any estoppel against defendant. See Hartman v. National Council, 76 Or. 153, 147 Pac. 931, L. R. A. 1915E, 152. As was held in Northern Assurance Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213, it is competent for parties to provide in an insurance policy that the power of agents of the company be limited, and where a limitation is expressed it is binding in the absence of waiver or ratification by the company with knowledge of the facts. This is the settled doctrine in California both as to ordinary life insurance companies (see Elliott v. Frankfort Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 261, 156 Pac. 481, L. R. A. 1916F, 1026) and as to fraternal insurance societies (Marshall v. Grand Lodge, 133 Cal. 686, 66 Pac. 25).

[2-4] The local camp clerk having no power by any course of conduct to waive the requirements of the law of the society as to the time of the payment of the assessments or the consequences thereof, the failure of Valentine to pay assessments as required operated ipso facto to remove him from good standing, and consequently as a suspension of his benefit certificate. See Butler v. Grand Lodge, 146 Cal. 172, 79 Pac. 861; Marshall v. Grand Lodge, supra. This was the situation when he was injured on August 17, 1912. Unless reinstated prior to his death, he was not in good standing at the time of his death, with the result that, under the terms of his benefit certificate, his beneficiary could not participate in the benefit fund. The question, then, is whether there was an effective reinstatement. It seems perfectly clear to us that this question must be answered in the negative. Such a reinstatement could be accomplished only by a full compliance with the law of the society relative to reinstatement. Butler v.

Grand Lodge, supra; Marshall v. Grand Lodge, supra. The law in force at all times required as a condition precedent to reinstatement the presentation of an application including an express warranty of present sound bodily health. As we have seen, the local camp clerk had no power by any act or course of conduct to waive the presentation of the application required by the law. The required application was one in which the member was not only made to declare, "I certify, warrant and represent that I am in good sound bodily health," but also that "I agree that this representation is a strict warranty." The latter provision was not in fact contained in the application presented on behalf of Valentine with the result that the precise application required by the law was not presented. The law providing that "no attempted reinstatement by the clerk of the camp without such reinstatement application shall reinstate a suspended member or entitle his beneficiaries to receive any benefit," it may well be claimed that for this reason alone there was no reinstatement here. Certainly this claim is good if the part omitted was at all material. But we think that the application as presented contained such a warranty in the statement, also required by law, that "I certify, warrant and represent that I am in good sound bodily health." This statement clearly was one upon the literal truth or fulfillment of which the validity of the contract depended, and amounted to a warranty. See Hogins v. Supreme Council, 76 Cal. 109, 112, 18 Pac. 125, 127 (9 Am. St. Rep. 173); Caldwell v. Grand Lodge, 148 Cal. 195, 199, 82 Pac. 781, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 113 Am. St. Rep. 219, 7 Ann. Cas. 356. This warranty as we have seen, was absolutely false. "By a warranty the insured stipulates for the absolute truth of the statement made" (Hogins v. Supreme Council, supra), and its falsity is necessarily a defense to the contract procured by the making thereof. There could be no effective reinstatement based upon an application containing a warranty that was in fact false, in the absence of an effective waiver of the falsity by the defendant Head Camp. Plaintiff relies upon the fact that the local camp clerk had knowledge of the falsity of the warranty. In view of what we have said as to the limitations on the power of the camp clerk, it is clear that this knowledge on the part of that officer is an immaterial factor. He could not by any course of conduct or possession of knowledge bind defendant in such a manner as to estop it from defending upon the ground that the warranty was false. This is substantially the effect of what is said in Elliott v. Frankfort Marine Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 261, 266, 156 Pac. 481, L. R. A. 1916F, 1026. In view of his limited powers, his knowledge was not the knowledge of defendant. See Iverson v.

Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 151 Cal. 746, 751, 91 Pac. 609, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866. No officer of the Head Camp had any knowledge whatever as to the matter, no information even that there had been an attempted reinstatement, until after the death of Valentine. To our minds there is no escape from the conclusion that the attempted reinstatement was ineffective for any purpose, and that Valentine was not in good standing on August 22, 1912, when he died as the result of the injury received on August 17, 1912.

[5] Some reliance is placed upon the retention by the local camp clerk of the money paid by Mrs. Valentine upon the attempted reinstatement, as constituting a waiver of all objections by defendant, or an estoppel on it to dispute its effectiveness. In view of the circumstances of this case we do not see the materiality of this fact. He cannot be held to have received or to hold possession of this money as a representative of the Head Camp; for, in view of his limited authority, he had no power under the circumstances to so receive or hold it. Before information or knowledge came to any officer of the Head Camp, upon which any claim of waiver or estoppel might be based, Valentine had died. As held in Thompson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 11 N. D. 274, 277, 91 N. W. 75, 77, the rights of the parties became fixed upon the death and thereafter "no new contract between the parties by a waiver or estoppel could be created, as one of the contracting parties was dead." Subsequent conduct could not operate so as to affect the right to recover on the benefit certificate. This question is practically decided by what is said in Butler v. Grand Lodge, 146 Cal. 178, 179, 79 Pac. 861. It is proper to add that it does not appear that subsequent to the death of Valentine any Head Camp officer ever did anything or said anything which could by any possibility serve as a basis for a claim of waiver or estoppel, assuming that the necessary waiver or estoppel could be based on matters occurring after the death of the insured, or upon the acts or conduct of individual Head Camp officers.

Our conclusion upon the points we have discussed renders unnecessary a discussion of many other claims of appellant. As is said by appellant's counsel in their brief, the fundamental basis upon which respondent must rest her reliance for an affirmance is that the local camp clerk was the agent of the Head Camp, with power to waive the requirements of its constitution. This basis not existing, her case must necessarily fail.

There was an attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial, but the order was not made until after the change in our law abolishing the right of appeal from such orders. The order, however, may be reviewed upon the appeal from the judgment. In view of what we have said, the motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

Under a contract of employment whereby employer was to give employé 30 days' notice of time for beginning work, employé could recover for breach of contract, although no formal call to work in 30 days had been sent, where employer wired him that he could go to work at any time and by its silence agreed that a certain time was a proper time and, after employé closed out his business in reliance thereon, countermanded order to report for duty, and it was not necessary that employé make a trip from Boston to California to make an actual tender of his services.

3. CORPORATIONS 432(9)—REPRESENTATION BY OFFICER—EVIDENCE—BY-LAWS.

Where trial court based finding of agency exclusively upon ostensible agency of officers who signed contract, it was not error to exclude minutes and by-laws offered by defendant corporation to show that the officers had not been authorized to execute the contract.

4. CORPORATIONS 57—BY-LAWS—NOTICE TO THIRD PERSONS.

By-laws of a corporation are of no binding force upon third persons having no knowledge of them.

5. CORPORATIONS 432(8)—AGENCY—EVIDENCE—STATEMENTS OF ALLEGED AGENT.

In an action against a corporation for breach of a contract, statements of a third person were admissible in evidence, over objection that such third person was not connected with the corporation, where the president of the corporation had stated that such third person was representing him.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by W. H. Newton against the Johnston Organ & Piano Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Bryant, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Jas. A. Gibson, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued successfully for damages for violation of a contract of employment. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

A contract in writing between the plaintiff and defendant was introduced in evidence. It was dated February 17, 1914, and recited that the Johnston Organ & Piano Manufacturing Company, a corporation organized under the laws of this state, has offered W. H. Newton, of Boston, Mass., employment as general superintendent of the corporation's factory at Van Nuys, for the term of three years, at a salary of $3,000 a year, payable $200 monthly in cash, and $600 in capital stock of the corporation at the end of each year's service; and that, in addition to devoting his time to the corporation's business, Newton was to assign all inventions made by him during his term of employment to the corporation. The agreement also contained the following language:

"First party hereby agrees to employ second party under the terms hereinbefore expressed. Second party to start work upon thirty days notice by first party. Salary above specified to commence after second party has started to work at the factory at Van Nuys."

The instrument was subscribed by the name of plaintiff, by that of "Johnston Organ and Piano Mfg. Co.," with the corporate seal attached and the signatures of "E. S. Johnston, President," and "A. E. Streeter, Secretary."

It appears from the testimony, without material contradiction, that before and after the execution of the written instrument, the plaintiff, who was an expert in the manufacture, repair, and selling of church organs and pianos, was engaged in lucrative business in Boston, Mass. He was approached by one A. P. Crandall, who represented himself as an employé of the defendant corporation, and they entered into negotiations relative to Mr. Newton's coming to California to become superintendent of the corporation's factory. After Crandall's return to California, plaintiff received a telegram from him asking plaintiff if he would come to California "to look the ground over" with a view to entering the employ of the defendant corporation. This was followed by another message stating the probable amount of the salary of superintendent at the factory in Van Nuys, and asking how much money Mr. Newton would require for the expenses of the trip. Thereafter plaintiff received something more than $200—the amount he had specified as necessary for the expenses of the journey. He then went from Boston to Van Nuys. He was met at the car by Crandall, who escorted him to the factory of the Johnston Organ & Piano Company. There he met Mr. Johnston, president of the corporation, and Mr. Streeter, the secretary. Plaintiff conferred with them and with Mr. Bryant, who appears as counsel for defendant in this action. As a result of these conferences, the written contract drawn by Mr. Bryant was executed. Mr. Johnston told Mr. Newton that he wanted the new superintendent to enter upon his duties as soon as possible, but that the company wanted to get rid of the superintendent then in their employ before doing anything further. While he was in California, plaintiff's hotel bill was paid by the secretary of the defendant corporation. Mr. Newton returned to Boston, and on March 1, 1914, he telegraphed "E. S. Johnston or A. E. Streeter of the Johnston Organ and Piano Co.," asserting his anxiety to know how affairs were shaping themselves at the factory. This message elicited a prompt reply, which was in the following form:

"Mar. 2, 14.

"Wm. H. Newton, 4 Circuit Sq., Roxbury, Mass.

"Can arrange matters so you can take hold here any time wire when you can be here.

"Johnston Organ and Piano Mfg. Co."

Plaintiff wired in reply that he was closing out his business and would go to work at Van Nuys on April 15th. Thereafter plaintiff busied himself in closing out his business and in making preparations for the contemplated trip to California. On March 6th he received a letter, ostensibly from the company, on its letter paper containing the names of E. S. Johnston, president, and A. E. Streeter, secretary, asking him to use his own judgment about a man seeking employment with the corporation. On March 16, 1914, the plaintiff received a telegram which was as follows:

"Wm. H. Newton, 4 Circuit Sq., Roxbury, Mass.

"Impossible to arrange matters here by fifteenth hold your affairs in abeyance until you hear further from us we are writing.

"Johnston Organ Co."

No letter reached plaintiff, and on March 25th he sent a telegram to Mr. Bryant, attorney for the corporation, by which he sought information about the promised letter. On the following day Mr. Streeter wired plaintiff that Mr. Johnston was very ill, and that the reason for the previous telegram was the unsettled financial condition. The telegram also contained the following sentence:

"In fairness to yourself did not wish to have you come on until these conditions are satisfactorily settled which we anticipate shortly."

On March 28th plaintiff wrote to Mr. Streeter, expressing regret at Mr. Johnston's illness. In this letter Mr. Newton informed Mr. Streeter that between March 1st and the 16th of that month he had done many acts, which he described, towards closing out his business in and around Boston. Receiving no answer to this letter, he wrote again on August 3, 1914, to defendant's attorney, informing that gentleman that he must know the true situation at Van Nuys, and requesting an immediate reply. None was ever received.

There was further testimony tending to corroborate plaintiff's representations that he had closed up his business affairs on the strength of his supposed engagement by the organ company.

At the trial the defendant corporation called its secretary, Mr. Streeter, to identify its minutes and by-laws, and sought by him to show that the board of directors had never passed any resolution concerning the contract of employment, and that the president and secretary were not authorized to contract for the services of employés.

[1] It seems to be the theory of defendant's counsel that one dealing with officers assuming to represent a corporation is chargeable with notice of its creation and powers and the real authority of the supposed officers or agents with whom he deals, and that he proceeds at his peril. If this were the true rule, the doctrine of ostensible agency would be swept aside entirely. That Johnston and Streeter were, respectively, the president and secretary of the corporation is conceded by the answer. It is admitted in appellant's briefs that by the introduction of the agreement, and of the names of the officers executing it on behalf of the corporation, plaintiff presented a prima facie case of due execution, but one (so runs the argument) subject to be overthrown by proof of the fact that original authority was lacking. But plaintiff did not merely introduce the contract. He showed that those persons assuming to act for the corporation were in fact in control of its property; that they had custody of and used its corporate seal; that they used its stationery; that they replied with apparent authority to telegrams directed to the corporation; that they, or one of them, paid his expenses while coming to California, while remaining here in daily consultation at the factory, and while returning to Boston; and that generally they held themselves out as the authorized representatives of the corporation in such manner that the company and its directors could not well have been ignorant of their assumption of ostensible power. Where a corporation holds out to the world as its agents persons apparently clothed with power to transact its ordinary business, third parties will not be permitted to suffer from the acts of such agents by the corporation's attempted defense that the ostensible authority was not in fact conferred. Dore v. Southern Pacific Co., 163 Cal. 182, 124 Pac. 817; Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., Inc., 18 Cal. App. 242, 123 Pac. 212; Aigeltinger v. Burke, 176 Cal. 621, 169 Pac. 373. The showing of ostensible agency was very strong and could not be overthrown by mere proof that the by-laws or minutes of the corporation failed to disclose actual authority of the president and secretary to contract for services of employes.

[2] It is argued that plaintiff could have no cause of action until he had received the notice to come to Van Nuys in 30 days and had actually reported there for work; and that he may not recover on the quantum meruit until he has actually and physically tendered his services. Answering the last contention first, it is sufficient to say that this is not an action for wages or for work done, but one for damages for breach of a contract to employ plaintiff. It is governed by the rules declared in such cases as Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 Pac. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154. The statement that no formal call to work in 30 days had been sent is met by the fact that defendant wired plaintiff that he could go to work at any time and by its silence agreed that April 15th was a proper time. Evidently, the employment was considered settled because plaintiff was consulted regarding the hiring of one who was to be his subordinate in the factory. By closing his business in Boston and preparing for the trip to California plaintiff made a sufficient tender of his services. It would have been idle for him to make the trip to California after defendant had countermanded the order to report for duty. The gist of his action was his change of position caused by the conduct of defendant. Seymour v. Oelrichs, supra.

[3, 4] As the trial court based its finding of agency exclusively upon the ostensible agency of the officers who signed the contract of employment, it was not error to exclude the minutes offered by appellant to show that the president and secretary had not been authorized to employ a superintendent. Dore v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. The by-laws were also properly excluded for the same reason and for the further one that they are of no binding force upon third persons having no knowledge of them. Rathbun v. Snow, 123 N. Y. 343, 25 N. E. 379, 10 L. R. A. 355; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Grangers' Bank, 63 Cal. 359.

[5] Appellant complains that the court admitted certain statements of one Crandall, and also letters and telegrams of Crandall to respondent, on the ground that Crandall had no connection with the corporation defendant. But there was evidence that the president, Mr. Johnston, told Mr. Newton that Mr. Crandall had been acting as Johnston's representative in the matter. Of course, Crandall's own declarations could not establish his agency; but his course of conduct, coupled with that of defendant's officers and the uncontroverted declaration of the president, justified the court in admitting the testimony and exhibits to which objection is made. Bergtholdt v. Porter Bros. Co., 114 Cal. 681-690, 46 Pac. 738. Besides, there was a complete case without the evidence relating to Crandall.

Plaintiff sued for a sum equal to salary for three years, minus an amount something more than seven hundred dollars. Judgment was for $3,000, which seems to have been correctly fixed by following the rule laid down in Seymour v. Oelrichs, supra.

No other alleged errors require examination.

The judgment is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 62

GARN v. THORWALDSON, Sheriff, et al
(Civ. 2508.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 25, 1919.)

1. PLEADING ⇨129(1)—ADMISSIONS—FAILURE TO DENY ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT.

Allegations of complaint were admitted by defendant's failure to deny them.

2. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS ⇨40—VALIDITY OF ASSIGNMENT—NONCOMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Assignment for benefit of creditors, though failing to comply with requirements of Civ. Code, §§ 3449-3473, is valid against the assignor and all creditors assenting to it, and serves to vest the assignor's title to the property in the assignee, being void at most only against creditors not assenting thereto, and against purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨179(1), 181 (1)—NONDELIVERY—EFFECT.

Sale of personal property, though not followed by immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession, as required by Civ. Code, § 3440, is not a nullity, but is good against all the world except seller's creditors, and is good against such creditors, except when attacked in legal proceedings for the collection of their debts.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES 186—NON-DELIVERY—TITLE OF BUYER.

Where sale of personal property is not followed by immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession, as required by Civ. Code, § 3440, buyer acquires good title as against all the world, except creditors of original seller, and against them also, if he is a purchaser in good faith, for value, and without notice, since the seller, being the owner, can convey title.

5. ASSIGNMENTS FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS 45—VALIDITY OF ASSIGNMENT—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNOR'S CREDITOR.

Assignment for benefit of creditors did not become void as to creditor of the assignor, although assignment was not followed by immediate delivery to assignee and actual and continued change of possession, as required of transfer of personal property by Civ. Code, § 3440, since such statute is expressly made inapplicable to assignments for benefit of creditors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by P. W. Garn against Horace Thorwaldson, as Sheriff of the county of Fresno, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. E. Barbour, of Fresno, for appellants. Edmund Tauszky, of San Francisco, and Johnston & Jones, of Fresno, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The defendant Thorwaldson, as sheriff of Fresno county, sold a quantity of oil well casing, after third party claim duly made on him by the plaintiff here, under execution issued out of the superior court of that county, on a judgment in favor of one J. W. Moore, plaintiff, and against J. M. Hendrickson et al., as trustees to settle the affairs of the Blair Oil Company, after charter forfeited, defendants. The plaintiff here brought this action against the sheriff and the other defendant, the surety on his official bond, for damages for the conversion. Judgment went for the plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

On February 12, 1912, the said Blair Oil Company, being indebted to various creditors in an amount in excess of $20,000, duly executed and delivered to Garn, the plaintiff here, an instrument in writing whereby it did "grant, sell, assign, transfer, convey and set over" unto him its real property in Fresno county, together with all the improvements, and personal property, "of whatever kind and nature" thereon, also all its leases, contracts, claims, and accounts connected therewith. This conveyance, or assignment, was made to Garn, in trust, to develop and operate said land; to manage, sell and dispose of any and all of the property transferred to him; to collect the choses in action and settle and compromise all claims and demands—all "for the interest or benefit of the creditors of" the oil company. The instrument further provided that, after payment by the trustee of the expenses of the trust, distribution and payment "of the remainder of the proceeds and income to and among all the creditors of the party of the first part ratably in proportion to their respective debts," any surplus remaining should be paid, and any property unsold or undisposed of should be retransferred, to the oil company.

The assignment was jointly and severally consented to, in writing by each and all the creditors of the company. It was delivered to the trustee but was never recorded. At the time it was so made and delivered the quantity of oil well casing, which was subsequently attached and sold under the execution sale hereinbefore referred to, was in a pile on the real property and near oil well No. 2, thereon. On March 1, 1913, the Blair Oil Company forfeited its charter by failing to pay its franchise tax.

[1] When the present case came on for trial in the lower court, in addition to showing the foregoing facts, the plaintiff introduced considerable testimony tending to show that the transfer of the property, by the oil company to the trustee, was accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred. This evidence was offered apparently, for the purpose of showing that the requirements of section 3440 of the Civil Code, relating to fraudulent transfer of personal property had been complied with. The allegations of the complaint setting forth the due proceedings culminating in the execution sale were admitted by failure to deny, and the only issue presented by the pleadings was as to validity of the assignment to Garn, the trustee, and his claim of ownership of the personal property.

Defendants thereupon sought to show that on August 26, 1913, six months after the forfeiture of the charter of the oil company, and a year and a half after the making of the assignment by the company to Garn, J. W. Hendrickson, who at all times, up to the forfeiture of the charter by the corporation, had been its president and one of its directors, and at that time therefore one of its trustees, by operation of law, to settle up its affairs, had employed J. W. Moore to go, and that he did go, upon the real property which was described in the assignment, and take possession and control of the personal property thereon, and watch and preserve the same for, and as the possession of, the Blair Oil Company; that, as the employé and servant of the Blair Oil Company, said Moore remained in possession and control of the personal property until he brought the suit against the trustees of the Blair Oil Company, in March, 1917, and recovered the judgment on which the execution issued which led to the sale complained of here.

Defendants also offered to show that Garn, trustee under the assignment, had never taken possession of the property, or exercised over it any acts of ownership, as required by section 3440 of the Civil Code; that Moore never had notice of the assignment to Garn, and never saw Garn, or any one representing him, in connection with the property until four years after the assignment; that Garn then stated to him that he was not responsible for Moore's wages, and did not know him in the transaction.

Defendants' object in offering the foregoing testimony was to offset the showing of plaintiff as to the delivery of the personal property, transferred by the assignment, to the trustee, and for the further purpose of establishing under the provision of the same section of the Code, that Moore, plaintiff in the suit whence arose the execution sale, became a creditor of the Blair Oil Company (or its trustees settling its affairs), while it remained in full possession of the property.

Sustaining the objections of the plaintiff to the offered testimony, the trial court held that the "only question for the consideration of the court was as to whether the property was put out of the hands of the corporation by the assignment." Defendants rested without further showing, whereupon the court made its finding that plaintiff was owner of the casing and gave him judgment against defendants for its value at the time of the conversion.

Defendants claim that the court erred in its ruling and judgment, and on appeal base their contention on the grounds, first, that the assignment by the Blair Oil Company to Garn was not a valid assignment for the benefit of creditors; and, second, that if the assignment was valid at the time it was made, it was void as to Moore, who later became a creditor while the property still remained in the possession of the oil company and its trustees. They base their argument on their construction of section 3440 of the Civil Code, relating to fraudulent transfers, and section 3449 et seq., of the same Code, relating to assignments for the benefit of creditors.

Section 3440 of the Civil Code, as it stood at the time of making the assignment, so far as pertinent to this discussion was as follows:

transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession, and the successors in interest of such creditors, and against any persons on whom his estate devolves in trust for the benefit of others than himself, and against purchasers or incumbrancers in good faith subsequent to the transfer; provided, however, * * * that the provisions of this section shall not apply or extend * * * to any transfer or assignment made for the benefit of creditors generally."

Sections 3449 to 3473 of the Civil Code provide the procedure by which an insolvent debtor may in good faith execute, to the sheriff of the county in which he resides, an assignment of property in trust for the satisfaction of his creditors. One of these sections, No. 3458, provides that the assignment and the transfer by the sheriff must be in writing and properly subscribed, acknowledged and recorded, in the mode prescribed by the chapter on recording transfers of real property. The next section, 3459, provides that unless the provisions of said section 3458 are complied with, an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void against every creditor not assenting thereto.

[2] It cannot be seriously contended that the instrument here complies with the foregoing sections, 3449 to 3473. On the appeal, respondent admits it does not measure up to the requirements of a statutory assignment. An assignment which falls short of the requirements of these sections, however, is valid as against the assignor and all creditors assenting to it, and serves to vest the assignor's title to the property in the assignee. It is, at most, void only against creditors not assenting thereto and against purchasers and incumbrancers in good faith and for value. Wilhoit v. Lyons, 98 Cal. 409, 33 Pac. 325.

[3, 4] It is likewise the law that a sale of personal property, though not followed by immediate delivery and actual and continued change of possession, as required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, is not a nullity, but is good against all the world except the creditors of the vendor, and is good against them also, except when attacked in legal proceedings for the collection of their debts, and that the vendee, being the owner, can convey title thereto and the purchaser from him will, in any event, acquire a title good against all the world, except the creditors of the original vendor, and against them, also, if he is a purchaser in good faith, for value and without notice. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483; Wilhoit v. Lyons supra; Williams v. Borgwardt, 119 Cal. 81, 51 Pac. 15. Such assignments pass the title to the assignee and the assignment becomes irrevocable. Bryant v. Langford, 80 Cal. 542, 22 Pac. 219.

The Supreme Court of this state has said:

"If the conveyance is to a trustee, and the debtor intends to divest himself, not only of the title to the property, but of all control over it; if it is intended as an absolute conveyance of all his property, and is made for the purpose of securing a distribution of its proceeds among his creditors, * * * in legal effect it is an assignment for the benefit of creditors. * * * The material and essential characteristic of a general assignment is the presence of a trust. * * * The provision that a surplus of proceeds remaining after satisfaction of the claims of the creditors named should be returned to the grantors does not * * * distinguish the contract as one of security only. * * * The reservation of an interest in the possible surplus—not in the property itself—marks the transaction more clearly as an assignment for the benefit of creditors." Sabichi v. Chase, 108 Cal. 86, 87, 41 Pac. 30, 31.

We are of the opinion that the assignment from the Blair Oil Company to Garn was a valid assignment for the benefit of the company's creditors, and divested the company of all title in and to the real and personal property thereby transferred.

[5] Appellant's remaining contention is that even if the assignment was valid at the time it was made it subsequently became void as to Moore, under section 3440 of the Civil Code, supra, by reason of the fact that he became a creditor of the corporation, or its trustees settling its affairs, after forfeiture of its charter, while they remained in possession of the personal property, described in the assignment; that had the defendants been allowed to introduce the proffered evidence, it would have established those facts; that such facts being shown, it would follow as a conclusion of law that the property was rightly seized by Moore in the hands of Garn, the trustee, as though there had been no attempted transfer by the oil company. If the assignment had been executed to effect merely an ordinary transfer of personal property, this contention of appellant would be sound. Watson v. Rodgers, 53 Cal. 401; Rohrbough v. Johnson, 107 Cal. 149, 40 Pac. 37.

But, as already pointed out, the assignment in question was one for the benefit of creditors generally. By its own terms, section 3440 of the Civil Code does "not apply or extent to any transfer or assignment for the benefit of creditors generally."

The testimony sought to be introduced by defendants in the court below was therefore immaterial, and not in response to any issue within the pleadings in the case. The ruling of the court excluding the evidence was correct, and judgment followed accordingly.

Said judgment is therefore affirmed.

39 Cal. App. 710
BUENA VISTA OIL CO. v. PARK BANK
OF LOS ANGELES. (Civ. 2860.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 13, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 14, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—REVIEW OF COURT'S FINDING—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The court's finding on conflicting evidence will not be reviewed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1078(5)—ABANDONMENT OF SPECIFICATIONS OF ERROR.

Where, notwithstanding many specifications for insufficiency of evidence, defendant's opening brief complained of but one finding, the other specifications will be deemed abandoned.

3. BANKS AND BANKING ⇨130(3)—DEPOSITING CHECK BY CORPORATE OFFICER—CREDIT TO INDIVIDUAL.

A bank having no previous dealings with a corporation and being unacquainted with its officers or their powers was not warranted in accepting a check payable to the order of such corporation bearing indorsement only of payee's name by its secretary and after collecting the check place the amount to the credit of the person presenting it, without inquiry as to his authority, and permitting him to withdraw the proceeds.

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨414(4)—POWER OF SECRETARY—INDORSING AND COLLECTING CHECKS.

The secretary of a corporation had no authority by virtue of his office to indorse his name on a check payable to the corporation and present it for deposit to be credited to himself.

5. BANKS AND BANKING ⇨130(3)—DEPOSITS OF CHECK—AGENT OF CORPORATION—LIABILITY FOR PROCEEDS.

Where bank received a check payable to a corporation, with the unauthorized indorsement of its secretary, the corporation's title to the proceeds did not pass to the bank when the bank collected the amount, but it became liable for money had and received to the corporation's use.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert M. Clark, Judge.

Action by the Buena Vista Oil Company against the Park Bank of Los Angeles. From judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman MacDonald, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Oscar Lawler and James E. Degnan, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. In this action plaintiff, as successor in interest of American Midway Oil Company, seeks to recover of defendant the sum of $5,000. The facts upon which this claim is based are substantially as follows: On or about July 11, 1911, one A. L. Kemper, the secretary of the American Midway Oil Company at Los Angeles, appropriated a check for $5,000, made and forwarded by the Esperanza Consolidated Oil Company at its office in San Francisco to said American Midway Oil Company—and which will be referred to hereinafter as plaintiff—at Los Angeles. Such check was drawn to the order of the plaintiff. It was sent by mail inclosed in an envelope addressed to plaintiff. A. L. Kemper, in the office of plaintiff, opened the letter, extracted the check, and by the use of a rubber stamp indorsed upon the back of such check the words: "American Midway Oil Company, Sec'y." In the space following the word "Company" Kemper wrote his own name, and thereunder indorsed the words, "A. L. Kemper, Secretary." He deposited the check, thus indorsed, with the defendant, and the said defendant entered same to Kemper's account, as by him instructed. On the 18th of July, 1911, Kemper withdrew $1,800, and on the 31st of the same month $300 more, of the proceeds of said $5,000 check collected by the defendant bank by check so drawn upon the defendant, and signed as aforesaid. This money was appropriated by Kemper to his own use. The balance of the $5,000 is still retained by defendant. The defendant contends that Kemper was secretary and general manager of said plaintiff from September, 1910, to September 30, 1911, and that the said sum of $2,100 so drawn by Kemper was due him as salary as such secretary and general manager. Plaintiff did not discover the loss of the $5,000 check until the latter part of August, 1911, whereupon demand was made upon defendant for the proceeds thereof. On October 3, 1911, two checks, one for $4,000 and one for $1,000, were drawn against said fund in defendant's bank by plaintiff, and, upon payment being refused, such checks were duly protested. Thereupon plaintiff brought this suit. Judgment went for plaintiff for $5,000, with interest and costs, from which, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The complaint declared specifically upon the contention aforesaid, and in four separate causes of action asserted claim for money had and received by and for money loaned to defendant for plaintiff's use. The answer, and the several amendments thereto, after admitting the receipt of the proceeds of said check, in substance interposed the following defenses to plaintiff's said causes of action: (1) That the check in question was not deposited with defendant, nor were any moneys received thereon at the time said check was deposited the property of plaintiff; but that prior to the receipt of such check by defendant it had been indorsed in blank by plaintiff, and thereafter, and prior to such receipt, became the property of A. L. Kemper, secretary; that defendant made collection of said check for the account of said Kemper, and, as already hereinbefore set forth, placed said sum to the credit of such account. (2) That plaintiff is estopped from bringing its action. Subsequent to the trial and prior to judgment, and to comply with the proof and theory of the case, plaintiff, by leave of the court, filed the following amendment to the complaint:

"The plaintiff, by leave of the court, first had and obtained, amends its complaint filed herein in the following respects: By striking out all of paragraph V of the first cause of action in said complaint contained, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'That thereafter and on or about the 12th day of July, 1911, said check of $5,000.00 was removed from the office of the plaintiff, in the city of Los Angeles, by A. L. Kemper, secretly and without the knowledge, consent or authority of plaintiff, and was by said A. L. Kemper, without the knowledge, consent or authority of this plaintiff, indorsed as follows: "American Midway Oil Company, A. L. Kemper, Sec'y." That thereafter and on or about said 12th day of July, 1911, said Kemper secretly, and without the knowledge, consent or authority of this plaintiff, delivered said check to the defendant. That the defendant paid no money or other consideration for said check, or the proceeds represented thereby, and parted with nothing of value therefor. That subsequently and prior to the 1st day of August, 1911, there was paid to said defendant by the payee bank in said check named, to and for the use of the plaintiff the sum of $5,000.00, represented by said check.'"

The court found against the defendant upon the material issues. Defendant, by certain specifications, attacks many of said findings as being without "sufficient" evidence to support them.

[1-3] From a careful perusal and consideration of the evidence before us, we are of the opinion that the record contains evidence tending to prove every issue. There was conflict in the evidence, and we will not disturb the findings of the trial court upon such testimony. Porter v. Johnson, 172 Cal. 456, 156 Pac. 1022. Notwithstanding the many specifications for insufficiency of evidence, defendant's opening brief complains of but one finding. It therefore follows that the remaining specifications may be deemed abandoned. Shepherd v. Turner, 129 Cal. 530, 62 Pac. 106; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 Pac. 661. The controversy, therefore, so far as we are concerned, centers upon the question: What was the duty of the defendant bank when the check was presented by Kemper? The question of agency is not here involved. It does not appear from the evidence that there was any delegation of authority, or any "holding out," or any transaction of like character with "any one," or any dealings of any kind with the defendant, to the knowledge of plaintiff. As is so well said by respondents:

"The latter (defendant) had its selected depositories. Its by-laws devised, and its directors enforced, a plan for the safeguarding of its funds. The signatures of two of its officers were required to withdraw its funds from such depositories. Kemper was not one of such officers, nor was the defendant one of such depositories. The petty cash account is without influence or relevancy in this controversy. Such account was originally kept in the name of L. T. Wells individually. It was continued by means of Wells' individual check to the date of the $5,000 transaction, in the name of A. L. Kemper, secretary. The account was a small one, not exceeding $100 at any time. That checks were drawn against such petty cash account, first by Wells, and later by Kemper, to pay for stamps and other like office expenditures of plaintiff, is without significance. The account so maintained was under the sole control of the individual in whose name it was opened. Deposits to the credit thereof were properly made, because the checks in every case were drawn to the order of, and were indorsed by, the person named in such account. Its name did not appear thereon, nor did it have any interest therein, to the knowledge of defendant. The officers of the latter testified that they did not know, until after the $5,000 transaction, that plaintiff claimed any moneys in their institution. The proof leaves Kemper bare of all power to dispose of the funds of plaintiff. It demonstrates that there was not the slightest basis for defendant's claim of justification, because of Kemper's agency. It forces defendant to the contention that, notwithstanding the utter failure to produce any testimony tending to support its claim, nevertheless the law imposes no penalty upon it. Accordingly, the question for determination may be restated as follows: May a bank, without previous dealings with a corporation, and unacquainted with its officers or their powers, accept a check, by its terms payable to the order of such corporation, bearing the indorsement only of the payee's name by its secretary, collect the amount of such check, place it to the credit of the person presenting it, refrain from making any inquiries as to the authority of such person, permit him to withdraw such proceeds, and escape liability to the payee, in the face of the uncontradicted evidence that such person as secretary had no authority to act, and that the moneys so withdrawn were devoted to his personal use?"

The answer, of course, must be in the negative. The right of said Midway Oil Company to the check in question had not been assigned or transferred by any one authorized so to do.

[4] Viewing this case in the light of all the evidence and surrounding circumstances, it is clear that Kemper had no authority, express or implied, to sign said check; nor did he have any authority by virtue of his office as secretary. Palo Alto, etc., Ass'n v. First National Bank, 33 Cal. App. 214, 164 Pac. 1124; Blood v. Marcuse, 38 Cal. 590, 99 Am. Dec. 435; Alta, etc., v. Alta, etc., 78 Cal. 629,

21 Pac. 373; Asher v. Sutton, 31 Kan. 290, 1 Pac. 535. In the absence of such authority, a secretary cannot transfer his principal's property; his authority will not be presumed, but on the contrary must be affirmatively shown to exist. Palo Alto, etc., v. Bank, supra; Read v. Buffum, 79 Cal. 77, 21 Pac. 555, 12 Am. St. Rep. 131; California, etc., v. Sciaroni, 139 Cal. 277, 72 Pac. 990. It would appear that any prudent and intelligent person would have been placed on notice by the very presentation of the check in controversy for deposit, as it possessed within itself, as we view it, elements of suspicion and irregularity. Being chargeable with knowledge that the power of such secretary will not be presumed, but must be shown, it was the duty of the bank, before dealing with such check, to establish the evidence of the secretary's power. Defendant contends that it would place a burden upon bank tellers "if they were compelled to exercise judicial functions and ascertain the ownership of funds represented by thousands of checks which were deposited under similar circumstances, before placing the same to the credit of the last indorser. Further, how much patronage would a bank have if it were to challenge the honesty of the man making the deposit?" To our mind it is not a question of the bank's challenging the honesty of any one, but the performance of a duty impressed upon it by law. "Desire for 'patronage,' while commendable, should not be encouraged by the practice of unbusinesslike and irregular transactions"—as respondent so well puts it. From the evidence here it appears that defendant, without making any inquiry whatever—and Kemper was careful not to offer any information—accepted the check for collection, forwarded it to the drawee bank for payment, received the amount, and still, without making any effort to comply with its duty of inquiry, and upon Kemper's instruction, placed the amount to the credit of Kemper, as secretary, and thereafter permitted him to make withdrawals therefrom. The very name of the payee, and the attempted indorsement, cast a "shadow" upon the check, which could have been removed by the performance by the bank of its plain duty under the law—that of inquiry. Ward v. City Trust Co., 192 N. Y. 61, 84 N. E. 585; Levy v. Irvine, 134 Cal. 664, 66 Pac. 953.

[5] The language of the court in the case of Fresno Canal, etc., v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 53, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112, when it is said:

"The defendant cannot be allowed to shut his eyes and say he did not see, when by opening them he might have seen"

—is very apropos here. There can be no merit in defendant's contention that it was justified in refusing compliance with plaintiff's demand for payment to it of said money because the said check had been generally indorsed. As we have already seen, such was not the case. Because of the unauthorized indorsement of the check by Kemper, plaintiff's title to the proceeds of said check did not pass to defendant when the latter collected the amount thereof from the drawer's bank; but, instead, it became liable to plaintiff for that much money had and received to and for the use of plaintiff. Palo Alto, etc., v. Bank, supra; Knoxville Water Co. v. Bank, 123 Tenn. 364, 131 S. W. 447; Ward v. City Trust Co., supra. As we view the evidence, and construe the law applicable to this case, there was not the slightest excuse for the act of the defendant bank in so accepting said check. As we have seen, there were no previous dealings because of which it might be misled. Kemper said nothing; no inquiry was made of him. Without any fault upon the part of plaintiff its property was taken and attempted to be disposed of by one having no authority so to do. Had the defendant bank performed its plain duty here, it would have been saved from its present predicament, and Kemper would have been thwarted in his unlawful scheme. The whole theory of defendant here, and the very foundation of its argument, is based upon the assumption that Kemper was, at the time the check was received, secretary and general manager of plaintiff. This was not the case. He was secretary, but he was not the general manager, and had not been for many months. He never did have authority to do what he attempted to do here, as the evidence in this case, not only abundantly, but conclusively, shows. Our question is therefore answered by the statement that the bank should have made inquiry.

For the reasons above stated, and many others that occur to us not necessary to mention, we are of the opinion that the evidence amply supports the findings complained of by appellant here. No other point in the record before us merits attention.

Judgment and order affirmed.

MURPHY v. RIECKES, Sheriff, et al.
(Civ. 1948.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 18, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 17, 1919.)

1. JUDGMENTS ⚡773—LIEN—CONVEYANCE PRIOR TO ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Where judgment directed defendant to pay plaintiff specified amount per month until specified date, and subsequent to such date another hearing was had, and a judgment entered directing defendant to pay plaintiff a specified sum per month from such date, the two judgments were entirely distinct from each other, and latter judgment did not become a lien upon property conveyed by defendant prior to its entry, but subsequent to entry of first judgment.

2. JUDGMENTS ⚡743(2)—CONCLUSIVENESS—VALIDITY OF CONVEYANCE.

Judgment decreeing validity of husband's conveyance to wife is conclusive as to validity of conveyance upon wife's subsequent action to restrain sheriff from levying execution upon the land to satisfy a judgment against husband entered subsequent to the conveyance.

3. EXECUTION ⚡171(1)—ACTION TO ENJOIN.

Injunction may be issued to restrain sheriff from levying execution upon land to satisfy judgment recovered against grantor subsequent to his conveyance of the land.

4. QUIETING TITLE ⚡7(4)—CLOUD UPON TITLE—SALE OF LAND UPON EXECUTION.

The sale of lands upon an execution issued against the grantor of the person holding legal title will cast a cloud upon the title.

5. EXECUTION ⚡171(4)—INJUNCTION OF SALE—CLOUD ON TITLE.

Sale of land will be enjoined where its effect will be to cloud the title of the party complaining.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by Alice K. Murphy against William H. Riecks, as Sheriff of the County of San Joaquin, State of California, and Lulu Mignon Murphy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Walter F. Lynch, of Stockton, for appellant.

John R. Cronin, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The appeal is by defendant, Lulu Mignon Murphy, from a judgment, entered in the superior court of the county of San Joaquin, restraining defendants from selling, by virtue of a certain writ of execution, at sheriff's sale or otherwise, certain real property of plaintiff.

The defendant Riecks, as sheriff, filed an answer and disclaimer, and upon the trial was permitted to withdraw from the case. The real parties to the action, therefore, are the plaintiff and Lulu Mignon Murphy, who will hereinafter be referred to as the defendant and appellant.

Prior to the 13th day of October, 1908, S. S. Murphy was the owner of the property sought to be sold by virtue of said writ of execution. On said day, by deed of gift, he conveyed said property to his wife, Alice K. Murphy, plaintiff herein, which deed was duly recorded on August 5, 1911, since which time the property has stood in the name of plaintiff.

Appellant is the daughter of plaintiff and her husband, said S. S. Murphy. On the 13th day of March, 1911, she instituted an action (No. 9896) against her father. It was alleged in the complaint that plaintiff was a poor person, afflicted with disease and unable to work and support herself, that she had frequently demanded of her father that he maintain and support her, and that he was financially able to contribute to her support. The demand was for $30 per month, commencing July 15, 1896, and for attorney's fees and costs. The defendant in said action filed an answer, and on the 26th day of April, 1911, a partial hearing was had, and the defendant, upon agreement and stipulation of the parties, was awarded an allowance of $18 per month, payment of which was to begin on the 29th of said month of April and to continue to be made on the 26th day of each and every month thereafter until the 2d day of January, 1912. Thereupon, and upon the agreement between counsel for the respective parties and the announcement in open court that "the interests of the parties might best be served by continuing the further hearing of said matter until Tuesday, the 2d day of January, 1912," the matter was continued by the court for further hearing to said date. On March 21, 1912, another hearing was had, and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff in said action (defendant herein), directing defendant in said action to pay her the sum of $15 per month from January 5, 1912. In this connection it should be stated that the trial court in this action, in its findings, refers to and treats its judgment of January 5, 1912, as a modification of the order or judgment of April 26, 1911. In other words the phraseology of the recitals in the judgment or order of April 26, 1911, awarding the defendant here a monthly allowance of $18 for a specified limited period seems to indicate that the matter was not on that date fully heard, and that the allowance awarded defendant in this action was intended as more in the nature of a pendente lite provision than as a final judgment, but the theory of the findings herein is that the original award was in the form of a judgment, and that the later or final judgment was a modification of the former.

However, on the 23d day of June, 1913, defendant and appellant brought an action (10814) against both her parents. In the third amended complaint therein, filed September 11, 1915 the judgment in said action 9896 was set out, and it was alleged: That the same is still in full force and effect; that S. S. Murphy has disposed of all the property which was recorded in his name at the time of the filing of the complaint and the rendering of the judgment in said action, and that there is now no property standing in his name on the records of the county of San Joaquin; that for more than two years said S. S. Murphy "has lived in defiance of said plaintiff's afore-described judgment against him, and has paid said plaintiff no money at all, * * * and refuses to comply with the said judgment." It was alleged that "plaintiff believes, alleges, and affirms" that said transfer by said S. S. Murphy to Alice K. Murphy of the aforesaid real estate was made "for the purpose of placing all properties in the name of his said wife, and thereby to endeavor to evade the payment of the afore-described judgment of court and to defraud said plaintiff out of the income awarded her for her maintenance and support"; that said transfer by S. S. Murphy to his wife "was not made and recorded in good faith or for any legal purpose whatsoever, but * * * for the purpose of defrauding said plaintiff out of the afore-described judgment of court and out of the income awarded said plaintiff." The complaint prayed that said deed of gift be declared fraudulent as against plaintiff, and that the same be stricken from the records of said county. Issue was joined by answer, and the court found: That the deed of gift was not made to defraud plaintiff, but was made in good faith; that said deed was delivered to Alice K. Murphy on the 13th of October, 1908, since which date said property "has been the exclusive property of said Alice K. Murphy." Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of defendants in said action. No appeal was taken from said judgment.

S. S. Murphy complied with the terms of the judgment in action No. 9896 until May 5, 1914, when he ceased making payments. On December 5, 1916, execution was issued to recover the sum of $465 then due, and the sheriff levied upon the property conveyed by said deed of gift. Alice K. Murphy served upon the sheriff a "third party claim" in which she notified him that she was the owner of the property levied upon and demanded its release.

On the 12th of January, 1917, the present action (12336) was commenced by Alice K. Murphy against the sheriff and Lulu Mignon Murphy. The complaint alleged: "That S. S. Murphy has no right, title, interest, or claim in said real property," describing it; that the writ of execution referred to required the sheriff to make good "certain sums therein specified out of the personal or real property of S. S. Murphy"; that by virtue of said writ of execution the sheriff has levied upon real property of the plaintiff and is about to sell the same; that on the 3d day of January, 1917, the plaintiff served on the defendant sheriff "her verified claim to said real property, * * * and a demand that said real property be surrendered to said plaintiff," which demand was by the sheriff refused. It was then alleged that said writ of execution was issued in said case No. 9896, and reference is made to the judgment therein obtained. The execution, delivery, and recordation of said deed of gift are alleged. Reference is made to action 10814, and the judgment therein rendered decreeing that the property in question is the separate property of plaintiff; "that the defendant Lulu Mignon Murphy holds no judgment against this plaintiff," and that she is well aware that the property stands in the name of plaintiff and that S. S. Murphy has no right, title, interest, or claim therein. The prayer was for an order restraining the sheriff from selling said property.

The answer of defendant denied plaintiff's ownership of the property; alleged that on April 10, 1911, and on April 14, 1911, S. S. Murphy, in his answer in action 9896, admitted ownership of said property; alleged that S. S. Murphy has interest in said property "to the extent of the aforesaid judgment"; that the deed of gift is void as against the judgment secured against S. S. Murphy; "affirms that said plaintiff, by neglecting and failing to record said described and alleged deed of gift prior to said commencement of said action 9896, has waived all right to priority over the judgment in said case," and has waived all right to interfere with the execution; that the judgment in action 9896 became a lien on the property prior to the recording of the deed of gift.

On January 15, 1917, a temporary restraining order was issued and served upon the sheriff. The action was tried on April 10, 1917, findings were filed in favor of plaintiff, and judgment was entered on May 21, 1917, enjoining defendants from selling plaintiff's property.

[1] We think that the theory of the findings in this action that the judgment of March 21, 1912 involved a modification of the said judgment or order of the 26th day of April 1911, awarding the plaintiff in said proceeding (defendant herein) the sum of $18 per month until the 2d day of January, 1912, is not sustainable. The two judgments are entirely distinct from each other. The one was limited to exist, in its operative effect, to a certain specified time, and when the time to which it was so limited lapsed, which was prior to the rendition, and the entry of second judgment, it became functus officio, and assuming that by virtue thereof, a lien attached to the premises conveyed by S. S. Murphy, in October, 1908, to the plaintiff herein, the grant not having been recorded until after said judgment was entered, then said lien passed out contemporaneously with the passing out of said judgment, it appearing that the same was fully satisfied by said S. S. Murphy. It follows that, since the conveyance from S. S. Murphy to the plaintiff herein was of record at the time of the rendition and entry of the second judgment, no lien by reason of said second judgment could attach to the said premises.

[2] As to the charge in the answer herein that the conveyance from S. S. Murphy to the plaintiff herein was fraudulent and made for the purpose of preventing the satisfaction of the judgment herein out of the property so conveyed, the ready reply thereto is to be found in the finding and in the evidence that, in an action instituted by the defendant here in September, 1915, and subsequent to the entry of the second judgment awarding her a monthly allowance for support against her father, S. S. Murphy, the issue as to the alleged fraudulent transfer of the premises involved herein by S. S. Murphy to the plaintiff herein was made by the pleadings, and upon the trial thereof the court found and decided that the charge of fraud in said transaction was without foundation. As seen, no appeal was taken from the judgment in said action, and the finding or decision in said action that said conveyance was not fraudulent or made with intent to defraud the defendant of the fruits of her judgment against her father for maintenance and support is conclusive upon that issue as against her.

[3-5] The claim is made that injunction is not the proper remedy in such a case as this. The contention possesses no force. It is thoroughly settled that a sale of lands upon an execution issued against the grantor of the person holding the legal title will cast a cloud upon the title (Einstein v. Bank of California, 137 Cal. 47, 49, 69 Pac. 616; High on Injunctions [3d Ed.] § 379; Freeman on Executions [3d Ed.] vol. 3, § 438; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 133), and it is equally well settled that a sale will be enjoined where its effect will be to cloud the title of the party complaining (High on Injunctions, § 372; Shattuck v. Carson, 2 Cal. 588; Pixley v. Huggins, 15 Cal. 128; Culver v. Rogers, 28 Cal. 520; Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 175; Porter v. Jennings, 89 Cal. 440, 26 Pac. 965; Einstein v. Bank of California, 137 Cal. 47, 49, 69 Pac. 616).

The plaintiff was the owner of the legal title to the property involved herein and in possession thereof. Her title to the property was not only presumptively good, but established to be perfectly valid by a solemn judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in an action where the validity of her title was directly challenged. The sale of the property by the sheriff under the execution issued against the property for the satisfaction of a judgment against her husband, although insufficient to vest title in the purchaser at the execution sale, would nevertheless be sufficient to enshroud the validity of her title in a veil of doubt, and thus cast a cloud upon it. We can imagine no case where the injunctive or preventive function of courts of equity could be more justly or appropriately be called into action than in a case where as here, there was about to be consummated a proceeding, bearing upon its face the insignia of judicial authority, which would, if carried out, involve the validity of a person's title to land in doubt. Certainly it would be a very weak system of remedial justice that would require the owner of the land to stand helpless and mute until after the threatened mischief to his title had been committed, and we know of no other remedy afforded either by the law or by the equity courts than that of the writ of injunction which would prevent the commission of so grievous a mischief upon and against the title to real property.

[6] It is perfectly clear that there is no other possible alternative open to this court but to affirm the judgment, although we are frank to say that so far as we are informed by the record before us of the facts of the controversy giving rise to this litigation, the appellant is entitled to receive assistance from her parents, if they are financially able to render such assistance, in the matter of her maintenance and support. Indeed, such assistance should be provided, not as the result of the coercive power of the law, as it has been written by man, but in ready response to the dictates of the very first and commonest principles of humanity. It is, of course, the legal duty of S. S. Murphy to support the appellant, if for any substantial reason she is unable to support herself and he has ample means for doing so, but, above all, is that natural duty intrinsically reciprocal as between parent and child, involving obligations which should be held none the less sacred and morally binding because in some measure formally recognized by positive law. It is to be deprecated that some substantial relief cannot be afforded the appellant through the processes of the courts if it be true that under the circumstances of her case no such relief be available to her, assuming, of course, that she is for any reason without ability to maintain herself and that her father is. But the law, both substantive and remedial, must be applied according to a well-defined plan to secure that uniformity of operation so necessary to a well-poised system of jurisprudence, and the courts can do no more or no less than to administer the first in the manner prescribed by the latter. Thus we speak, not alone because we see justness in the claim of the appellant that she is entitled to assistance from her parents, but also because, although not a licensed practitioner of the law and undoubtedly, without training therein, it appears that she has been required, probably from paucity of means to employ the services of an attorney, to appear in this cause before this court in propria persona and so present her own side of this controversy. She has filed herein a voluminous brief, prepared, as we are informed, by herself, unaided by a lawyer, and while therein, for one who has not been an habitual student of the law, she has presented her side of this case with singular clearness and force, it is plainly manifest that (as above declared), so far as this particular case is concerned, the law is against her, and therefore her appeal cannot be sustained.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

BOWMAN et al. v. PROVIDENT REALTY INV. CO. et al. (Civ. 2744.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 27, 1919.)

BANKRUPTCY — 423(1)—DISCHARGE—DEBTS BARRED — MISREPRESENTATIONS — "FALSE REPRESENTATION."

A judgment entered by consent on a complaint alleging that plaintiff as undisclosed principal paid defendant a certain sum for an interest in a land speculation, which was uncompleted because the land was not conveyed to defendant, is not a liability for obtaining property by "false representations," within Bankruptcy Act, § 17, subd. 2, as amended in 1903 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9601), and is barred by the discharge in bankruptcy.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, False Representation.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Henrietta Paul Bowman and another against the Provident Realty Investment Company and S. C. Pratt. From an order denying the motion of defendant Pratt to recall and quash a writ of execution theretofore issued against him, that defendant appeals. Reversed.

Heney & Carr and William F. Adams, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. A. Martin, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Defendant S. C. Pratt appeals from an order denying his motion to recall and quash a writ of execution issued upon a judgment theretofore rendered against him in favor of Henrietta Paul Bowman.

The motion was based upon the conceded fact that subsequent to the rendition of said judgment Pratt was duly adjudged a bankrupt by the United States District Court and, in October, 1916, an order was duly made for his discharge as such. The judgment was included in Pratt's schedule of liabilities, and Bowman's claim based thereon allowed in February, 1917. Thereafter, in October, 1917, the clerk of the superior court, as requested by the judgment creditor, issued an execution on the judgment, which was followed by Pratt's motion and an order denying the same.

That appellant's discharge as a bankrupt released him from all liability upon the judgment, must be conceded, unless the indebtedness falls within the exception specified in subdivision 2 of section 17 of the federal Bankruptcy Act (Act Cong. July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. § 9601]), which provides that—

"A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts, except such as * * * (2) are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations."

The question, then, presented for determination is: Was the indebtedness upon which the judgment is founded a liability for property obtained by false pretenses or false representations? The judgment in the case of Bowman v. Pratt and his codefendant, Provident Realty Investment Company, was entered upon defendant filing his consent thereto; hence we must look solely to the complaint to ascertain the nature of the liability. As shown by the complaint, the material facts are as follows:

In September, 1913, C. M. Wood, the City Builders' Investment Company, a corporation, and the Big Five Corporation, a corporation, listed and placed certain real property for sale with one Charles P. Rogers. Thereafter defendants agreed with said Rogers, Wood, the two corporations named, and the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, to buy and handle said properties so listed with Rogers, upon certain specified terms, conditions and prices for the sale and handling of same; it being agreed that the properties should, by the owners thereof, be conveyed to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company as trustee for certain beneficiaries, among whom was the defendant Pratt and the Provident Realty Investment Company. After the making of this agreement and the preparation of the trust agreements under which the property was to be conveyed to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, and before the conveyance thereof, Pratt and his codefendant, the Provident Realty Investment Company, stated to Rogers that they would be unable to consummate the deal and carry out the terms of the agreement, unless they could secure the services of some party to co-operate with them in the handling thereof, and expressed their willingness, for a consideration of $1,250, to execute a contract with such party, giving him an equal right to the participation with defendants in the profits to be derived from the handling of said properties, as set forth in said proposed declarations of trust. Rogers informed Bowman of the proposition so made; whereupon she proposed to advance and pay to said defendants $1,250 for the right to an equal participation in the profits to be derived from the handling of said properties, provided Rogers would accept the position as selling agent to whom the defendants should delegate full authority to act in the matter.

In furtherance of such agreement, Bowman instructed Thomas Ball, as her agent and attorney, to enter into a contract to that effect and pay defendant Pratt and his codefendant the sum of $1,250 when said properties were conveyed to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company. Thereupon, in pursuance of instructions so given by Bowman to Ball, he, on October 14, 1913, in his own name, executed the contract with defendant Pratt and his codefendant and paid to them the sum of $1,250. It is alleged in the complaint that, according to Bowman's instructions (which, in the absence of anything to the contrary, we assume to have been the instructions given Ball, her agent and attorney), the money was not to be paid to defendants until the conveyance was made to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, "according to the true intent and purpose" of the declarations of trust. After the payment of this money, the City Builders' Investment Company and the Big Five Corporation refused to convey the property in accordance with their agreement so to do, and thereupon Bowman demanded the return of her $1,250. Neither Wood nor either of the corporations ever conveyed the property to the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, nor was either of the declarations of trust ever executed. It is further alleged that the $1,250 was paid to Pratt and his codefendant upon the sole consideration that said properties would be so conveyed, and by reason of the failure of the owners so to do the said Bowman received no consideration for the money so paid by her.

Subdivision 2 of section 17 of the act of 1903, in the plainest language, restricts the fraud which will prevent the release of a discharged bankrupt from provable debts to that of fraud by obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations. Zimmern v. Blount, 238 Fed. 740, 151 C. C. A. 590. There is absolutely nothing disclosed by the complaint from which the slightest inference in support of the contention that Pratt was guilty of obtaining the money of Bowman by means of false pretenses or false representations, can be drawn. On the contrary, it appears therefrom that the agreement was made between Pratt and Ball, each acting in good faith and, so far as shown, the former having no knowledge that Ball, with whom he contracted as a principal, was the agent of Bowman. Looking solely to the complaint upon which the judgment by consent was rendered, we find no allegation of fraud or deceit of any nature practiced by defendant upon plaintiff; indeed, stripped of immaterial and redundant matter, it appears that Ball, acting for an undisclosed principal and with full knowledge of the nature of the proposed and uncompleted speculative venture, paid Pratt $1,250 for a one-half interest therein, which, due to no fault of Pratt, was not consummated, owing to which fact it might be said there was a failure of consideration.

The authorities cited by respondents not only involve the interpretation of prior statutes the provisions of which were broader and entirely different from that under consideration, but the facts made to appear in such cases clearly brought them within the provisions of such statutes.

The order is reversed.

(Civ. 2705.)

1. PARTIES ⇐6(2)—PARTIES INTERESTED IN ACTION AGAINST PARTY CAUSING INJURY TO SERVANT RECEIVING AWARD UNDER COMPENSATION ACT.

An injured employé, having made a claim and received an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, may, in view of section 31 thereof and Code Civ. Proc. § 378, be joined as a party plaintiff, he having an interest, with his employer, or the latter's insurance carrier, in a suit against a third party whose tort has caused the injury.

2. PARTIES ⇐35—JOINDER—ACTION AGAINST PARTY CAUSING SERVANT'S INJURY—MAKING MASTER DEFENDANT ON REFUSAL TO JOIN AS PLAINTIFF.

Where an employer, after an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, refuses to join the servant as a party plaintiff against the third party whose tort caused the injury, the servant may maintain the action alone by making the employer one of the defendants, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 382, providing that, where one who should be joined as a plaintiff refuses to consent thereto, he may be made a defendant.

A. L. Clark and Henley C. Booth, both of San Francisco, for respondent Southern Pacific Co.

Edwin T. Cooper and H. K. Eells, both of San Francisco, for respondent Healy-Tibbitts Const. Co.

HAVEN, J. This action was brought to recover damages for the death of Lucius Endicott Hall, Jr., which is alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant Healy-Tibbitts Construction Company. Plaintiffs are the surviving widow and minor child of said deceased. At the time of the accident which caused his death the deceased was employed by the defendant Southern Pacific Company as a pile inspector and construction engineer, and was performing services growing out of and incidental to such employment. After his death the plaintiffs filed a lawful claim against the defendant Southern Pacific Company for compensation for such death under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (Stats. 1913, p. 279). Upon that claim the Industrial Accident Commission made an award in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendant Southern Pacific Company, requiring payment by that company to plaintiffs of compensation in weekly installments; the total liability of the said defendant upon such award being $5,100. After the making of such award, the plaintiffs requested the defendant Southern Pacific Company to commence an action against the defendant Healy-Tibbitts Construction Company to recover damages for the death of said deceased, with the further request that the excess of any amount which might be recovered in such suit, over the liability of the defendant Southern Pacific Company to plaintiffs under the award, be paid to plaintiffs. The said defendant Southern Pacific Company refused to bring such action, whereupon this action was brought by plaintiffs, and the Southern Pacific Company was joined as a party defendant. The prayer is for judgment for the sum of $50,000 "in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, for the use of the plaintiffs."

[1] To plaintiffs' complaint, alleging substantially the above recited facts, the defendants filed separate demurrers, both of which were sustained. Plaintiffs declining to amend, judgment was entered against them, from which they appeal. The sole question presented is whether or not plaintiffs can maintain this action against a third party, whose negligence is alleged to have caused the death, after having made claim against the employer of the deceased for compensation under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and received an award on such claim.

The answer to that question depends on the proper construction to be given to section 31 of the act referred to, which, as far as is here material, reads as follows:

"The making of a lawful claim against an employer for compensation under this act for the injury or death of his employé shall operate as an assignment to the employer of any right to recover damages which the injured employé or his personal representative, or other person, may have against any other party for such injury or death, and such employer shall be subrogated to any such right and may enforce in his own name the legal liability of such other party, * * * but any amount collected by the employer, under the provisions of this section, in excess of the amount paid by the employer, or for which he is liable, shall be held by him for the benefit of the injured employé or other person entitled."

In the case of Marcel Bassot and Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation v. United Railroads of San Francisco, recently decided by division 1 of this court, suit was brought by an injured employé and his employer's insurance carrier jointly against the defendant corporation to recover damages caused by the latter's alleged negligence. The compensation due the employé under the Workmen's Compensation Act had been adjusted and paid by the insurance company; after which both joined as plaintiffs against the third party whose negligence was alleged to have been the cause of the injuries received. A motion for nonsuit was granted as against the plaintiff employé on the ground that he was improperly joined as a party plaintiff. The case was twice heard in the District Court of Appeal, and in both opinions the granting of such nonsuit was held to have been erroneous. In the decision on rehearing the court, in referring to section 31 of the above act, and adopting the language of the original opinion, says:

"Respondent is correct in its contention that this section operates to transfer the legal title to the claim for damages to the employer or his surety, but it is also true that the employé still retains an equitable interest therein as to any surplus that may be recovered over the amount paid him by the employer, and he is therefore a real party in interest in the litigation. Although section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that 'a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted,' section 378 of that Code provides that 'all persons having an interest in the subject of the action, and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs, except where otherwise provided in this title.' There is ample authority in this state to the effect that the provisions of section 369 are permissive only, and that the beneficiary of the trust may properly be joined as a party plaintiff with the trustee by virtue of section 378. Daley v. Cunningham, 60 Cal. 530; Cerf v. Ashley, 68 Cal. 419, 9 Pac. 658. It therefore follows that, while Bassot was not a necessary party to the suit, he was at all events a proper party thereto, and that the lower court was in error in granting the motion for a nonsuit and dismissing the action as to him." 26 Cal. App. Dec. 1003, on rehearing 177 Pac. 884.

A petition to have the above case heard and determined by the Supreme Court, after judgment in this court, was denied by the Supreme Court on January 30, 1919. We are in entire accord with the construction of the statute announced in the above case. If we were not, we should be bound to consider that the opinions referred to, and the refusal of the Supreme Court to disturb the same, establish the law in this state to the effect that an injured employé, after having made claim and received an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, may join as a party plaintiff with his employer, or the latter's insurance carrier, in a suit against a third party whose tort has caused the injury complained of.

[2] The only remaining question in this case is whether, upon the refusal of the employer to join as plaintiff in such a suit, the injured employé, or the heirs at law of a deceased employé, may maintain the action alone by joining the employer as a defendant. If such power does not exist, the right of the injured employé or the heirs of the deceased employé, to protect their equitable interest in the surplus that may be recovered for their benefit, can easily be destroyed by the refusal of the employer to join as plaintiff. In such event, the plaintiffs in this action, having an established right to sue, would be denied that right by reason of the refusal of their trustee to protect their interests. The necessity of preventing such a denial of justice on broader grounds is obviated by the provisions of section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

"Of the parties to the action, those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants; but if the consent of any one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint."

Plaintiffs complied with this section and, by virtue of its provisions, are entitled to maintain the action as sole plaintiffs.

The judgment must be reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers to plaintiffs' complaint; and it is so ordered.

Chas. M. Cassin and James L. Atteridge, both of San Jose, for respondent Southern Pac. Co. King, Nibley & Farnsworth and Carroll S. Bucher, all of Salt Lake City, Utah, for other respondents.

HAVEN, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for injuries received by him through the negligence of defendant Southern Pacific Company in shunting a car into a truck of lumber, which plaintiff was engaged in moving in the course of his employment by the defendant San Vicente Lumber Company. After the accident, plaintiff received from his employer medical and surgical attendance, and from the employer's insurance carrier, the defendant Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company, 65 per cent. of his average weekly earnings from the time of the accident until a few days before the commencement of the action, which latter payment is alleged to have been made pursuant to an award by the Industrial Accident Commission. Subsequent to that award, the plaintiff requested his employer and its insurance carrier to join him in the institution of this action, but both of said defendants refused to so join. The action was then commenced by the injured employé as sole plaintiff. All of the defendants demurred to the complaint. Their demurrers were sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendants, from which plaintiff appeals.

The question presented for determination is the same as that involved in the action of Hall v. Southern Pacific Co. (No. 2705) 180 Pac. 20, this day decided. In this case the action is by the injured employé, while in the Hall Case the employé was killed and the action was brought by his heirs at law. Here an insurance carrier made certain payments and is joined as a defendant for that reason, which fact did not appear in the Hall Case. These differences of facts do not differentiate the question involved upon the appeal. For the reasons given in the opinion in the Hall Case, it must be held that plaintiff was entitled to maintain this suit as sole plaintiff, upon joining his employer and the latter's insurance carrier as defendants, and, for that reason, the demurrers of defendants to plaintiff's complaint were erroneously sustained.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the demurrers to plaintiff's complaint.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 15, 1919.)

COSTS $\Leftrightarrow$ 254(1)—COSTS ON APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Expense of preparing a bill of exceptions before appeal taken, the bill being used in motion for new trial, though prepared in anticipation of use on appeal, is an expense in the conduct of the case in the superior court, and not a part of the record on appeal nor taxable as a disbursement on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by R. H. Countryman against the California Trona Company. From denial of a motion to tax costs of former appeal (170 Pac. 1067), defendant appeals. Reversed.

Charles W. Slack, Chauncey S. Goodrich, and Perry Evans, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. On a former appeal by the defendant in this action the judgment of the lower court was sustained. 35 Cal. App. 728, 170 Pac. 1069. Upon the going down of the remittitur the plaintiff duly filed a memorandum of his costs on appeal. A motion to have the costs taxed was made by defendant, which motion was denied, and defendant appeals.

The memorandum of costs is entitled "Memorandum of Costs and Disbursements on Behalf of Plaintiff on Appeal from Judgment, Including the Order Denying Motion for New Trial," and the item therein objected to is as follows:

"1914, April 15. To amount actually expended by plaintiff and respondent in connection with the appeal to the Supreme Court of the state of California from the judgment herein, and including the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, and the preparation of the record for the said appeal, and actually used in preparing amendments to the proposed bill of exceptions of defendant for use upon said appeal, said amount being paid to J. H. W. Riley, official court reporter of said superior court, $352.80."

The judgment in the cause appealed from was entered in favor of plaintiff on April 3, 1914. Defendant gave notice of its intention to move for a new trial on April 11, 1914, and appealed from said judgment on April 21, 1914. It thus appears from the record that the item of cost in question was a disbursement actually made before any appeal taken.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial specified that said motion would be made "upon affidavits to be made, served, and filed, and upon a bill of exceptions to be thereafter prepared, served, and settled." Within the time allowed by law, and the stipulation of the parties, such bill of exceptions was prepared and settled, and was the one bill of exceptions used on the motion for a new trial (which was denied), on the appeal from the judgment and on the appeal from the order denying a new trial. It is headed "Bill of Exceptions of Defendant on Its Motion for a New Trial and on Its Appeal from Said Judgment.

From the foregoing record appellant contends that the question of the right to recover, as cost of appeal, the amount shown by the item attacked, is to be decided adversely to the plaintiff on the authority of Turner v. East Side Canal & Irrigation Co. (Sup.) 171 Pac. 299, and Eaton v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 379, 160 Pac. 687. In the latter case one of the items of the cost bill in dispute was $104 paid for a reporter's transcript of the testimony taken at the trial and which respondent there claimed as an expense "for transcript of testimony used by plaintiffs in preparing record on appeal and amendments to defendant's bill of exceptions used upon appeal." The record on the appeal in that case, as here, showed that the reporter's transcript was obtained for the purpose of assisting counsel for the plaintiff in the preparation of amendments to a bill of exceptions prepared by the defendant on its motion for a new trial in the superior court. The appellate court held that "the expense thus incurred was purely an expense in the conduct of the case in the superior court, and was not a part of the preparation of the record for the appeal," and therefore could not be allowed. Eaton v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.

So here, as in the case just cited, while there is no denial of the statement concerning the item of disbursement contained in the verified memorandum of costs, the record discloses that the payment was made after notice of motion for a new trial in the court below (which specified that said motion would be made in part upon a bill of exceptions) and before any appeal taken. Although the bill of exceptions may have been prepared in anticipation of being used, and apparently was used, on the appeal from the judgment, as was done in the Eaton Case, supra, under the ruling of that case, as affirmed by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court in Turner v. East Side Canal and Irrigation Co., supra, the expense of such preparation must be held to be an expense in the conduct of the case in the superior court, and not a part of the record for the appeal.

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to disallow the item of $352.80 paid to J. H. W. Riley, official court reporter of said superior court, and to tax plaintiff's costs on said appeal at the sum of $50.50.

TRUSTS $\Leftrightarrow$ 356(1)—RIGHT TO FOLLOW TRUST OR PROCEEDS THEREOF—TRUST PROPERTY TRANSFERRED TO THIRD PERSONS.

Where a trust existed, and plaintiff was a beneficiary and entitled to receive a certain sum of money therefrom, he was entitled to a judgment against one into whose possession he traced such funds, and who claimed them as a gift from trustor made subsequent to the trust and to possession of corporate securities purchased with such fund.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Suit by George Albert Bean against Harry Joel Bean and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Clark, of San Jose, for appellant. H. E. Wilcox and D. M. Burnett, all of San Jose, for defendants.

H. A. Blanchard, of San Jose, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a suit in equity to enjoin the defendant from disposing of certain shares of stock and to compel him to turn over the same, together with certain sums of money claimed to be due plaintiff under the terms of a certain trust created by one James Bean for the benefit of his children with their approval and consent. Judgment went for plaintiff. No adverse ruling against appellant either in the settlement of the pleadings or in the admission or rejection of evidence appears from the record. The principal point relied upon for a reversal is that the findings fail to support the existence of the alleged trust. The case comes up for review upon the judgment roll and bill of exceptions.

The facts necessary for an understanding of the case may be stated as follows: James Bean, being nearly 90 years of age and sick and infirm, was desirous of dividing certain lands owned by him among his three sons. These lands were situated in different counties of this state and were all subject to mortgage. Bean was also the owner of a certain note secured by a deed of trust, upon which there was due the sum of $15,000. To carry out his plan for the division of his estate he proceeded to convey to each son the particular piece of property he desired him to have. He then transferred to his eldest son, James Edwin Bean, the note owned by him. The transfer was made in trust for various purposes, but particularly to pay off the incumbrances on the various parcels of land conveyed by him to his sons, so that as far as possible, each son might have his property clear of indebtedness. The father retained the income from all of the property for his support as long as he lived.

The terms of the trust in relation to the property provided for the following payments:

(1) The income to the father during his life.

(2) To the Bank of San Jose an indebtedness due from the trustor in the sum of $6,500.

(3) A mortgage of $2,000 upon property situated in Alameda county conveyed to the appellant.

(4) An indebtedness of $1,200 due to James Edwin Bean.

(5) A note indorsed by James Bean and James Edwin Bean in the principal sum of $1,200; an indebtedness of $1,500 on property located in San Francisco; and also the payment of a certain mortgage indebtedness then owing by James Bean upon particular property conveyed to plaintiff as far as the fund would permit.

The property alluded to in the last clause was situated in Santa Clara county, and was known as the San Martin ranch, upon which there was a mortgage of $3,500. At the time the trust in the $15,000 note was created the total debts, the payment of which was provided for, amounted to the sum of $16,400. As the payment of the debt of $3,500 on the San Martin property was subordinate to the payment of the other incumbrances and debts, the amount available for this purpose was but the sum of $2,100, which left it subject to a debt of $1,400, which was to be assumed by plaintiff. The various credits provided for plaintiff out of the trust fund were the following: The sum of $2,100 above mentioned; a sum of $1,200 due the Bank of Santa Clara; the sum of $1,500 to liquidate the indebtedness on a lot in San Francisco; and the further sum of $500 to be paid for the release of a mortgage on a lot situated in Gilroy. In addition to these sums, plaintiff is entitled to a further credit of $1,200; he having succeeded to the claim of his brother James Edwin Bean against the trust fund, payment of which was provided for.

At the time of the conveyance of the different parcels of land allotted to plaintiff, one of those parcels, alluded to as the San Martin ranch, was subject to a contract of sale, and was thereafter sold by plaintiff thereunder for the sum of $8,350. The property when sold was still subject to the mortgage as above described. No part of the indebtedness had been released as provided for under the trust agreement, for the reason that the note assigned to the trustees for collection had not as yet been paid. The price paid by the purchaser of this property was made up by him assuming the $3,500 mortgage, the execution of a second mortgage of $2,850 and the payment of $2,000 in cash. With permission of the father, plaintiff retained the second mortgage of $2,850 and the sum of $1,500 in cash, making a total of $4,350, and the balance of $500 was devoted to the purposes of the trust. Thereafter the trustee received a partial payment of $8,250 on the note assigned to him. A part of this was applied to the liquidation of the first mortgage he was directed to pay under the terms of the trust, and he turned over the balance of $1,701.25 to the trustor to distribute as he had directed in his declaration of trust. Some time thereafter the balance of the trust note was collected, and the $2,000 indebtedness against the property situated in Oakland, deeded to appellant, was paid, as was also the sum of $700 on account of the indebtedness of plaintiff to the Bank of Santa Clara. The payment of both of these items was provided for. At this time there were due credits to plaintiff with which the trust fund was chargeable a $500 balance due the Bank of Santa Clara; the sum of $1,200 due the trustee, to which plaintiff succeeded; $1,500 indebtedness on the San Francisco lot; a $500 indebtedness on the Gilroy lot; and the credit of $2,100 on account of the San Martin ranch, together with the sum of $500 paid by plaintiff into the trust fund at the time of its sale. Upon these amounts the plaintiff had been paid the sum of $4,300, leaving a balance to his credit in the sum of $6,300. According to the terms of the trust, these debts should have been paid, but, notwithstanding this fact, a portion of the funds on hand were invested in certain corporate securities, and the father having shortly thereafter died, these securities came into the possession of the appellant, who lived with his father at the time of his death, and he claimed them under a gift, contrary to the trust provisions.

At the trial the amount of the trust fund traced into the hands of the defendant represented by the corporate securities amounted to the sum of $4,625, together with the sum of $330, dividends paid thereon. Plaintiff further proved that the sum of $600 was diverted from the fund for the payment of street improvements or the benefit of the appellant not contemplated or authorized by the trust agreement. The amount of the trust funds so traced was less than plaintiff was entitled to receive under the terms of the trust.

By its judgment the trial court awarded plaintiff the corporate stock, which it found to be of the value of $4,625. It also gave a personal judgment for the sum of $930, being the $600 paid for street work and the dividends accruing upon the stock. Plaintiff having proved, and the court having found, the existence of the trust, plaintiff was entitled to this judgment; he having traced these amounts as being part of the trust funds to which he was entitled.

In conclusion it may be stated that it appears from the record that the appellant received the major portion of the father's estate under the division thereof. From this fact it is argued by respondent that appellant is in no position to question the validity of the settlement. As the trial court found upon sufficient evidence that a trust existed, the discussion of this question becomes unimportant.

The judgment is affirmed.

John J. Craig, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from judgment entered in favor of the defendant Bennett.

The action was brought by plaintiff to recover damages for breach of the following written agreement made by the defendant Bennett:

"Los Angeles, Calif., June 6, 1912.

"I hereby agree to clear title to lot 17 in block 36 in the Central Arlington Heights Tract as per map recorded in Book 30, page 51, Miscellaneous Records of Los Angeles County, within ninety days from above date.

"I. I. Bennett having deed to Mrs. Elizabeth Woods the above mentioned property representing the same to be free and clear except a certain trust deed for $1,000.00. It appears upon examination of said title that there appears a judgment of $424.80 and $7.10 costs against G. W. Reilly in favor of G. B. Lohman docketed Sept. 18th, 1911, and recorded in Book 231, page 192, of Judgments. Which the above named Bennett agrees to settle with accrued interest within ninety days from the date above mentioned.

"Original Witness E. W. Knapp, June 6, 1912.

"I. I. Bennett."

On the 16th day of May, 1912, respondent deeded to appellant the land described in the foregoing contract, "free and clear, except a certain trust deed of one thousand dollars (except 1912 and 1913 taxes)." On May 24, 1912, appellant deeded the same property to Ellen B. Crowder, including in said deed like covenants against incumbrances as above noted. On June 5, 1912, the Los Angeles Abstract & Title Company issued a certificate to Crowder showing a judgment lien against said property, being the same judgment lien referred to in the contract above set forth. That certificate was introduced in evidence at the trial of this action, together with admissions sufficient to show that the judgment lien actually existed as recited in said contract. In December, 1912, the plaintiff paid Crowder the amount of said judgment, or perhaps it would be more accurate to say, paid to her by reason of said judgment an amount equal to the amount of the judgment. It does not appear that Crowder ever paid the judgment, but it does appear that Bennett never paid it, and, so far as appears from the evidence, the judgment remained in force until the lien thereof expired by lapse of time. At the time of commencement of this action the lien of the judgment had not yet expired.

The principal defenses urged against the action are that there was no consideration for the agreement, and that the plaintiff has not suffered any damage by reason of any breach thereof. The author of Devlin on Deeds (3d Ed.) § 918, says:

"It is, I think, well settled that where the incumbrance has not been paid off by the purchaser of the land, and he has remained in quiet and peaceable possession of the premises, he cannot have relief against his contract to pay the purchase money, or any part of it, on the ground of defect of title. The reason is that the incumbrance may not, if let alone, ever be asserted against the purchaser, as it may be paid off or satisfied in some other way; and then it would be inequitable that any part of the purchase money should be retained."

But, at the end of section 920, he says:

"If the covenant, however, is in the form of an agreement to pay and discharge the incumbrances, the covenantee, although he has not extinguished them, is entitled to recover the amount of the incumbrances."

These rules, as stated in the text-book, are supported by various cases there cited.

[1] Concerning the rule first stated, it is said in Fraser v. Bentel, 161 Cal. 390, 394, 119 Pac. 509, 511 (Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1062):

"Inasmuch, however, as the covenant against incumbrances is merely one of indemnity (Rawle's Covenants for Title, § 188), no more than nominal damages can be recovered on account on an incumbrance which has inflicted no actual injury upon the grantee."

It thus appears that at the time when defendant made the agreement of June 6, 1912, the plaintiff was not in a position to have recovered substantial damages growing out of breach of the covenant contained in defendant's deed to the plaintiff, but she was in a position to have recovered at least nominal damages, and there existed a contingent liability to pay the full amount of the judgment upon its satisfaction, by payment by the plaintiff.

[2] This direct liability upon the covenant contained in the deed was extinguished by plaintiff's acceptance of the subsequent agreement made by Bennett, and, in our opinion, this constituted a sufficient consideration for the agreement as made.

[3] Upon the execution of this agreement the right of the plaintiff to have the judgment satisfied by the defendant became absolute, and was no longer contingent upon prior satisfaction of the judgment by the plaintiff. The defendant having failed to perform that agreement, he thereupon became liable to the plaintiff for the amount of the judgment as damages for breach of his agreement.

The judgment is reversed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐766—BRIEFS.

Where defendant and appellant alleges error in the granting of a codefendant's motion for nonsuit, and the record is presented in accordance with the method provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, the fact alone that appellant omits to print in his brief any portion of the record showing, as required by section 953c, that the court erred in granting the motion, justified affirmance.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐151(6)—DENIAL OF RELIEF TO ANOTHER—"AGGRIEVED."

In a case where appellant's defense was that he acted for another, but he demanded no affirmative relief, but contented himself by asking that such other be brought in by plaintiff, as a party to the action, he is not "aggrieved," and cannot complain of an order granting his alleged principal's motion for nonsuit, since it was plaintiff, not appellant, who was denied relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Aggrieved.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by the Patten & Davis Lumber Company against Charles T. Inman and others. From judgment for plaintiff, and from an order granting a nonsuit to defendant Richman, defendant Inman appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Millsap, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Behymer & Craig, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sued to recover upon a draft drawn by William Durflinger upon and accepted by Charles T. Inman. In his answer Inman alleged that in accepting the draft he acted for and as agent of one F. H. Richman, and asked that he be made a party defendant to the action. Thereupon plaintiff filed an amended complaint making Durflinger, Inman, and Richman parties defendant, and wherein it was alleged that Inman in making the draft acted for and as agent of Richman. Durflinger suffered default. Richman filed an answer putting in issue the question of Inman's alleged agency in acting for him, and the result of the trial was that, at the close thereof, the court made an order granting Richman's motion for a nonsuit and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff as against Inman, from which he has appealed.

While appellant states that he is "unable to find an error which would justify the reversal of the judgment in so far as the plaintiff is concerned," he nevertheless insists that the court erred in granting Richman's motion for a nonsuit.

[1] The record is presented in accordance with the method provided in section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, but, conceding appellant's right to have the alleged error reviewed, he omits to print in his brief any portion of the record showing, as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, that the court erred in granting the motion. This alone, upon the authority of Jones v. American Potash Co., 35 Cal. App. 128, 169 Pac. 397, and Anderson v. Recorder's Court, 171 Pac. 812, is sufficient ground to justify an affirmance of the judgment.

[2] It appears, however, that while defendant in his answer alleged that in accepting the draft he acted as agent for Richman, he demanded no affirmative relief, but contented himself by asking that Richman be brought in by plaintiff as a party to the action; hence it is apparent that Inman is not aggrieved by the ruling. He, conceding the ruling erroneous, is in no position to complain because the court denied plaintiff the relief which it asked against Richman.

The judgment is affirmed.

MICKSCHL v. NATIONAL COUNCIL OF KNIGHTS AND LADIES OF SE-CURITY. (Civ. 2311.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⚡665(3)—EVIDENCE—FALSITY
OF REPRESENTATION.

Evidence held insufficient to prove that insured's representation that her mother had died from pneumonia was untrue.

2. INSURANCE ⚡646(3)—BURDEN OF PROOF—
FALSITY OF REPRESENTATION.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1981, insurer, seeking to avoid policy upon ground that insured misrepresented cause of her mother's death, has burden of proving the falsity of such representation; the truth thereof being presumed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by Brok Mickschl against the National Council of the Knights and Ladies of Security. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. M. Willis and William Guthrie, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Allison & Dickson, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff, as beneficiary therein, sought to recover upon an insurance policy issued by defendant to Norma Grace Mickschl. The answer alleged a breach of warranty on the part of the insured in that she falsely represented that the death of her mother, Mrs. Gould, was due to an attack of pneumonia, whereas, in fact, her death was due to pulmonary tuberculosis. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant appealed.

[1] Appellant's sole contention, in which there is no merit, is that the finding of the court to the effect that the death of Mrs. Gould, the mother of the insured, was caused by an attack of pneumonia, as represented by her, and not from pulmonary tuberculosis, as alleged by the defendant, is not supported by the evidence.

[2] The burden of affirmatively proving the falsity of the representation made by the insured, and upon which the policy was issued, devolved upon defendant (section 1981, Code Civ. Proc.; Penn Mutual L. I. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank, 38 L. R. A. 69), which called Dr. Strong as the only witness who testified touching the cause of Mrs. Gould's death. Referring to the certificate of death prepared by the witness, and wherein the cause of death was given as pulmonary tuberculosis, he stated that he first saw Mrs. Gould on her deathbed, at which time, after breathing not more than half a dozen times after he entered the room, she died as the result of a hemorrhage which he presumed was caused by tuberculosis, from which disease, in his opinion, she was suffering at the time of her death. On cross-examination, however, the witness stated that he was not positive that the deceased had pulmonary tuberculosis, since, in the absence of an autopsy, the only positive test in the determination of such fact would be a microscopic examination of the sputum, which was not made, and, when asked the direct question if at the time of her death she had pneumonia, replied: "That I could not say, but the immediate cause of her death was the hemorrhage, and not the tuberculosis." He further stated that he was not willing to swear positively that the woman did not die from the effects of pneumonia. "She may," said the witness, "have had pneumonia, but the immediate cause of the death was the hemorrhage," and again repeated that he was not prepared to swear that she did not have pneumonia. He further stated the hemorrhage might have been due to other causes than tuberculosis, and that it was not impossible that the hemorrhage was caused from pneumonia.

In view of the fact that Mrs. Gould died almost immediately upon the arrival of this physician, who then saw her for the first time, the testimony given by him was, as determined by the court, insufficient to prove the affirmative allegation contained in defendant's answer, that the warranty made as to the cause of Mrs. Gould's death was untrue, and in the absence of such proof the truth thereof is presumed. Piedmont & A. Life Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 378, 23 L. Ed. 610; Yore v. Booth, 110 Cal. 238, 42 Pac. 808, 52 Am. St. Rep. 81.

BUBLITZ v. REEVES et al. (Civ. 2875.)

1. QUIETING TITLE $\S$ 47(1)—NONSUIT.

In action to quiet title where there was evidence establishing plaintiff's title to a two-thirds interest in the property, defendant was not entitled to a nonsuit.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1061(3)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—DENIAL OF NONSUIT.

If upon conclusion of whole case there is evidence on the material issues warranting submission of case to jury, denial of nonsuit, if error, was harmless.

3. TRIAL $\S$ 377(2)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REOPENING HEARING OF EVIDENCE.

Court may reopen hearing of evidence at any time before trial is finally concluded.

4. TRIAL $\S$ 377(2)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REOPENING HEARING—DISCRETION.

It is within court's discretion to reopen hearing of evidence and permit introduction of further evidence.

5. TRIAL $\S$ 377(2)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—REOPENING HEARING OF EVIDENCE—"END OF TRIAL."

In action to quiet title, court was justified in reopening case before its decision and findings were made and filed and permitting plaintiff to introduce further evidence of his title, as trial is not ended until decision of court by its written findings has been made and filed.

6. PLEADING $\S$ 291(4)—TAX DEED—VERIFIED DENIAL OF EXECUTION—ADMISSION.

Where defendant in action to quiet title claimed property under tax deed and set out deed in his answer and cross-complaint, plaintiff, by failing to file affidavit denying its genuineness and due execution, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 448, admitted genuineness and due execution of the deed, but could otherwise dispute its validity.

7. TAXATION $\S$ 789(3)—TAX DEED—PROOF OF TITLE—PRODUCTION OF DEED TO STATE.

Production of tax deed from state to purchaser is insufficient proof of purchaser's title without production of deed to the state vesting delinquent taxpayer's title in state, though deed from state to purchaser recites that the property was duly sold and conveyed to the state for nonpayment of taxes which had been legally levied and were a lien upon the property.

8. TAXATION $\S$ 810(3)—TAX DEED—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER.

In action to quiet title in which defendant claimed land under tax deed, but failed to prove good title thereunder, evidence held too indefinite and obscure to justify court in reimbursing defendant for payments made in connection with his purported tax title.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 757(1)—RECORD—BRIEFS—EVIDENCE.

Where appeal is taken by reporter's transcript, appellant must comply with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c, requiring parties appealing on the typewritten record to print in their brief or in appendix thereto such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Action by G. H. Bublitz against W. H. Reeves and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

J. Irving McKenna and Catherine A. McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Carter, Kirby & Henderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This was an action by plaintiff to quiet title to a parcel of land in the city of Pasadena, county of Los Angeles. The defendant Reeves was the only defendant answering the complaint. By his answer he denied plaintiff's title, and claimed title in himself under a state tax deed from the tax collector of Los Angeles county, set out in full in a pleading filed as a cross-complaint.

On the trial plaintiff introduced record evidence purporting to show chain of title from United States patent, through mesne conveyances, to himself, and rested. The defendant Reeves moved for nonsuit on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to show title in the plaintiff. The motion was denied, and, no further evidence being offered, the court directed judgment for the plaintiff. Thereafter, and before the decision and findings were made and filed, the plaintiff filed his notice of motion, with affidavit supporting the same, that the hearing be reopened for the introduction of further evidence in support of plaintiff's title, on the ground of inadvertence, mistake, and oversight on the part of plaintiff in failing to introduce at the hearing certain conveyances and other evidence material to plaintiff's case. On the presentation of this motion as noticed, the hearing was reopened, over the objection of defendant, and plaintiff was permitted to introduce, and thereafter and on a day set therefor did introduce, further evidence in his chain of title. Plaintiff also offered record evidence in rebuttal of defendant's tax deed purporting to show that the tax levy on which the sale to the state, under which the tax collector's deed as set out in defendant's cross-complaint was issued, was void. The only evidence offered by the defendant Reeves was his state tax deed executed by the county tax collector and testimony of himself as to consideration for the deed, and that he had been in possession of the property since the execution of the deed under which he claims title. At the conclusion of this additional evidence defendant again moved for a nonsuit, which was by the court denied. Findings were thereafter made in favor of the claim of title of plaintiff, and against the claim of title of defendant, and judgment was made and entered, quieting title in the plaintiff. Appeal was taken from the judgment by the defendant Reeves, under the alternative method.

The record in this case is a voluminous one, covering about 200 typewritten pages, and including all the conveyances, maps, and records constituting plaintiff's chain of title, upwards of 30 documents in all; but as no specification of their insufficiency is contained in appellant's brief, although all the deeds are printed in the appendix thereto, we assume that there is no dispute as to the sufficiency of the record to show title in plaintiff, subject only to defendant's tax deed. The only specifications of error, in fact, presented and argued by the appellant, are on the ruling of the court denying his motion for nonsuit against the plaintiff, the order reopening the trial for the introduction of further evidence after directing judgment for the plaintiff, and failure to require, as a condition of quieting plaintiff's title, a repayment of the money advanced on the tax title.

[1, 2] Whether the state of the evidence at the conclusion of the original hearing entitled defendant to a nonsuit we shall not attempt to determine. Under section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, parties appealing on the typewritten record are required to print in their brief, or in an appendix thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court. The appellant in this case has printed as an appendix to his brief practically the entire record of title, consisting of upwards of 30 conveyances, and other documents constituting plaintiff's chain of title, without calling attention to any alleged error or omission as affecting the vesting or divesting of ownership of this property. Respondent in his brief claims that at the time he rested on the first hearing the evidence established his title to a two-thirds interest in the property in question. There is no reply brief of appellant on file, so this claim is not controverted; and we do not feel like making a search of this complicated record, without aid of counsel, to either prove or disprove the statement. If it is correct, the defendant was not entitled to a nonsuit. Davis v. Crump, 162 Cal. 513, 123 Pac. 294. However, we deem this point immaterial, if the court was justified in reopening the case for further evidence, as on the further hearing evidence was introduced completing plaintiff's chain of title and supporting the judgment in his favor. "If, upon the conclusion of the whole case, there is evidence upon the material issues warranting the submission of the cause to the jury, the question of whether the court erred in denying nonsuit becomes of no consequence." Peters v. So. Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 48, 116 Pac. 400; Lowe v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 154 Cal. 573, 93 Pac. 678.

[3, 4] The court was justified in reopening the case for further evidence. It was within the discretion of the court to reopen the hearing of evidence at any time before the trial was finally concluded, and until the decision of the court, by its written findings, was made and filed the trial was not ended. Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54, 28 Pac. 115; Connolly v. Ashworth, 98 Cal. 205, 33 Pac. 60; San Francisco Breweries v. Schurtz, 104 Cal. 420, 38 Pac. 92.

The judgment for the plaintiff, then, must be sustained unless his title is defeated by the tax deed of defendant. The only evidence in support of this adverse claim is the deed from the tax collector of Los Angeles county, purporting to convey to defendant a tax title from the state of California. This deed was set out in defendant's answer and cross-complaint, and no affidavit denying the same was filed, as provided by section 448, Code of Civil Procedure. Its genuineness and due execution were therefore admitted, and it must be taken for what, on its face, it appears to be.

[5-7] But this does not estop the plaintiff from disputing its validity in any other respect. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630. It does not imply an admission of title in the state of California, or its authority to convey. The only intimation that the state had any title to convey is contained in a recital in the deed "that the real property herein-after described was duly sold and conveyed to the state of California for the nonpayment of taxes which had been legally levied, and which are a lien upon said property under and in accordance with law." As was declared in County Bank v. Jack, 148 Cal. 437, 83 Pac. 705, such recital "cannot be allowed to have the effect of operating as proof of the execution of a previous deed whereby the title of the taxpayer had been transferred * * * to the state"; and it is further there held that the tax collector's deed alone was not sufficient to show that the state had acquired the title of the original owner. The production in evidence of a deed to the state vesting title of the delinquent taxpayer in the state, together with the introduction of a deed from the state to the purchaser, was essential in order to establish that the purchaser had acquired the title of the delinquent taxpayer to the land; and the production of the deed from the state to the purchaser was not alone sufficient. Jones v. Luckel, 174 Cal. 532, 163 Pac. 906.

Respondent in his brief, in further opposition to the claim of appellant under the tax deed, attacks the validity of the proceedings for the tax assessment, levy, and sale upon which the deed in question purports to be based; but, in view of the insufficiency of appellant's showing of title in himself, already pointed out, it is unnecessary to consider this point.

[8] There is nothing in the pleadings presenting any issue for the recovery by defendant of any payments made in connection with his purported tax title, and nothing to show the amount or value of the payments, other than a recital in the copy of the deed attached to the answer that the consideration for the deed was defendant's bid of $301 for the property. Some evidence seems to have been taken on the trial on this point over plaintiff's objections, and appellant in his brief claims that he paid $86.46 delinquent taxes, and also $40 on the taxes under the tax sale, but no reference to the evidence on this point is contained therein, either in the brief itself or the appendix thereto. The showing made is too indefinite and obscure to justify the court in determining the equities that appellant might have in this particular.

[9] Parties relying upon the often cumbersome and intricate record of the reporter's transcript must conform to the provisions of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure if they want to insure a satisfactory consideration of the evidence.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

HAMER v. ELLIS. (Civ. 2729.)

1. PLEADING ⇨225(2)—SUSTAINING DEMURRER—FURTHER AMENDMENT.

Although the complaint was the third attempt of the pleader to state a cause of action, it was error, upon sustaining demurrer thereto, to refuse to allow further amendment, unless it was clear that the complaint could not be amended to obviate the objections made thereto.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨180(3)—EVICTION—PLEADING.

Complaint in action by tenant against landlord held to state a cause of action for eviction.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨900—PRESUMPTIONS.

Every reasonable presumption must be indulged in to support the ruling of the court below.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨101—TERMINATION OF LEASE—DESTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS.

A lease of land with buildings thereon is not terminated by the destruction of the buildings, unless it is so provided by contract or by statute.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨101—TERMINATION OF LEASE—DESTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS—"THING HIRED."

Although, when a portion of a building is leased, and the whole building is subsequently destroyed by fire, the lease is terminated under Civ. Code, 1933, providing that the hiring of a thing terminates by the destruction of the thing hired, yet the same result does not always follow when a lease covers a parcel of land with several structures thereon, since the buildings destroyed may or may not have been the "thing hired."

6. DAMAGES ⇨157(1)—GENERAL AND SPECIAL DAMAGES—PLEADING.

The pleading of special damages to result from loss of future profits does not preclude the recovery of any other damage sustained by plaintiff.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨180(4)—DAMAGES—EVICTION—LOSS OF FUTURE PROFITS.

Loss of future profits of keeper of livery and feed stable and weighing depot, if ascertainable with a reasonable degree of certainty, could be recovered by him from his landlord upon wrongful eviction by the latter.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⇨152(5)—LESSOR'S COVENANT TO REPAIR—"DAMAGE BY THE ELEMENTS."

Landlord's covenant to repair in case of any extensive "damage by the elements" does not obligate the landlord to repair, where the buildings on the premises are destroyed by fire, unless the fire is caused by lightning or other superhuman agency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by George L. Hamer against Mrs. W. J. Ellis, a widow. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Lilburn I. Gibson, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend; whereupon judgment was entered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff was lessee, and defendant lessor, under a written lease of certain premises in the city of Ukiah. The second amended complaint contains two counts: The first, for damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of his wrongful eviction by defendant from the leased premises; and the second, for damages alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of the breach by defendant of a covenant of the lease to repair the buildings therein referred to. In the first count the leased premises are described as follows:

"That certain property known as the Ellis Stable property, situated on the east side of Main street between Perkins street and Stephenson street, in the town of Ukiah City, Mendocino county, state of California, and including the stable building and all sheds attached thereto, together with the corrals, scales, and all other property belonging to or forming a part of said premises, excepting what is known as the 'back shed' on the northeast portion of said premises, being 15 feet on Perkins street and running back 25 feet."

In the second count the same description is given, but the following allegation is added:

"And plaintiff here alleges that said premises consisted of one corral, 150 feet long by 90 feet wide, one barn 150 feet long by 60 feet wide, one shed 40 feet long by 24 feet wide, scales 30 feet long by 10 feet wide, all of which were built upon the ground and the ground constituted the only floor of each thereof, and an alleyway 24 feet long by 16 feet wide."

The allegations of the first cause of action are substantially the following: A lease of the above-described premises was executed by defendant to plaintiff on October 5, 1914, for a term of five years, at a monthly rental of $30; it was understood and agreed between the parties to said lease that said premises were to be used as a livery and feed stable, storage sheds, stock corrals, and weighing depot; plaintiff entered into possession of said premises on October 5, 1914, and engaged in the business above referred to; said lease continued in effect until July 5, 1917, upon which date defendant notified plaintiff that the said lease was of no further force or effect and that said plaintiff had no further right on said premises, and would no longer be allowed possession thereof, nor to go on said property; plaintiff notified defendant on said date that he was ready, willing, and able to perform his part of said contract, and tendered the defendant the rent for the month ending on August 5, 1917, which was refused by defendant; on August 5, 1917, defendant took possession of said premises, and thereafter erected a building on a part thereof, and let the same to another tenant, and also repaired the scales thereon, and has since operated them at a profit; as a result of said eviction plaintiff has not entered on said premises since July 5, 1917. Then follow allegations as to the amount of profits which plaintiff had derived from the use of the premises prior to June 18, 1917, "when said premises were damaged by fire," and as to the amount of profits which would have been derived therefrom during the remainder of the term of the lease. The concluding allegation of the first count is:

"And therefore, because of this eviction as hereinabove set forth, plaintiff has been damaged to the extent of $2,700."

The demurrer was to the whole complaint, and to each cause of action separately, for failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and, specially, on several alleged grounds of uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility.

[1, 2] Unless it was clear to the trial court that the allegations contained in the first count did not state a cause of action, and could not be amended so as to obviate the objections made thereto, the refusal to allow a further amendment was error. Payne v. Baehr, 153 Cal. 447, 448, 95 Pac. 895; Schaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co. 135 Cal. 480, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759. In the case last cited it is said:

"We do not say that there is no limit to the right to amend when such demurrers are sustained, since of several failures, perhaps but one or two may develop a want of facts, or show that the fault cannot be remedied."

The complaint now under consideration is the third attempt of the pleader to state a cause of action; but upon the face of the first count therein contained, and in the absence of the two preceding complaints which are not before us, it does not appear that any defects therein cannot be remedied. On the contrary, we are of the opinion that a cause of action is stated therein which is not obnoxious to a general demurrer. The facts pleaded show an eviction of the lessee by the lessor, without excuse, as far as appears from the allegations of that count. Agar v. Winslow, 123 Cal. 593, 56 Pac. 422, 69 Am. St. Rep. 84; McAlester v. Landers, 70 Cal. 82, 83, 11 Pac. 505; Levitzky v. Canning, 33 Cal. 306.

[3-5] Even if, under the rule that every reasonable presumption must be indulged in to support the ruling of the court below, we assume that the facts pleaded in the second count in the complaint now under consideration were before the court in the original complaint or the first amended complaint, it still does not appear that such eviction was justified. A lease of land with buildings thereon is not terminated by the destruction of the buildings, unless it is so provided by contract or by statute. 24 Cyc. 1345; Nashville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Heikens, 112 Tenn. 378, 79 S. W. 1038, 65 L. R. A. 300. No such provision of the lease is pleaded. The only pertinent statute to which our attention has been called is section 1933 of the Civil Code, which provides: "The hiring of a thing terminates: * * * (4) By the destruction of the thing hired." When a portion of a building is leased, and the whole building is subsequently destroyed by fire, the lease is terminated. Ainsworth v. Ritt, 38 Cal. 89; Harvey v. Weisbaum, 159 Cal. 267, 113 Pac. 656, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1115. The same result does not always follow when a lease covers a parcel of land with several structures thereon. In such a case the section of the Code cited is not controlling, unless the buildings destroyed were "the thing hired." A comparison of the property leased with that destroyed, as set forth in the second count, does not convince us that such was the fact.

[6, 7] Such eviction entitled plaintiff to the recovery of any damage he may have suffered thereby. The pleading of special damages to result from loss of future profits did not preclude the recovery of any other damage which may have been sustained. And loss of future profits could also be recovered, if ascertainable with a reasonable degree of certainty. Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 167, 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Lambert v. Haskell, 80 Cal. 619, 22 Pac. 327; McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 85 Pac. 929, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171; 24 Cyc. 1135; Clark v. Koesheyan, 26 Cal. App. 305, 308, 146 Pac. 904. The allegations as to the future profits of plaintiff's business were not sufficiently definite to have enabled the court to determine whether or not they can be brought within the rule laid down by the above authorities, for which reason the special demurrer for uncertainty, directed to these allegations, was well taken. But it does not appear that this defect could not be cured by amendment.

[8] The second cause of action is based upon a covenant in the lease, which is thus pleaded:

"And that by other terms of said lease said defendant was, in case of any extensive damage by the elements, or in case of the falling in of the roof or collapse of the building, to immediately proceed to repair the same for the use of the party of the second part, who is the plaintiff herein, during the term of said lease."

It is then alleged:

"That on June 18, 1917, said property described by the lease above referred to was damaged by an element, to wit, fire, without the fault of either of the parties hereto, and the said buildings, sheds, fences, and scales, forming a part of said premises, were destroyed."

Appellant claims that, by reason of the above covenant to repair "in case of any extensive damage by the elements," the lessor was bound to rebuild the buildings destroyed by fire. With this we cannot agree. It has been decided in this state that "damage by the elements" is the equivalent of the phrase "act of God," and that "fire does not come within the definition of the term 'act of God,' unless it is caused by lightning or some other superhuman agency." Pope v. Farmers' Union, etc., Co., 130 Cal. 141, 62 Pac. 384, 53 L. R. A. 673, 80 Am. St. Rep. 87; Ahlgren v. Walsh, 173 Cal. 35, 158 Pac. 748, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 751. The complaint before us contains no allegation that the fire therein referred to was caused by such superhuman agency, and, without such allegation, no cause of action for breach of the covenant to repair is stated.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the special demurrer for uncertainty to the first cause of action, and also to sustain the demurrer to the second cause of action, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his second amended complaint, if he shall be so advised.

—DEFAULT OF PURCHASER.

Where a broker contracts for compensation only after payment by the purchaser, or a specified portion thereof, he cannot claim commission until such payment is made, and if the agreement is for commission out of the first money received, and none is received, the broker is not entitled to compensation on finding a purchaser.

2. BROKERS $\S$ 56(1)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS —PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

Owners of land gave broker's notes in payment for services, payable only out of the money to be paid by W. (purchaser) or his assigns. The contract between owner and purchaser provided that on default of the purchaser the owner was released and the purchaser forfeited all rights. The purchaser defaulted, and the owner brought suit to quiet title, after which the purchaser assigned his rights to a corporation, and the action was dismissed. The corporation, on ascertaining the forfeiture, instituted independent negotiations with the owner and purchased the property. Held, that the brokers were not entitled to commissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by J. A. Edwards and others against G. L. Baker. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, and Roy B. Maxey, of Oakdale, for appellant.

L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, and F. W. Reeder, of Oakdale, for respondents.

HART, J. The action was based upon three certain promissory notes, each for the sum of $266.66, dated Modesto, September 27, 1910, payable, respectively, on the 5th days of April of 1913, 1914, and 1915, executed by defendant and payable to the order of plaintiffs.

It is deemed proper first to explain that the notes sued on were given by Baker to the plaintiffs as the result of the compromise of a suit brought against the latter by the former upon a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of services performed by the plaintiffs in negotiating the sale of certain lands for the defendant to one P. Weisendanger. The following clause was contained in each of the first two notes declared upon:

"Said note to be paid only out of the money to be paid by P. Weisendanger or his assigns for purchase price of G. L. Baker ranch and not out of interest."

The third note contained a similar clause, with the exception that, instead of "G. L. Baker ranch," it referred to "Gilbert ranch." It appeared that this was a mistake of the party who drew up the notes, the defendant's first name being Gilbert, and the intention being to refer to the Baker ranch. It also appeared that the true name of the party mentioned in the pleadings and notes as "P. Weisendanger" was "Theodore Weisendanger," and that the letter "T," in some of the instruments herein mentioned was so written that it might easily be taken for "P." However, no point is made on this fact.

It appears from the evidence that the plaintiffs, real estate brokers, were employed by the defendant, Baker, to negotiate for him the sale of certain lands embraced within a certain district or territory in Stanislaus county, known as the "Oakdale Colony," and that the plaintiffs procured a purchaser in the person of said Theodore Weisendanger, with whom the defendant entered into a written contract for the sale of said lands on the 24th day of March, 1910. Said contract provided for the sale by Baker to Weisendanger of the several parcels or tracts of land therein described for the aggregate sum of $48,800, to be paid in three substantially equal annual installments, beginning "on or before" the 5th day of April, 1913, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., payable in advance. The contract, provided, in part, as follows:

"First party agrees to deliver deeds to any 10-acre tracts any time on receiving sixty-five ($65) dollars per acre, such payments to apply on the time payments falling due next in order of time; second party to receive one-fourth of the crop of 1910, grain in sacks, hay baled, both delivered at Oakdale Warehouse, and to have the benefit of the summer fallowing plowing now done. First party agrees to give T. Weisendanger possession of the ranch on August 1, 1910. And the party of the second part agrees to pay all state and county taxes or assessments of whatsoever nature which may become due on the premises above described after June, 1910.

"In the event of a failure to comply with the terms hereof by the party of the second part, the parties of the first part shall be released from all obligation in law or equity to convey said property, and the party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto. And the parties of the first part, on receiving such payment, at the time and in the manner above mentioned, agree to execute and deliver to the party of the second part, or to his assigns, a good and sufficient deed."

Weisendanger took possession of the land under said contract, and thereafter entered into contracts with three several parties for the sale of certain subdivisions of the lands to them. It appears that Weisendanger paid the interest on the purchase price of the land down to the date when the first payment on the principal sum fell due, to wit, April, 5, 1913. He, however, defaulted in the payment of the said first installment on the principal sum, and on the 2d day of May, 1913, Baker commenced an action against Weisendanger and others to quiet title to the lands described in the contract between him and Weisendanger and to have said contract declared null and void. Contemporaneously with the filing of the complaint in said action, Baker caused to be recorded in the proper office a lis pendens.

On the 26th day of May, 1913, Weisendanger made a purported assignment of said contract to the Conservative Investment Company of Los Angeles, a corporation. Said assignment recited that—

"Theodore Weisendanger hereby sells, assigns, transfers, conveys, and sets over unto the Conservative Investment Company, of Los Angeles, a corporation, that certain agreement made and entered into the 24th day of March, 1910, by and between Gilbert L. Baker and Mabel Baker, his wife, and Theodore Weisendanger, together with all rights and interests of every kind and character belonging or accruing to said Theodore Weisendanger under and by virtue of said agreement, and the said Conservative Investment Company, of Los Angeles, by its acceptance of these presents, does hereby assume all of the ditches and obligations of said Theodore Weisendanger under and by virtue of said agreement"—and the property was then described.

On the 2d day of June, 1913, Weisendanger interposed a demurrer to the complaint in the action brought by Baker to quiet title and to nullify the effect of the contract referred to and, on the 17th day of June, 1913, Baker dismissed said action; the reason for the dismissal not being shown by the record herein.

The evidence discloses that Weisendanger was at one time the owner of nine-tenths of the capital stock of the Conservative Investment Company, above mentioned, but that, after transferring or assigning to said company his contract to purchase the Baker lands, he sold all of said stock to a number of persons who had formed themselves into a syndicate for the purpose of taking over said stock and the business of said company. It appears that after said transaction the new owners of said company found, upon looking into its assets, the assignment made by Weisendanger to the company of the contract for the sale to Weisendanger of the Baker lands. Mr. Rupp, then the secretary of the investment company, testified that the corporation desired to buy some land in the Oakdale section of Stanislaus county, and upon finding that the contract between Weisendanger and Baker had been assigned to it, the company, through its representatives, immediately took steps looking to the purchase of the lands involved and described in said contract. An attorney of the company was first sent to Oakdale to look into the proposition, and he thereafter reported to the company that when Weisendanger made the purported assignment mentioned he had nothing to assign; his contract with Baker having been forfeited because of his failure to pay the first installment on the purchase price of the lands called for by the said contract. Negotiations were then entered into with Baker by representatives of the investment company for the purchase of the lands, and the same were consummated by the execution on June 5, 1913, of a deed by Baker and his wife conveying substantially the same lands described in the Weisendanger contract to the investment company. The latter paid Baker, on the purchase price, in June, 1913, the sum of $20,400, and in January, 1914, and August, 1915, the further sums of $750 and $14,750, respectively.

The court found, as to each of said notes:

That the defendant made the note and delivered the same to plaintiffs, who are the lawful owners and holders thereof; "that before the making of said note defendant employed plaintiffs as his agents to secure a buyer for his, defendant's, lands, and that pursuant to such employment plaintiffs secured one P. Weisendanger as such buyer; that before the making and delivery of said note P. Weisendanger contracted, by an instrument in writing, by himself or assigns, to buy the land referred to in said note from defendant, G. L. Baker; that P. Weisendanger, in said note mentioned, sold and assigned, on or about the 26th day of May, 1913, all his right, title, and interest in and to the Baker land in said note mentioned to the Conservative Investment Company, a corporation, of Los Angeles, Cal., and said company, since said assignment, have paid defendant, G. L. Baker, about $30,000 on the purchase price of said land mentioned in said note, which note was given by defendant to plaintiffs in payment of agent's commission for securing buyer for said land; that all of the conditions of said note have been carried out, and said note is now due and payable."

Judgment was accordingly awarded the plaintiffs in the sum of $799, and the defendant appeals from said judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The instruments sued on are not, strictly speaking, promissory notes, since they do not involve an unconditional promise to pay the amounts therein agreed to be paid. They are rather contracts for the payment of money upon a certain condition, and could become or be converted into an unconditional promise to pay only when the condition upon which it became obligatory upon the defendant to pay happened. The condition is, as seen, that payment shall be made only upon the payment on the principal of the purchase price by Weisendanger to Baker. If, therefore, the condition upon which the obligations were to be satisfied has not happened, then the plaintiff cannot recover; for it is well-settled law that, where a contract between a real estate broker and the owner of real estate authorizing the former to effect a sale of real estate for the latter contains a stipulation that the broker shall be entitled to compensation under the contract only after the payment by the purchaser of the purchase price or a certain specified portion thereof, or unless the purchaser has performed some other acts material or vital to the contract of purchase, the broker cannot claim the compensation or commission until the purchaser has made the stipulated payment or performed the specified conditions. As is said in Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239, 243, 51 Pac. 333, 334, a case precisely similar to this, so far as the position of the plaintiffs herein is concerned:

"It [the evidence] tends to show an agreement to pay commissions out of the first money received, and no money has ever been received. Under such a contract, the broker is not entitled to compensation when he finds a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the prescribed terms. There must be a sale and a first payment to entitle him to recover. It is so nominated in the bond."

See, also, Boysen v. Frink, 80 Ark. 254, 96 S. W. 1056; Inge v. McCreery, 60 App. Div. 557, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1052; 4 R. C. L. 331.

As supporting his position that the rule above stated applies to the facts of this case, the appellant contends that the sale of the lands to the Conservative Investment Company involved a transaction wholly independent of and distinct from the transaction involving the agreement of sale between him and Weisendanger; that is to say, that the purchase of the property by the investment company was solely by virtue of a contract between him and said company which had no relation to or connection with the Weisendanger agreement or the assignment thereof by the latter to the investment company, and that the purchase by it of the lands was therefore not as an assignee of Weisendanger. The basis of the contention is, of course, that Weisendanger, having defaulted in the payment of the first installment on the purchase price of the lands under his contract prior to the time at which he assigned his contract to the investment company, forfeited all his rights under said agreement, and therefore then had nothing to assign. In further support of the contention, reliance is had on the testimony of the defendant and the witness Rupp, the officer of the corporation, who conducted the negotiations culminating in the sale to the investment company, that the transaction resulting in said sale had no relation to the Weisendanger assignment, and that it was not made in pursuance of the Weisendanger agreement, but independently thereof.

Much of the testimony last above referred to involves the mere opinions or legal conclusions of the witnesses. Whether the sale to the investment company was the result of a transaction wholly independent of the assignment to it of the Weisendanger agreement must be determined, of course, upon the facts and circumstances of the transaction, and not upon the mere bald statement of the witnesses that the two transactions had in legal effect no relation to or connection with each other. We are of the opinion, however, that there is other evidence which clearly discloses that the Weisendanger agreement had lost all its force and vitality at the time of the purported assignment thereof to the investment company. In other words, it is very clear, from the documentary evidence and the admitted fact of the default, that Weisendanger, when making the pretended assignment, had nothing he could assign, and that, this fact having been discovered by the company before it bought the Baker lands, the company proceeded upon its own initiative and without reference to the purported assignment to negotiate with Baker for the purchase of the property, and so ultimately effected the purchase.

It will be noted that the agreement between Baker and Weisendanger provided that, upon failure on the part of the party of the second part (Weisendanger) to comply with the covenants of the agreement, "the parties of the first part shall be released from all obligation in law or equity to convey said property, and the party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto." Therefore when, on the 5th day of April, 1913, Weisendanger defaulted in the payment of the first installment on the purchase price as stipulated in his agreement, he thereupon and ipso facto, so far as the face of the agreement was concerned, forfeited the right he acquired under the agreement to purchase the property, and the vendor was likewise released from any and all obligation under said agreement to convey the property to the former. The situation then in legal effect was the same as if the agreement had never had existence. His default, and as a consequence the forfeiture of his agreement, had taken place. Prima facie his agreement had then become functus officio, and therefore without obligatory force either in law or in conscience. It therefore rested with him to show, if he could do so and desired to resuscitate and perpetuate the life of the agreement, that his default should not, in equity and good conscience, operate as a forfeiture of the right to purchase the property upon the terms specified. It is not made to appear from the record before us that he made any attempt to do this. It is not shown, nor is it claimed or pretended, that he at any time after his default offered any excuse for his default or to pay the installment, or in any way attempted to make any showing, if it was within his power to do so, that upon a consideration of the facts of the transaction or the circumstances under which the default occurred by the light of appropriate equitable principles Baker was not, in good conscience, justified in claiming and asserting his legal right to treat the agreement as having been forfeited because of such default. As to the action brought against Weisendanger by Baker to quiet title as against the former to the lands involved in the transaction, the purpose, and indeed the only purpose, under the circumstances, that it was necessary for it to accomplish, was to get rid of the cloud which otherwise might have existed upon and embarrassed the title to said lands by reason of the said agreement between Baker and Weisendanger, which stood of record in the office of the county recorder. The action was not necessary to render effectual the forfeiture of Weisendanger's right under the agreement to buy the property. As before stated, the forfeiture was worked by the very terms themselves of the agreement, upon the failure of Weisendanger to pay the first installment when it became due and payable. And if it be the theory that the act of dismissing the action operated as a waiver of the forfeiture, we answer that such theory is wholly untenable under this record. The effect of the dismissal, which took place after the investment company had purchased and obtained a conveyance of the lands, said company then being the assignee of the Weisendanger agreement, to remove the effect of which upon the face of the title was the sole object of the action, was not to change the situation with respect to the said agreement from what it was and had been at all times from and after the time the forfeiture took place by Weisendanger's default in carrying out his obligations under the agreement, but, if anything at all, it was to restore the situation to precisely what it was after his default which worked the forfeiture and before the action was brought.

[2] It follows that, since, Weisendanger's agreement had lost all its force, and he, consequently, the right to purchase the land before he made the purported assignment (and here it may be suggested that, as he was the owner of nine-tenths of the stock of the investment company, the attempted assignment was practically to himself), he had, so far as said agreement was concerned, nothing that he could assign. The investment company, in other words, acquired by virtue of the pretended assignment no interest in the property or the right to purchase it upon the terms of said agreement or under the agreement at all. It must therefore be held that the purchase of the property by the investment company was the culmination of a contract of its own making, and not as an assignee of Weisendanger or by virtue of the purported assignment to it of the Weisendanger agreement, and the payments made by said company to Baker on the purchase price of the land, therefore, were not made by the former as assignee of Weisendanger. The result is that, since Weisendanger, neither by himself personally nor by "his assigns," ever paid anything on the purchase price of the lands, there is legally no ground justifying a recovery by the plaintiffs upon the notes or contracts declared upon.

It may be, and probably is, true that the investment company never would have known of the property involved in the Weisendanger agreement or purchased it but for the knowledge thereof and of the fact that it was for sale acquired by it through the said agreement. This, however, does not help or aid the plaintiffs in any manner. They deliberately made payment for their services in negotiating the contract for the sale of the land to Weisendanger wholly contingent upon the payments by the latter "or his assigns" on the principal of the purchase price, and upon that proposition alone they were and are required to stand or fall.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed.

39 Cal. App. 764

HACKELBERRY v. SHERLOCK LAND & CATTLE CO. (Civ. 1752.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 17, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨77—INJURIES TO SERVANT—MEDICAL AID.

Instruction held erroneous in assuming master was under a legal liability to furnish medical aid for the injured servant.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨295(3)—INJURIES TO SERVANTS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

An instruction upon defective appliances and assumption of the risk by a servant working upon a farm handling horses and machinery held erroneous in stating that plaintiff was entitled to recover irrespective of alleged fault on the part of defendant.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨125(1)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—TRIAL—INSTRUCTION—UNSAFE APPLIANCES—KNOWLEDGE OF DEFECT.

An instruction that the plaintiff, who was injured while driving horses, was entitled to recover irrespective of whether or not the defendant knew that the team "was untrustworthy and unsafe" held erroneous.

4. TRIAL ⇨194(19) — INSTRUCTIONS — PROVINCE OF JURY—INJURIES TO SERVANT.

In a servant's action for injuries, an instruction that to be rendered liable the master need not have had actual knowledge of the unsafeness of the horses used by the servant, and that proof is sufficiently made out by plaintiff showing that the team and appliances were defective and unsafe, since such would have been discovered by the master's proper inspection in time to prevent injury, and if conspicuous, such knowledge would be presumed, was improper, as instructing the jury to draw conclusions from presumptions imposed by the court.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨204(1) — INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

Although the Employers' Liability Act excludes from the benefit of its provisions any employé engaged in farm work, a servant injured by defective team while working upon a farm cannot be held to have expressly or impliedly assumed the risk, in view of the Roseberry Act, which is not repealed by St. 1915, p. 1081, § 12, subd. 3(c), except as to matters included within the latter act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence E. Raker, Judge.

Action by Charles Hackelberry against the Sherlock Land & Cattle Company. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for new trial.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, for appellant.

J. T. Sharp and J. S. Henderson, both of Alturas, for respondent.

BUCK, Presiding Justice pro tem. Plaintiff, while engaged in farming work in the employ of the defendant corporation in October of 1916, was injured by being trampled upon by a horse, claimed to be vicious, which plaintiff was in the act of unhitching from a harrow team furnished him in his work by the defendant. Upon the trial a verdict and judgment thereon in the sum of $600 was rendered against the defendant, who appeals therefrom upon the grounds that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for nonsuit, and also erred in giving and refusing to give certain instructions.

In his complaint, after alleging the employment and work thereunder (which is not denied), and that he was injured by a vicious horse owned and furnished him in his work by the defendant, plaintiff charges that the defendant's manager at all times well knew that said horse referred to was "an outlaw, wild, vicious, and treacherous, and was likely at any moment to become vicious and unruly." The complaint also alleges that, after plaintiff was injured by being trampled upon by the horse, he "was unable totally to help himself or to procure medical or other assistance, all of which the said manager of said ranch well knew, and failed, refused, and neglected without cause therefor to procure for said plaintiff a doctor of medicines, or to provide a way or means by which said plaintiff could procure such medical aid, all of which said medical aid and treatment was necessary and proper for said plaintiff in his said condition, and without which he could not recover from his said condition of lameness," and that the ranch on which he was injured "is a distance of more than ten miles from the town of Alturas, which was the nearest place where plaintiff could procure medical or other assistance."

No demurrer or motion to strike out was filed by defendant. And defendant's answer, though it specifically denies the allegations in the complaint, does not set up any affirmative defenses.

The evidence was in sharp and decisive conflict in regard to the alleged dangerous and vicious character of the horse in question, and the defendant's knowledge in regard thereto and its consequent negligence in the premises.

[1] The following is one of the instructions, the giving of which by the court is assigned as error:

"The court further instructs you, gentlemen of the jury, that if you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff was disabled, as it is alleged in his complaint, and unable to procure medical aid for the length of time, and that the defendant herein carelessly neglected to procure medical aid and assistance as alleged in the complaint, and the evidence shows you that the plaintiff suffered damages from said negligent act, it is your duty to find for the plaintiff in such amount as you may deem reasonable from the evidence, regardless of the cause leading up to the accident."

The giving of the foregoing instruction constituted error, which, in view of the record as a whole, was also prejudicial error. The instruction, without warrant, assumes that a legal liability can exist and constitute a cause of action in the absence of a corresponding legal duty.

"Soon after the commencement of the nineteenth century it was definitely laid down, as a rule applicable to all descriptions of servants except apprentices, that a general obligation to provide medical attendance is not an implied incident of a contract of hiring. In one point of view this rule involves the consequence that the master is not bound to defray the expenses of such attendance upon a servant who falls sick or receives personal injuries in the course of the employment, unless he has expressly or impliedly agreed to do so. Under another aspect it operates so as to exempt the master from liability for refusing or neglecting to provide such attendance. By nearly all the American courts this rule has been adopted without any qualifications." Labatt, Master and Servant (2d Ed.) vol. 5, par. 1999, p. 6180.

The apparent harshness of this rule has, of course, been modified by statutory workmen compensation acts. But, as will be noted later, this case has not been brought within, and does not fall within, the act.

In the case of Davis v. Forbes, 171 Mass. 548, 51 N. E. 20 (also reported 47 L. R. A. 170), the court holds that an employer is not liable for injuries resulting from failing to promptly furnish medical attendance to one injured in his employment, even though he is responsible for the original injury, and the court sustained the ruling of the lower court in not allowing any recovery upon a count in the complaint "for failure to furnish suitable medical attendance to plaintiff after the injury, although plaintiff was unable by reason of his injuries to secure it for himself, and that, although knowing that plaintiff was suffering great pain and was in need of immediate surgical attention, defendant's servants wrongfully permitted plaintiff to remain for a period of 37 hours without such assistance, by reason of which he alleged that he suffered great pain and permanent injury." See, also, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Iles, 25 Colo. 19, 53 Pac. 222.

This instruction was particularly prejudicial in this case, and must have influenced the jury to mulct the defendant in damages, because the plaintiff testified in detail to the effect that after his injury he was furnished no medicine and no attention, and after a couple of days "I told Mr. Soares I wanted to come in town and see a doctor. He did not say anything. He never gave me an answer, and he drove to town, and I did not know it.

* * * Soares came again in a day or two, and he brought me a bottle (of liniment) and I put that on—they provided no nurse or any accommodations. They did not even bring me a cup of water. I had to crawl on a chair the best I could. On November 12th I was taken to the town of Alturas. The foot was getting worse and worse."

[2, 3] The court erred in giving the following instructions at the request of the plaintiff:

"Instruction No. 10. The court instructs you, gentlemen, that a servant is not barred from recovering in every case as a matter of law when he knows a defect exists in the appliance, and that there is a certain amount of danger surrounding its use, and if you believe from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff knew that a defect existed in the appliance which he used in course of his employment, he is nevertheless entitled to recover in this action unless you are convinced by the evidence that the risk was so great that a man of ordinary prudence would have been impelled by reason thereof to discontinue his work."

"Instruction No. 16. The court instructs you, gentlemen of the jury, that the employer must in all cases indemnify his employé for losses caused by the employer's want of ordinary care, and if plaintiff necessarily suffered loss and injury in direct consequence of his obedience to the directions of his employer, and if you believe from the evidence that the team, with which the said plaintiff in this case was untrustworthy and unsafe as alleged in plaintiff's complaint, and if you believe from the evidence that the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, if any he received, was caused by the unsafeness of said team, then you should find for the plaintiff, and he is entitled to recover in this action, yet the amount for which you may find must not exceed the amount prayed for in the complaint."

Instruction No. 10 is erroneous, in that it instructed the jury that the plaintiff was "entitled to recover in this action," irrespective of alleged fault on the part of the defendant. And the giving of instruction No. 16 was error, in that it directed the jury that they "should find for the plaintiff, and he is entitled to recover in this action" irrespective of whether or not the defendant knew or had knowledge of the alleged fact that the team "was untrustworthy and unsafe as alleged in plaintiff's complaint."

As stated in the case of Haneman v. Western Meat Co., 8 Cal. App. 698, 97 Pac. 695:

"If it be conceded that the horse was vicious, yet the gist of the action against defendant was keeping the horse with knowledge by the defendant of his vicious propensity. * * * The common law makes the owner of vicious domestic animals with notice of their vicious propensities responsible, for the reason that under such circumstances it is the duty of the owner to anticipate that such animals will commit such vicious acts as opportunity affords, and it is the duty of the owner to guard against such acts."

[4] Instruction 22, as follows, should not have been given, for the reason that it takes from the jury the decision of questions in fact, and instructs the jury to draw conclusions from presumptions imposed by the court:

"The court instructs you, gentlemen of the jury, that to render defendants liable to plaintiff in damages, it is not necessary that they should have had actual knowledge of the unsafeness of the team used by plaintiff; the proof is sufficiently made out by plaintiff when it is shown that the said team and appliance was defective and unsafe in such respect that if a proper inspection of it had been made by defendant, such unsafeness and defectiveness would have been ascertained in time to prevent the injury. If the unsafeness was conspicuous, defendants will be presumed to have had knowledge of it."

[5] Defendant assigns as error the giving of instructions Nos. 23 and 24, requested by plaintiff, and also assigns as error the refusal by the court to give instructions Nos. 6 and 7, requested by defendant. Each of these instructions relates to the question of assumption of risk; and, as the case must be remanded to the trial court for a new trial, it will be necessary to consider to what extent the doctrine of assumed risk is applicable in the case at bar.

Furthermore, defendant's motion for non-suit also invokes the defense of assumption of risk. And plaintiff, in his complaint, anticipating assumption of risk as a defense, seeks to meet and combat this defense by alleging as follows:

"That upon the commencement of said work this plaintiff ascertained by the actions of one of the horses of said team was treacherous and tricky, and that it was necessary for said plaintiff in the course of said employment in hitching up and unhitching said team to tie the said horse to a post or other safe place in order to safely handle such horse, and said team, and thereupon said plaintiff notified said Frank Soares that said team was not trustworthy, and was untrustworthy by reason of the fact that said horse was vicious, and would kick and would at every opportunity attempt to run away, and requested of said Frank Soares to furnish said plaintiff with a trustworthy and reliable horse in place and stead of said vicious horse, and thereupon said Frank Soares informed plaintiff that said horse was merely slightly nervous, and would within a day or two become quiet and trustworthy, and refused to furnish said plaintiff with a gentle horse in place and stead of said vicious horse.

"That said plaintiff continued to work said horse as a part of said four-horse team in the course of his said employment up to and until the 19th day of October, 1916, during all of which said time said horse acted viciously and untrustworthy, and it was necessary for plaintiff to and he did watch said horse at all times during his said employment."

And in order to further support this defense, plaintiff, at the trial, without objection on the part of the defendant as to its immateriality so far as the complaint was concerned, testified as follows:

"Q. You did not believe that that horse would do anything after you received the instructions that you had from Mr. Soares except to act a little nervous at times. A. I took his word for it.

"Q. You did not believe that you were assuming any risk that a prudent man would not at that time, did you? A. No, sir.

"Q. In continuing to work with that horse you relied absolutely on the assertion made by Mr. Soares as to the reliability of the horse, did you not? A. Yes, sir."

The trial court, upon a new trial of this case, will therefore be directly confronted with the question of whether assumption of risk can be invoked as a defense in this case.

At the trial and in their briefs each side in this case seems to have relied upon section 1970 of the Civil Code, as amended in 1907, for a statement of the law in regard to assumption of risk. But in July of 1916, in the case of Lassen v. S. P. Co., 173 Cal. 72, 159 Pac. 143, which arose out of an accident in August of 1912, our Supreme Court held as follows:

"At the time of the injury complained of the Employers' Liability Act of 1911 was in force. Stats. 1911, p. 796. That statute abolished the previously available defenses of an employer, in an action by an employé for damages from personal injuries, that the plaintiff had assumed the risk of the hazard from which he was injured, and that the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. Consequently, the case must be decided upon the principle that the employer was responsible for the negligence of his employés when such negligence caused injury to another of his employés, and for all injuries caused by dangers arising from the work itself or from the place where it is carried on. That statute also provided that contributory negligence of the employé should not bar his recovery if it was slight and that of the employer or fellow servant was gross, in comparison, and that in such cases the jury may diminish the damages according to the proportion of negligence chargeable to the employé."

To the same effect is the case of Terry v. S. P. Co., 34 Cal. App. 330, at page 333, 169 Pac. 86, at page 87, where the court says:

"The alleged injuries suffered by the plaintiff were caused on the 14th day of June, 1913, at which time the statute of this state denied to a defendant a defense based upon any alleged assumption of risk by its employé, and also provided that the contributory negligence of an employé 'shall not bar a recovery therein where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross, in comparison, but the damages may be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé. * * * Stats. 1911, p. 796."

In the case of Reynolds v. E. Clemens Horst Co., 35 Cal. App. 711, 170 Pac. 1082, where the accident to the employé, as shown by the record, occurred in 1913, this court used the following language:

"But, after all, this contention of appellant resolves itself into the legal proposition that she assumed the risk of a known hazard, but this fact, as pointed out in Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel Gold Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 Pac. 714, and other cases, affords no defense under the Employers' Liability Act (Stats. 1911, p. 796), in effect at the time of the accident."

In that case, however, "the case was tried upon the theory that the so-called Roseberry Act of 1911 and section 1970 of the Civil Code were and are applicable to the cause." And the argument was not presented that section 1970 was repealed by the Roseberry Act.

In the case of Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel Gold Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, at page 504, 143 Pac. 714, at page 715, where the "injury which resulted in Crabbe's death befell him on the 13th day of September, 1911, when the Employers' Liability Act was in force," our Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Henshaw, states as follows:

"But even if it be said that the station as used by Crabbe was in an unsafe condition, and that he knew it, this amounts to no more than a declaration that Crabbe assumed the risk of a known hazard. But this fact, by the very terms of the Employers' Liability Act, no longer affords the employer a defense. Employers' Liability Act, § 1, subd. 1."

Also, in the case of Perry v. Angelus Hospital Association, 172 Cal. 311, at page 314, 156 Pac. 449, at page 450, our Supreme Court used the following language:

"In this connection it should be noted that at the time of the accident the Employers' Liability Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 796) was in force, providing that the fact that the employé had assumed the risks of danger from the employment should be no defense in such cases, and that the contributory negligence of the employé should not bar a recovery where his negligence was slight and that of the employer gross, in comparison."

Also, in the case of Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 556, at page 565, 163 Pac. 885, at page 889, our Supreme Court uses the following language:

"When the injury to plaintiff occurred on April 9, 1913, the Employers' Liability Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 796) was in force. Section 1 of that act provided (stating only its terms pertinent here) that in any action for personal injury sustained by an employé in the course of his employment in which recovery is sought on the ground of want of ordinary or reasonable care on the part of the employer, it shall be no defense that the employé either expressly or impliedly assumed the risk of the hazard complained of. The court in harmony with these provisions of the act instructed the jury that under said Employers' Liability Act, the defense of assumption of risk or hazards of the work did not apply; that it was no bar to recovery on account of injury caused by the use of unsafe tools or appliances that plaintiff merely with knowledge of their lack of safety accepted or continued the employment. The provisions of the Employers' Liability Act warranted this instruction by the court. This section 1 as to all defenses which are mentioned therein, including the defense of assumption of risk, declared rules of substantive law which applied in all actions brought by employés against employers. It is claimed by defendant the act has no application between employers and employés, unless where both parties had elected to come under its provisions. There is nothing in this point. The act, as far as the defense of assumption of risk (the only one we are now considering) is concerned, applies to all employers and employés and in all actions where the negligence of the employer is the basis of the suit by the employé. As we have said, section 1 lays down rules of substantive law governing all actions by employés against employers for injuries resulting from the negligence of the employer. It is only as to other matters that the election of the parties to come within its terms have relation."

As already noted, the accident in this case occurred in October of 1916. The present Employers' Liability Act went into effect January, 1914. By its express terms it excludes from the benefit of its provisions "any employé engaged in farm, dairy, agricultural, viticultural or horticultural labor, in stock or poultry raising, or any household domestic service." The act also provides that "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

Now, it is true that this court, in the case of Reynolds v. E. Clemens Horst Co., 35 Cal. App. at page 722, 170 Pac. at page 1087, uses the following language in referring to this act:

"The said act of 1913 was intended to present and embody a complete scheme for the enforcement of a cause of action like that before us, and it is apparent that all prior legislation on the subject is inconsistent with the provisions of said act."

But, as above noted, this act of 1913, now in force, does not present or embody any scheme for the enforcement of a cause of action like that before us in the present case. In fact, a cause of action like that before us now is expressly excluded from the provisions of this act.

Furthermore, the act specifically provides (see section 12, division "c" of subd. 3, Stats. 1915, p. 1081) that "in all other cases where the conditions of compensation do not concur, the liability of the employer shall be the same as if this act had not been passed." Therefore, since the conditions of compensation referred to in the act do not concur to affect the plaintiff herein, since he is a farm laborer, it follows that the liability of the defendant employer herein "shall be the same as if this act had not been passed." Also, since section 1 of the Roseberry Act lays down rules of substantive law finally governing all classes of employés, it can be inconsistent with and repealed by the present act only to the extent that the present act includes, and does not exclude, such classes of employés. For these reasons the defendant herein cannot be permitted to urge as a defense that the plaintiff, either expressly or impliedly, assumed the risk of the hazard complained of.

In this connection it may be noted that the case of Barrett v. Cont. Co., 172 Cal. 116, 155 Pac. 645, referred to by this court in the recent case of Fererira v. Silvey, 176 Pac. 371, was not a case involving the relation of employer and employé, and no question was raised therein concerning any Employers' Liability Act. In fact, the relation of employer and employé did not exist between the plaintiff and defendant; the plaintiff being in the employ of the city.

The court, therefore, did not err in refusing to give instructions 6 and 7, requested by defendant, to the extent that said instructions recognize the defense of assumption of risk in this case; and, for the same reason, the court did not err in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a nonsuit. Also, it was error, though not prejudicial to the defendant, to give instructions 23 and 24, which were given upon the theory that assumption of risk was a defense in this action.

But, for the reasons already given, the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial.

ABRAHAMS v. HAMMEL, Sheriff, et al.
(Civ. 2620.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨928(2)—PRESUMPTION AS TO PROPER INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

Where contrary is not shown, the appellate court may assume proper instructions were given.

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨147(4) — CONDITIONAL SALES—ASSIGNMENT OF CONTRACT—POSSESSION OF GOODS.

Where the purchaser of an automobile on conditional sale assigned the contract, and the assignee received a bill of sale, but without taking the car into his possession released to the original purchaser's wife, and the assignee afterwards transferred his interest to plaintiff, who without obtaining possession gave such wife an option to purchase, such transfers are invalid under Civ. Code, § 3440, creating a presumption of fraud in sales without immediate delivery and continued change of possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action for conversion by A. L. Abrahams against W. A. Hammel and another. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Tyrrell, Abrahams & Brown and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Strong, McCormick & Green, of Los Angeles, and Strong & McCormick, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Under a writ of attachment, issued in an action wherein F. W. Cole was plaintiff and G. G. Gillette was defendant, W. A. Hammel, as sheriff, levied upon and took possession of a certain automobile, title to which the plaintiff claimed was vested in Gillette. Thereupon plaintiff in this action filed a third party claim with the sheriff and demanded delivery of possession of the property, which was refused. This action for conversion followed, and judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict of a jury in favor of defendants. The appeal is from the judgment and an order of court denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The sole contention of appellant, which he presents without incorporating in the record the instructions given the jury, is that the verdict is not justified by the evidence; hence it is said the court should have granted his motion for a new trial. The evidence, in which there is some conflict, tended to show that on October 5, 1912, a conditional sale contract was made by the California Motor Company to Gillette, under which it, reserving the title to the car subject to the making of certain deferred payments thereon, when title was to vest in the vendee, delivered possession thereof to Gillette. On October 24th following, Gillette sold the car and, with the consent of the motor company, assigned the contract to J. A. Phillips as purchaser, who assumed the payments specified therein. On March 15, 1913, Phillips made the payments in compliance with the contract and received a bill of sale and receipt in full therefor, at which time he, without having taken the car into his possession, made an arrangement with Gillette whereby the latter was to retain possession thereof. Thereafter, on August 19, 1913, Phillips executed a lease of the car to Gillette's wife, but, in so far as disclosed by the evidence, she never acquired or took possession thereof, but the same continued in Gillette. On July 31, 1914, Phillips executed a bill of sale transferring his interest in the automobile to plaintiff, who at the time, without obtaining possession thereof from Gillette, gave Mrs. Gillette an option to purchase the car, which option, however, she never exercised.

[1] It is alleged in the answer that all these transfers affecting the interest of Gillette in said car were made fraudulently, without consideration, and with intent to hinder and delay the creditors of Gillette, which, upon proper instructions, since the contrary is not shown, we may assume were given, the jury upon the evidence might have found true. However this may be, it clearly appears that at the time the conditional sale was made to him by the motor company, Gillette acquired possession of the car, which subject to the amount due thereon, he sold to Phillips, who thereafter by payments made extinguished the conditional sale contract, thus terminating all rights of either party and their assigns thereunder. Section 3440, Civil Code (excluding certain exceptions not here involved), declares that—

"Every transfer of personal property * * * is conclusively presumed, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property, and not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession of the things transferred, to be fraudulent, and therefore void, against those who are his creditors while he remains in possession. * * *"

[2] Under this provision, since the sale by Gillette to Phillips was "not accompanied by an immediate delivery, and followed by an actual and continued change of possession," the sale and purported transfer to Phillips must, as to the attaching creditor, be deemed fraudulent and void. This being true, it follows that at the time Phillips sold the automobile to plaintiff the former had no title thereto, and hence the bill of sale to plaintiff was ineffectual as a transfer of the same. Conceding that he might have acquired title by taking the property into his possession, nevertheless plaintiff admits that he did not do so, but allowed Gillette to retain and control the same. The acts of the parties render the purported sale and transfer void as to the attaching creditor.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

FORRINGTON v. SAN LUIS OBISPO COUNTY. (Civ. 2290.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 21, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 757(3) — BRIEF — STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE—PRINTING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c, a resolution terminating plaintiff's employment, on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff's salary, will not be considered unless brought to the attention of the court by printing in the brief.

2. COUNTIES $\S$ 75(3)—EMPLOYÉ'S COMPENSATION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that plaintiff was employed by a resolution of county supervisors to maintain an exhibit at the Exposition "during the Exposition year" at $150 per month is sufficient to support finding that plaintiff's employment was for a definite period, and the county therefore is liable for salary during such period.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by Nellie M. Forrington against the County of San Luis Obispo. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Charles A. Palmer, Dist. Atty., and L. A. Enos, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Luis Obispo, for appellant.

Lamy & Putnam, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment, which covers three months of salary claimed by the plaintiff as an employé of the county of San Luis Obispo, under the designation of commissioner for the county at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915, being at the rate of $150 per month, for the months of July, August, and September, 1915.

A typewritten clerk's transcript on appeal and a typewritten transcript of the photographic report of the trial have been filed. Appellant has not caused to be printed with its brief, or as a supplement thereto, any part of the record, but has made a narrative statement of the pleadings. The brief for appellant discusses, without quotation thereof, certain items of evidence, which fall under the claim that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision.

By certain evidence printed in respondent's brief, we learn that by resolution of the board of supervisors three "commissioners" were selected "to represent the county in collecting and installing an exhibit of the resources of the county at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and maintaining the same during the Exposition year."

[1] Appellant contends that the employment of respondent was not for a specified term, and that therefore it was terminable upon notice or at the will of the employer. It also claims that the board of supervisors did, by resolution of June 8, 1915, terminate plaintiff's employment. The briefs do not contain any copy of that supposed resolution. It should have been presented in printed form if counsel desired to bring it to the attention of the court. Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 953c; Hepler v. Wright, 35 Cal. App. 567, 575, 170 Pac. 667; Jones v. American Potash Co., 35 Cal. App. 128, 169 Pac. 397.

[2] The omission above mentioned, however, is not very important; for we think that the evidence quoted in respondent's brief, as above noted, is sufficient to support the court's finding that plaintiff's employment was for a definite period, including the months covered by the demand made in this action. It is not denied by counsel for appellant that, if the liability exists, the amount of the judgment is correct; they admit that (prior to the time of plaintiff's acceptance of the employment) the salary of plaintiff was by resolution fixed at the monthly rate of $150 "from January 15, 1915, to December 15, 1915."

The judgment is affirmed.

REED v. REED. (Civ. 2048.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 214(2) — ORDER FOR ALIMONY AND SUIT MONEY—NOTICE.

Where a husband had appeared in his wife's action for divorce, so that the court had acquired jurisdiction of subject-matter and his person, court had power to order ex parte, without previous notice, payment of any reasonable sum to wife for alimony and suit money.

2. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 209—ORDER FOR ALIMONY—APPEARANCE OR SERVICE.

The obligation of a husband to support his wife is personal, and therefore an order for alimony, in effect a final judgment for money, is a judgment in personam, and void unless the husband has voluntarily appeared or been duly served with notice.

3. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 223, 286—SUIT MONEY—DISCRETION OF COURT—STATUTE.

Under Civ. Code, § 137, a discretion is vested in trial court as to amount to be allowed a wife suing for divorce as suit money to enable her to prosecute or defend, and only a plain abuse of discretion is subject to correction by an appellate court.

4. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 285 — ORDER ALLOWING SUIT MONEY—APPEAL—SHOWING OF ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where it is contended no evidence was adduced at hearing showing necessity for allowance to wife suing for divorce of particular sum as suit money, it is incumbent on husband, appealing from order, to bring up so much of record as will show, either that no amount whatever should be allowed, or that sum is so excessive as to indicate an abuse of discretion.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 757(1)—PERMISSION TO FILE TYPEWRITTEN TRANSCRIPT—DUTY OF APPELLATE COURTS TO EXAMINE.

Permission given to appellant to file a typewritten transcript in lieu of a printed bill of exceptions casts no burden on the appellate courts to examine the typewritten documents, as enough should, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, be printed in the brief to illustrate the points.

6. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 215 — ALIMONY FOR MAINTENANCE AND SUPPORT—AWARD FOR TIME BEFORE APPLICATION.

There are cases where it is proper to make a wife suing for divorce an allowance of alimony for maintenance and support from the date of the commencement of action to the time of application, as well as thereafter, as where the wife has managed to exist only by borrowing money to pay for the necessities of life, etc.

7. DIVORCE $\hookrightarrow$ 286—ORDER FOR ALIMONY AND SUIT MONEY—APPEAL—PRESUMPTION.

Every reasonable intendment and presumption must be indulged on appeal in favor of correctness of trial court's proceedings and regularity of its order awarding plaintiff wife suing for divorce a monthly amount as alimony and a sum as suit money.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by Rose L. Reed against William R. Reed. From an order requiring defendant to pay plaintiff an amount monthly as alimony for her support pendente lite, and another sum as suit money, defendant appeals. Order affirmed.

J. R. Dorsey, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

R. H. Wilson, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order requiring defendant to pay plaintiff a certain amount monthly as alimony for her support pendente lite and another certain sum as suit money to enable her to prosecute the action.

The action was commenced by plaintiff to obtain a divorce. Her complaint, filed January 9, 1915, contained allegations showing her indigent circumstances and defendant's possession of community property worth several thousand dollars, and prayed for alimony for her support and suit money. On March 22, 1915, defendant answered. On June 16, 1915, plaintiff served and filed a notice that on June 21, 1915, she would apply to the court to have the cause set for hearing on the issues tendered by her complaint as to alimony pendente lite and suit money. Thereafter, by consent of both parties in open court, the motion was continued to June 28, 1915. On the last-mentioned date the matter again was continued, by consent of both parties in open court, this time to July 2, 1915, on which date the matter duly came on for hearing, witnesses were sworn and testified, and on July 29, 1915—the matter having regularly been continued to that date—the court made an order directing defendant to pay plaintiff $750 as and for suit money, for the purpose of defraying the expenses that she may be put to in producing her evidence, taking the depositions of her witnesses, and other expenses connected with the litigation; and likewise directed defendant to pay plaintiff $50 per month for her maintenance, commencing January 9, 1915, the date when the action was brought.

Defendant contends: (1) That the court was without jurisdiction to make the order, for the reason that there was no proper application for alimony or suit money; (2) that there was no evidence showing a necessity for the allowance of $750 as suit money; and (3) that the court had no power to allow plaintiff alimony for her support during the period intermediate to the commencement of the action and the date of her application for an allowance. On the record, as it comes to us, none of these objections is tenable.

[1, 2] 1. We think the notice served and filed June 21, 1915, and the subsequent stipulations relative to continuances, together with the issues tendered by the complaint relative to alimony and suit money, were sufficient to empower the court to make the order for suit money and support pendente lite, even if jurisdiction were dependent upon any formal notice. However, contrary to appellant's assumption, no notice was necessary. The defendant had appeared in the action, so that the court had acquired jurisdiction, not only of the subject-matter of the action, but of the person of the defendant. Having acquired such jurisdiction, the court had the power to order, ex parte, without any previous notice the payment of any reasonable sum for alimony and suit money. Mudd v. Mudd, 98 Cal. 320, 33 Pac. 114; Ex parte Joutsen, 154 Cal. 541, 98 Pac. 391; Glass v. Glass, 4 Cal. App. 604, 88 Pac. 734. "Such order may be made ex parte, and is usually so made." Glass v. Glass, supra. Appellant cites Baker v. Baker, 136 Cal. 302, 68 Pac. 971. That case can have no application here, for there the court undertook to make an allowance to the wife before it had acquired jurisdiction of the person of the husband, either by service of process or by his voluntary appearance. That it could not do. The obligation of a husband to support his wife is personal, and therefore an order for alimony—in effect a final judgment for money (Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456, 635, 8 Pac. 709)—is a judgment in personam, and void unless the husband has voluntarily appeared in the action or has been duly served with process (14 Cyc. 745).

[3-5] 2. It must be conceded, and indeed it is not questioned, that a discretion is vested in the trial court as to the amount to be allowed the wife as suit money to enable her to "prosecute or defend the action" (Civ. Code, § 137), and that only a plain abuse of discretion is subject to correction by an appellate court. Where, as here, it is contended that no evidence was adduced at the hearing showing a necessity for the allowance of a particular sum as suit money, it is incumbent upon the appellant to bring up so much of the record as will suffice to show, either that no amount whatever should be allowed, or that the sum allowed is so excessive as clearly to indicate an abuse of discretion. Here the appeal is taken under the alternative method. Much evidence was adduced in the lower court. The hearing extended over three or four days. The reporter's transcript covers some 200 typewritten pages. None of the evidence is printed in the briefs, or in any supplement appended thereto, as required by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, save a very small part designed to show that, under the doctrine of such cases as Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345, and White v. White, 86 Cal. 212, 24 Pac. 1030, the $750 cannot be deemed to include counsel fees for the reason that respondent's counsel had agreed to prosecute her action for a contingent fee. But even if the $750 did not include any allowance for counsel fees—and we shall assume it did not—nevertheless it is incumbent upon appellant to print in his briefs so much of the evidence as will enable us to say that there was no necessity for any suit money whatever or that the sum allowed was so excessive as to amount to an abuse of discretion. This appellant has failed to do. The permission given to an appellant to file a typewritten transcript in lieu of a printed bill of exceptions casts no burden upon the appellate courts to examine the typewritten documents. California Sav. Bank v. Canne, 34 Cal. App. 768, 169 Pac. 395.

Though no burden rests upon us to do so, we have looked into the typewritten transcript and there learn that the pleadings tendered issues respecting property rights of considerable value; that it will doubtless be necessary to take the deposition of a witness in Texas, one Paggi, whose desposition was used at the hearing on the motion for alimony; and that this witness has some knowledge respecting appellant's stockholdings and his general financial condition. The trial court was justified in indulging the inference that, before a trial on the merits, the deposition of this witness should be taken again, and his knowledge of important facts thoroughly probed. If such deposition be taken in Texas upon oral questions and answers—and it is possible that that course will best subserve the ends of justice—the employment of counsel in Texas, or the traveling expenses of respondent's present counsel, necessarily will use up quite a considerable part of the total allowance of $750. This, though but one illustration of a possible item of expense that may have been in the mind of the lower court, will serve to show the impossibility of an intelligent consideration of appellant's point in the absence of a printed transcript of so much of the evidence as will at least negative the presumption of regularity in the order complained of.

[6, 7] 3. In support of his contention that the court erred in allowing alimony from the date of the commencement of the action, instead of from the date of respondent's application therefor, appellant relies upon the rule announced in Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 35 Pac. 87, where it is held that an allowance to the wife of suit money to enable her to prosecute or defend the action can only be made as to expenses necessary to be included in the future prosecution or defense of the action, and cannot be made for the payment of past expenses, "except where such payment is necessary to be made in order to enable the wife to further prosecute or defend her case."

Assuming, for the purpose of this decision only, that the rule as to alimony for maintenance and support is the same as that respecting suit money for expenses, nevertheless there are cases where it is proper to make an allowance of alimony for maintenance and support from the date of the commencement of the action to the time of the application therefor. For example, if application for alimony is not made until some months after the commencement of the action, and if, in the meantime, the wife has managed to exist only by borrowing money wherewith to pay for the necessities of life, or if, during this period, because of her indigent circumstances, she has gone without many things suitable to her condition in life, it is manifest that, to place her in such a situation that in the future she may be enabled to live upon the allowance provided to be paid for her future support—if that amount is no more than sufficient for that purpose—provision ought likewise to be made for her past expenses incurred subsequent to the commencement of the action, otherwise she would be compelled to pay out of the allowance for her future support the money she had previously borrowed, or purchase with the money allowed her for her future support the things she should have had in the past, but which, because of her poverty, she was unable to purchase at the time. Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 79 Pac. 885. In the Gay Case it is said:

"If, then, it be conceded that * * * the rule laid down in Loveren v. Loveren, with reference to reimbursement for costs and expenses of the wife in an action for divorce, should apply to an application by the wife for support and maintenance, still * * * the rule that payments for past expenses shall not be allowed is not absolute, but is subject to the qualification that such an order may be made whenever it appears that such payment is necessary to enable the wife to further prosecute or defend her case. And the same qualification as to the rule should apply to applications by the wife for support. If it should appear to the court that it was necessary, in order to insure the support of the wife upon the amount to be paid to her periodically in the future, that existing wants or expenses incurred by her should be provided for, the court, within the qualification announced above, would have the right to do so." 146 Cal. 242, 243, 79 Pac. 888.

Whether the evidence adduced before the trial court did or did not present a case showing a necessity for an allowance for past support in order to insure respondent's future maintenance out of the sums to be paid to her in the future, we have no means of knowing, for none of the evidence has been printed in the briefs, saving that which relates exclusively to the agreement of respondent's counsel to prosecute her action for a contingent fee, and every reasonable intentment and presumption must be indulged in favor of the correctness of the proceedings below and the regularity of the order.

Order affirmed.

SHAW, J. This controversy grows out of a contract made by the parties for an exchange of real and personal property whereby defendants claimed plaintiff sold and agreed to deliver to them, with the ranch so conveyed, some 2,000 fruit trays which at the time of the making of the contract were, and for a period of one year or more had been, in the possession of a third party upon another ranch, and which trays defendants thereafter took into their possession.

Findings were waived, and the court gave judgment for defendants, from which plaintiff appeals. Upon the record the only rulings that can be considered are those involving the interpretation of the written contract between the parties, and the admission and rejection of certain testimony. The clause of the contract upon which respondents relied and which the court construed as entitling them to the trays is as follows:

"The following described personal property now situate upon said real property in Kings county is to go with the said property in this transfer and to be considered a part of the same, to wit: Four mules and harness for the same, one spraying outfit and its truck, all trays and boxes, two (2) sows, one (1) cow, one section harrow, one rotary harrow, two twelve-inch plows, one ten-inch plow, one small gang plow, one four-horse wagon, capital wagon, one vineyard truck, all tree props and hooks, all hay in barns, all panels and woven wire fences now on the ranch, also one light buggy, yellow gear."

[1, 2] In construing the contract to include the 2,000 trays in question the court erred. By the express terms thereof the only personal property which was to go with the realty so agreed to be conveyed was "the following described personal property now situate upon said real property in Kings county." The word "now" had reference to the date of the contract, at which time there was pointed out to the defendants for their inspection several thousand fruit trays piled upon the dry ground. They were not led to believe, and since they had no knowledge that plaintiff owned the 2,000 trays elsewhere located could not have believed, that they would receive other than the trays on the ranch. If one contracts to buy a ranch with all the cattle thereon, his right to such live stock would, in the absence of a fraudulent removal, be restricted to those located thereon at the date of the making of the contract. He could not be heard to insist that such contract included cattle elsewhere located, because owned by the vendor. In our opinion, there is no ambiguity in the contract, but, conceding it ambiguous, there is nothing in the evidence which, upon applying the rules for interpretation found in title III, Civil Code, could justify the conclusion of the trial court in the interpretation thereof. It is true that in making the purchase defendants assumed and agreed to pay, as a part of the purchase money of the whole property transferred, an existing mortgage on the trays, numbering in all approximately 15,000, but such fact is unimportant as a means of interpretation. It cannot be said that merely because one, as part of the consideration of a purchase, assumes and agrees to pay a mortgage on personal property, he is entitled to the property. There is no uncertainty in the contract, and, applying the rule that "when a contract is reduced to writing, the intention of the parties is to be ascertained from the writing alone, if possible, * * *" we have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the court erred in construing the contract to cover and include the 2,000 trays owned by plaintiff and located elsewhere than on the ranch so conveyed by plaintiff to defendants. This view renders it unnecessary to discuss other alleged errors.

40 Cal. App. 45
HAMMOND et al. v. HAZARD et al.
(Civ. 2040.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐2—DECISIONS APPEALABLE—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Where notice of attempted appeal from order denying motion for new trial was filed after the amendment of 1915 to Code Civ. Proc. § 963, the appeal attempted to be taken from the order must be dismissed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐757(1)—RECORD—BRIEFS—EVIDENCE.

Where appeal was taken under the alternative method, it is incumbent upon appellants to print in their briefs or in a supplement thereto so much of the record as is necessary to enable the court intelligently to pass upon the questions presented, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐330(3)—AGENCY OF DRIVER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

That owner of automobile was seated with driver while car was being driven, apparently acquiescing in its operation, justifies inference that driver was owner's agent.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇐330(3)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—OWNERSHIP OF AUTOMOBILE.

That one sued for injuries caused by driving of automobile was registered as owner under St. 1913, p. 641, §§ 3, 4, warrants a finding that she was in fact the rightful owner.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨330(3)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—OWNERSHIP OF AUTOMOBILE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where defendant claimed that she was not the owner of the automobile and that its driver at time of collision was not her agent, evidence held to justify verdict for plaintiffs.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨757(1)—RECORD—TYPEWRITTEN MANUSCRIPTS.

The alternative method of appeal, though permitting parties to file typewritten transcripts of the evidence, casts no burden upon appellate courts to examine the typewritten documents.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨330(2)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—OWNERSHIP OF AUTOMOBILE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that defendant, at the time of the collision, remarked, "My car is hurt just as much as the other car," was admissible on the question of ownership; it being for the jury to say whether defendant referred to ownership or was simply making comparison of damages to the cars.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Justin Hammond and another against E. L. Hazard and another. From judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from order denying motion for new trial dismissed. Judgment affirmed.

G. R. Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

E. R. Simon, of El Centro, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action for personal injuries to the plaintiff Adel Hammond, caused by a collision of the automobile that defendant Hazard was driving—alleged to be the property of the defendant Cronkhite—with the automobile that plaintiff Justin Hammond was driving, and in which his wife, Adel Hammond, was riding with him.

While plaintiffs, in the automobile in which they were riding, were ascending a narrow mountain road between San Diego and El Centro, in Imperial county, on November 5, 1914, the automobile that the defendant Hazard was driving—on the front seat of which Mrs. Cronkhite sat—collided, at a curve in the road, with the automobile in which plaintiffs were riding, breaking Mrs. Hammond's arm and causing her serious injuries. The trial, which was before a jury, resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiffs against both defendants. From the judgment and an order denying their motion for new trial defendants appeal.

[1] Notice of the attempted appeal from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial having been filed after the amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the appeal attempted to be taken from that order must be dismissed.

It is alleged in the complaint that the automobile in which defendants were riding was the property of defendant Cronkhite and that defendant Hazard was operating it at the time of the accident with her consent and as her agent. Upon this allegation the answer joined issue, and the principal point urged on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify a verdict against Mrs. Cronkhite for the reason that, so it is argued, the evidence is insufficient to justify the jury's implied finding that she owned the automobile that Hazard was driving and that the latter was operating it as her agent.

Both defendants testified that the automobile was not the property of Mrs. Cronkhite. Defendant Hazard testified that about June 28, 1913, it was purchased from or through the Crown Garage & Machine Works by one Stansbury, upon whose ranch he was working as foreman; that, on the day of the alleged sale to Stansbury, Mrs. Cronkhite gave to the Crown Garage & Machine Works her personal check for $575; and that when she gave this check he said to her: "This is your car until I give you back your money."

[2] Though the record is somewhat voluminous, the facts presently to be referred to, together with those already mentioned, constitute the substance of all the evidence printed in the briefs relative to the questions of ownership and agency, notwithstanding the appeal was taken under the alternative method, and it is incumbent upon appellants to print in their briefs, or in a supplement thereto, so much of the record as is necessary to enable us intelligently to pass upon the questions presented. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

[3, 4] There was sufficient evidence to support the verdict and the jury's implied finding that, at the time of the accident, Hazard was driving the car as the agent of Mrs. Cronkhite. If Mrs. Cronkhite owned the car, then the fact that she was sitting on the front seat with Hazard while he drove, apparently acquiescing in its operation by him, was amply sufficient to justify the inference that the agency, as alleged in the complaint, existed. So that the sufficiency of the evidence to justify a finding of agency depends upon its sufficiency to justify a finding that the car was the property of Mrs. Cronkhite. That the evidence was sufficient to justify such a finding we have no doubt. Though Hazard gave direct testimony as to the ownership of the car, and testified that it did not belong to Mrs. Cronkhite, nevertheless the jurors were justified in disbelieving this part of his testimony, for the reason that discredit was cast upon it by the evidence of an impeaching witness produced in rebuttal by respondents, one Kemp, who testified that on the day after the accident Hazard told him that "he did not want to get Mrs. Cronkhite mixed up in this, as she has furnished the car." Hazard admitted that when Mrs. Cronkhite gave the Crown Garage & Machine Works her personal check for $575—this was at the time when he says he purchased the car for Stansbury from the Crown Garage & Machine Works—he may have said to her: "This is your car until I give you back your money." Mrs. Cronkhite likewise gave direct testimony that she did not own the car. But, according to the testimony of witnesses for respondents, she declared, at the time of the accident, that she would "settle all damages." According to respondents' witnesses, Mrs. Cronkhite, immediately after the collision, took the names of witnesses to the accident, while Hazard sat in the car apparently indifferent; and, at the same time, she made the statement, "My car is hurt just as much as the other car." Her conduct in thus busying herself with the names of witnesses, and her statements about "my car," and that "I will settle all damages," clearly evidence the interest of one who is conscious of liability as the owner of the car. This, in connection with the fact, admitted at the trial, that the car was registered in her name for the year 1914, was amply sufficient to justify the jury in disbelieving the direct evidence of herself and Hazard that she was not the owner of the car on November 5, 1914, the day of the accident. The Motor Vehicle Act requires the owner of every automobile to cause an application for registration to be filed, and the automobile to be registered, in the name of the owner. Stats. 1913, p. 641, §§ 3, 4. Such legislation warrants a finding that the person in whose name an automobile is registered is in fact the rightful owner. Com. v. Sherman, 191 Mass. 439, 78 N. E. 98; Ferris v. Sterling, 214 N. Y. 249, 108 N. E. 406, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 1161, and note on page 1163 et seq.

[5, 6] For the foregoing reasons we hold that the evidence, as disclosed by such parts of the record as have been printed in the briefs, was sufficient to justify the verdict. It is possible that there may be evidence in the record which, if printed in appellants' brief, and thus properly called to our attention, would necessitate a different conclusion. The alternative method of appeal, though permitting parties to file typewritten transcripts of the evidence, casts no burden upon appellate courts to examine the typewritten documents. California Sav., etc., Bank v. Canne, 34 Cal. App. 763, 169 Pac. 395.

It is next contended that there is a fatal variance between the case alleged in the complaint and the proof, in that—so it is argued—the complaint alleges "willfulness" and the evidence shows only "negligence," citing in support of this contention Tognazini v. Freeman, 18 Cal. App. 468, 123 Pac. 540, where the distinction between "willfulness" and "negligence" is clearly pointed out. Assuming, for the purpose of this decision only, that the complaint tendered an issue of willfulness only, and not negligence—an assumption which, we think, is not borne out by the language of the pleading—nevertheless, we have no means of knowing whether the evidence fell short of establishing willfulness on the part of appellants, since they have failed to print in their briefs a sufficient record. Where, as here, the appeal is taken under the alternative method, "the law requires * * * that enough must be printed [in the briefs or in a supplement thereto] to illustrate the points made and to enable the court to determine those points." California Sav., etc., Bank v. Canne, supra. See, also, McLaren v. Hards, 178 Pac. 332; Lutz v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (Sup.) 177 Pac. 158.

[7] There was no error in overruling the objection to the question propounded to the witness Fuller, who, being asked if, at the time of the collision, he heard Mrs. Cronkhite make any statement with reference to the accident, answered that she said, "My car is hurt just as much as the other car." It was for the jury to say, from a consideration of all the evidence, whether, in using the words "my car," Mrs. Cronkhite referred to the matter of ownership or was simply making a comparison of the damage to the respective cars.

Finding no reversible error disclosed by any of the record printed in the briefs, we are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and the appeal from the order denying a new trial dismissed.

It is ordered accordingly.

PEOPLE v. CARROLL. (Cr. 732.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied March 10, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1919.)

1. PERJURY $\S$ 5—RECALL ELECTION—FALSE AFFIDAVIT TO PETITION.

Pen. Code, $\S$ 64b, subs. 1, 5, forbidding the making of false affidavit concerning petition or signatures thereto provided for by the laws of the state, applies to false affidavit as to signature to a petition for recall election in city whose charter expressly makes all general laws of state applicable to city elections.

2. PERJURY $\S$ 19(2)—FALSE AFFIDAVIT—PETITION FOR RECALL ELECTION—INDICTMENT.

An indictment, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 64b, subd. 5, forbidding the making of false affidavit concerning petition or signature thereto authorized by state law, need not allege that defendant caused, consented, or permitted the affidavit to be used or filed; it alleging that he made it and that it was filed.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\S$ 159(4)—AMENDMENT—NAME OF ACCUSED.

Under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1008, amendment of indictment at beginning of trial changing name of defendant as inadvertently used in one part to correspond to other parts of the indictment held proper.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1166½(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—QUESTION TO JUROR.

Error in ruling on question put to prospective juror held not to warrant reversal of conviction, where defendant did not exhaust his peremptory challenges.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

A. P. Carroll was convicted of making false affidavit in violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 64b, and his motion for new trial denied, and he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

U'Ren & Beard and C. A. Linn, both of Napa, and J. Early Craig, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was charged by indictment with the violation of section 64b of the Penal Code. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced. This appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The indictment in part alleges that the defendant made a false affidavit which was attached to a section of a petition for a recall election; that the affidavit was knowingly false in averring that no person signed said section of the petition except in the presence of the deponent; and that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature to the petition was the genuine signature of the person whose name purported to be thereunto subscribed, whereas, according to the charge of the indictment, said signatures were in fact procured, solicited by, and made in the presence of a person other than the defendant. It also alleges that the affidavit attached to said section of the recall petition was filed in the office of the registrar of voters of the city and county of San Francisco.

Section 64b declares a number of acts to be unlawful, subdivision 1 thereof making it unlawful for any person who circulates any petition authorized or provided for "by the Constitution or laws of the state of California regulating the initiative, referendum or recall" to misrepresent or make any false statement concerning the contents or effect of any such petition to any person to whom it is presented for signature. Other subdivisions of the section are immaterial to the question involved in this case, but subdivision 5, upon which this indictment is based, reads as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person to make any false affidavit concerning any petition mentioned in this section or the signatures appended thereto."

[1] We cannot agree with appellant in his contention that a reading of section 64b, and particularly of subdivision 1 thereof, shows that the Legislature intended that the act should apply exclusively to state initiative, referendum and recall elections. The section is broad in its terms; and we perceive no reason for holding that it is not as general in its application as any other section of the Penal Code. Moreover, the charter of the city and county of San Francisco, under which the contemplated election was to be held, is, like section 64b of the Penal Code, a state law. In the case of Sheehan v. Acott, 145 Cal. 684, 79 Pac. 350, it was held that a municipal charter is "a legislative act * * * and has the same effect as * * * a law which is passed by bill, under the provisions of section 15 of article IV," of the state Constitution. We may add that a complete answer to this contention of the appellant is found in the San Francisco charter itself, which expressly provides that—

"All provisions of the general laws of the state, including penal laws respecting elections, * * * shall be applicable to all elections held in the city and county of San Francisco."

[2] Appellant further contends that the indictment is defective for the reason that it nowhere appears therein that the defendant ever caused, consented, or permitted the affidavit to be used or filed. It does allege, however, that the defendant made the false affidavit and that it was filed. This, we think, was sufficient under the terms of section 64b. The distinction between this case and that of People v. Robles, 117 Cal. 681, 49 Pac. 1042, relied upon by the appellant, is this: There it was held that an indictment for perjury, charging the making of a false affidavit for the purpose of enabling a litigant to obtain a new trial, but not also alleging that the affidavit was delivered to be used, failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. That case comes under the provisions of section 124 of the Penal Code, which do not make the perjury complete until the affidavit has, with the consent of the affiant, been used or delivered to be used. Section 64b has not such requirement. It is enough that it appear—as it does in the instant case—that the affidavit was made with the intention and under the circumstances set forth in the statute.

[3] At the beginning of the trial the court permitted the district attorney to amend the indictment on its face by striking out the name Harry Hood, and inserting in place thereof the name A. P. Carroll. In this there was no error. It is apparent that it was but the correction of a typographical error. All through the rather lengthy document the defendant was referred to by the name A. P. Carroll, except in one instance near the end thereof the name Harry Hood was used, although clearly referring to the same person who had theretofore been repeatedly called A. P. Carroll. It is quite apparent that this was an inadvertence, the correction of which did not in any manner prejudice the rights of the defendant. The amendment was such as is clearly authorized by section 1008 of the Penal Code.

No other point made by the appellant based upon the indictment merits consideration.

[4] Appellant also complains of a ruling of the court upon a question put to a prospective juror. While it is true that the appellant was not bound to adopt the suggestion of the trial court to learn whether or not the prospective juror entertained any bias or prejudice against him, still he was not injured by the suggestion nor prevented from learning the true condition of the juror's mind as to any matter bearing on the trial. Again, it does not appear from the record that the defendant exhausted his preemptory challenges, nor that he was required to accept an objectionable juror; hence, even if the ruling complained of be erroneous, it would not warrant the reversal of the judgment. People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 157 Pac. 599; People v. Shafer, 161 Cal. 573, 119 Pac. 920.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. HOMICIDE ⇨250—MANSLAUGHTER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of manslaughter.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1170(2)—EXCLUDING EVIDENCE OF FLIGHT OF ANOTHER—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in excluding evidence of flight of a third person, who was present at the homicide, was harmless, where other evidence showed that such person had worked in the vicinity until a recent date, when he had enlisted in the army.

3. WITNESSES ⇨388(2)—IMPEACHMENT BY FORMER TESTIMONY—FOUNDATION.

Question to a witness, "Did you ever make any statement to that effect when you were on the former trial of this case?" was properly excluded, where defendant did not lay proper foundation for the question by calling the witness' particular attention to any former testimony given by her.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⇨1170½(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Any error in a ruling curtailing cross-examination was harmless, where the question was asked, and answer favorable to defendant made and not stricken out.

In a prosecution for homicide, cross-examination to show that an impeaching witness who testified to contradictory statements of state's witness had a husband then in jail awaiting trial for homicide, if incompetent, held not reversible error.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment of imprisonment after conviction of the crime of manslaughter.

[1] Defendant was charged by the information of the district attorney with the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed on or about the 29th day of April, 1917, in the city of Bakersfield. The jury determined by its verdict that the defendant was guilty of the lesser crime of manslaughter. The points made by appellant are that error was committed by the trial judge in sustaining objections of the prosecution to certain testimony offered by the defendant, and in admitting other testimony over the objection of the defendant. No point is made as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and indeed any such contention would be without the least validity. Under the testimony heard at the trial the jury would have been fully justified in finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree.

The person killed was Anna Gerardat, who at the time of her death was about 28 years of age. She was employed as a waitress in a restaurant in the city of Bakersfield. Defendant was well acquainted with her; in fact, the reasonable inference to be drawn from the testimony is that the relations between the defendant and the woman had, prior to the day of the shooting, been of a very intimate nature. A man named Carter was also a friend of the woman. Admittedly the feeling between Carter and the defendant was not friendly. The shooting occurred on Sunday morning. On the evening previous both defendant and Carter had eaten their dinner at this restaurant and had been served by Anna Gerardat. Carter ate his meal quietly and left the place considerably in advance of the defendant, without any words being exchanged between the two. One of the waitresses employed in the place testified that defendant, near 9 o'clock of that evening, while in the restaurant, was seen to throw some money forcibly on the table in front of Anna Gerardat, and that she (the witness) went to him and asked him not to create a disturbance—"not to start anything there." The defendant replied and told this witness that she did not know what was behind it all; "that he had been putting up money and had been made a boob of long enough." At about 9 o'clock Anna Gerardat and the defendant left the restaurant together. Evidently they went together to the room of Anna Gerardat in a hotel. The clerk of this hotel testified that shortly after 9 o'clock he heard loud talking in Anna Gerardat's room, and heard a man's voice say, "I am going to settle this; my God, I am going to settle this," or words of that substance and effect; that he (the clerk) entered the room and ordered the defendant to leave; that the woman put on her wraps and the two went out of the hotel; that some time before 12 o'clock that night the woman returned and went to her room; that shortly afterwards the defendant came in, and was about to go to the same room, when he was stopped by the clerk; that after some talk between the defendant, the clerk and the proprietress of the hotel, defendant, upon the latter's order, left the place, and was seen no more that night. On the following morning at about 7 o'clock, according to another witness' testimony, defendant appeared at a bar and there requested the return to him of a revolver which he had previously loaned to the witness. Defendant inquired of the witness as to whether the revolver was loaded, and, receiving a negative response, asked for loaded cartridges, and the witness gave him five loaded shells which were of the proper caliber and of a number to completely fill the chambers of the revolver. Not long after this the defendant made his appearance at the restaurant where Anna Gerardat was employed. The woman had already arrived, and there was in the place another waitress named Howie, and the proprietor named Jan. Defendant took his seat at the table, facing toward the kitchen, and shortly afterwards Carter came in and took a seat three or four tables distant from defendant and directly at his back. Anna Gerardat proceeded to wait upon the two men. Waitress Howie testified that she was in the kitchen and the proprietor was further toward the rear of the kitchen and Anna Gerardat was toward the front part of the premises, at some place not known to the witness, when several shots were fired; that she (the witness) immediately pushed open the door leading from the kitchen into the rear of the dining room, and there found Anna Gerardat lying face downward on the floor, and the defendant standing five or six feet away; that defendant, upon observing the witness, said to her to look out; "you'll get yours." This witness testified that she retreated and ran around to a telephone to notify the police; that upon going back into the kitchen she saw Carter in one of the kitchen rooms, evidently making his way to the rear of the building. Police officers arrived upon the scene very quickly, and the first officer testified that he informed the persons in the restaurant that no one should leave until he had found out who had done the shooting, and that defendant, who was there replied: "You need not look any further; I am the one that done it." The second officer testified that similar response was made by the defendant to him, and that defendant said he did not know why he had "done it"; that defendant was heard by this officer to make the further remark: "I wish I had got that other s— b—." The revolver with which the shooting was done was pointed out by the defendant at the time; he having placed it in the kitchen. Five bullets were found, all of the caliber fitting this revolver, one in the body of Anna Gerardat, one on the floor, and the others in different parts of the room. No one saw Carter have a revolver on that morning at the restaurant. Carter's deposition was read in evidence, and his testimony showed that Anna Gerardat was just coming through the swinging door from the kitchen when shots were fired, and that she fell immediately; that the defendant came from behind a piano that was placed in the center of the room between the main front and the rear dining room, and that he (Carter) immediately fled, going through the side passageway and out of the rear of the building. The trial occurred in February, 1918. At this trial the defendant in his testimony claimed Carter had made threats against him, and that on the morning in question Carter was the aggressor and attacked him before he (the defendant) fired any shots. He disclaimed any intention to kill Anna Gerardat. There was further testimony, on behalf of the defense, given by one witness, of a letter delivered to this witness by Carter prior to the day of the tragedy, and which Carter requested the witness to mail to his mother at a distant point. The witness testified that he had read the letter and had returned it to Carter at the latter's request the day afterwards. He was allowed to testify to the contents of it, which, as he stated them, were generally to the effect that when the letter was received by the mother the writer would be dead, as "he couldn't live without Anna." This witness testified further that after the shooting Carter had suggested to him that he had better forget "that he had had that letter"; further, that on another occasion prior to the shooting, Carter had told the witness that he was out of luck, and, when asked what was the matter, said "he had lost his girl and lost his car." This witness further stated, "I asked him what was the matter, and he said, a French s— b— had beat him out of them"; also, that at that prior time Carter wanted to borrow a gun, but did not secure one from the witness.

[2] Appellant assigns as prejudicial error the ruling of the trial judge in sustaining an objection to testimony sought to be elicited from the district attorney, who was called by the defense as a witness. The district attorney was asked, referring to the time when the trial of the case was set, as to whether he had issued a subpoena for Harry Carter. This was objected to on behalf of the prosecution, and the following dialogue occurred:

"The Court: I don't see what it is for; I cannot understand it.

"Mr. Irwin (for defendant): I want to show that Harry Carter ran away.

"Mr. Conway (for the prosecution): Just a moment. He ran away, where to, the army?

"Mr. Irwin: I don't care where he went. I want to show as an independent fact that Harry Carter left the county after he had been subpoenaed, without notifying the district attorney where he was going. I want to show flight on the part of Harry Carter."

The court sustained the objection, and struck out the testimony of the district attorney as given up to that point. We think that the ruling was without prejudice. The Attorney General has cited several authorities from another jurisdiction which hold that evidence of flight of another person is not admissible on behalf of a defendant accused of crime. However, even though we concede that it was competent for the defendant to show such flight of Carter, there was other evidence in the case (and, by the way, it was objected to by the defense), which showed that Carter was working in the vicinity of Bakersfield up to November, 1917, when he enlisted in the army. This testimony was not contradicted in any way, and it fully accounted for the whereabouts of Carter and the circumstances of his leaving.

[3, 4] The second error assigned is that the court improperly curtailed the cross-examination of the witness Howie (the waitress who was in the kitchen at the time of the shooting). After the witness had given her testimony in the main, the substance of which has been hereinbefore stated, the following occurred: Question by defendant's attorney:

"As I understand, you didn't see any of the shooting, or didn't see anybody do the shooting? A. No, but I saw the—

"Q. You didn't see— A. I saw one flash back of the electric piano.

"Q. This is the first time you have mentioned that?

"Mr. Conway: Object to that as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial; it doesn't appear she was ever asked the question before.

"Mr. Irwin: She wasn't asked the question now.

"The Court: Objection sustained.

"Q. Did you ever make any statement to that effect when you were on the former trial of this case? A. No, sir; you asked—"

A further objection was interposed by the prosecution and sustained. In the first place, the defense did not lay the proper foundation for the question by calling the witness' particular attention to any former testimony given by her; and, in the second place, the answer of the witness, which was favorable to the defendant, was made and not stricken out.

[5] A Mrs. Mathews was called as a witness for the defense and gave testimony concerning alleged conversations had with the waitress Howie subsequent to the day of the shooting. The testimony of this witness was to the effect that waitress Howie stated to her that she had not seen any of the shooting, as she was in the rear part of the kitchen at the time. For the purpose of showing the interest and bias of this witness, the district attorney was allowed to show on cross-examination that the witness' husband was then in jail and being prosecuted by the district attorney on a charge of murder; that the witness was in constant touch with her husband. While it may be the subject of question as to whether this testimony was competent, yet it was not such as to impute disgrace to the witness personally, and therefore did not fall within those cases where judgments have been reversed because of incompetent questions asked a witness which would have a direct tendency to degrade. It cannot be said that it is probable that the jury rejected the testimony of the witness Mrs. Mathews upon the ground that she had a husband who was in jail untried on a criminal charge at the time of the giving of the testimony. In other words, the prejudicial effect of the ruling of the court does not appear.

We have now answered all of the contentions urged by the appellant as ground for reversal. We are satisfied that appellant has had a fair trial, and, moreover, was dealt with most leniently by the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CARD. (Cr. 817.)

1. HOMICIDE $\S$ 228(1) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY—CORPUS DELICTI.

In a prosecution for murder, evidence held sufficient to establish the corpus delicti by showing that the death of the victim was due to a criminal abortion not necessary to preserve the victim's life.

2. HOMICIDE $\S$ 234(1) — DEFENDANT'S CONNECTION WITH THE CRIME—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for murder in which death was caused by a criminal abortion, evidence held sufficient to justify the finding of the jury holding defendant responsible for decedent's death.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 511(1) — ACCOMPLICE TESTIMONY—CORROBORATION—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution of a physician for murder, where the victim's death resulted from a criminal abortion, evidence of an accomplice held sufficiently corroborated by other testimony.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1137(3) — APPEAL—ACCOMPLICES—CORROBORATION—INSTRUCTIONS—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Where defendant in a criminal prosecution submitted instructions that a certain witness was an accomplice, which were refused because covered by other instructions, the defendant is in no better position to complain that the court instructed that such witness was an accomplice than he would have been had his instructions been granted.

5. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 448(12), 1170(4)—WITNESSES $\S$ 248(2) — EVIDENCE—DECEASED'S FORMER ATTEMPT AT ABORTION — CONCLUSION.

In a prosecution for murder in which death resulted from a criminal abortion, the answer of a physician to question whether examination disclosed a previous attempt to commit abortion, that deceased admitted a previous attempt was properly excluded, being a conclusion and not responsive to the question, and no prejudice arose where witness subsequently stated the result of his physical examination.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

William S. Card was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, R. P. Henshall, and Samuel M. Shortridge, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Louis H. Ward, of San Francisco, of counsel), for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment upon conviction of the defendant of the crime of murder in the second degree, claimed to have been committed by the defendant in the performance of an abortion upon the person of one Mabel Solomonson, who died shortly thereafter.

The main facts of the case which it is the claim of the prosecution were sufficiently established by the evidence to justify the defendant's conviction, are these: On May 21, 1918, the deceased girl, accompanied by a female friend named Edna Swanson, came from Turlock to San Francisco, registering at the Argonaut Hotel, where they remained overnight, occupying the same bed. The following morning they removed to the Keystone Hotel, where they took a room. While there the decedent disrobed in the presence of her companion and took a sponge bath. She was then apparently in good physical condition and had no menstrual flow. At about half past 11 in the morning of that day the two girls went to the Westbank Building in this city, where the defendant, who is a physician, had his offices. They entered his reception room, and were there met by an assistant of the defendant named Mrs. Hunt, who, being informed which of them was the patient, directed Miss Solomonson to go to another room down the corridor, said to be the defendant's private office. In a few moments the deceased returned and asked her friend for $20, upon receiving which she went back in the direction whence she had come. This was shortly before 12 o'clock. At 1 o'clock Mabel Solomonson was assisted into the reception room from an adjoining room by a nurse named Mrs. Morgan, who was also one of the defendant's assistants on that day, and was delivered into the care of Miss Swanson, with the instruction to take her to her home or room and give her a dose of salts, which instruction the defendant had just directed her to give. At this time the Solomonson girl was greatly distressed, was weak and pale, moved with great difficulty, and had to be assisted to her room in the hotel, which was about half a block away. Upon reaching her room she was so weak that her companion helped her into bed. She was then discovered to be bleeding profusely; a towel, identified as being of the same kind used in the defendant's office, was found upon her person. Her condition being alarming another physician was called in, who recommended that the girl be taken to the Emergency Hospital. Before the ambulance arrived the girl died, and the autopsy surgeon found that she had bled to death as a result of an operation for abortion which had very recently been performed upon her. The defendant's arrest and trial for murder followed, and resulted in his conviction of murder in the second degree.

[1] The appellant makes several points, upon each of which he relies for a reversal. His first contention is that the corpus delicti was not proved. This contention is without merit. The autopsy surgeon who conducted the autopsy on the day of her death testified that except for her pregnancy and the abortion she was in the normal healthy physical condition for a young woman of her years, and that she had died as the result of the operation performed only a few hours before her decease. Miss Swanson, her companion during every hour of the time she was in San Francisco, except the hour or so when she was in the private office of the defendant, testified that the deceased was in good health and was not flowing up to the time she entered the defendant's offices, and that she emerged therefrom weak and distressed and hardly able to walk, and that on reaching her room a short distance away her bandages and clothing were saturated with blood. We think this evidence abundantly sufficient to establish that the death of this girl was due to an operation performed upon her which was criminal in its character as not necessary to preserve her life.

[2] The next contention of the appellant is that there was not sufficient evidence connecting the defendant with the commission of the crime. It is true that the deceased went from the offices of the defendant to an all too speedy death to permit her statement as to what had occurred while she was in the defendant's offices to be given in the form of a dying declaration, but we think that there is sufficient evidence otherwise to point unerringly to the defendant as the person performing the operation which produced her death. The evidence shows that the defendant maintained offices as a physician and surgeon in the Westbank Building with several connecting rooms, one of which was his private office, and another was his reception room to which those seeking his services were in the first instance admitted; that between these two rooms was a system of bells so arranged that a button touched in the reception room conveyed the information to the occupant of the private office that a patient was in waiting, and the touching of a button in the private office by its occupant informed the assistant in the reception room that the patient should be sent to the private office. The evidence shows that these responding bells were rung shortly after the deceased and her companion were admitted to the defendant's reception room. The evidence further showed that no other physician than the defendant occupied his private office. The evidence proceeds to show that when the defendant's assistant was thus advised that the defendant was in his private office and ready for the patient, the deceased was directed to his door; that she returned in a few moments to the reception room to get a sum of money, upon receiving which she went back into the defendant's private office; that she remained away from the reception room, where her friend remained in waiting, for the space of about an hour, when she was helped into the reception room by one of the defendant's assistants, and there given over to her friend with the instruction that the patient was to be taken to her home or room and given a dose of salts. She was then in a condition indicating to the point of certainty that during the hour spent in the defendant's private office something had been done to her which had destroyed her immediately preceding state of normal health, and left her weak, distressed, hardly able to walk, and bleeding to an extent which within a short while sapped her life; upon reaching her room, less than a block away, she had to be put to bed, and there was then found upon her a towel identical with those in use in the defendant's office; she died within a very few hours, and, as we have seen, her death was due to an abortion performed that day. When the defendant was interviewed by a detective officer, shortly after the girl's death, his demeanor, words, and actions were very far from those of an innocent man. We think this evidence was sufficient to justify the finding of the jury holding the defendant responsible for the decedent's death by means of a criminal abortion.

[3] The appellant's next contention is that the witness Edna Swanson was an accomplice of the defendant in procuring the operation to be performed upon her friend, and that her testimony was not sufficiently corroborated to have justified its acceptance by the jury as the basis of its verdict. The question whether the witness was or was not an accomplice within the purview of the law relating to this class of cases was removed from consideration by the court's instruction that she was such accomplice; but, conceding this, we are satisfied that her evidence was sufficiently corroborated as to all of its essential parts. Her story as to what occurred within her knowledge and observation while in the office of the defendant is supported by the testimony, reluctantly drawn from them, of the two witnesses who were acting as the defendant's assistants on that fatal day. It is shown sufficiently by their halting and hesitating admissions that the defendant was in his office at the time, fixed by the witness Swanson, of the presence of herself and companion there; the system of bells as testified to by one of them agrees with the statement of the alleged accomplice as to the sounding and significance of the bells, while her evidence as to the return of the deceased to her with the statement that she was to be taken home and given a dose of salts is supported by the admission of the witness Mrs. Morgan that such an instruction was received by her from the defendant and was conveyed at that time. The witness Swanson's testimony as to the physical condition of the deceased immediately before and immediately after the visit to the defendant's office is supported by the evidence of the autopsy surgeon as to the normality of the deceased's woman's physical condition outside of her state of pregnancy. We think the foregoing constitutes sufficient corroboration of this witness, assuming her to be, as the court instructed the jury, an accomplice.

[4] With respect to the next contention of the appellant, to the effect that the trial court committed reversible error in giving an instruction as to a matter of fact, by its instruction that the witness Swanson was an accomplice, little need be said. The record before us discloses that throughout the trial and upon this appeal it has been the defendant's consistent position that the witness Swanson was an accomplice whose testimony required corroboration. In harmony with this position the defendant requested a set of instructions upon the subject of accomplices and their corroboration which could only have had reference to the witness Swanson. These requested instructions were not given by the court for the reason that the subject was covered by its own instruction upon the subject to which the appellant now urges this objection. He cannot therefore be in a better position than he would have been had his own requested instruction been given, in which event he could not here be heard to urge his present objection.

As to the other instructions which the appellant requested, and which for the same reason were not given, no special emphasis is laid upon them upon this appeal; but we are satisfied from a careful reading of the entire body of the court's instructions that the jury were fairly, fully, and correctly instructed as to the law of the case.

[5] The final contention of the appellant is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in striking out the testimony of one Dr. Sarkasian, who undertook to give evidence as to statements which the deceased girl had made to him some weeks prior to her death while she was in Denver, Colo., and while he was treating her for anæmia. The answer of this witness which was stricken out was given in reply to the following question asked by counsel for the defendant: "Q. Did you discover from your examination of her whether or not there had been an attempt made previously to bring about an abortion?" to which the witness replied: "A. Well, she admitted that herself." The court properly ordered that answer stricken out. It was not responsive to the question. It was merely the conclusion of the witness as to the effect of whatever statement the deceased had made to him, and did not purport to be such statement. Moreover, the defendant was not prejudiced by the ruling of the court in this regard, since the record shows that the witness proceeded to answer the question correctly and fully by stating that as a result of his physical examination of the deceased while his patient upon this occasion, he found that an abortion had previously been attempted, apparently by herself. We therefore find no reversible error in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

WALBERG v. UNDERWOOD et al.
(Civ. 2859.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 15, 1919.)

1. INJUNCTION $\S$ 159—NOTICE TO OPPOSITE PARTY—WAIVER.

In proceeding to obtain injunction pendente lite staying execution of judgment in favor of defendant, held that appearance made by defendant's attorney was such as to constitute a waiver of the notice to the opposite party required by Code Civ. Proc. § 527.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 843(2)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

The notice required to be given the opposite party by Code Civ. Proc. § 527, in proceeding for injunction pendente lite, having been waived, as it may be, in view of Civ. Code, § 3513, it is unnecessary for the court on appeal to determine what power the lower court possessed under Code Civ. Proc. § 532, to dissolve or modify without a hearing on the merits an injunction granted without notice.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT $\S$ 70—AUTHORITY TO APPEAR—PRESUMPTION.

It will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that an attorney who appeared for defendant was authorized to do so.

4. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 105(1)—QUESTIONS OF INADMISSIBILITY—WAIVER.

Parties who permit a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence without objection waive all question of inadmissibility.

5. INJUNCTION $\hookrightarrow$ 159—NOTICE TO OPPOSITE PARTY—WAIVER.

An injunction granted on waiver of notice is the same as one granted with notice duly served, and Code Civ. Proc. § 532, as to motion to vacate or modify injunction granted without notice, does not apply.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; M. T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by Carl A. Walberg, etc., against Charles D. Underwood and others. From an order dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles J. Kelly, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stahl & Sayles, of Los Angeles, and Boyce R. Fitzgerald, Kaye & Siemon, and Erwin W. Owen, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Appeal from an order dissolving a temporary injunction. The plaintiff, it is claimed, without giving notice as required by section 527, Code of Civil Procedure, obtained an injunction pendente lite staying the execution of a judgment in favor of defendant. The injunction was granted by the judge in chambers. The record discloses that the defendant Underwood was represented by attorney at the hearing of the application. The order appealed from, dissolving this injunction, was granted without a hearing on the merits, on the alleged ground that the original order granting the injunction was made without notice.

[1, 2] Two points of law are involved in this appeal: First: Was the appearance made by defendant's attorney such as to constitute a waiver of the statutory notice? Second: Had the court jurisdiction to dissolve the temporary injunction without a hearing on the merits? It appears from the bill of exceptions that Mr. Kelly, attorney for plaintiff and appellant here, appeared in court before Hon. Howard A. Peairs, one of the judges of the superior court for the county of Kern, where the matter was pending, and asked for this temporary injunction. Mr. Fitzgerald, an attorney, and who afterwards appears as attorney of record for the defendant and respondent, was in court at the time, and stated that he desired to be heard in opposition to the application. The hearing was thereupon postponed to a later hour, at which time plaintiff's attorney and Mr. Fitzgerald, who was present on behalf of the defendant and respondent Underwood, appeared in chambers before Judge Peairs. Mr. Brown, another defendant in the action in which the injunction was sought, was also present in person. The application for an injunction was presented on the verified complaint in the action, and, after discussion, and objection to granting the writ on the part of Mr. Fitzgerald, the exact nature of which is somewhat in dispute, the temporary injunction was granted, and contains the following recital:

"On reading the said complaint in said action, duly verified by the oath of Carl A. Walberg and it satisfactorily appearing to me therefrom that it is a proper case for an injunction, and that sufficient grounds exist therefor, and the necessary undertaking having been given; it is therefore ordered," etc.

The record pertaining to the issuance of the injunction contains no recital of notice of the hearing, or of appearance by the defendant. It is also conceded that no previous notice of the proposed application for this injunction had been served on the opposite parties, and that Mr. Fitzgerald was present by virtue of information that the matter was to be presented, which he had received indirectly from some outside source. The application to dissolve this temporary order was heard in court, after due notice, and on affidavits, and the oral testimony of Judge Peairs, before Hon. Milton T. Farmer, another judge of the superior court for Kern county.

Judge Peairs testified, in substance, as follows:

"At the time Mr. Kelly made the application to me for a restraining order herein, Mr. Fitzgerald, who is an attorney, and who is here in court, also appeared, and stated that he desired to be heard in opposition to the application on the part of Mr. Kelly; and I arranged to hear the matter at a later hour, and told Mr. Fitzgerald he would be heard at that time if he so desired. At a later hour on the same day, Mr. Kelly and Mr. Fitzgerald appeared before me on the application for the order. The defendant Brown appeared also in person. I asked Mr. Fitzgerald for whom he appeared, and he stated that he appeared in behalf of the defendant Underwood. Mr. Fitzgerald argued in opposition to the granting of any order, and referred to certain allegations in the complaint. No request was made by Mr. Fitzgerald, or any one else, for further time upon said hearing, and no objection was made by him to having the matter heard at that time; nor was any exception taken thereto. After the order was granted, Mr. Fitzgerald stated that his client could not be protected unless a large bond was given, and was heard by me upon the question of the amount. It was upon the appearance of the defendant Underwood, the adverse party to the application, that the order was granted."

This statement of the facts is fully corroborated by the affidavit of Charles J. Kelly, plaintiff's attorney, used on the hearing.

Mr. Fitzgerald testified in rebuttal in effect as follows:

"I was present at the time the order was granted, to see that a proper undertaking was fixed. I did not intend to waive notice of the application, or waive notice at all; my only object was to see that an undertaking in a proper amount was fixed by the court. I do not remember that I told the court that I appeared for the defendant Underwood. I did tell the court that I had represented Mr. Underwood in the action to foreclose the mechanic's lien. I did not read any affidavits to oppose the application for the order. I had not prepared anything to oppose the application. I did not tell Judge Peairs that I appeared for the defendant Underwood. Brown did some talking, and said he would be injured if the execution sale was stopped. I did not appear for the purpose of contesting the application. I had no affidavits. I would say that I told Judge Peairs I appeared only to have the undertaking fixed. That was my intention. I did not make any application to Judge Peairs for a continuance. I did not request that the hearing be delayed. I made no objection to the matter being heard at that time."

[3] There is no room for question, under this showing of facts, that Mr. Fitzgerald appeared on the occasion of the application for a temporary injunction, and requested an opportunity to be heard thereon; that at the adjourned hearing before the judge in chambers he was present, representing the defendant Underwood in the matter, and that the application for a temporary injunction was there presented on the allegations of the verified complaint; and that he took some part in the discussion, and that he did not object to the hearing, or to want of notice, and made no request for further continuance. He does qualifiedly deny that he said he was appearing for the defendant Underwood, but does not deny that he did appear for him, or that he was authorized so to do; and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, his authority is, in any event, presumed. Hayes v. Shattuck, 21 Cal. 51; Pacific Pav. Co. v. Vizelich, 141 Cal. 4, 74 Pac. 352. It may be conceded that the requirement for notice under section 527, Code of Civil Procedure, is mandatory, but such an appearance and participation in the hearing as shown here was a waiver of the statutory notice, and gave the judge in chambers jurisdiction to act in the premises. Any one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit. Civ. Code, § 3513. Where the object of a notice was accomplished it is immaterial whether there was notice or not. When both parties appear, no notice whatever is necessary to be shown. McLeran v. Shartzer, 5 Cal. 70, 63 Am. Dec. 84; Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 667, 76 Am. Dec. 459; Millard v. Hathaway, 27 Cal. 119; Shay v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 541; Acock v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 215, 27 Pac. 193; Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, 61 Pac. 1123. The decision last cited, and a line of authorities following it, lay down the rule that where written notice is required it would seem to be necessary that if waiver of notice is relied upon, such waiver should be evidenced by some act or acquiescence of the party in open court, or in the proceedings in the case, appearing from the records, files, or minutes.

[4] No point is raised on this appeal as to the incompetency or inadmissibility of the evidence on the hearing to establish waiver of notice, and the issue was there presented on evidence outside the record, without objection or exception. We do not, therefore, deem it necessary to determine whether the rule above cited is applicable to this case or not. Parties who permit a fact to be proved by incompetent evidence, without objection, waive all question of inadmissibility. This is true even under the statute of frauds, and as to witnesses incompetent to testify. Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427, 19 Pac. 753; McDonald v. M. V. Homestead Ass'n, 51 Cal. 210; Steinburg v. Meany, 53 Cal. 425.

[5] It is unnecessary to determine what power the court possessed, under the provisions of section 532 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to dissolve or modify an injunction granted without notice, without a hearing on the merits. In this case we have held that notice was waived. An injunction granted on waiver of notice is the same as granted with notice duly served. The provisions of section 532 do not apply. The judge, under the appearance of the defendant, having acquired jurisdiction to make this temporary order of injunction, defendant's remedy, if he was aggrieved thereby, was on appeal from the order. Ots v. Superior Court, 10 Cal. App. 168, 101 Pac. 431; United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 Pac. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199.

The order appealed from is reversed.

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1201(1)—PROCEEDINGS AFTER REMAND—REVERSAL.

A decision of the Supreme Court that the interlocutory judgment for plaintiff was unsupported by the facts, and reversing that judgment without directions, does not authorize judgment for defendants, but plaintiff can amend his pleading and have another trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Edmund A. Rossi against Arthur J. Caire and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

D. Friedenrich and Ambrose Gherini, both of San Francisco (O. K. McMurray, of Berkeley, of counsel), for appellant.

WASTE, P. J. Appellant attacks a judgment entered in the lower court on motion of the defendants, upon filing the remittitur, after decision by the Supreme Court, in a former appeal. Rossi v. Caire et al., 174 Cal. 74, 161 Pac. 1161.

Plaintiff brought the action to enjoin the defendants from carrying on the business of a corporation, and prayed for an order directing them to wind up its affairs and distribute its assets to the stockholders according to their respective interests. After issue joined, and due trial had, findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed, and a preliminary and interlocutory judgment entered, declaring that the charter of the company was forfeited; that its directors had thereby become trustees of the corporation and its stockholders, and generally granting plaintiff the relief prayed for.

Subsequently, two orders were made and filed, one directing the distribution of certain assets of the corporation and the other directing the said trustees, respondents here, to sell the real and personal property of the corporation. After entry thereof these orders were appealed from, and were the subject of consideration in the former decision. The Supreme Court held these orders appealable as final judgments, and further that upon such appeal there might be a review of the previous proceedings, including the sufficiency of the findings to support the interlocutory judgment. Rossi v. Caire, supra.

The Supreme Court begins its review of the findings with this sentence:

"The findings do not show any ground for the intervention of a court of equity to supervise or direct the proceedings of the trustees."

After an exhaustive consideration of the subject, including a discussion of authorities cited, the court says:

"The consequence of these conclusions is that the interlocutory judgment and all the subsequent proceedings and orders are unsupported by the facts and without authority. On the facts found the judgment should have been for the defendants."

After disposing of other questions discussed in the briefs, the decision concludes:

"The orders appealed from are reversed, and the interlocutory judgment and all subsequent proceedings vacated."

Upon the going down of the remittitur, defendants, basing their motion on the decision of the Supreme Court, and the portions thereof hereinabove quoted, moved the lower court for judgment in favor of defendants, and against plaintiff. The court granted this motion, at the same time refusing plaintiff permission to file an amended and supplemental complaint. The sole question engaging our attention is the correctness of the court's ruling in entering judgment, based on the higher court's decision and in not allowing plaintiff to proceed further in the action.

Under the uniform authorities in this state we are of the opinion that the lower court erred in so doing. The effect of the reversal of the orders, and the vacation of the interlocutory judgment and all subsequent proceedings, was that the cause was remanded to the lower court for a new trial of all the issues made by the pleadings. Davis v. Le Mesnager, 155 Cal. 520, 101 Pac. 910; Stein v. Leeman, 161 Cal. 502, 119 Pac. 663. In reversing the case the Supreme Court might have directed what issues should again be tried, and what should be deemed finally settled by the first trial. However, it did not do so, and the judgment was merely in general terms. This clearly left the whole case to be tried anew, as if it had not been tried before. Glassell v. Hansen, 149 Cal. 514, 87 Pac. 200. It was not necessary to give express directions that the cause be remanded for a new trial, since the unqualified reversal had that effect. Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 21, 386, and early cases therein cited. The effect of the reversal in the case at bar, on the former appeal, was to leave the parties where they stood before the interlocutory decree was made, the parties having the same rights that they originally had. Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 448; Phelan v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 16; Argenti v. City of San Francisco, 30 Cal. 462.

A case analogous to the one at bar arose in Stein v. Archibald, 151 Cal. 220, 90 Pac. 536, which was a case for specific performance. Judgment went for plaintiff. On appeal the Supreme Court concluded its opinion in the following language:

"The court in the application of this principle of equity should have refused a decree for specific performance. The judgment and order are reversed."

On the second appeal (Stein v. Leeman, substituted as defendant, supra) the Supreme Court said:

"There is no force in defendant's contention that the decision of that appeal by the court required the lower court, upon the going down of the remittitur, to enter judgment for the defendant without trial, and no merit in the motion of defendant to enter such judgment."

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded for a new trial in the court below.

At the trial defendant interposed an objection to the reception of any evidence on the part of plaintiff upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appeared therefrom that the contract made the basis of the action was illegal and contrary to public policy. This objection was sustained and judgment entered for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

[1] It appears from the complaint wherein the document is set out in full, that on June 1, 1916, the Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation (hereinafter designated the Gas Corporation), then engaged in furnishing a supply of gas to the city of Los Angeles and its inhabitants, entered into a contract with defendant whereby, for $1 and the covenants therein contained on the part of defendant, it agreed to furnish and install, for his use in said city, three No. 124 waffle irons, three 3-burner hot plates, one Eclipse hotel range, three 3-burner arcs, four single reflex lights, and 266 feet of pipe; in consideration of which defendant, during the life of the agreement, agreed to purchase from said Gas Corporation all gas which defendant might use, for any purpose, at the place where said articles were installed, and in case of his failure so to do, and the purchase of gas from any other person, concern, or corporation, he would pay to the Gas Corporation $330 in settlement for the articles so installed: Provided, however, that if he ceased to occupy the premises, or permanently discontinued the use of gas at said address, the agreement should terminate upon his returning the property (title to which until paid for should remain in the vendor), so installed, in good repair and condition, reasonable wear excepted. The contract further provided that, upon defendant's failure to purchase his supply of gas from the Gas Corporation, the $330 should become immediately due and payable. It is alleged that on the 4th day of August, 1916, defendant, without any fault on the part of the Gas Corporation, discontinued using the gas of said corporation, and purchased gas from another company supplying gas in said city of Los Angeles, in violation of said agreement.

"Whatever tends to prevent competition in business impressed with a public character is opposed to public policy and is therefore unlawful." Greenhood on Public Policy, p. 180.

Where a contract affects such character of business, since no restraint, however partial, can be tolerated, the court will not inquire into or consider the extent of the restriction imposed. Gibbs v. Consolidated Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979; West Va. T. Co. v. Ohio R. P.

L. Co., 22 W. Va. 600, 46 Am. Rep. 527; Gwynn v. Telephone Co., 69 S. C. 434, 48 S. E. 460, 67 L. R. A. 111, 104 Am. St. Rep. 819; Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 672. As to private business, the conduct of which does not affect the public welfare, and hence involves no question of public policy, a different rule applies, under which contracts, if reasonable in their terms, will be enforced.

[2] Concededly in the instant case the Gas Corporation was engaged in a business impressed with a public character (Gibbs v. Cons. Gas Co., supra), and from a reading of the contract it is apparent that its purpose in making the same was to prevent defendant from discontinuing the use of gas furnished by it, and, in lieu thereof, obtaining a supply from another company engaged in supplying gas to the inhabitants of the city. That the contract was not only in restraint of trade, but if upheld would tend to stifle competition and give plaintiff's assignor a monopoly of the business of furnishing a supply of gas in the city, and hence be detrimental to the public welfare, admits of no controversy.

The judgment is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 80

CONSOLIDATED LUMBER CO. v. BOWORTH, Inc., et al. (Civ. 2867.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 26, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡132(4)—DATE OF FILING CLAIM—NOTICE OF COMPLETION OF CONTRACT.

The time for filing a claim for mechanic's lien begins to run, not from the date of completion, but from the date of owner's filing of notice of completion of the contract, and is in sufficient time, if filed within 30 days thereafter.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1170(10)—REVERSAL—TECHNICAL ERROR—FINDING.

In mechanic's lien case, a finding that notice was filed on or about a stated date, if indefinite, is not reversible error, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where in fact there was a leeway of several days in which notice might have been filed, and the evidence showed that notice was filed in time.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡277(6)—PURCHASE OF LUMBER—CONTRACT TO OPEN MARKET—VARIANCE BETWEEN PROOF AND LIEN CLAIM.

In action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, where there was a price named for lumber per thousand feet between the parties, which was the reasonable market price, but the contractor did not order his full bill of lumber, and it is not shown that he was in any way obligated to buy all the material from the said dealer, a variance between the lien claim and proof as to whether the lumber was bought from time to time upon the market or under a contract is not fatal.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡47—MATERIALS FOR WHICH LIEN MAY BE HAD—LUMBER CONSUMED IN MAKING CONCRETE FORMS—"MATERIALS TO BE USED OR CONSUMED."

Where the nature of the concrete work contracted for is such as to require the use of forms to hold it in place while hardening, and the materials from which the forms are made are consumed in the process, such material comes within the definition of "materials to be used or consumed" in the construction of a building as contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, and a mechanic's lien may be had on the structure therefor.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡290(2)—FINDING—MATERIALS—AMOUNT OF DEPRECIATION—LUMBER CONSUMED IN MAKING FORMS FOR CEMENT WORK.

A finding that lumber purchased and used for making concrete forms for the construction of the cement work of a building had depreciated to the extent of 90 per cent. of its value, if justified by the evidence, accurately fixes the measure of value of the material which, through the use of these forms, went into the defendant's building, for which a mechanic's or materialman's lien may be had.

6. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡281(3)—FORECLOSURE—PROOF OF CONTRACT THAT MATERIALS WERE TO GO INTO BUILDING—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, while it must be proved that all the material set forth in the lien was to be used in the erection and construction of the buildings in question, such proof may be established by circumstantial evidence of the contract and delivery of the material, sufficient to give rise to a legal inference that the parties had such an agreement (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1832, 1959, 1960).

7. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡281(3)—USE OF MATERIAL IN BUILDING—CONTRACT TO FURNISH FOR SUCH BUILDING—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, evidence as to the delivery of lumber and records of seller held sufficient to show that there was an agreement or understanding between the seller and contractor that such lumber should be used in the construction of the buildings in question.

8. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡277(6)—TRIAL—VARIANCE BETWEEN COMPLAINT AND PROOF—NUMBER OF CONTRACTS FOR MATERIALS.

In a foreclosure suit under mechanics' lien law of 1911, where it does not appear that any bond was executed, and there is therefore no limitation of the liability of the owner for lien claims, it can make no difference to him whether the liens chargeable against this property arise under one or the other of the contracts, and where the evidence shows three contracts for buildings or parts of buildings to be erected on the same property as a part of a single enterprise, the allegation in the complaint of one contract is not at fatal variance with such evidence.

9. MECHANICS' LIENS ⚡50—MATERIAL—CHARGE FOR CARTAGE—LIENABLE CLAIM.

In action to foreclose mechanic's and materialman's lien upon a building for materials furnished to contractor, items for cartage held properly incorporated as a part of the price of the total bill for materials furnished and included in the lien claim.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1177(6)—DISPOSITION OF CASE—FAILURE OF EVIDENCE ON ESSENTIAL MATTER—NECESSITY OF REMANDING.

In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, where the court found that all but 10 per cent. of the value of lumber used in concrete forms was consumed in such use, but did not determine the amount or value of the material so used, and neither the value nor the quantity appears in evidence, the cause must be remanded for trial upon such issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Suit by the Consolidated Lumber Company against Bosworth, Incorporated, and another. From a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien, defendant Bosworth, Incorporated, appeals. Remanded for new trial as to one issue.

Samuel Poorman, Jr., H. C. Beach, W. N. Goodwin, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Richard A. Turner, of Los Angeles, and Frank D. McClure, of Minneapolis, Minn., for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This is an appeal of the defendant Bosworth, Incorporated, from a judgment foreclosing upon said defendant's real property a mechanic's lien for materials alleged to have been furnished to and used by the contractor in the construction of buildings on said premises. Appellant asks that the judgment be reversed on the following grounds:

(1) That the claim of lien was not filed in time.

(2) That there is a fatal variance between the lien claim and the proof as to the terms of the contract of sale.

(3) That the lumber used for forms for pouring cement for the buildings is not the basis of a valid lien.

(4) That the proof fails to show that the materials furnished were expressly contracted for the buildings in question.

(5) That the finding as to the date of filing claim of lien is indefinite and insufficient.

(6) That the complaint alleges, and the court finds, that the buildings in question were erected by virtue of an agreement, whereas the proof shows that the buildings were erected under three separate agreements.

(7) That items of charges sought to be recovered are not covered by the claim of lien.

[1, 2] 1. We will consider the first and fifth alleged grounds of error together, as both are directed to the time of filing claim of lien. The court finds that notice of completion of these buildings was filed "on or about" the 27th day of August, 1914, and that thereafter, and "on or about" the 21st day of September, 1914, the claim of lien was filed. It is alleged in the complaint, and not denied in the answer, that the claim of lien was recorded "on" September 21, 1914. The proof showed that the notice of completion was filed "on" the 27th day of August, and the claim of lien "on" the 21st day of September. It also appeared in evidence that the buildings were actually completed and accepted on the 21st day of August. Appellant argues that the time for filing claim of lien began to run from the date of completion, and that more than 30 days elapsed before the filing of the lien claim, if it was filed September 21st, and that, in any event, the finding is too indefinite in fixing the time "on or about" the dates mentioned. Whatever merit this contention might have, if under the facts the last day for filing the claim had been on the 20th or 21st of September, it is without force under the recent decisions that a lien claimant for materials furnished a contractor may make his filing within 30 days after the date of filing notice by the owner of completion of the contract. Hughes Mfg. & L. Co. v. Hathaway, 174 Cal. 44, 161 Pac. 1159; Pioneer Paper Co. v. Hathaway, 179 Pac. 221. In this case the claimant had several days remaining after September 21st, in which he might file his claim of lien, and with this margin of time a finding that the notice of completion was filed "on or about" the 27th of August, and the notice of lien "on or about" the 21st of September, is probably sufficiently definite as a finding that the lien claim was made within a period of 30 days, particularly as there is no question under the evidence as to that fact. If we were to concede that, as to this question, appellant's position were well taken, nevertheless, since we could not say upon this record that it was made to appear that justice had miscarried, it would be a proper case for the application of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution.

[3] 2. There is more room for dispute on appellant's second proposition. The complaint alleges, and it is set forth in the claim of lien, as follows:

"That all of said materials were sold and delivered from time to time upon open account, commencing on the 28th day of April, 1914, and ending on the 29th day of July, 1914; that there was no express agreement as to the price to be paid for said materials, nor was there any time expressly agreed upon for the payment thereof; but that said materials, at the time of the sale and delivery thereof, were of the reasonable market value of fourteen hundred fifty-eight dollars ($1,458.00), upon which said sum has been paid two hundred fifty dollars ($250.00), and no more."

It is appellant's contention that the proof shows a specific agreement between Dowell, the contractor, and respondent, as to the price for which this lumber was sold and delivered—namely, a fixed and agreed rate per thousand feet. If the record shows, as contended, that a specific sum of money, distinguishable from and independent of the market price, was agreed upon between the parties as the consideration of this sale, there can be no question, under the repeated rulings of the Supreme Court, that such fact would establish a fatal variance between the lien claim and the proof. Reed v. Norton, 90 Cal. 590, 26 Pac. 767, 27 Pac. 426; Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 Pac. 195; Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 280, 57 Pac. 1008; Robinet v. Brown, 167 Cal. 735, 141 Pac. 368; Buell & Co. v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 63 Pac. 167.

In the case last cited the contract was the same as here claimed by appellant. The court there says:

"The court found that the claim of lien set forth a contract to deliver the materials at the reasonable market rates, but that the contract was an express one, to wit, $26.50 per thousand for lumber, and $2.50 per thousand for shingles. This was a fatal variance and prevents a recovery by plaintiff."

The substance of the evidence given on this point in the case at bar is as follows:

"They were to furnish lumber for certain prices per thousand, and they furnished that lumber. I would say that the price that was paid for the lumber was the market price at that time. There was an agreement to a certain amount. It was practically the market price at that time. It was a certain amount per thousand; it was not a lump sum. There was an amount fixed and agreed upon for each class of lumber per thousand feet, on the first order. We had our understanding as to the price per thousand feet when we first went there. Q. And they agreed that they would furnish you certain lumber at so much a thousand feet? A. For that list of lumber that I submitted to them for prices. After that I simply sent in orders for additional lumber, and they furnished it. Q. And at the same prices which you had previously agreed upon? A. I couldn't say they charged the same prices in each case. I think they did. I do not remember that they deviated from the prices they had agreed upon. My understanding at the start was that the plaintiff would sell the lumber at so much per thousand feet for certain classes of lumber, and afterwards I sent in orders for more lumber, and it was furnished, and they charged on their bills the same prices originally agreed upon. The prices would run from $14 to $20, or some intermediate sum fixed on the first order which I submitted to them for a price. Q. I understand you to say that there was an agreement as to the price of the lumber. Did you have a contract? A. I had no contract; the agreement was the market price. It was listed off to me at the market price. I went to the representative of the lumber company, and I asked him for the prices on this material. He said it would be the market prices, and he gave me a list of the market prices."

The evidence further shows that on the occasion of entering into the agreement for this lumber only a small quantity of the lumber ultimately required was ordered. The deliveries covered a period of three or four months, and are evidenced by orders consisting of 37 separate sheets. The aggregate amount of lumber purchased under these orders was 73,898 feet, and the price as charged to the contractor was a total of $1,458. The evidence, we think, fairly shows that the prices charged by the lumber company were the fair market price, as well as the amount that would be arrived at from the prices per thousand feet as shown by the price list referred to by the parties when the first order was made. The construction of the agreement then entered into depends upon whether the price list referred to was used and accepted by the parties as determining the price of all the lumber to be ordered on this contract, or merely as fixing the market price on the order for that date, to be subject to any fluctuation in the market that might occur during the period covered by the subsequent orders.

There can be no question under the evidence that the contractor was offered what lumber he wanted at the market price, and was then shown a list purporting to contain the market price at that date. Had he ordered all his lumber at that time it could conclusively be said that the list bound the parties to a fixed and definite price per thousand for the various sorts of lumber. But the contractor did not order his full bill of lumber; he only ordered a thousand or two feet. Nothing appears in the record to show that he was in any way obligated to buy another foot of material from this company. Was the company, then, under any agreement to continue this list price in the event there should be an advance in the market price of lumber; or could it say:

"We will still furnish you lumber at the market price, but here is a new list showing the advanced price in the market?"

If it had such right, then the rates per thousand were not fixed, and the mere fact that there was no change in the market during the period covered by the purchases would not alter the relations of the parties, or make the contract one for a fixed and unalterable price. Under an interpretation of the evidence as last indicated the facts would distinguish this case from the Supreme Court citations above given.

There has been a growing tendency in the decisions to as much liberality in the construction of the more technical requirements of the mechanic's lien law as is consistent with just regard for the rights of property owners. Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 178, 41 Pac. 873; McGinty v. Morgan, 122 Cal. 103, 54 Pac. 392. And it has been repeatedly held, that where the price named and the reasonable market price are the same, a variance between the lien claim and the proof in this particular is not fatal. Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, 19 Cal. App. 406, 126 Pac. 167; Lucas v. Gobbi, 10 Cal. App. 648, 103 Pac. 157; Star Mill & Lumber Co. v. Porter, 4 Cal. App. 470, 88 Pac. 497; Blanck v. Com. W. Amus. Co., 19 Cal. App. 720, 127 Pac. 805. The following language from the opinion in California P. C. Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 692, 709, 118 Pac. 103, 110, is very applicable to the suggested construction of the evidence as to the terms in this case:

"The appellant contends that the evidence does not sustain the findings of the court. Considered as a whole, the evidence received in support of this claim, in our opinion, does sustain the findings of the court. One of the witnesses testified that the price of $9 per ton was quoted at the time some of the plastering material was ordered, and that this price was accepted; but it also reasonably appears from the evidence that it was contemplated by the parties that this material should be ordered from time to time as needed, and that the price to be paid therefor was not necessarily a uniform price of $9 per ton, but such a price as might be indicated by the state of the market at the particular time the merchandise was ordered."

Here, as in the case cited, the trial court found in accordance with the declarations of the claim of lien, and we think the finding was warranted by the evidence.

[4] 3. The next point presented is as to the application of the lien law to lumber furnished to the contractor by respondent and used in making forms for concrete work in the buildings.

This matter was argued on the apparent assumption that no case in point had been decided in the appellate courts of California. This was true at the time of filing the briefs, but the question has since been definitely passed upon in a well-considered opinion by Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman of the Third appellate district, in the case of Olson-Mahoney L. Co. v. Dunne Inv. Co., 30 Cal. App. 332, 344, 159 Pac. 178. A rehearing was asked in the Supreme Court and denied, on June 30, 1916. This decision, therefore, so far as applicable under the facts, will be taken as controlling the issue here. It was there held that in a concrete building, the construction of which required the use of lumber forms for sustaining the concrete in place until it hardened, and where the contract showed the indispensability and intimate connection of the forms with the erection of the building, and the lumber so used was of no value thereafter and was not used for another job, but some of it given away and some advertised for sale as fire wood, the material so furnished and used was, within the contemplation of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, used in the construction of the building, and subject to claim of lien.

In the present case it appears that the contracts called for concrete structural work in the buildings to be erected; and, although the specifications are not given, and it is not shown what was required in the way of forms for the cement, in any event, the evidence discloses that the forms were required; and the use of concrete for building purposes and the methods employed in such use are now so generally and systematically followed as to be a matter of common knowledge. It is apparent that, under the prevailing methods of constructing reinforced concrete buildings, material for the forms is almost as much a necessity as the cement itself. Under these conditions we are in entire accord with the conclusion reached by Justice Chipman in the opinion cited. It is true that this opinion expressly disclaims the statement of any rule of general application, but the general rule that may logically be deduced from the conclusions reached is, that where the nature of the concrete work contracted for is such as to require the use of forms to hold it in place while it hardens into a self-sustaining and permanent structure, and the materials from which the forms are made are consumed in the process, such material comes within the definition of "materials to be used or consumed" in the construction of a building, as contained in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The language of this section of our Code provision, so far as pertinent to the point at issue here, is:

"Materialmen * * * furnishing materials to be used or consumed in * * * the construction * * * of any building * * * shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have * * * furnished materials * * * for the value of such * * * materials furnished."

The words "or consumed" were inserted by the amendment of 1911, and what, if any, added significance they have given to the mechanic's lien law, so far as we are aware, has not been judicially determined. It is argued by appellant in this case that the word "consumed" is merely used as a synonym of the word "used" which precedes it. It hardly seems reasonable, or in accordance with the rule which would give meaning to every part of a statute, to hold that the Legislature had gone to the trouble of making this addition to the language of the Code merely to repeat in another form the meaning already expressed in the word "used"; and, in the light of the limitation which had previously been suggested by the courts upon the expression "used in," as applying only to material which had actually entered into and become a part of the finished structure, it may be reasonably concluded that it was the legislative purpose to apply the term "consumed" to such a use of material in the construction of a building as would result in its destruction. We had, previous to this amendment, the ruling, inconsistent with the prevailing doctrine, that powder furnished for blasting a foundation for a structure was subject to the materialman's lien for material "used in" the structure. Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. 419. By no stretch of the meaning of words could it be said that the powder was used "in the structure"; that is to say, in the language of the court in Stimson Co. v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 141 Cal. 30, 74 Pac. 357, "as the materials of which it is constructed." But it may be said that the powder so used is consumed, in a very real and intimate sense, in the construction of the building. This application of the term may be made most appropriately to the material used in the forms for concrete. They do not become a part of the finished structure, but they are consumed as a part of the actual construction, or even, it may be said, as part of the structure. When the concrete walls are first poured they have of themselves no more stability than walls of sand. The forms hold them in shape until the concrete hardens, and perform a part, temporarily at least, essential not only to the erection but to the support of the building; and if their substance or their value is consumed in this purpose, may it not be said that these materials have been consumed in and as part of the building?

As has been pointed out, none of the decisions relied upon to exclude the lienability of materials thus used has dealt with the quality of use covered by the words "consumed in," of the amended statute; and it may even be questioned if there is justification in any of the decisions for the limitation of the words "used in" to materials that have actually entered into and become a physical part of the structure. The Code does not say that the materials must have been used in the building, or in the structure of the building, but that they must have been used in the construction of the building—in the actual process of erecting the building; and, so far as the decisions have been called to our attention, while they have used the broad language that the use must be such as to enter into and become a part of the finished building, they have, in restricting the application of the lien law, practically dealt with materials which were only used as an aid to, or preparation for, the work of actual construction, and not as a part of the actual construction of the building itself.

In the case of Stimson Mill Co. v. Los Angeles Traction Co., supra—so much relied on by appellant here, and in which the rule contended for by appellant is most strongly stated—the material in question was lumber used by the contractor for a railway bridge, in building a temporary timber trestle to support the stringers, ties, and rails of the railway, because of delay in the delivery of the steel and other material of which the finished supports were to be made. This work was obviously no part of the construction contemplated by the contract, but a temporary makeshift to avoid delay in other parts of the work. The commissioner's opinion in that case, holding these materials not covered by the lien law of our Codes, after stating the rule that the materials to be within the Code provision must be furnished "to be used, and must actually be used" in the construction of the building, makes use of the following language:

"And this we understand means that the materials must be used, not merely in the process of construction, but 'in the structure'—that is to say, they must be used as the materials of which it is constructed" (citing Hamilton v. Delhi Min. Co., 118 Cal. 153, 50 Pac. 378; Silvester v. Coe Quartz Mine Co., 80 Cal. 513, 22 Pac. 217; Gordon Hardware Co. v. San Francisco, etc., R. R. Co., 86 Cal. 620, 25 Pac. 125).

We have examined the foregoing citations and fail to find a suggestion in either the facts of the cases stated or in the language of the decisions to give support to any rule or construction which would exclude from the application of the lien law materials furnished and used in a way to exhaust their substance or value, in the actual process of construction, whether or not they become a part of the finished structure.

Appellant relies upon, and quotes at length from, California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co., supra, and especially emphasizes the following quotation from the opinion:

"The counter line of decisions, holding that such liens are given only where the materials have actually entered into and become a part of the structure, are reasoned out on a line of argument having as a basis the theory that liens of the variety mentioned are provided to be given upon the assumption that the property to which they are made to attach has been improved and its value enhanced by the labor bestowed or materials furnished; hence that where such labor or materials do not actually enter into the structure no lien results. To the latter effect are all of the California cases" (citing Stimson Mill Co. v. L. A. Traction Co., supra, and all the cases on this point therein referred to, together with a number of additional California decisions).

The matter before the court in the Wentworth Hotel Case was a claim of lien for materials furnished for, but, owing to a change in the plans of the building, never used in the building or in connection with it, and the appellate court in its decision had no reference to materials actually used and consumed in the process of construction of a building, though not entering into the finished structure. The argument of the court and the authorities cited fit the facts and the issues before it, but neither the one nor the other has the remotest application to a state of facts where the materialman has contracted and furnished materials whose substance and value have gone into the actual process of building, and have materially enhanced the value of the completed structure, though not remaining as part of it. This distinction is recognized in the case of Pacific Sash & Door Co. v. Bumiller, 162 Cal. 664, 124 Pac. 230, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296, holding that lard oil applied to threads of joints, and soapstone on the inside of pipes, were covered by the materialman's lien. In this opinion this significant language is used:

"Soapstone was used on the inside of pipes, as a lubricant to facilitate the pulling of wires through the pipes. This, being a part of the work of construction, we think it may also be considered as part of the material used in construction, for which a lien may be claimed."

There are many decisions from other states on this precise question of application of the lien laws to materials for forms in the erection of concrete buildings, and they are somewhat in conflict. Many of these have been considered in the opinion of the Court of Appeal in Olson-Mahoney Co. v. Dunne Inv. Co., supra, and no useful purpose would be served by attempting to review them here. It is our opinion, however, that the weight of authority and better reasoning sustains the doctrine of lienability of such materials where used and consumed in the actual work of construction. The conclusion goes only to materials used and consumed in the forms as part of the process of actual construction. There obviously can be no claim of lien for material retaining its identity as lumber, which, after its use in the forms in the building for which it was furnished, is taken down by the contractor and removed for use elsewhere. Material so removed, to the extent, at least, that it retains its value and identity, cannot be said to have been used or consumed in the construction in the sense contemplated by the Code.

[5] But what logical reason can be assigned for denying the claim of lien to that proportion of the material so furnished, which, either as to its substance or its value, has actually entered into and been consumed in the work of construction? There can be no injustice to the owner of property which is properly chargeable with the full value of lumber totally consumed in such a use, in making his property liable for half the material, if one-half is consumed, or one-half the value, if its value is depreciated one-half by the use. Neither does there appear to be any practical difficulty in arriving at a just estimate of values on this basis. In this case some of the lumber for forms was used over and over again in different stages of the construction, so as to practically destroy its commercial value for any purpose. Some of it was sawed up into short and irregular lengths, so as to destroy its further use and identity as lumber. Some of it was but slightly depreciated in value, or changed in form, and when removed had a commercial value of perhaps one-half its original price. The court found, on all the evidence, that, in the aggregate, 90 per cent. in value of all the lumber used in forms was consumed in that use. If this finding was justified by the evidence it accurately fixes the measure of value of the material which, through the use of these forms, went into defendant's building.

This method of fixing the liability for the use of material in concrete forms has been adopted by the courts of a number of other states, and we see no reason why it is not logical and fair. In Darlington L. Co. v. Westlake Co., 161 Mo. App. 723, 141 S. W. 931, the court says:

"Where certain material is provided for by the contract in the erection of a structure, and is furnished and used accordingly, and is, either in whole or in part, consumed in its use, the materialman is entitled to a lien for the material thus consumed in the erection of the structure to the extent of the consumption of its reasonable value, regardless of the fact whether or not such material formed a permanent part of the structure when completed. Consumption of value means a depreciation in the market value of the material by the use provided for by the contract."

Relating to a claim of lien for material used in forms for a concrete building, where the value of a portion of the material was only partly destroyed, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in Moritz v. Lewis Const. Co., 158 Wis. 49, 146 N. W. 1120, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, says:

"Nor do we see any solid reason for denying a lien for the amount of depreciation of the remaining 25 per cent. of the lumber used for shoring. This lumber was likewise used in the construction of the building, but in such use was not wholly consumed, but was consumed or destroyed to the extent found by the court below, and for which amount of destruction or consumption a lien was awarded."

To the same effect, Barker & Stewart Lumber Co. v. Marathon Paper Mills Co., 146 Wis. 12, 130 N. W. 866, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 875; Chicago Lumber Co. v. Douglas, 89 Kan. 308, 131 Pac. 563, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843.

[6, 7] 4. The next point urged is that there is no evidence in this case to support the allegation of the complaint and finding of the court:

"That all of the material was sold to be used in the erection and construction of said buildings."

It must be confessed that there is little or no direct evidence in the record of an express agreement to this effect. Appellant says that "proof of such an agreement or understanding between Dowell (the contractor) and respondent is absolutely essential to the maintenance of respondent's judgment," and that "we cannot infer that there was such an agreement." Proof that there was such an agreement or understanding is essential, but we do not agree with counsel for appellant that such agreement cannot be established by inference. If there is sufficient evidence as to the circumstances and negotiations of the contract and delivery of this material to give rise to a legal inference that the parties arrived at such an understanding, the court can base its finding thereon, without a word of direct testimony as to such agreement or understanding. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1832, 1959, 1960; Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 922. The force of all indirect evidence rests on inference. There is some evidence in the record here tending to support, by logical inference, the finding of the court that it was definitely understood between the parties that this lumber was furnished to be used on these particular buildings; and in view of the entire absence of any testimony, circumstance, or condition to the contrary, we are not prepared to say the trial court was not justified in its finding. The material as ordered was to be delivered, and was delivered, at the place where these buildings were being constructed, and which was not the place of business of the contractor, Dowell, except for this particular contract. This destination of delivery was entered on the bills of respondent for all the numerous orders of lumber. It appears from the testimony of the contractor that he ordered the material for these buildings. Fred Westfall, the estimator for respondent, was asked by counsel if he estimated the lumber "that was sold to Mr. Dowell for the Bosworth buildings," and if he knew the market value of the lumber that was sold at that time, and he gave the prices as shown by the lists of the entire order. These facts, taken in connection with the generally known and established custom of dealers to charge materials so furnished to the particular job on which they are used, furnishes some evidence, though slight, as to an agreement and understanding of the parties. There can be little excuse for a lien claimant allowing his contract, in this material particular, to rest upon such slight showing; but, where the moral probabilities as to the transaction are so strongly with the respondent, we will not disturb the finding in his favor.

[8] 5. Appellant's sixth assignment of error arises upon the variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof offered as to the contracts under which the buildings were constructed. The complaint alleges a single contract; the evidence discloses three contracts for different parts of the work. No issue was made as to this point by the answer, but under a stipulation at the trial the matter becomes an issue here. It is contended by appellant that where the liability against defendants' property is shown to have accrued under three separate contracts, each covering a distinct part of the work, the items of the lien claim cannot all be lumped together and made chargeable on the entire job, irrespective of the contract under which they may have arisen. This possibly might be true under the mechanic's lien law prior to 1911, where the contracts had been made according to law and filed with the county recorder, or, under the amended law of 1911, where the liability of the owner had been limited by the execution of a bond as provided by section 1183. This case arises under the amended mechanic's lien law of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313), and it does not appear that any bond was executed, and there is therefore no limitation on the liability of the owner for lien claims. It can make no difference to him whether the liens chargeable against this property arise under the one or the other of the contracts. It appears from the evidence that the three contracts were for buildings, or parts of buildings, all erected on the same property, and as part of a single plant or enterprise. Under these conditions we see no reason why the construction of the court reached in Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 23 Pac. 200, 25 Pac. 1101, does not apply here.

A similar and more pointed ruling on the same matter is made in the case of Acme Lumber Co. v. Wessling, supra, where the lien claims arose under several separate oral contracts, and the court held that—"It was not necessary to the validity of the claim of lien that it should be set forth that the demand was based upon more than one contract and then segregate and separately state the amount of each, even though the evidence adduced in support of the lien shows that the work and labor for which the lien is claimed was performed upon separate and distinct structures under separate and distinct contracts" (citing Kritzer v. Tracy Eng. Co., 16 Cal. App. 287, 116 Pac. 700; Boisot on Mech. Liens, § 408).

[9] 7. The items charged up with this material for cartage seem to have been incorporated as part of the price of the total bill rendered for "material furnished," and were properly so included as part of the claim of lien for value of the materials. West Coast Lumber Co. v. Newkirk, 80 Cal. 275, 22 Pac. 231; Wood, Curtis & Co. v. El Dorado L. Co., 153 Cal. 232, 94 Pac. 877, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585, 126 Am. St. Rep. 80, 15 Ann. Cas. 382.

[10] We are of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to enforce his lien for the material furnished and used in forms to the extent of the value consumed in such use, but are at a loss to understand how the trial court arrived at the valuation fixed by the findings. The evidence covering this question is confusing to the degree of being unintelligible, but, even then, assuming the correctness of the court's finding that all but 10 per cent. of the value of the lumber used in forms was consumed in that use, there is nothing in the findings determining the amount or value of the material which was used for forms. The total amount and value of all lumber furnished is found, but it appears from the evidence that some thousands of feet of flooring went into the buildings which was not used for forms. The value of this does not appear in evidence, and neither the value nor quantity appears in the findings, which leaves an indeterminate quantity, as well as value, of the lumber that was used and consumed in the forms. Again, after finding that 10 per cent. of the value of the lumber used for forms was not consumed in such use, the findings fix the value of the salvage at only $75, and the judgment is based on that deduction; whereas, on any basis of fact justified by the evidence, 10 per cent. of the value of material used in forms must have amounted to nearly twice that sum.

As we see no way of modifying the judgment, under the condition of the record, the case will be remanded for a new trial as to the one issue relative to the value of the material furnished and consumed in the construction of these buildings.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; THOMAS, J.

40 Cal. App. 119

FELSENTHAL v. WARRING et al.
(Civ. 2861.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡145, 156
(7)—RIGHT OF WAY FOR IRRIGATION DITCH
—LOCATION—CHANGE.

Whether defendants' easement for irrigation ditch across plaintiff's land was acquired by express grant or by prescription, the right was limited to the line of the ditch, and defendants were without right to construct a new ditch thereon at a different place, although only 25 to 40 feet distant from the old line.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡30, 145
—EASEMENTS—DITCH—LOCATION—RIGHT TO CONSTRUCT NEW DITCH ON OTHER LAND.

Civ. Code, § 806, providing that "the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired," does not warrant defendants who had acquired a right to divert water from a creek on plaintiff's land and a right of way for a ditch over the land to construct a new ditch at another place, because the first ditch had been destroyed by a flood, whether the right of way rested upon an express grant from the government under Act Cong. July 26, 1866, or upon prescription.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡145 —
EASEMENT FOR DITCH—LOCATION AND USE —CHANGE.

If defendants' title to an easement for an irrigation ditch rested upon prescription implying a grant, in view of Civ. Code, § 806, providing that the extent of servitude is determined by the nature of the enjoyment, the right is limited to the conducting of water in the open earthen ditch over plaintiff's land; the line of the ditch fixing the extent of the servitude upon such land.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⚡30 —
PRIMARY AND SECONDARY EASEMENTS — CHANGING LINE OF DITCH.

The right of an appropriator of water upon government land, that has since become private property, to divert the water at any particular place and conduct to his own land over land that has passed into private ownership, is the right of a grantee of an easement, and as a primary easement it includes such secondary easements as are necessary to its full enjoyment, such as the right to enter the servient tenement to make repairs, but not the right to increase the burden by changing the position of the ditch.

5. INJUNCTION ⚡23—COMPARATIVE INJURY
FROM GRANTING AND WITHHOLDING — GOOD FAITH OF PLAINTIFF.

Injunction will not be denied because greater injury will result to one party from its award than will result to the other from its withholding, particularly where the applicant plaintiff was not guilty of laches and the defendant did not complete the reconstruction of the ditch sought to be enjoined in good faith; the matter of injunction being one of right and not of grace.

6. INJUNCTION — 13 — RIGHT TO INJUNCTION — "SUBSTANTIAL INJURY" — SUBSTANTIAL DAMAGE.

To justify the issuance of an injunction, there must be "substantial injury," but substantial injury does not necessarily involve "substantial damage," and the right does not depend upon the extent of the damage measured by a money standard.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Error not Causing Substantial Injury.]

7. INJUNCTION — 23 — BALANCE OF CONVENIENCE — FINAL INJUNCTION — INVASION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS.

The doctrine of balance of convenience has no application to final decrees after hearing on plenary proofs and cannot be made to justify or authorize the invasion of the property rights of one private party to serve the convenience or necessities of another private party.

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 152(11) — USE OF EASEMENT—LIMITATION BY DECREE.

In a suit by an owner of land to enjoin defendant who had acquired an easement for an irrigation ditch across plaintiff's land from reconstructing a ditch destroyed by flood at a place other than that of the easement, while it was proper to fix the quantity of water diverted by defendant for irrigation purposes, where plaintiff was a riparian proprietor with the usual usufructuary indubitable rights, it was error to limit his user by the decree.

9. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 152(11) — APPROPRIATION — ACTION — DECREE — BENEFICIAL USE.

In a suit to enjoin defendant's reconstruction of a ditch upon plaintiff's land at a place other than that where defendant had acquired an easement, it was error to fix the quantity of water diverted by defendant by the measure of the capacity of his ditch; his rights being limited to the water actually diverted and applied by him to beneficial uses.

10. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 152(8) — AMOUNT DIVERTED — BENEFICIAL USE — EVIDENCE.

Because defendants' evidence showed their ditch to have a capacity of 60 inches and that they always used the ditch capacity, the court could not infer therefrom that 60 inches is reasonably necessary for their beneficial use, where there was direct evidence by defendants themselves that 60 inches greatly exceeded their needs for their beneficial uses.

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — 152(11) — APPROPRIATION—CONSTANT FLOW—CONSTRUCTION OF DECREE.

Where defendants' witness stated that 30 inches "constant flow" over an irrigation ditch would suffice for defendants' beneficial use in irrigating lands, held, that the expression "60 inches" in the decree of award to defendants means 60 inches "constant flow."

12. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1011(1)—REVIEW — FINDING UPON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where it is clearly apparent that the court's finding that respondents are entitled to 60 inches of water is based upon the erroneous theory that the extent of their right is measured by the capacity of their ditch, and that such amount has been decreed to them in spite of the testimony of one of them that much less would suffice their reasonable needs, the finding must be reversed although there is a substantial conflict in the evidence thereon.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR — 110—ORDERS APPEALABLE—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

An attempted appeal from an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial, taken after Code Civ. Proc. § 963, was amended in 1915, must be dismissed, since appeals from such orders are no longer allowed under the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; John M. York, Judge.

Suit by D. Felsenthal against M. D. Waring and another. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed, and appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

Chas. F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for appellant.

Walter F. Haas, Haas & Dunnigan, and Robert M. Clarke, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. The controversy which resulted in this action arose concerning the right to water flowing in Hopper creek, in Ventura county, and the asserted right of defendants to reconstruct and maintain a ditch across plaintiff's land.

Plaintiff owns 137½ acres of land riparian to the creek. Of this tract about 13 acres are suitable for cultivation. Defendants own lands in the same vicinity, only a small portion of which is riparian to the stream.

In 1870, when plaintiff's land was still a part of the public domain, defendants constructed a dam in the creek at a place within what is now plaintiff's private property. At what time the land now owned by plaintiff ceased to be government land does not appear from the record. From an intake in the dam that defendants thus constructed on what is now plaintiff's property, they diverted water, through a ditch, across the land that is now plaintiff's. A part of the ditch was in the bed of the creek, and a part ran along and upon the westerly bank of the stream. The water thus diverted has ever since been used by defendants, below the intake, on their lands, east and southeast of plaintiff's land. In 1878 the channel of Hopper creek was changed somewhat by the floods of that year. Thereupon defendants constructed a new intake about 350 feet further upstream, and, at the same time, constructed an additional 350 feet of ditch extending from this new intake to the head of the ditch of 1870. Until the flood of 1914 the ditch, though repaired from time to time, remained approximately as it was when the work of 1878 was completed. The capacity of the ditch is 60 miner's inches, continuous flow. It is made of earth, with an average width of 2 feet at the bottom and 5 feet at the top, and an average depth of 18 inches. From the foregoing it will be seen that, at the time when this action was brought, defendants had acquired an easement in plaintiff's land, giving them the right to maintain the ditch, as so constructed, as a conduit for the amount of water that they rightfully might divert from Hopper creek at the intake on plaintiff's land, for use on their nonriparian lands under the flow of the ditch.

In 1914 a section of the ditch was washed away, as well as the bank along which that part of it had been constructed, making it necessary for defendants to rebuild. This flood of 1914 eroded the westerly bank of the stream so that now the bank is some feet further west of where it previously had been. Shortly after the washout of 1914, but prior to the commencement of the action, defendants commenced the reconstruction of their ditch on plaintiff's land, and finished the work of reconstruction some time after the action was commenced. Three hundred and fifty feet of this reconstructed ditch defendants constructed along the bank of the creek at a distance of from 25 to 40 feet west of the old ditch line. The action was commenced while defendants were rebuilding the ditch, and before its final reconstruction. At the time of filing the complaint a temporary restraining order was issued. This order was dissolved shortly after the filing of defendants' answer. So that, before the entry of the final decree, defendants had completed the ditch along the new line, 350 feet of which was, as we have stated, from 25 to 40 feet west of where it formerly had been. Plaintiff testified that, as located, the reconstructed ditch of 1914 would work less injury to his land than if located at any other place on his property, outside of the old location or in the creek bottom, where, he said, it would do him no injury whatever. There also is evidence to the effect that, if the reconstructed ditch had been built in the creek bottom, defendants would have to construct it upon an artificial embankment which, in all probability, would be swept away by each recurring freshet. The narrow strip of plaintiff's land—about 350 feet in length and 6 or more feet in width—so appropriated by defendants in 1914 for their reconstructed ditch, is good sandy loam, suitable for cultivation, upon which corn was growing at the time when this part of the reconstructed ditch was built. Its value, however, does not exceed $12, and the injury to plaintiff's freehold caused by defendants' appropriation of his land for the reconstructed ditch of 1914 will not exceed $12. It is no doubt true that, as claimed by defendants, they will sustain considerable loss if they are not permitted to divert from the creek and convey to their orchards, through a ditch on plaintiff's land, the water heretofore so diverted and conveyed by them—a loss much in excess of the $12 damage to plaintiff's land by reason of the change in the line of the ditch.

The complaint sets forth two causes of action. In the first, plaintiff seeks a preventive injunction, enjoining defendants from completing the reconstruction of the ditch along the new line—25 to 40 feet west of the old line—and a mandatory injunction requiring defendants to place plaintiff's land in the same condition as before the excavation of the new ditch, which, as we have seen, had been partially reconstructed when the action was commenced. In his second count, plaintiff seeks to quiet his title to the waters of the creek. The court denied plaintiff any injunctive relief whatever; instead, it entered a decree adjudging defendants to be the owners of an easement over plaintiff's land for the construction, maintenance, repair, and reconstruction of a ditch "substantially along the line of the present existing ditch"—that is, along the line of the ditch as reconstructed in 1914, 25 to 40 feet west of the former ditch line. The court likewise enjoined plaintiff from asserting any right or title adverse to such easement, and from interfering with the ditch. The decree declares that plaintiff is the owner of 2¾ inches of water in the creek, for irrigation and domestic purposes; that defendants are the owners of all the water of the creek flowing down to their intake on plaintiff's land, up to 60 inches, excepting the 2¾ inches adjudged to belong to the plaintiff; that plaintiff be enjoined from taking more than 2¾ inches at any time when the amount flowing to defendants' ditch shall not exceed 60 inches. From the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals.

[1] 1. The court erred in denying appellant any injunctive relief and adjudging that respondents have an easement in appellant's land for the construction, operation, and maintenance of a ditch along the new ditch line. Respondents' right to maintain a ditch on appellant's land was the right to continue the ditch that they were enjoying immediately before the flood of 1914. At that time they owned a certain right of way for a ditch of a certain character, acquired either by prescription or while the land was still a part of the public unoccupied lands of the United States. The right of respondents in regard to appellant's land, whatever its source, was simply to continue the use thereof which they were enjoying at the time he acquired the land. Prior to the washout of 1914 the right of way had been definitely fixed and located along a certain definite and well-defined line. The previous location of the right of way for the ditch had been as definitely and finally fixed by the acts of respondents as it would have been had the metes and bounds been set forth in an instrument of grant. They had acquired the right to that particular location and no other. The remainder of appellant's land was his, free from any right of respondents. After the flood of 1914, when they reconstructed their ditch, respondents appropriated for their use different land of appellant's. We know of no principle of law that warrants respondents in subjecting to their use another and different portion of appellant's land without his consent. It is elementary that the location of an easement of this character cannot be changed by either party without the other's consent, after it has been finally established—whether it has been established by the express terms of a grant, or by conduct that gives rise to a prescriptive title. The acquisition of a right of way over one portion of a person's land, whether by grant or prescription, gives the grantee no right over any other portion. It is entirely immaterial that the new line was only from 25 to 40 feet distant from the old line. It was upon the property of appellant, over which respondents had no right whatever, and the principle is the same as if the new line had been hundreds of feet away from the old one. Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 82 Pac. 381.

Nothing in Ware v. Walker, 70 Cal. 591, 12 Pac. 475, is inimical to these views. There the bed of the stream, where used by the plaintiff, could not be beneficially used by the defendants and no land available for any useful purpose whatever was invaded—nothing of any value whatever was appropriated. Having used the bed or channel of the arroyo as a part of his conduit for the water that he was entitled to divert, just as he would use an artificial ditch for the same purpose, the plaintiff in that case had the same right to clean out, remove obstructions from, and repair the part of his conduit that consisted of the channel bed that he would have had had the whole consisted of an artificial ditch. The stream had become obstructed by the deposits, from natural causes, of gravel in its bed, so as to prevent the flow of water to plaintiff's ditch; by digging a ditch through the sand bar that had formed in the channel of the arroyo, plaintiff did nothing more of injury to the defendant than if he had removed a number of fallen trees which might have been washed down by the floods of winter, and which had lain across the stream, obstructing the flow of the water and preventing it from entering plaintiff's ditch.

[2, 3] Respondents assert that, because they have acquired the right to divert water from Hopper creek at a point of diversion on appellant's land, they necessarily have acquired, as an incident to that right, a right of way for a ditch over the land; and that therefore, if the way formerly used for the ditch be destroyed by flood, or other act of God, they may reconstruct the ditch along a new line, provided it be the one that will entail the least injury to appellant's land. To support this contention they cite section 806 of the Civil Code. By this section it is provided that—

"The extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant, or the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired."

Whether respondents' title to a right of way for a ditch be regarded as one resting upon an express grant from the government under the Act of July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 251, or upon prescription—an implied grant—the result is the same. If regarded as an express grant from the government, it was a grant that did not specifically bound or define the right of way. While the land was still a part of the public domain, the way became definitely fixed and located along a certain line by the conduct of the grantees, the respondents here (14 Cyc. 1161; Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 723, 84 Pac. 191, 5 L. R. A. [N. S.] 851, 113 Am. St. Rep. 349, 7 Ann. Cas. 851); and, when appellant's land acquired the impress of private property, the terms of the grant could not be changed, without his consent, so as to change the character of the easement or materially increase the burden of the servient estate. McGuire v. Brown, 106 Cal. 660, 39 Pac. 1060, 30 L. R. A. 384. If respondents' title be regarded as resting upon prescription—an implied grant—then for the purpose of determining its terms we must look to the nature of the enjoyment by which it was acquired; for, as provided by the Code section already quoted, the nature of that enjoyment measures the extent of the servitude. The nature of respondents' enjoyment of the servitude consisted in conducting water in an open earthen ditch that followed a certain well defined and established course over appellant's land—a line that had been established for many years. That line, therefore, and none other, fixed the extent of the servitude that rested upon appellant's realty. Allen v. San Jose L. & W. Co., 92 Cal. 138, 28 Pac. 215, 15 L. R. A. 93; Vestal v. Young, supra.

[4] The right of an appropriator of water upon government land that has since become private property to divert the water at any particular place of diversion, and conduct it to his own land over the land that has passed into private ownership, is the right of a grantee of an easement. As a primary easement it, of course, includes what are sometimes called "secondary easements," or the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself, as, for example, the right to enter upon the servient tenement and make necessary repairs. But secondary easements do not give the owner of the primary easement the right to increase the burden upon the servient tenement.

"The burden of the dominant tenement cannot be enlarged to the manifest injury of the servient estate by an alteration in the mode of enjoying the former." North Fork W. Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 666, 54 Pac. 69. (The italics are ours.)

The right of secondary easements is not a right to change the mode of enjoyment, if such change increases the burden upon the servient estate—as would be the case if respondents shifted the line of their ditch every time a winter flood or spring freshet washed away or ate into the bank of the stream. North Fork W. Co. v. Edwards, supra; Joseph v. Ager, 108 Cal. 517, 41 Pac. 422; Oliver v. Agasse, 132 Cal. 297, 64 Pac. 401; Snyder v. Colorado, etc., Co., 181 Fed. 62, 104 C. C. A. 136.

"The right to appropriate the waters of a stream does not carry with it the right to burden the lands of another with a ditch for the purpose of diverting the waters and carrying them to the place of intended use, for that cannot be done without a grant from the landowner or a lawful exercise of the power of eminent domain; and this although the particular circumstances be such that the proposed appropriation cannot be effected without the ditch." Snyder v. Colorado, etc., Co., supra. (The italics are ours.)

[5, 6] Finally, it is contended that appellant is not entitled to any injunctive relief because an injunction is a matter, not of right, but of grace; and that greater injury will result in awarding than in withholding the injunction. The general principle that, when one without right attempts to appropriate the property of another by conduct which will ripen into an easement, a court of equity will compel the trespasser to undo, so far as possible, what he has wrongfully done, is too well established for discussion. To this general rule there are a few well-recognized exceptions. Thus, it has been held that a court of equity may decline to issue a mandatory injunction where the defendant is engaged in a business that serves the public; or where, by innocent mistake, erections have been placed a little upon the plaintiff's land and the damage caused to defendant by their removal would be greatly disproportionate to the injury of which the plaintiff complains, and the defendant has proceeded with the erection while laboring under an innocent mistake of fact or a bona fide claim of right, and the plaintiff has been guilty of laches. 5 Pom.'s Eq. Rem., § 508; Szathmary v. Boston, etc., Ry. Co., 214 Mass. 42, 100 N. E.

1107. Respondents' contention is that their case presents features that bring it within these exceptions to the general rule. But the appellant here was not guilty of laches, and respondents did not complete the reconstructed ditch in good faith. A large part of it was completed by them in the face of appellant's objection after the action was commenced and a restraining order issued—the order that subsequently was dissolved.

To justify the issuance of an injunction there must be substantial injury. Substantial "injury," however, does not necessarily involve substantial "damage." Where a valuable property right exists—no matter how small its value may be—and that right is substantially and materially interfered with by a nuisance caused by the wrongful use of the property by another, if the injury is of a continuing nature, requiring a multiplicity of suits to secure its redress, the injured owner of the right, if he be not himself at fault through laches or otherwise, is entitled to injunctive relief, not as a matter of discretion on the part of the court, but as a matter of right; and his right to this relief is not affected by any comparison of his loss with that resulting to the defendant by reason of the granting of the relief. The rule that a chancellor will refuse to enjoin when greater injury will result from granting than from refusing an injunction has no application where the act complained of is in itself, as well as in its incidents, tortious. In such case it cannot be said that injury would result from an injunction, for no man can be heard to say that he is injured by being prevented from doing to the hurt of another that which he has no right to do. When a suitor has brought his cause clearly within the rules of equity jurisprudence, the relief he asks is demandable ex debito justitiæ, and needs not to be implored ex gratia. There can be no balancing of conveniences when such balancing involves the preservation of an established right which will be extinguished if relief be not granted against one who would destroy it—yea, though the right be but that of a peasant to but a part of his small tenement. Walters v. McElroy, 151 Pa. 549, 25 Atl. 125; Evans v. Fertilizing Co., 160 Pa. 209, 28 Atl. 702; Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co., 208 Pa. 540, 57 Atl. 1065, 66 L. R. A. 712; Higgins v. Flemington Water Co., 36 N. J. Eq. 538; Bristol v. Palmer, 83 Vt. 54, 74 Atl. 332, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, and extended note; Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 753, 9 Sawy. 542; Weimer v. Lowery, 11 Cal. 104; Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 21 Pac. 11; *Moore v. Clear Lake W. R. A. 223, 104 Am. St. Rep. 50; Vestal v. Young, supra.

The obvious distinction between "injury" and "damage"—a distinction not always observed when dealing with the question before us—is emphasized by Mr. Wood, who, speaking of a man's right of dominion over his property and the jealous care with which the courts have ever guarded this sacred right, says: "Whatever invades this right is a legal injury, whether damages ensue or not." Wood on Nuisances, § 783. See, also, sections 376 and 782. As is said in Learned v. Castle, supra, speaking of an injury to another's land that is a nuisance per se:

"It is an injury to the right, and it cannot be continued because other persons (whether jurors or not) might have a low estimate of the damage which it causes. And especially is this so when the continuance of the wrongful act might ripen into a right in the nature of an easement or servitude. * * * The right to an injunction, therefore, in such a case does not depend upon the extent of the damage measured by a money standard; the maxim de minimis, etc., does not apply."

Though dissenting from the majority decision in Sullivan v. Jones & L. Steel Co., supra, Chief Justice Mitchell was constrained to say that—

"Where a clear legal right is being infringed, I agree that the remedy in equity is as mandatory as in law."

[7] Respondents have cited a number of cases where equitable relief was refused on the ground that the injury was merely theoretical, and the damage small. In so far as these were cases where injunctive relief was refused, it will be found on examination either that the injunction that was refused was an injunction pendente lite (as was the case in McGregor v. Silver King Min. Co., 14 Utah, 47, 45 Pac. 1091, 60 Am. St. Rep. 883), or that the injunction was refused because there was no injury, the land having no value whatever (as was the case in Crescent Min. Co. v. Silver King Min. Co., 17 Utah, 444, 54 Pac. 244, 70 Am. St. Rep. 810, a decision by a divided court). That the doctrine of the balance of convenience, so frequently determinative of the propriety of granting or denying a preliminary injunction, has no application to final decrees after hearing on plenary proofs, is firmly established in this and other states. Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 62, 28 Pac. 113; note to Bristol v. Palmer, supra, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882. That an injunction may be refused where the property invaded is absolutely valueless is conceded. In such case there can be no real injury whatever. If the invaded property has no value, then, obviously, there can be nothing more than a mere theoretical injury, as was the case in Jacob v. Day, 111 Cal. 571, 44 Pac. 243, one of the cases cited by respondents. Here appellant's property, wrongfully invaded by respondents, has some value, even though small, and his claim to damages at law is indisputable, even though, measured in dollars, the amount appears insignificant compared with respondents' investment. We know of no principle of law or power in a court of equity to justify or authorize an invasion of the property rights of one private party to serve the convenience or necessities of another private party. Such a principle, if once adopted by judicial tribunals, upon grounds of necessity, would, in its practical operation, result in a system of judicial condemnation of the property of one citizen to answer an assumed necessity or convenience of another citizen, and the sacred right of private property, so jealously guarded by courts in all English speaking countries, would become but a shadowy unsubstantiality.

If it was error to deny appellant a final decree granting him injunctive relief, what shall be said of a judgment that actually adjudges respondents to be the owners of an easement in that part of appellant's land upon which, as trespassers, they have wrongfully built a portion of their reconstructed ditch? Not only does the decree do this; it goes to the length of enjoining appellant from even asserting any right adverse to such easement. This is tantamount to an injunction enjoining appellant from ever bringing an action at law for the trespass, or from suing to recover the damage, however small, caused to his land by respondents' unauthorized invasion of his property. Such a judgment is clearly erroneous. The same error likewise inheres in and vitiates the findings. For this reason a new trial is unavoidable.

[8] 2. Appellant complains of that part of the decree which adjudges respondents to be the owners of all the surface waters of the creek up to 60 inches—the capacity of their ditch—and himself the owner of but 2% inches.

Adopting the testimony of those witnesses who testified that the duty of water on lands such as appellant's is 1 inch to 5 acres, and finding that appellant owns 13 acres of arable riparian land, the court found and adjudged him to be entitled to use thereon 2% inches for irrigation and domestic purposes. In so finding and adjudging the court seems to have ignored entirely appellant's indubitable right, as a riparian proprietor, to have the stream flow through his land undeteriorated in quality and undiminished in quantity, save as respondents, as appropriators or adverse users, have acquired a superior right to take a definite quantity of water from the stream before it passes from appellant's land.

Since appellant is a riparian owner, the decree should not have attempted to limit his water right to the right to divert a fixed quantity—2% inches—for irrigation and domestic uses. The right of a riparian proprietor in or to the waters of a stream flowing through or along his land is not the-right of ownership in or to those waters, but is a usufructuary right—a right, among others, to make a reasonable use of a reasonable quantity for irrigation, returning the surplus to the natural channel, that it may flow on in the accustomed mode to lands below. Use does not create the right; disuse cannot destroy or suspend it. If his needs do not prompt him to make any use of the waters, he still has the right to have them flow onto, and along, and over his land in their usual way, excepting as the accustomed flow may be changed by the act of God, or as the amount of it may be decreased by the reasonable use of other riparian proprietors or prior appropriators, if any there be. Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72, 41 Pac. 18, 30 L. R. A. 390. The vice of the decree is that it limits appellant's right to such an amount as he may use for irrigation and domestic purposes upon his 13 acres of arable riparian lands. He owned 137½ acres, all of which was riparian to the stream and included the 13 acres of irrigable arable land. As between himself and respondents, appellant's right to the waters of the stream has no limitation, save as it is limited by the superior right of respondents as the owners of an appropriator's or adverse user's right. So limited, appellant's right to take water from the stream—as against respondents—might be more or less than 2% inches. Instead of fixing a definite quantity that appellant may take from the stream, and decreeing that his interest in the stream is confined to the right to divert such fixed quantity for irrigation and domestic uses, the court should have determined the amount that respondents are entitled to divert, and should have decreed that appellant has all the rights of a riparian proprietor, limited only by respondents' superior right to take from the stream a quantity ascertained and fixed by the court. True, the court did undertake to fix the quantity that respondents have the right to take from the stream, but in so doing proceeded upon an erroneous theory; and the finding that respondents are the owners of the waters of Hopper creek to the extent of 60 inches is not supported by the evidence.

[9] Respondents contend that, because the evidence showed the capacity of their ditch to be 60 inches, the court was justified in inferring that 60 inches was the amount reasonably necessary for the beneficial uses to which they applied the water. That, in fixing the extent of respondents' right, the court proceeded upon the theory that the capacity of respondents' ditch measures their right to the water of the stream, regardless of whether that amount be greater or less than the amount reasonably necessary for their beneficial uses, is clearly apparent from a consideration of the whole record. In adopting the theory that the capacity of their ditch measures respondents' right to the water of the stream, the court indubitably erred. The extent of an appropriator's or adverse user's right is limited, not by the quantity of water actually diverted, nor by the capacity of his ditch, but by the quantity which is, or may be, applied by him to his beneficial uses. Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 Pac. 811; Smith v. Hawkins, 120 Cal. 86, 52 Pac. 139. An appropriator's right is limited to such quantity, not exceeding the capacity of his ditch, as he may put to a useful purpose upon his land within a reasonable time, by use of reasonable diligence. Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 496, 47 Pac. 454. A diversion over and above what is reasonably necessary for the uses to which he devotes the water cannot be regarded as a diversion for a beneficial use. He cannot waste. If there is any surplus over and above the water reasonably necessary for his beneficial use, the riparian proprietor below his point of diversion has the right to demand that it flow in the stream as it has been accustomed to flow.

[10,11] Respondents' suggestion that, because the evidence shows the capacity of their ditch to be 60 inches, and that they always used the ditch capacity, the court could infer therefrom that 60 inches is reasonably necessary for their beneficial uses, does not impress us as having any force in the face of certain indisputable facts. It may be that, in the absence of any direct evidence to the contrary, a court would be justified in presuming that an appropriator takes no more than his reasonable uses necessitate. But here we have direct evidence, furnished by respondents themselves, that 60 inches greatly exceeds the amount reasonably necessary for their beneficial uses. Thus, Walter Warring, one of the respondents, testified that 30 inches, constant flow, would be sufficient to irrigate respondents' lands together with a piece belonging to one Pedleford. Respondents endeavor to make a point of the fact that this witness used the expression "constant flow," when saying 30 inches would suffice. But the 60 inches awarded to respondents by the decree means 60 inches "constant flow," or else the decree is fatally uncertain.

[12] As indicating that the court seems to have tried the case upon the theory that the capacity of the ditch measures respondents' right, regardless of whether it carried more than was reasonably necessary for their beneficial uses, are the following facts, shown by the record: In the early stages of the trial, in reply to a statement by the court, counsel for respondents said:

"We claim we are not confined to the necessity" (that is, the amount necessary for respondents' beneficial uses). "We claim we have a right to use as much as we have been using."

And when, later on in the trial, counsel for respondents asked one of their witnesses

how much water, during the irrigation season, respondents took out of the stream, and counsel for appellant objected on the ground that counsel should ask, "How much was reasonably necessary for them to take?" the court, instead of sustaining, overruled the objection. It was a proper objection, and should have been sustained. This ruling of the court, coupled with its failure to limit the quantity decreed to respondents to the amount which they themselves testified would suffice for their reasonable needs, convinces us that the court adopted respondents' theory that the capacity of their ditch measured the quantity of water they were entitled to take, without regard to any waste on their part.

We are fully aware that an appellate court will not reverse a finding if there is a substantial conflict in the evidence; but the evidence, in order to raise a conflict, must be such as to present a fair and reasonable ground for a difference of opinion. And where, as here, it is clearly apparent that the court's finding that respondents are entitled to 60 inches of water is based upon the erroneous theory that the extent of their right is measured by the capacity of their ditch, and that amount of water has been decreed to them in spite of the testimony of one of themselves that less than half of that quantity would suffice for the reasonable needs of their lands, we have no hesitancy in holding that the finding is within the rule declared in Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 34 Pac. 504; Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 834; and In re Coburn, 11 Cal. App. 604, 105 Pac. 924.

[13] The attempted appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial was taken after section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure was amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 209). The appeal from that order, therefore, is dismissed.

The judgment is reversed.

SALLEE v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 2581.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⇨112(1) — INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—PRIMA FACIE CASE.

In action for injuries to plaintiff pedestrian, when crossing track behind trolley car, due to her being struck and caught by a trolley rope swinging from defendant's car, proof that defendant knew that the rope was dangling or that the officials knew it was not required to make a prima facie case for plaintiff.

2. STREET RAILROADS ⇨112(2) — INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—NEGLIGENCE.

Operating a trolley car upon and across a crowded thoroughfare with the trolley rope at its rear end swinging in a loop, which rendered it liable to strike, catch, and cast down pedestrians passing behind such car, was in and of itself a negligent act.

3. STREET RAILROADS ⇨112(2) — INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—DOCTRINE OF RES IPSA LOQUITUR—APPLICABILITY.

In action for injuries to plaintiff pedestrian, when crossing track behind trolley car, due to her being struck and caught by a trolley rope swinging from defendant's car, plaintiff was entitled to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to make out a prima facie case.

4. STREET RAILROADS ⇨114(4) — INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In action for injuries to plaintiff pedestrian, when crossing track behind trolley car, due to her being struck and caught by a trolley rope swinging from defendant's car, facts held to afford sufficient evidence, in the absence of explanation that the accident occurred through the want of proper care on the part of defendant or its employes.

5. STREET RAILROADS ⇨114(21)—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—PROXIMATE CAUSE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held sufficient to show that the striking of plaintiff pedestrian by a swinging loop of trolley rope attached to defendant's car, and not plaintiff's contributory negligence, was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Margaret M. Sallee against the United Railroads of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant; and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Abbott and Wm. M. Cannon, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendant's favor after an order granting its motion for nonsuit in an action for damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff alleged that her injuries occurred while she was walking on the southerly side of Market street to the Ferry Building in the city and county of San Francisco and was in the act of crossing the car tracks of the defendant on East street at its intersection with the said southerly line of Market street, and that the accident occasioning her injuries happened in this wise: One of the cars of the defendant operated by its employes was in the act of passing along said East street northerly on to Market street; the said plaintiff waited until said car had passed before attempting to cross the tracks behind it; the defendant, through its employes operating said car, had negligently permitted the trolley rope to hang loose and swing out from the rest of the car in a semicircle, one end being attached to the trolley and the other to the car. The fact that said trolley rope was swinging loose from said trolley and was endangering the lives or safety of people passing behind said car was known to said defendant at said time and to the servants of said defendant who were operating said car. As the plaintiff was in the act of passing behind said car without observing said swinging rope, she was struck and caught by said rope about her neck and violently thrown down, and was thereby severely injured. The defendant by its answer denied the said alleged negligent acts on its part, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, both by her own testimony and that of her supporting witnesses, offered evidence tending to prove the foregoing averments of her complaint, save and except the averment that the fact that the said trolley rope was swinging loose in the manner stated in her complaint was known to the defendant or its employes at the time of said accident. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground, first, that the evidence failed to show negligence on the part of the defendant; second, that the evidence showed contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; and, third, that the evidence failed to show any proximate connection between the alleged negligence of the defendant and the injuries complained of. The court granted said motion upon the express ground that there was no evidence "that the defendant knew that the rope was dangling or that the officials of the company knew it."

[1] The sole question presented by the appellant upon this appeal is as to whether such proof was necessary on the plaintiff's part in order to make out her case; the contention of the appellant being that this is one of the class of cases to which the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is to be applied, and that the presumption of negligence arising from its application would be sufficient to make out the plaintiff's case as against a motion for nonsuit. The respondent resists this contention upon two asserted grounds—first, that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply to cases involving collisions between street cars and pedestrians; and, second, that if it does have such application it is limited to cases where the duty of extreme care devolves on the defendant by reason of the dangerous nature of the instrumentality through the operation of which the injury occurs.

[2] After a careful review of the facts of this case as presented by the plaintiff's proofs, we are not satisfied that the exigencies of her case required recourse to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur in order to escape a nonsuit. The act of the defendant in operating a trolley car upon and across a crowded thoroughfare, with the trolley rope at its rear swinging in a loop which rendered it liable to strike and catch and cast down pedestrians passing behind such car, was in and of itself a negligent act. The conductor of the car was charged with the duty of adjusting from time to time its trolley by means of this trolley rope, and of fastening the latter after each of such adjustments so that it would not swing loose and thereby menace the safety of pedestrians passing behind and in proximity to the moving car. It was his failure to perform this duty which led directly to the plaintiff's contact with the rope and consequent fall and injuries. To hold upon such a state of facts that the plaintiff had cast upon her the further burden of proving that the conductor knew that he had been negligent would be to require something which the plaintiff, in most cases at least, could never supply.

[3] Assuming, however, that the plaintiff was required to furnish this link in the chain of proofs sufficient to make out a prima facie case, we are of the opinion that she was entitled to rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to supply that link. We disagree with the respondent's first contention that this doctrine has no application to cases of collisions between street cars and pedestrians, and find ourselves supported in that view by the following authorities, in each of which the action was similar in character and parties to the instant case: Dillar v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 123 Pac. 359, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 908; Uggle v. West End, etc., Co., 160 Mass. 351, 35 N. E. 1126, 39 Am. St. Rep. 481; Toby v. Scranton Ry. Co. (D. C.) 245 Fed. 365; Hull v. Berkshire St. Ry. Co., 217 Mass. 361, 104 N. E. 747; Washington v. Rhode Is. Co. (R. I.) 70 Atl. 913; Haynes v. Raleigh G. Co., 114 N. C. 203, 19 S. E. 344, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 810, 41 Am. St. Rep. 786; Cincinnati Tr. Co. v. Holzenkamp, 74 Ohio St. 379, 78 N. E. 529, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800, 113 Am. St. Rep. 980; Jones v. Union Ry. Co., 18 App. Div. 267, 46 N. Y. Supp. 321.

The rule as stated in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (5th Ed.) § 59, does not recognize the exception which the respondent contends for, but states generally the doctrine as follows:

"Proof of an injury, occurring as the proximate result of an act of the defendant, which would not usually, if done with due care, have injured any one, is enough to make out a presumption of negligence. When a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as, in the ordinary course of things, does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care."

An illuminating case touching the proper application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is the case of Delaware, etc., Co. v. Dix, 188 Fed. 901, 110 C. C. A. 535, wherein the court, in defining and applying the rule, and after stating the facts which the plaintiff in that case had proved, proceeds to state:

"Unless, then, the plaintiff was required to go further and show that the defendant knew, or ought to have known, that the car door was loose, then the motion for a nonsuit was properly refused, as also the motion for judgment non obstante veredicto. Under the doctrine, therefore, of res ipsa loquitur, was the plaintiff required to prove more? That doctrine is clearly stated by Wigmore, in his work on Evidence (volume 4, § 2509), as follows: 'With the vast increase in modern times of the use of powerful machinery, harmless in normal operation, but capable of serious human injury if not constructed or managed in a specific mode, the question has come to be increasingly common whether the fact of the occurrence of an injury (unfortunately now termed "accident" by inveterate misuse) is to be regarded as raising a presumption of culpability on the part of the owner or manager of the apparatus. "Res ipsa loquitur" is the phrase appealed to as symbolizing the argument for such a presumption. In England, a rule of that sort has for a generation been conceded to exist, for some classes of cases at least. In the United States the presumption has spread rapidly, although with much looseness of phrase and indefiniteness of scope. * * *'

"Res ipsa loquitur," the thing speaks for itself, symbolizes that the occurrence of the injury raises a presumption of culpability on the part of the owner or manager of the apparatus, because in cases where it applies powerful and dangerous agencies in the control of one will do harm unless properly constructed or managed, and also because the evidence of the cause of the injury, whether innocent or blameworthy, is in the possession of, or accessible to, the person constructing or operating, and not accessible to the other party. Erle, C. J., in Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co., 3 H. & C. 596 (injury to a passer-by from the falling of goods from a train), said: 'There must be reasonable evidence of negligence, but, when the thing is shown to be under the management of the defendant or his servants and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen when those who have the management use proper care, it affords evidence in the absence of explanation by the defendant that the accident came through want of care.'

"How completely this applies to the case at bar. Such an accident would not happen in the ordinary use of a refrigerator car, unless the defendant was negligent in permitting it to have its door open with an extending lever. It had in its possession the evidence by which it might be explained."

[4] In the instant case, as in the case last above quoted, there was reasonable evidence of negligence; the appliance was shown to be under the management of the defendant or its servants; the accident was such as in the ordinary course of things could not happen when those in the immediate charge and control of the appliance use proper care. These facts, in our opinion, afford sufficient evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident occurred through the want of proper care on the part of said defendant or its employes. This being so, the trial court was in error in granting the defendant's motion for nonsuit for the want of the link in the plaintiff's case which the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur supplied.

[5] As to the other points urged by the respondent, no extended discussion is required. There is sufficient evidence that the striking of the plaintiff by the swinging loop of the trolley rope was the proximate cause of her injuries to have entitled the case to be passed upon by the jury. There was no such evidence of contributory negligence upon the plaintiff's part to have warranted the court in withholding the case from the consideration of the jury upon that ground as a matter of law.

No other reason being urged by the respondent as a justification of the order of the trial court granting a nonsuit and for its judgment based thereon, it follows that said order was erroneous, and, hence, that the judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

FRANKLIN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 2593.)

1. JURY ~~13~~(9)—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—INJUNCTION.

In an action for damages and for an injunction for the flooding of land, the parties are entitled to a jury trial on the issue as to damages, and where such trial is had the general verdict is binding on the court which cannot vacate it except on motion for new trial, and it was error for the court to set aside a verdict for defendant and to award damages notwithstanding the verdict.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ~~183~~(2)—METHOD OF PLEADING—EXCLUSIVENESS OF STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 458, providing that the statute of limitations may be pleaded by giving the number of the section and subdivision relied on, is not exclusive, and allegations by defendant, in a suit for damages and to enjoin flow of water, that the embankments had been erected for more than five years prior to the action, were sufficient to raise the issue of limitations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Jesse Franklin, as administrator of the estate of John Franklin, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

B. J. Bradner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought to recover for damages alleged to have been sustained by the wrongful acts of defendants in constructing and maintaining certain embankments and dikes on their right of way, as a result of which, and lack of sufficient culverts therein, the waters of a natural wash were obstructed and diverted from their usual course and the flow thereof precipitated upon his land; and also sought a decree enjoining defendants from maintaining such obstruction, which, if continued, it was alleged would cause him irreparable damage.

In accordance with demand therefor, a jury was impaneled, to which the issue as to damages was, upon evidence adduced and instructions given by the court, submitted, as a result of which it rendered a verdict in favor of defendants. Thereafter, notwithstanding such verdict and in disregard thereof, the court made findings upon all the issues and upon which it awarded plaintiff $2,500 damages sustained, and made a decree perpetually enjoining defendants from maintaining the obstruction by means of which it was alleged defendants had wrongfully diverted the flow of water upon plaintiff's land.

From the judgment and decree so rendered, defendants have appealed.

Defendants' first contention is that the parties were entitled as of right to a trial by jury of the issue at least as to the damages alleged to have been sustained, and that its verdict was binding upon the court which, in the absence of proceedings for a new trial, had no power to vacate and set aside the same.

[1] This identical question was before this court in the case of Farrell v. City of Ontario, 178 Pac. 740, wherein Hon. Louis W. Myers, as justice pro tem. (who presided as trial judge in the instant case), in an exhaustive opinion reviews a number of divergent authorities of this state touching the question, as a result of which it was held that, in an action for damages and for an injunction for the abatement of a nuisance, the parties are entitled to a jury trial upon the issue as to damages, and, where such trial is had, the general verdict thereon is binding upon the court, which has no power to vacate it except upon motion for new trial. We refer, without further discussion, to that opinion and the authorities referred to therein as determinative of the question.

[2] In their answer, "for a second, further, separate, and distinct defense," defendants alleged:

"That all of said improvements, in so far as the general right of way of the said defendants, including the improvements of ditches described in plaintiff's complaint, is concerned, were erected more than five years prior to the institution of this action, and the cause of action attempted to be set up by plaintiff, if any, is now barred by the statute of limitations of this state; said statute of limitations being hereby pleaded as a bar to this action."

As to this defense the court, in ruling upon defendants' motion for nonsuit, stated that the statute of limitations as a defense had not been sufficiently pleaded to put it in issue, and hence made no finding thereon. In thus ruling and omitting to make a finding as to the issue tendered, the court erred. While section 458, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that the statute of limitations as a bar to an action may be pleaded by giving the number of the section and subdivision thereof relied upon, nevertheless such mode of pleading is not exclusive. As said in Manning v. Dallas, 73 Cal. 420, 15 Pac. 34:

"There are only two ways of pleading the statute, one by stating the facts showing the defense, and the other by stating 'generally that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section (giving the number of the section, and subdivision thereof, if it is so divided, relied upon) of the Code of Civil Procedure.'"

In the pleading under review the defendants stated the facts, namely: That the improvements, embankments, dikes, and ditches described in plaintiff's complaint, and which it is alleged caused a diversion of the flow of water, had been erected for "more than five years prior to the institution of the action." In our opinion, the allegation was a sufficient pleading of the facts to raise the issue as to whether or not the cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations.

We do not feel called upon to determine the correctness of the court's statement that the statute would not commence to run until plaintiff had suffered damage from the obstruction; but, having concluded the statute of limitations as a bar to the action was sufficiently pleaded, it clearly tendered an issue upon which defendants were entitled to a finding, and this was not made by the trial court.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court with direction to enter judgment in accordance with the general verdict of the jury upon the issue as to damages; and that, as to the equitable issue involving plaintiff's right to the injunction prayed for in his complaint, a new trial thereof be had upon such evidence as may be properly received thereon.

Action by George S. Gillespie against Frank E. Fender. Application for writ of supersedeas. Denied.

Charles L. Childers, of El Centro, for applicant.

PER CURIAM. In view of the facts stated in the petition, the application for a writ of supersedeas must be denied.

[1, 2] It is clear that there is no merit in the appeal from the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment for deficiency entered against the petitioner here. The sole ground of the motion to vacate the judgment was that the judgment is void and that the same was entered by the court without jurisdiction. This claim was based entirely upon the proposition that the complaint in the action, one for the foreclosure of a mortgage, had not stated facts sufficient to show any liability on the part of the petitioner for any deficiency that might remain after the sale of the mortgaged premises; in other words, did not state a cause of action against petitioner in respect to such deficiency. It is clear that this was in fact the situation. But this was not a defect going to the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the judgment in respect thereto was not void. The complaint sought this very relief, and the court erroneously concluded that the plaintiff in that action was entitled to this relief as against petitioner. It is thoroughly settled in this state that the failure of a complaint to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action does not render a judgment void. The court had full jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, and, by reason of personal service on petitioner, full jurisdiction of the person of the defendant as to all the matters tendered by the complaint. See Crouch v. Miller, 169 Cal. 341,¹ and cases therein cited. The remedy of the petitioner, who must be held to have been perfectly advised of the claim of the plaintiff in that action, as stated in his complaint, was to contest that claim in the trial court, or on appeal from that judgment. Possibly, also, he might have invoked relief by motion under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure on account of excusable mistake, neglect, or inadvertence on his part. No such motion, was however, made. The superior court was not at liberty to consider the question of the sufficiency of the complaint on the motion that was in fact made.

The application for a writ of supersedeas is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Gage Canal Company against the East Riverside Water Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint against the plaintiff and the Riverside Trust Company, Limited. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Purington & Adair and McFarland & Irving, all of Riverside, and Henry Goodcell, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

William Collier, of Riverside, for respondent.

* 146 Pac. 880.

By its complaint plaintiff alleged its ownership of the Gage Canal, situate in part in San Bernardino and partly in Riverside county, and its right to all of the waters carried in said canal except 367.78 inches, measured under a four-inch pressure, to which it admitted that respondent has a prior and perpetual right. It is alleged that during all the time of plaintiff's ownership defendant, without right and without plaintiff's consent, has been taking 696.88 inches of water, or 329.1 in excess of its right, and that it threatens to continue such taking and to continue to deprive plaintiff of such excess. The prayer is for an injunction prohibiting and restraining defendant from taking out of said canal any water in excess of 367.78 inches.

By its answer defendant alleged that the Gage Canal Company was merely an instrumentality and the representative of the Riverside Trust Company, Limited, and the latter corporation was made a party to the action. This pleading also set forth the history of the canal, which was built by Matthew Gage, and conveyed in 1890 to the Riverside Trust Company. It was alleged that prior to said conveyance the East Riverside Water Company and its water users had obtained from said Gage a title to 696.88 inches of water, which was in perpetuity and prior and superior to any rights of the grantor; that each of the corporations succeeding Gage had taken the canal with knowledge of said right; that for more than 20 years the designated amount of water had been delivered to the water company for distribution to its water users; and that said right had been judicially confirmed by certain decisions binding upon the parties hereto, in which the water company's obligation to pay its share of the expenses for the maintenance of the canal as originally constructed had been adjudged, and in one of which the water company had been found not to be liable for the expense of pumping from certain artesian wells from which a large part of the water supply flowing in the Gage Canal was and is obtained. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint to quiet its title to 696.88 inches of water.

The court found that before Matthew Gage transferred his interest to the trust company the water company had the right to take about 700 inches of water; that the trust company took with knowledge of this obligation and that it solemnly in writing assumed the burden; that by transfer of rights the amount to which the water company had been entitled had been reduced to 696.88 inches; that the canal company had assumed this burden; and that the water company was entitled to have its title quieted to the amount of water demanded by it. Judgment was entered accordingly.

The principal controversy seems to have been with reference to the validity of a certain grant made many years ago by the predecessor of plaintiff to the East Riverside Land Company. The predecessor of the water company here defendant is described therein as the assignee of the Iowa Land & Improvement Company. It was dated November 10, 1886. By it for a named consideration of $167,500 Matthew Gage sold, granted, and conveyed to the East Riverside Land Company:

"Three hundred and thirty-five (335) inches of water measured under a four-inch pressure, together with the use thereof, arising and flowing from the springs, water sources, water rights and artesian wells, bored or to be bored on that part of the lands of grantor lying above the flow of the Gage Canal so called, and west of the west line of lot thirteen in block 72, seventy-two, of the rancho of San Bernardino."

The contract also contains the following paragraph:

"It is understood and agreed and said understanding and agreement is indicated by the acceptance of this conveyance, that the said three hundred and thirty-five inches of water, under a four-inch pressure have been actually delivered upon the lands of the East Riverside Land Company."

Upon this contract and its predecessor the East Riverside Water Company bases its claim to 321.1 inches of water, which, according to the findings, is now being distributed, although originally that company received through gates and openings constructed at its expense the full 335 inches of water. The agreement with the Iowa Land & Improvement Company, upon which the assigned claim of the land company was based, was made in August, 1885.

After setting forth said contract and the conveyance to the East Riverside Land Company, the court found:

"That on the trial of this cause it was claimed both by the Riverside Trust Company, Limited, and the Gage Canal Company, cross-defendants, that by the terms of said contract and conveyance the water sources of said canal, for the purposes of said contract and conveyance, were and consisted of about 30 acres of land, being a part of lot 12 lying westerly of a small portion of lot 13 and north of the south bank of the Santa Ana river, as shown upon a plat offered in evidence by the cross-defendants and marked Exhibit 65. That said lots as shown by said plat were a part of block 72 of the lots, blocks, and surveys laid down and designated upon the plan of the surveys of the rancho of San Bernardino, as recorded in the office of the county recorder of said San Bernardino county, Cal., and being a part of said Carit tract or Orange Grove homestead.

"That as to said claim made by the said cross-defendants the court finds that the same is not sustained by the evidence, and further finds that no water of any kind has ever been furnished from said portion of said Carit tract and water sources for the purpose of supplying the Gage Canal or the defendant East Riverside Water Company or its predecessors in interest. That the East Riverside Water Company is still the owner of, in control of, and has used continuously, and its predecessors in interest have used continuously under said contract made with the Iowa Land & Improvement Company, and at the date of the commencement of this action, and at the date of the trial of this cause, continued to use under said contract and conveyance 329.1 inches of water, and that no part of the same since the making of said contract has ever been furnished from said tract of land as claimed by cross-defendants to be the exclusive water sources for the whole of the 335 inches provided in said contract, and for the 329.1 inches still owned, used, and distributed by the East Riverside Water Company under said contract, but that at all times since the making of that contract and the execution of same, and since the year 1886, the said 329.1 inches of water have been furnished from the water sources of the said canal as transferred by deed and contract from the Riverside Trust Company, Limited, to the Gage Canal Company under date of March 17, 1910, and executed by the said Riverside Trust Company, Limited on the 2d day of June, 1910, and said contract as a part of said deed being executed on the 17th day of March, 1910."

[1] This finding is fully sustained by the evidence. For many years, although there was litigation between Mr. Gage's successors and the respondent herein, there was never any assertion, until shortly before the commencement of this action, that the water to be supplied under the contract and conveyance from Gage was to be limited to that to be obtained from the "Carit tract" or "Orange Grove homestead." In Riverside Heights Water Co. v. Riverside Trust Co., Limited & East Riverside Water Co., 148 Cal. 457, 83 Pac. 1003 (decided in January, 1906), it was found that the amount of water to which the company here respondent was entitled was something more than 700 inches. One of the matters there specifically settled was the extent of the water company's liability to the owner of the canal for repairs to the canal. In Riverside Trust Co., Limited, v. East Riverside Water Co., 173 Fed. 241, 97 C. C. A. 407 (decided in October, 1909), it appears that the trust company pleaded this very title of the water company to the 335 inches of water and asked that the said East Riverside Water Company be compelled, under the terms of said contract and grant, to pay its proportion of the expense of putting pumping plants in operation upon some of the artesian wells which, at the time of the construction of the canal, had flowed by gravity. The trial court found, and the Court of Appeals approved the finding, that upon Gage or his successors rested the burden of producing the water, while upon the vendees was placed the duty of contributing to the expenses of maintaining the canal and its branches. The entire course of conduct of the producers of the water and respondent herein for many years indicated that both interpreted their respective duties and obligations as to quantity and sources of water under the "Iowa Land Company" contract exactly as found by the court. Not until January, 1911, did the plaintiff make any sort of claim that it was not bound by this agreement. At that time in a letter to respondent from the canal company, the claim was made that under the deed from Gage to the East Riverside Land Company "the lands described," from which alone respondent "is entitled to derive 335 inches of water, have never in fact produced that water or any part of it." In this letter, however, the Gage Canal Company offered to compromise the matter on the basis of the assumption by the water company of some of the expense of pumping water from the artesian wells. There was no such adjustment, and for more than two years until the commencement of this action respondent continued to take its full complement of water as represented by all of its contracts and grants just as it had been doing for something more than a quarter of a century. These and other circumstances entirely justified the court in ruling adversely to appellant's attempted construction of the contract. One of those circumstances is the fact that by the very language of the conveyance by Gage the 335 inches of water were being at that time actually delivered to the grantee. It would be absurd, therefore, to hold that the parties to the contract, Gage who made the grant and the grantee that paid many thousands of dollars for the water right, contemplated production of the water from a small tract from which no drop of water ever had been or could be developed for use in the canal.

The Riverside Trust Company, Limited, and afterwards the plaintiff took all title to the canal, subject to the prior rights of Gage's grantees. This is evidenced by solemn writings which we need not be at pains to reproduce in this opinion.

[2] Appellant insists that the record fails to show by competent evidence that the water company is the successor to the rights of the East Riverside Land Company. But there was ample proof that the defendant and cross-complainant was recognized at all times as the successor to all rights held by the East Riverside Land Company, and that appellant and its predecessor by verified pleadings declared a duty resting upon the owner of the canal to furnish water to respondent under the obligation of Gage's contract with the Iowa Company and his grant to the East Riverside Land Company.

No other alleged errors require analysis or comment.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: LENNON, J.

SHAW, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment and in the opinion of Mr. Justice MELVIN, but I desire to state some additional reasons why in my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

There was ample evidence to establish the fact that the defendant, East Riverside Water Company, prior to the year 1900, owned and enjoyed the right to receive through the canal now maintained by the Gage Canal Company a flow of water amounting to 696.88 miners' inches, subject to the burden of paying its ratable share of the expenses of operating and maintaining the canal from its beginning at the water sources down to section 30 on the north bank of the Arroyo Tequesquite. This right was derived from grants made by Matthew Gage, the original owner of the water and its sources. These grants described the water which was the subject of the grant as a stated number of "inches of water measured under a four inch pressure, together with the use thereof, arising and flowing from the springs, water sources, water rights and artesian wells bored or to be bored," on the parcel of land described and belonging to Gage, or in words of like effect. The right to 367.78 miners' inches of water under these grants is admitted. It is the remaining 329.1 miners' inches which the plaintiff seeks to enjoin the defendant from taking. The right to receive this 329.1 inches from the canal so long as it was composed of water "arising and flowing from the springs, water sources, water rights and artesian wells" bored on the described land, has never been seriously disputed. But about the year 1900, 14 years after the date of the grant, owing to drought and to the apparent lowering of the water plane and of the water pressure in the vicinity of the wells, water ceased to flow from the artesian wells and none has since flowed therefrom, except such as has been raised and made to flow by means of pumps installed in the wells and maintained and operated by the Gage Canal Company and its predecessors in interest in charge of the canal.

The original grants of Gage contained no agreement or covenant on his part to keep up the flow of water in the canal by pumping water into it from wells or other sources, in the event that the water ceased to arise and flow naturally from the wells into the canal. The plaintiff herein, as successor to Gage, as I understand its position, although it is not very clearly stated in its briefs, claims that the only water which was the subject of the grant was water naturally arising and flowing from the wells, springs and other sources; that there was no grant of any water other than that which came to the surface in this way; that plaintiff never has been and is not now under any obligation to obtain water from the wells or elsewhere by means of pumps and conduct such water into the canal to satisfy the grant; that when the water permanently ceased to flow from the wells the right which was the subject of the grant became extinguished and that when plaintiff obtained other water by means of pumps or otherwise, either from the wells or elsewhere, it did that which it was not bound to do; that it is under no obligation to continue to pump that water and deliver it to the water company, and, consequently, that the water company has no right to take from the canal any part of the water flowing therein so obtained by pumps. The main question thus presented for decision is whether or not, by reason of the language of the grants or otherwise, the plaintiff, as successor of Gage, is bound to maintain the supply of water in the canal necessary to fulfill the grants, even if it is obliged to resort to pumps, or to obtain the water from some other source, in order to do so.

I am unable to find in the language of the grants anything which imposes this obligation upon Gage and his successors in interest. Apparently, the grant was of water naturally flowing, and there is nothing to indicate that the maintenance of the supply by means of pumps or other artificial constructions was intended or contemplated by the parties. If there was no other evidence of the right to insist that the plaintiffs should produce the water by pumps than these grants, I should be inclined to hold that the judgment was erroneous.

It appears, however, that when the water ceased to flow in the year 1900, the country had reached such a state of development that the continuance of the supply was necessary in order to prevent disaster. In this emergency the Riverside Trust Company, the immediate predecessor of the plaintiff, proceeded to install pumps and maintain the supply of water in the canal by pumping the required amount from the wells from which the water previously had flowed naturally. This water it delivered, as before, to the parties holding rights under the Gage grants. This immediately gave rise to the question whether the parties holding these rights were obliged to contribute to the additional expense of obtaining the water caused by the necessity of pumping. The water users claimed that the trust company was bound to maintain the supply, while the trust company claimed to the contrary and presented bills to the users, for the due proportion of each, of the expenses of installing and operating the pumps. The East Riverside Canal Company refused to pay these bills, and thereupon the trust company began an action against it in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California to recover the ratable share of such expenses which it had charged to said canal company, basing its action upon the theory that it was under no obligation to pump the water and that all the parties interested were bound to contribute to the expense thereof. In that action the court decided that the intervention of unusual droughts and the cessation of the natural flow of the water did not relieve the plaintiff from its obligation to supply the water which was to be furnished under the terms of the original grants and that said grants "import that upon Gage rested the burden of producing the water and causing the same to flow upon the surface, thence to be turned into the canal and delivered continuously and permanently." Riverside Trust Co. v. East Riverside Water Co., 173 Fed. 244, 97 C. C. A. 410. Judgment was given accordingly in favor of the defendant. This judgment was introduced in evidence to support the claims of the defendant in this action. It was clearly an adjudication to the effect that the trust company, as successor to Gage, was obliged to maintain enough water in the canal to satisfy the grants, at least if there was enough in the land comprising the source, and that the water company was entitled to receive the same without contributing anything to the expenses of maintaining and operating the pumps.

This adjudication is binding upon the said trust company and upon its successors in interest, including the plaintiff, so far as it decided the true meaning and effect of all the grants under which the defendant holds its water rights in the canal. A judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties "operates as an estoppel to preclude the 'parties and privies from contending to the contrary of that point or matter of fact, which having been once distinctly put in issue by them, has been, on such issue joined, solemnly found against them.'" Koehler v. Holt Mfg. Co., 146 Cal. 337, 80 Pac. 74; Cromwell v. County of Sacramento, 94 U. S. 353, 24 L. Ed. 195; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Soc., 82 Cal. 645, 23 Pac. 212, 7 L. R. A. 577; Freeman v. Barnum, 131 Cal. 389, 63 Pac. 691, 82 Am. St. Rep. 355. In the case between the trust company and the water company in the federal court, the point that the canal company was bound to supply enough water to satisfy the grants, free of charge for pumping the same, was distinctly put in issue and was adjudged in favor of the water company. The plaintiff as successor of the trust company is therefore stopped from ever contending that it is not obliged by the grant to continue to furnish to the successors of the original grantees the water which it has caused to flow in the canal by pumping the same to the surface. The findings in the case state the ultimate fact that the defendant is entitled to take the water in controversy from the canal and to have the same produced at the surface by whatever means may be adopted by the person charged with the duty of operating the canal, free from any charge for the expenses of maintaining or operating pumping plants or other appliances for bringing said water to the surface of the land comprising said water sources. This finding is supported by the judgment given in evidence, and it is sufficient to sustain the judgment denying the injunction.

CAMPBELL v. GENSHLEA. (L. A. 4741.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 11, 1919.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⇨114—HEARING BY TRIAL JUDGE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, a motion for new trial need not necessarily be considered by judge who tried the case.

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⇨37(1)—DEED—FRAUD—PLEADING.

In pleading cause of action for cancellation of a deed because of menace, fraud, and the like exercised upon grantor, the facts relied upon should be stated.

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⇨37(7)—QUIETING TITLE ⇨34(1)—DEEDS—UNDUE INFLUENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In action to quiet title and cancel deeds executed by mother to daughter upon the ground of undue influence, complaint held, as against general demurrer, to state cause of action.

4. PLEADING ⇨205(5)—ALLEGATION OF UNDUE INFLUENCE—GENERAL DEMURRER.

In action to quiet title and to cancel deeds on the ground of undue influence, failure of complaint to state all the facts constituting the fraud is not reached by a general demurrer; a general demurrer not going to a part of a cause of action.

5. DEEDS ⇨188—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PLEADING.

Allegations that deeds were only made because of grantee's undue influence held sufficient allegation that deeds were obtained solely by reason of grantee's conduct.

6. PLEADING ⇨205(5)—FRAUD—SPECIAL DEMURRERS.

In action to cancel deed on ground of undue influence, complaint's lack of direct allegations of fraud must be specially demurred to.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨231(2)—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—PLEADING.

Where pleadings alleged fraud in general terms and the parties go to trial without special objection to the allegation of the facts and circumstances constituting the fraud, such infirmity of the complaint may not be successfully urged on appeal.

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS —19(3)—ACTION TO CANCEL DEEDS—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Action to quiet title to land and to cancel deeds upon ground of undue influence, where general relief asked for is that plaintiff be decreed the owner of all the property involved, free of any claim, right, title, or interest of defendant, the period of limitations is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 318, prescribing five-year period in action for recovery of real estate, and not section 338, subd. 4, prescribing period of limitations in actions for fraud.

9. PLEADING —236(4) — AMENDMENT—AFTER ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION.

In action to cancel deeds upon ground of undue influence, where it was suggested during the trial that the words "and executed" should be stricken from complaint where used, in view of nondelivery of deed and of the meaning of "executed" under Code Civ. Proc. § 1933, but complaint was not so amended at time, court properly permitted complaint to be so amended after announcing decision but before entry of judgment; the granting of such motion being within discretion of court.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR —230—OBJECTIONS —ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY.

Alleged error in the admission of testimony will not be considered on appeal, where not objected to in lower court at the time it was offered.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR —242(4)—REVIEW—ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY.

The admission of testimony will not be reviewed on appeal, where it does not appear that lower court made ruling on objection thereto.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR —926(5)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where no ruling upon objection to admission of testimony is shown by the record, it will be presumed that the objection was withdrawn.

13. EVIDENCE —318(2) — WITNESSES —392 (1)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—LETTER.

A letter written to witness' brother by witness' mother was inadmissible upon cross-examination of witness, although it contained some alleged statements of witness at variance with his testimony; such evidence being hearsay, and it not being shown that witness was in any way responsible for it.

14. TRIAL —395(1) — FINDINGS — SEPARATE COUNTS.

A judgment entered in a case in which more than one count has been considered need have but one set of findings, even where separate causes of action having some common elements are joined.

15. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS —60 — UNDUE INFLUENCE—FINDINGS.

In an action to quiet title and to cancel deeds from mother to daughter upon ground in one count of insanity and in another count of undue influence, findings held to support judgment for plaintiff.

16. DEEDS —211(4) — UNDUE INFLUENCE — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support finding that mother's deeds to daughter were procured by daughter's undue influence.

17. DEEDS —208(1)—DELIVERY—UNDUE INFLUENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to support finding that mother's deeds to daughter had never been delivered.

18. DEEDS —194(5) — DELIVERY — PRESUMPTION.

Recordation of deeds raises presumption of delivery.

19. GIFTS —47(3)—PARENT AND CHILD—CONVEYANCES—PRESUMPTION OF INVALIDITY.

In a case involving a purported gift inter vivos, based upon an alleged consideration of love and affection, where the donee is a daughter having the control and direction of the aged donor, a strong presumption of confidential relation arises which would place upon the beneficiary in the transaction the burden of showing fairness in dealing and full understanding on the part of the person parting with the property.

20. DEEDS —68(3)—COMPETENCY OF GRAN-TOR.

An aged woman who is sick, infirm, suffering from senile dementia, mentally unsound and incompetent to that degree that she is easily influenced, intimidated and coerced so that she would do and perform acts and transactions such as she would not have done but for such influence, intimidation, and coercion, and who is unable, unassisted, to properly manage her property, is incompetent to make a valid delivery of a deed.

21. DEEDS —71—VALIDITY—DURESS.

A deed procured by duress will be canceled.

22. DEEDS —54—VALIDITY—NONDELIVERY.

A recorded, undelivered deed will be canceled.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Robert P. Campbell, administrator of the estate of Maggie Rayner, deceased, against Charles J. Genshlea, administrator of the estate of Helen May Hubbs Genshlea, deceased. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robt. T. Linney and Gordon L. Finley, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Davis & Rush, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment quieting title to certain real property in Los Angeles and San Diego counties, and setting aside two purported deeds from Maggie Rayner as grantor to her daughter Helen May Hubbs (afterwards Helen May Genshlea).

In the first count of the complaint it is alleged in substance that on the 23d of September, 1910, Maggie Rayner, while insane, made a pretended transfer of the properties, and in the second count it is averred that on the date above set forth the two purported transfers were made by Maggie Rayner, who was then old, sick, infirm and mentally unsound and incompetent to a degree, that she was easily influenced and that she was in fact influenced unduly, intimidated, and subjected to duress by her daughter who thus obtained the execution of the instruments. Upon issue joined, the cause was tried; Maggie Rayner's estate being substituted as a party after her death during the trial. The judgment was given under the second count as the court found against actual insanity.

It appeared at the trial that the property involved was deeded by Bayard Hubbs on his deathbed to his mother, Mrs. Maggie Rayner. The daughter at that time lived in another part of the state, and she and her mother were then not on good terms. Shortly after her son's death, Mrs. Rayner became seriously ill. She sent for her daughter and made deeds to her property which were left with a depository for delivery after her death. She recovered sufficiently to lose fear of speedy death and took the deeds from the person having their custody. In February, 1910, mother and daughter again quarreled, and the former went back to San Diego from Los Angeles, where she had been residing. She lived with the Williams family in San Diego from April, 1910, to the latter part of September of that year. At that time and for more than a year theretofore, as the court found, Mrs. Rayner had been and she continued to be "old, sick, infirm, suffering from senile dementia, mentally unsound, and incompetent to that degree that she was easily influenced, intimidated, and coerced, so that she would do and perform acts and transactions such as she would not have done but for such influence, intimidation, and coercion, and that, though not insane, was by reason of such old age, disease, weakness of mind, and physical and mental infirmities, unable unassisted to properly manage and take care of herself or her property, and by reason thereof was likely to be deceived and imposed upon by artful and designing persons." It was also found that Helen May Hubbs, well knowing her mother's condition, went to San Diego shortly before September 23, 1910, took Mrs. Rayner to live with her, and "while the said Maggie Rayner was so residing with her, she, the said Helen May Hubbs, imprisoned and restrained said Maggie Rayner, and denied her communication with her friends and acquaintances and drugged, threatened, abused, intimidated, unduly influenced, and coerced the said Maggie Rayner to such a degree that she caused and procured the said Maggie Rayner to sign the purported deeds or transfers." It was further found that the deeds were without consideration and were only signed by reason of the undue influence and duress to which the mother was subjected by the daughter. The deeds were placed by Mrs. Rayner in the custody of Mr. Fishburn (who had been custodian of the earlier writings), with instructions to keep them until after the grantor's death and then to deliver them to her daughter. On the 3d of September, 1910, however, she and her daughter visited Mr. Fishburn, who, upon request, delivered the deeds to Mrs. Rayner. It was found that Helen May Hubbs obtained possession of the purported deeds on or about December 6, 1910, and thereafter caused them to be recorded: One in Los Angeles, February 17, 1911; the other in San Diego on March 28, 1911. The findings recited the further facts that Helen May Hubbs married Mr. Genshlea after the signing of the purported deeds; that on the 12th of January, 1913, she died testate; and that said Genshlea was claiming the property as her administrator.

[1] Appellant complains that he was deprived of substantial rights because the motion for new trial was heard before and decided by another judge than the one who had presided at the trial and signed the judgment. We know of no statute or decision which gives to a litigant the right to have his motion for a new trial heard by the judge who tried the case. The motion is heard, not by the judge merely as an individual, but by the court. Section 660, Code Civ. Proc.

[2-5] Appellant insists that the general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. Attack is made chiefly upon the allegations regarding undue influence, fraud, etc. After averring the knowledge on the part of the daughter of her mother's incompetent condition, the second count (we need not consider the first, as plaintiff did not prevail thereunder) contains allegations that Helen May Hubbs went to San Diego, took Mrs. Rayner to live with her, and while her mother was so residing Mrs. Hubbs "imprisoned and restrained plaintiff, and denied her communication with her friends and acquaintances, and while so restraining plaintiff she drugged, threatened, abused, intimidated, persuaded, unduly influenced, and coerced plaintiff, to such a degree that she caused and procured plaintiff to make and execute the purported deeds or transfers." It is asserted that this paragraph of the complaint sets forth conclusions merely instead of facts and that it is insufficient because of failure to allege that the deeds were procured solely by reason of the stated acts or conduct of Helen May Hubbs, appellant citing as leading cases in support of his argument Estate of Gharky, 57 Cal. 275, and Goodwin v. Goodwin, 59 Cal. 560. It is true that in setting forth a cause of action for the cancellation of a deed because of menace, fraud, and the like exercised upon the grantor, the facts relied upon should be stated; but as to this point in the case at bar appellant depends upon his general demurrer. The complaint does state a cause of action to quiet title and to cancel certain deeds. The deficiencies here asserted to exist were not called to the court's attention by the general demurrer. A general demurrer will not go to a part of a cause of action (Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 116 Pac. 553; Amestoy v. Electric Rapid Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550), and the cause of action was sufficiently stated to justify the overruling of the general demurrer. The alleged failure to allege that the deeds were obtained solely by reason of the conduct of Helen May Hubbs is without basis, as the complaint did contain the averment that they were only made because of her undue influence, etc. All of the objections to the complaint made by appellant here and his entire argument in favor of reversal of the judgment because of the court's refusal to sustain the demurrer are met and answered by Yordi v. Yordi, 6 Cal. App. 20-31, 91 Pac. 348. In Collins v. O'Laverty, 136 Cal. 31, at page 36, 68 Pac. 327, at page 329, the court, answering objections similar to those raised by appellant in this case, used the following language:

"There is in the complaint no direct allegation that the deed was obtained by fraud or undue influence; but it is alleged—in addition to the facts showing the condition of the deceased, and the circumstances of the transaction—that the defendants, 'fraudulently taking advantage of the incapacity, illness, and weakness of mind of the said Julia Collins, procured her to sign a pretended deed, purporting to convey,' etc., which is substantially an allegation of the procurement of the deed by undue influence, and, in the absence of special objection by demurrer, sufficient."

See, also, Trubody v. Trubody, 137 Cal. 172, 69 Pac. 968.

[6, 7] Appellant's objections to the complaint because of the lack of direct allegations of fraud, etc., are also untenable, in view of the fact that no special demurrer was interposed. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal. 383, 387, 92 Pac. 1011. Where, as in this case, the pleadings allege fraud in general terms and the parties go to trial without special objection to the allegation of facts and circumstances constituting the fraud, such infirmity of the complaint may not be successfully urged on appeal. Sukeforth v. Lord, 87 Cal. 399-403, 25 Pac. 497.

[8] Nor was the second count of the complaint barred by subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure. Indeed, in raising the question of the bar of the statute, appellant's counsel frankly concede that Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820, seems to be an authority against their contention; but they question the soundness of that decision and assert a difference between that case and this, depending upon the fact that in Murphy v. Crowley plaintiff prayed for possession, while in the case at bar the administrator prays only that the deeds "be declared null and void," etc. General relief is asked in addition to the prayer that—

"Plaintiff be decreed to be the owner of all of said property above described, free of any claim, right, title or interest of said administrator, of the estate of said Helen May Hubbs Genshlea, deceased, or of any one claiming thereunder."

The judgment declared that plaintiff is entitled to possession of the land. The prayer in this case is very similar to that considered in Page v. Garver, 146 Cal. 577, 80 Pac. 860, and in that case it was held that the rule declared in Murphy v. Crowley, supra, was applicable and that the five-year period of limitation prescribed by section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, was the time within which the action might be commenced. See, also, Scholle v. Fennell, 166 Cal. 546, 137 Pac. 241; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 156 Pac. 509; People v. Kings County Development Co., 171 Pac. 102.

[9] The court permitted an amendment some time after announcing the decision but before the entry of judgment. This consisted in striking out the words "and executed" wherever they appeared in the second count. It appears that during the trial it was suggested that the words "made and executed" did not merely refer to the writing and formal subscription of the deeds described, but that the word "execution" included delivery; the court and counsel calling attention of respondent's counsel to the definition as expressed by section 1933, Code of Civil Procedure, and expounded in Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 159 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703. Nothing was done, however, at that time to change the pleading to conform to the theory of plaintiff that there had been no effective deliveries of the instruments. After the court allowed the described amendment, defendant was formally heard upon a motion to strike out the amendment, and the motion was denied. We cannot say that the court committed error by thus allowing the amending of the pleading. Such a course is, in view of the wide discretion given to courts in permitting amendments after decision, usually upheld. As was declared with reference to amendment of pleadings in the opinion in Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 367, 51 Pac. 549, 550:

"I find no limitation as to the time before judgment entered when the power of the court ceases, and even after judgment it may be exercised for the relief of a party where the judgment results from mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect."

Appellant complains of the delay of several months between the decision and the signing of findings of fact and conclusions of law, but does not show any injury caused thereby. The only effect of this delay was to leave defendant in possession of land to which he was not entitled.

[10] Serious error is charged as committed by the admission of testimony derogatory of the character and conduct of Mrs. Genshlea. "Such testimony," say counsel, "is of two classes: What the witness heard Mrs. Rayner say about her daughter and what the witness personally knew." In this behalf they specify certain parts of the testimony of seven witnesses, but as only two objections were made to offered testimony of this sort we may only consider the record relating to them.

The first question to which formal objection was made was as follows:

"Did your aunt ever complain to you, or speak to you, of May's personal habits, as to drinking or spending money, or trying to get her property, or anything of the sort?"

[11] The objection was that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, because the daughter's character and personal habits were not in issue. There is no record of any ruling upon this question, but the answer appears. It involves charges of immorality and drunkenness made by Mrs. Rayner against her daughter, as well as a statement that said daughter and another had administered to her powders which the mother did not want to take and had forced her to sign checks and papers. There was no motion to strike the answer out. We may not act upon this alleged error, for the reason that there seems to have been no ruling upon the objection; and, while the caption "defendant's exception No. 1" precedes the question as reported in the transcript, we may not presume that there was any ruling made after the question was propounded and objection was made. The following language of the court in Smith v. Smith, 163 Cal. 630, 631, 126 Pac. 475, is therefore appropriate as applied to the condition of the record here:

"Plaintiff's bill of exceptions fails to indicate any ruling of the court or any exception registered on her behalf. We cannot therefore pass upon any alleged errors of law committed at the trial."

[12] The other question falling under the objection of appellant was of the same general nature as the one just discussed. There is no ruling shown by the record, and for the reasons above set forth we must hold that the judgment may not be reversed because the two interrogatories were propounded and answered. Where no ruling upon an objection is shown, the inference arises that it was withdrawn.

[13] There was no error in refusing to admit on the cross-examination of witness Robert Campbell, appearing for the plaintiff, a letter written by his brother Bayard Campbell to their mother, even though the writing may have contained some alleged statements of witness which were at variance with his testimony. He was not shown to be responsible for the epistle in any way. Its admission in evidence would have been the most flagrant hearsay. We are surprised both at the offer of such evidence in the lower court and the contention here that it was improperly excluded.

[14,15] The appellant asserts that the pleadings and findings do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment. The complaint is one to quiet title and to cancel deeds. Its sufficiency has been previously considered and declared in this opinion. All of the averments in the complaint were met by denials in the answer and the judgment gives the relief demanded by plaintiff. We are of the opinion that the pleadings do support the judgment. We are also convinced that the findings support the judgment. It is true that there was a finding against the insanity of Mrs. Rayner as alleged in the first count, but that did not necessitate the entry of a formal judgment against plaintiff based thereon. A judgment entered in a case in which more than one count has been considered need have but one set of findings. This is the rule even where separate causes of action having some common elements are joined. Anderson v. Blean, 19 Cal. App. 581, 126 Pac. 859. The findings cover all the issues. They recite the judgment of May 9, 1912, that Mrs. Rayner was incompetent; Mrs. Hubbs' appointment as her guardian; their residence in Los Angeles to the date of the guardian's death, January 12, 1913; Mrs. Rayner's residence until her death with defendant; the appointment of plaintiff as guardian ad litem of Mrs. Rayner; the latter's death on August 17, 1914; the subsequent prosecution of the cause by the administrator of her estate; the ownership by her of the property involved at and for many years prior to Mrs. Rayner's death; the signing and formal acknowledgment of the deeds on September 23, 1910; their deposit with Mr. Fishburn, and their withdrawal thereafter by her at a time when her daughter accompanied her to Mr. Fishburn's place of business. These are followed by the findings that for more than one year prior to the signing of the deeds and always thereafter Mrs. Rayner had been sick, infirm, etc., as set forth in the finding quoted above in this opinion; that Mrs. Hubbs had come to San Diego, knowing her mother's weak condition, and had used the coercive measures described in a finding heretofore quoted herein; that the deeds were "only signed because" of the undue influence, duress, etc., as previously set forth; that they should therefore be set aside; and that Mrs. Hubbs obtained possession of the deeds in December, 1910, and caused their recordation. The other findings relate to Mrs. Hubbs' marriage to Mr. Genshlea, and other formal matters not necessary to be set forth here. That such findings support the judgment there can be no doubt. The finding that Mrs. Rayner was and her estate is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property is a finding of ultimate fact which supports the judgment of ownership. Estate of Hill, 167 Cal. 59, 63, 138 Pac. 690. The findings regarding the menace, fraud, etc., of the daughter are also findings of ultimate fact, and as we have indicated in the discussion of the pleadings, sufficient to support the judgment.

Finally, the appellant insists that the vital findings are not sustained by the evidence. It would subserve no good purpose to review in detail the conflicting testimony regarding the competency or capacity of Mrs. Rayner. Her physician described her condition at the time the deeds were signed as feeble, and expressed the opinion that thereafter she was incompetent, and many others, who had ample opportunities to know the facts, told of the aged woman's physical and mental feebleness and her susceptibility to influence. She was suffering from paralysis and senility, as one of the physicians testified. Such evidence fully supported the finding that she was incompetent and easily influenced.

[16] The finding of undue influence is supported by the evidence. It appears that, when she was in better mental condition than that under which she labored later, Mrs. Rayner in 1908 made deeds to the property in favor of her daughter, but that these were not intended for delivery during her life. Her conduct in 1910 with reference to the deeds here involved would indicate a like purpose, and when she took the documents from Mr. Fishburn's custody she did not declare a purpose to deliver them, but said she wanted them because she was going away. After she came under the influence of her daughter the evidence shows that she turned against friends and became suspicious of them; that she left the climate of San Diego, which she loved; that she abandoned cherished plans for visiting, at her daughter's suggestion; and that she was not allowed to talk with friends and relatives except in her daughter's presence. By her daughter this old woman was taken from the friends she cherished, from the property which her son had given her, and from the grave of that son. Dying, the daughter left a will by which this property was to go to strangers.

[17, 18] There was evidence which tended to support, and if believed did support, the finding that there was no delivery of the deeds. True, the recordation raised a presumption of delivery, but there was evidence that long after that time Mrs. Rayner continued to receive the rent from her agent in Los Angeles. Not until April, 1911, did Mrs. Hubbs demand that checks and mail should be sent to her. The daughter wrote and the mother signed a letter in October, 1910, directing the agent to "send all money you collect to Mrs. Rayner at this address." In the latter part of 1910, Mrs. Hubbs took her mother to the home of Mrs. Lohse in Alameda. At first, according to the testimony of Mrs. Lohse, Mrs. Hubbs said her name was Higgins. She directed that no one should see the mother, and when absent for a number of hours she kept the old lady locked in their apartments. She also told Mrs. Lohse that her mother was "not all there in the head," but that she was harmless. The date when possession of the deeds was obtained was found by the court evidently upon the testimony of this witness, who said, among other things, after fixing the date of a notary's call at about December 6, 1910:

"I had a conversation with Helen Hubbs the day after the notary was there. She came downstairs and showed me some papers, which she took out of her stocking and said to me at the time, 'Now I am on velvet and I am not a bit afraid.' * * * She spoke to me of property that belonged to her mother in Los Angeles and San Diego. Mrs. Hubbs had no property when she first came but said she was expecting or waiting for some property. She said she was putting a deal through, she didn't say what deal it was, and if she could work it the way she wanted to she would be pretty well to do. * * * She showed me the papers and I recall what some of them were. I couldn't recall all of them. One was for a deed of love and affection for the Westlake property, and the mention of some property in San Diego, I can't tell just exactly what it was, and there was some other property that she had the deed to that I casually looked over, but I couldn't tell you what they were. I happened to recall that the consideration mentioned in the deed of this property was love and affection because it was typewritten in there as far as I can remember."

Without further lengthening the recital of testimony, it is enough to say that the finding of undue influence and coercion, as well as that of nondelivery, are justified and upheld.

[19-22] It is to be remembered that in a case involving a purported gift inter vivos, based upon an alleged consideration of love and affection, where the donee is a daughter having the control and direction of the aged donor, a strong presumption of confidential relation arises which would place upon the beneficiary in the transaction the burden of showing fairness in dealing and full understanding on the part of the person parting with the property. Nobles v. Hutton, 7 Cal. App. 14, 93 Pac. 289. In the absence of such showing, the conveyance is presumed to have been obtained by undue influence and to be void. Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 751, 124 Pac. 561; Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 352, 62 Pac. 555; Ross v. Conway, 92 Cal. 632, 28 Pac. 785. Applying these presumptions to the facts of this case, as disclosed by the record, we must conclude that the finding of undue influence in the production of the deeds, as well, as that of nondelivery, were fully sustained, and in relation to the latter finding it should be remembered that before Mrs. Hubbs obtained manual custody of the deeds (as shown by the record) she herself had announced her mother's feeble mental condition. One so afflicted and so situated as was Mrs. Rayner could not make a valid delivery of a deed. The judgment would, of course, be supported upon either the finding of duress, etc., or that of nondelivery. American National Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9, 15, 148 Pac. 188, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 744.

No other assignments of error require analysis or discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 163

MERCED COUNTY v. SHAFFER et al.
(Civ. 1906.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 4, 1919.)

1. BAIL 59—BAIL BOND—DEFECT—OBLIGATION OF SURETIES TO PAY.

Bail bond wherein the sureties bound themselves that, if one or both of their principals failed to perform any of the conditions, such principal or principals would pay to the state the sum of $1,000, held defective as not obligating the sureties to pay.

2. BAIL 59—BOND—OBLIGATION—DEFECT.

Bail bond given pursuant to order providing that each of the two defendants be admitted to bail in the sum of $500, but purporting to be on behalf of both, and providing that if the conditions were not performed one or both of the principals would pay to the state the sum of $1,000, held defective and void as obligating the sureties, if at all, to pay the sum if either or both of their principals failed to appear.

3. BAIL 55—BOND—CONFORMING TO STATUTE.

The bail bond in a criminal proceeding is purely statutory, and must conform to the statute and the order of the court, not being good even as a common-law obligation if it fails to do so.

4. BAIL 59 — BOND FOR GREATER SUM THAN ORDERED—INVALIDITY.

A bail bond in a sum greater than the order of the court is absolutely void.

5. BAIL 93 — SUIT ON BOND — REFORMATION.

In view of Pen. Code, § 1278, where a bail bond is defective and void in two respects, in that it does not obligate the sureties to pay in the event of default, and in that it is in an amount in excess of the order of the court, the court, in suit on the bond after forfeiture, on the county's prayer for reformation, has no authority to make a new valid undertaking for the sureties in accordance with the intention they had, but failed to express.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the County of Merced against H. S. Shaffer and J. J. Griffin. From judgment for defendants on demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. McCray and Edward Bickmore, both of Merced, for appellant.

H. K. Landram, F. W. Henderson, and C. W. Croop, all of Merced, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. In the month of February, 1916, O. Dinelli and Francis Francisco were arrested upon a burglary charge in Merced county. They were committed by the justice of the peace to the custody of the sheriff and their bail fixed at $500 each. After setting out these facts, the third amended complaint alleges further:

"Said H. S. Shaffer and said J. J. Griffin and each of them for the purpose of releasing the said O. Dinelli and the said Francis Francisco from actual custody upon said charge, and in order that said O. Dinelli and the said Francis Francisco might be released therefrom, entered into and executed an obligation, bond, and undertaking." That said bond was presented to the justice of the peace, who accepted and filed the same. "That a copy of said obligation, bond, and undertaking as the same was written when made, executed, and delivered to the people of the state of California by the said H. S. Shaffer and the said J. J. Griffin, as aforesaid, is hereunto attached and made a part hereof and marked plaintiff's Exhibit A." "That after the said O. Dinelli and said Francis Francisco were taken into custody as aforesaid, one L. J. Schino, an attorney of Merced, Cal., was employed by said defendants to represent them in the matter of said charge. That said justice of the peace did inform said L. J. Schino, as attorney for said O. Dinelli and Francis Francisco, of the order of admission of the said defendants to bail and the amount thereof, to wit, the sum of $500 for each defendant, and that said L. J. Schino did procure the execution of said obligation, bond, and undertaking of said H. S. Shaffer and J. J. Griffin and presented the said obligation, bond, and undertaking to said justice of the peace for his approval."

It is then alleged that, through a mutual mistake of the parties executing, presenting, and accepting the bond, the obligation presented and accepted did not express the true intention of the parties, and that such intention was embodied in an instrument attached to the complaint, marked "Exhibit B."

It further appears that upon the acceptance of said undertaking the defendants were released, and that thereafter they failed to appear for examination in accordance with the order of the court, and thereupon said undertaking was forfeited. The prayer of the complaint is that the undertaking executed by the defendants in this action be reformed, and as reformed the forfeiture of the same be enforced, and the plaintiff have judgment against defendants in the amount of the undertaking.

The bond as actually signed, executed, delivered, and accepted was in the following form:

Exhibit A.

"In the Justice's Court of Number Two Township, County of Merced, State of California.

"The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. O. Dinelli and Francis Francisco, Defendants.

"Bail Bond.

"Whereas, an order having been made on the 24th day of February, A. D. 1916, by Frank H. Farrar, Esq., justice of the peace of No. 2 township, county of Merced, state of California, in the above-entitled cause, and the above-named defendants, and each of them, be admitted to bail, pending the hearing upon the charge hereinafter mentioned, in the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00), that is to say, that each of said defendants be admitted to bail in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00) each, upon a charge of felony, to wit, burglary, alleged to have been committed in said county and state.

"Now, therefore, we, the undersigned, by occupation merchants, residents of the county of Merced, state of California, do hereby undertake, that the above-named defendants, and each of them, shall and will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and shall at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, or courts, wherein said charge is being or is to be prosecuted, and if convicted, shall and will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof; or if he, or they, fail to perform any of these conditions, that he, or they, will pay to the people of the state of California, the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00).

"..... [Seal.]

"H. S. Shaffer. [Seal.]

"J. J. Griffin. [Seal.]

"Approved this 25th day of Feb., 1916.

"Frank H. Farrar, Justice of the Peace."

Exhibit B is as follows:

"Bail Bond.

"In the Justice's Court of Number Two Township, County of Merced, State of California.

"The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. O. Dinelli and Francis Francisco, Defendants.

"Whereas, an order having been made on the 24th day of February, A. D. 1916, by Frank H. Farrar, Esq., justice of the peace of No. 2 township, county of Merced, state of California, in the above-entitled cause, and the above-named defendants, and each of them be admitted to bail, pending the hearing of the charge herein-after mentioned, in the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00), that is to say, that each of said defendants be admitted to bail in the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00), each, upon a charge of felony, to wit, burglary, alleged to have been committed in said county and state.

"Now therefore, we, the undersigned, by occupation attorneys, residents of the county of Merced, state of California, do hereby undertake that the above-named defendants, and each of them, shall and will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and shall at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, or courts, wherein said charge is being or is to be prosecuted, and if convicted, shall and will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof; or if he or they fail to perform any of these conditions, that we will pay to the people of the state of California, the sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00) for each of said defendants failing to perform any of these conditions.

"..... [Seal.]

"H. S. Shaffer. [Seal.]

"J. J. Griffin. [Seal.]

"Approved this 25th day of Feb., 1916.

"Frank H. Farrar, Justice of the Peace."

[1,2] It is apparent that there are two vital defects in the bond as executed. One of these is the same as appeared in the bond in the case of County of San Luis Obispo v. A. M. Ryal et al., 175 Cal. 34, 165 Pac. 1. Therein it was held that—

"The law requires, and the form of bond on appeal in a criminal case set out in the Code provides, that the sureties shall bind themselves in the event of the appealing defendant failing to do certain things they will pay to the state of California a specified penal sum; and such a bond is insufficient where the sureties merely agree that their principal upon default in its terms will pay a specified sum, instead of agreeing themselves to do so."

This is one of the portions of the bond that plaintiff seeks to have reformed. The other defect is equally objectionable and arises from the fact that the order of the court provided that the defendants be admitted to bail in the sum of $500 each; whereas, the bond, as given, purports to be on behalf of both defendants and provides that if the conditions were not performed "that he or they will pay to the people of the state of California the sum of $1,000." They were thus obligated to pay said sum if either or both of said defendants failed to appear; whereas, the order required a penalty of only $500 for each.

[3] It is not disputed that the bond in a criminal proceeding is purely statutory and must conform to the statute and the order of the court. If it fails to do so, it is not good even as a common-law obligation. San Fran-clisco v. Hartnett, 1 Cal. App. 652, 82 Pac. 1064; Malheur County v. Carter, 52 Or. 616, 98 Pac. 489; Boozer v. City of Atlanta, 18 Ga. App. 732, 90 S. E. 492.

[4] Neither is it disputed that a bond in a sum greater than the order of the court is absolutely void. Roberts v. State, 34 Kan. 151, 8 Pac. 246.

United States v. Goldstein's Sureties, 1 Dill. R. 413, Fed. Cas. No. 15,226, is a leading case in which a person was arraigned before a United States commissioner upon two separate charges. The commissioner ordered him to bail in the sum of $500 on one charge and $200 on the other. One bond for $700 was taken. Defendant failed to appear and the bond was forfeited. The court said:

"Bonds or recognizances of this character are binding only when taken in pursuance of law and the order of a competent court or officer. No order was made authorizing a single bond for $700, and the bond taken was a substantial departure from the bonds required by the commissioner, and was not therefore obligatory on the sureties. State v. Buffam, 2 Frost ([22] N. H.) 267. Judgment accordingly."

In the Roberts Case the Supreme Court of Kansas held that—

"Where the district court directs bail to be taken in the penalty of $1,200, and the sheriff requires and accepts from the principal and his sureties a bond in the sum of $1,250, the bond is utterly void, as the sheriff is only authorized to require bail in such an amount as is directed by the court."

The bond executed by the defendants herein was therefore, not only not binding upon them because they did not agree to pay anything themselves, but it was absolutely void because it was in an amount in excess of the order of the court.

[5] Plaintiff, however, claims that the court has authority to make a new undertaking for the sureties, not in accordance with the obligation that they actually signed, but in accordance with the intention which they had at the time but failed to express. This seems a rather startling proposition, but it is claimed by appellant that respectable authority exists for the contention.

We think, however, that no authority can be found for the proposition that an undertaking, which is void upon its face, can be amended by changing the express obligation of the sureties to something different, but what they intended, and make it binding upon them after said purported undertaking has been declared forfeited.

In 34 Cyc. 926, we find the statement:

"Where an instrument is immoral in its tendency, or for some fundamental reason is void, reformation would amount to the making of a new contract and is therefore never granted."

In Wallen v. State, 18 Tex. App. 414, it was held that a bail bond is strictly a statutory bond, and to entitle the state to a forfeiture thereon the bond must contain all the requisites prescribed by statute. It is true that no effort was made therein to reform the bond, but the court, after quoting from Pomeroy his statement of "all the possible modes in which the remedial jurisdiction occasioned by mistake can be exercised," declares:

"But we are clearly of the opinion that these rules have no application to statutory bail bonds."

However, appellant relies upon the case of Neininger v. State, 50 Ohio St. 394, 34 N. E. 633, 40 Am. St. Rep. 674, for the contrary doctrine. Therein it was, indeed, stated that—

"A written instrument executed by a surety, which by mistake fails to express the actual agreement and intention of the parties, may be reformed upon parol proof, like other written instruments, and then enforced against the surety."

But it is quite apparent that the Neininger Case differs from this in two important particulars. In the first place, it was not a void instrument, but simply defective in reciting the name of the prosecuting witness. In other words, a clerical mistake was made that did not affect the obligation of the sureties. No new contract was made for them, but the contract which they actually executed was more clearly identified. Again, the sureties in that case entered into a "recognizance," that is, they appeared before the justice of the peace and acknowledged their obligation to pay the state the sum of $300 in case the accused failed to appear at the next term of court. This recognizance constituted their obligation, and the mistake was made in entering it in the docket of the justice. If the sureties herein had actually executed the contract as set out in the Exhibit B, but, in copying it, it was made to appear as Exhibit A, the mistake, of course, could have been corrected; but plaintiff is trying to have substituted for the instrument which was executed and upon which the defendants were released, an entirely different instrument, which never has been executed and which could not be made effective now because there would be no consideration to support it.

It must be remembered that the statute (section 1278 of the Pen. Code) provides the form of the undertaking and requires that it shall be executed and acknowledged by the sureties and that they must justify before the magistrate. Thereupon the defendant may be discharged from custody. Admittedly, no such undertaking was "executed" in this case. The attempt was entirely abortive; but, because the parties intended to comply with the law, appellant claims virtually that the intention should take the place of the deed. The law requires a written promise, and that before the defendant is released, not merely an intention to make a promise which may be made a matter of record "after" the defendant has been released. A careful consideration of the different modes of equitable relief on the ground of mistake as recited by Pomeroy can leave but little doubt that none of them applies to a case like this.

We think the court below was entirely right in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEARSON v. WHEELER. (Civ. 2618.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 4, 1919.)

BROKERS ⇐86(1)—RIGHT TO SHARE OF COMMISSION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover a share of commission for assistance rendered defendant in selling a tract of land, evidence held insufficient to show that defendant received any commission on the sale as made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Calvin Pearson against H. K. Wheeler, as administrator of the estate of J. Kittredge Wheeler, deceased. From judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Randall & Bartlett, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

John H. Miller, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of nonsuit.

The plaintiff alleges that he entered into an oral contract with J. Kittredge Wheeler, whereby plaintiff was to render services to Wheeler in locating and examining land for particular purposes specified by Wheeler; that plaintiff should assist Wheeler in selling any land so located and examined; that out of any sale consummated in pursuance of said contract Wheeler would pay, or cause to be paid, to the plaintiff one-third of any commission received by Wheeler from the sale of any such lands. Plaintiff further alleged that he performed all services which by the terms of said contract were to be performed by him; in particular that the plaintiff located and examined a tract of land in Madera county, known as the Lauganour tract, and assisted Wheeler in selling the same; that out of the sale of said tract defendant received as commission therefor the sum of $9,000; that plaintiff became entitled to one-third of said commission, but that Wheeler refused to pay, and has not paid, to plaintiff the same, or any part thereof.

The answer, which was filed by Wheeler, denied that he entered into any contract with the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff was to render services to the defendant in locating and examining land. As there is no evidence in the record tending to show that the contract included any such purpose or any agreement concerning the same, we may dismiss that element of the case from further consideration. The answer "admits that it was agreed between the said plaintiff and the defendant that the plaintiff should have one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of any commission earned for the sale of the tract of land known as the Phil Lauganour tract, if the said plaintiff and said defendant should be successful in selling said land." The answer admitted that the plaintiff did take defendant to see the Lauganour tract, and defendant examined the same; denied that the plaintiff assisted the defendant in selling said tract; denied that out of the sale thereof the defendant received a commission of \$9,000, and denied that the plaintiff was, according to the terms of any contract between them, entitled to one-third of \$9,000; admitted that the plaintiff and the defendant co-operated in an effort to sell said tract of land, and that if said sale had been made as the result of the effort of the plaintiff and the defendant the plaintiff would have been entitled to one-third of the commission which might have been earned; denied that the defendant received as a commission for the sale of said tract the sum of \$9,000 or any other sum, but, on the contrary, alleged that the defendant became the purchaser thereof; admitted that there was an understanding between the plaintiff and the defendant that if the defendant should effect the sale of any lands which the plaintiff had for sale the commission earned and paid should be equally divided; alleged that no sales were made by the plaintiff and the defendant under said understanding, and that no services were rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant, except plaintiff did show to the defendant certain tracts of land which he desired to sell; alleged that the plaintiff was paid a large sum of money by the agent who held the option and through whom the defendant purchased the said Lauganour tract.

The evidence produced by the plaintiff at the trial of this action did not tend to establish the existence of any contract for the division of commissions between the plaintiff and Wheeler other than the terms of agreement as admitted in the answer. Therefore it only remains necessary to see whether the evidence shows that Wheeler received a commission for the sale of said land, and, if he did receive such commission, determine whether the plaintiff, under the terms of the contract as admitted, became entitled to a part thereof.

The evidence shows that at the time when Wheeler was negotiating for this land he was acting for or in connection with one C. J. Bills; the consideration was paid partly in money and partly by the execution of a mortgage for the remainder of the purchase price. The money was paid by Bills, but the deed was made to Wheeler, and Wheeler, together with his wife, executed the mortgage. Following that transaction, Wheeler conveyed the property to Bills, subject to the mortgage. Wheeler and Bills conducted their negotiations with a real estate partnership which held an option on the property. Gus W. Anderson, a member of that firm, testified that in figuring out the sale price of the land the gross purchase price named was $195,739; that no commission was paid, but the sum of 5 per cent. was deducted from the purchase price and counted as a commission; that the actual price paid (which necessarily would include the mortgage) was $185,953. Presumably, on account of the death of Mr. Wheeler and the consequent disability of the plaintiff to testify concerning the transaction, there is no evidence, either from Wheeler or from the plaintiff, as to whether any commission was actually received by Wheeler. The record is equally wanting in direct testimony showing whether Wheeler made a resale of the property to Bills, thereby obtaining some profit to himself, or whether Bills was the actual original purchaser, taking the property in the name of Wheeler. The latter inference is more strongly indicated by the evidence. Bills himself, called as a witness by the plaintiff, testified that not a cent of commission was paid on that deal, and that Wheeler did not get out of it one cent directly or indirectly. Unusual as this circumstance may seem, it stands absolutely uncontradicted. The nonsuit was properly granted upon the stated ground that the evidence failed to prove that Wheeler received any commission on the sale as made.

The judgment is affirmed.

POWELL v. POWELL et al. (Civ. 2719.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 28, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1010(1)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The appellate court will not substitute its own views for those of the judge, unless there was no substantial evidence to support his findings.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1010(1)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT—INHERENT IMPROBABILITY OF TESTIMONY.

To justify an appellate court in determining that there was no substantial evidence because of inherent improbability to warrant the conclusion of the trial court, there must exist, either a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or such a state of facts so clearly apparent that nothing need be assumed nor any inferences drawn to convince the ordinary mind of the falsity of the story.

3. TRUSTS $\S$ 44(2) — ESTABLISHMENT — CORPORATE STOCK — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held sufficient to support a finding that transfer of the stock was absolute and that it was not to be charged with any trust.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Laura G. Powell, as administratrix of the estate of Chas. G. Powell, deceased, against J. A. Powell and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 176 Cal. 676, 170 Pac. 147.

Howard Harron and Brewton A. Hayne, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. H. L. Hynes and Walter J. Burpee, both of Oakland, for respondents.

BRITTAİN, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment, the effect of which was to determine that 249 shares of the capital stock of Powell Brothers Construction Company belonged to J. A. Powell and R. V. Powell, and that the estate of Charles G. Powell, deceased, had no interest in them as the beneficiary of any trust.

Charles G. Powell formed the corporation defendant, and J. A. Powell and R. V. Powell owned equal interests in it. The other defendants held qualifying shares to enable them to act as directors. Charles G. Powell died in 1913. For ten years he suffered from an incurable disease. He retired from active business in 1912. Prior to his retirement he had done nothing for the corporation for some time. In November, 1912, he transferred to his brothers 249 shares of the stock, and they issued to him one share to qualify him as a director and to permit his name still to be used as president of the corporation. In January, 1913, he transferred this single share to them and resigned as president. The appellant claims the transfer of the 249 shares was without consideration and upon a trust for the benefit of Charles G. Powell. The lower court found Charles G. Powell had sold 248 of the 249 shares and all the credits he owned against the corporation for $10,000 paid to him by J. A. Powell and R. V. Powell, and that he subsequently sold to them the remaining share for $100. The court further found that each of the transfers was bona fide, that neither was upon any understanding that the buyers should retransfer, that the transfers were absolute and intended so to be, and that the holdings were not charged with any trust.

As a part of a very long finding condensed in the statement just made, the following language relating to the payment of the $10,000 was used:

"All the money used for said payment came from the safe deposit box of R. V. Powell, who had almost $1,000 remaining therein after withdrawing the said $10,000 therefrom."

The appellant attacks this finding of the probative fact, arguing that since the finding of the ultimate fact of purchase depends on the finding of payment of $10,000 and the fact of payment depends on the money coming from the safe deposit box, if it should be demonstrated there was not $10,000 in the box, the entire structure must fall. However compelling this logic may be, its entire force rests upon the demonstration that the money was not in the box.

On behalf of the appellant, it is next asserted that, if the testimony of any witness is inherently improbable, it may be disregarded. Subject to many limitations, this doctrine of inherent improbability is established by ample authority, and its existence has many times been recognized in this state. The elaborate attempt on the part of the appellant to show that the rule should be applied in this case falls far short of the requirements of the rule itself. The presumptions that every witness speaks the truth, and that the judge of the trial court faithfully performs his duty in determining the weight and credibility of evidence, are not to be ignored because of argument based on deductions drawn from inferences superimposed upon assumptions unwarranted by any fact.

A single illustration serves to show the tenuous character of the deductions upon which reversal is asked in this case. The bill of exceptions shows that in the accumulations of money in the safe deposit box was $500, that amount having been handed to R. V. Powell by his wife more than a year prior to the payment of the $10,000. Prior to her marriage Mrs. R. V. Powell was a nurse, and as such she had rendered services to Mrs. Bellina, a sister of Powell. There was delay in the payment for services, and Mrs. Bellina and Mrs. Powell finally agreed upon the sum of $500.

On cross-examination, Mrs. Bellina testified that she had deposited something over $3,500 in a savings bank, and paid therefrom to Mrs. Powell "in 20-dollar gold pieces the $500 which she gave her husband for his safe deposit box." Further cross-examination developed clearly that the witness remembered giving $500 to Mrs. Powell, but she had no recollection about going to the bank for it. On redirect examination she testified she was not sure of the source from which she got the money, and said she may have got it from money she received from the sale of her house.

The record of withdrawals from the bank was introduced and showed the particular $500 was not drawn from the bank. Mrs. Powell testified she received $500 from Mrs. Bellina, in 5-dollar pieces, 10-dollar pieces, and 20-dollar pieces, and gave the money to her husband, who said he was going to put it in his safe deposit box.

From these facts it is first assumed that, despite Mrs. Bellina's statement to the contrary, the $500 could not have come from the sale of the house. It is next inferred that, although both Mrs. Bellina and Mrs. Powell distinctly remembered the payment of $500 in gold coin, neither honestly could have been mistaken in regard to the denomination of any of the coin. Even though the payment of $500 might actually have been of $480 in 20-dollar pieces and the remainder in one 10 and two 5 dollar pieces, if this fact were not remembered by a witness more than a year after the payment, under the theory advanced here, a positive statement that $500 was paid would be unworthy of belief. It is next deduced that—"These intestine conflicts * * * are fatal to R. V. Powell's acquiring $500 for the box from his sister through his wife."

It is finally argued that, since this $500 and other sums upon similar inferences eliminated did not go into the box, it is mathematically demonstrated that $10,000 were not in the box at the time of the purchase.

Upon such a diaphanous demonstration, this court is asked to apply the rule of inherent improbability, not alone to the evidence regarding the payment of $500, but to all the evidence of all the defendants' witnesses. Confining the result of such an application of the rule to the evidence regarding the payment of $500, it would necessarily follow that the three witnesses should be branded as perjurers. If upon similar demonstrations the rule were applied, numerous other witnesses would be similarly marked.

[1, 2] It is within the province of the trial court to determine the credibility of witnesses before it and the weight to be given to their evidence. Even though the appellate tribunal might have reached a different conclusion, not having the opportunity to hear and see the witnesses, it is not permitted to substitute its own views for the conclusions of the judge who presided at the trial. If the record in any case shows there was no substantial evidence to support the finding of the lower court, the appellate court may, and it ought to, set it aside. To warrant it in determining there is no substantial evidence because of inherent improbability, there must exist either a physical impossibility of the evidence being true, or such a state of facts so clearly apparent that nothing need be assumed nor any inferences drawn to convince the ordinary mind of the falsity of the story. The appellate court will not indulge in lengthy and dubious computations, nor seek far for a reason, no matter how ingenious may be the argument by which it is urged, to determine that witnesses have committed perjury. It is its duty, if possible to harmonize apparent inconsistency in their statements, and to do this it will indulge in every reasonable presumption of fact.

[3] The entire record in the present case discloses ample evidence to support the particular finding of probative fact, as well as the findings of ultimate facts made by the judge who tried the case. The views of this court are in accord with those findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR 837(2)—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—RECORD.

Documentary evidence before the appellate court on an appeal cannot be considered on a subsequent appeal, where such evidence is not contained in the record on the subsequent appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Ida R. Beckett against Z. B. Stuart. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 35 Cal. App. 796, 171 Pac. 107.

J. W. Hocker, Hocker & Austin, Simms & Fulwider, and Stephen Monteleone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rubert B. Turnbull, of Pasadena, Joe Crider and Hugh Kelley, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment entered herein on the 9th day of February, 1917. On appeal from a former judgment in this action the judgment was reversed. 23 Cal. App. 373, 138 Pac. 115. After a second trial of the action judgment has been entered a second time in favor of the plaintiff. The pleadings have not been amended, and the issues at the second trial were the same as at the first trial. In the former decision on appeal this court said:

"In this action plaintiff alleged that she entrusted to defendant for the purpose of collection a certain note and mortgage then owned by her, executed by one Juliet Burns, upon which there was due and payable the sum of $1,500; that on December 30, 1909, said Burns paid the same to defendant, who appropriated it to his own use and refused to pay the same, or any part thereof, to plaintiff. These allegations, other than the refusal to pay, are denied by the answer, which further alleged that in December, 1909, said Burns paid to defendant the sum of $1,500 for the use of one Sarnighausen, who on December 22, 1909, made and delivered to plaintiff his note therefor, which said sum was at the time a loan made by plaintiff to Sarnighausen of the funds then belonging to her in the hands of said Burns; that on July 12, 1910, for a valuable consideration, plaintiff sold and transferred to defendant said note so made to her by Sarnighausen. * * * If, as alleged in the answer, plaintiff, prior to the bringing of the suit, to wit, on July 12, 1910, for a valuable consideration, sold and delivered said promissory note to defendant, such fact would constitute a sufficient defense to the action. Moreover, the affirmative allegation of the answer that on July 12, 1910, plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, sold and transferred the note to defendant, which as such constituted a defense, tendered a material issue, as to which defendant was entitled to a finding by the court. For this reason, if for no other, the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered."

The evidence received by the court at the second trial is not before us on appeal, the appeal being upon the judgment roll alone. The findings of the court upon which the present judgment rests are fully responsive and adverse to the affirmative defense contained in defendant's answer. The facts, which are fully set out in the findings, show that the Sarnighausen transaction was a subterfuge, under and by means of which appellant applied the plaintiff's money to his own use without her knowledge or consent.

Further, "the court finds that it is not true that the amount evidenced by said Sarnighausen note or any sum or at all was ever loaned by the plaintiff, Ida R. Beckett, to said F. Sarnighausen, and the court finds that it is not true that on the 12th day of July, 1910, or at any time or at all for a valuable consideration plaintiff sold, assigned, and delivered said promissory note to the defendant. The court finds that subsequent to the execution of the Sarnighausen note, to wit, the note executed by said F. Sarnighausen in favor of Ida R. Beckett, the said Ida R. Beckett indorsed said note to Z. B. Stuart, the defendant herein, for the purpose of collection and for such purpose only; that at no time was the said defendant, Z. B. Stuart, the owner of or entitled to the proceeds of said note. The court finds that at the time of the indorsement of said note by the plaintiff to the defendant for the purpose of collection the said plaintiff was not apprised of the actual transaction by which the said F. Sarnighausen had made, executed, and delivered said note in favor of the plaintiff, and at said time plaintiff had no knowledge of the real facts of said transaction.

"The court finds that the instrument purporting to be an assignment of the Sarnighausen note in favor of the defendant, Z. B. Stuart, and purported to have been executed by the plaintiff, Ida R. Beckett, which instrument is marked 'Defendant's Exhibit 4,' was not signed by Ida R. Beckett, and that the signature thereon, purporting to be that of Ida R. Beckett, is not her signature."

Appellant's assignments of error are: (1) That the court erred in rendering a judgment not supported by the pleadings and findings; (2) that the court erred in rendering judgment based upon findings outside of the issues joined by the complaint and answer; (3) that the court erred in failing to apply the law of the case as announced by the appellate court on the former appeal. None of these contentions can be sustained. The cause of action set forth in the complaint was for moneys of the plaintiff, received by the defendant and wrongfully retained by him. The facts alleged were established, and the affirmative defense was refuted. The court did not base its judgment upon findings outside of the issues presented by the pleadings. The decision rendered is not in conflict with the law of the case as established on the former appeal. We do not agree with the claim of counsel for appellant that the documentary evidence before the court on the former appeal (none of it being in the present record) is before us for the purposes of this appeal. The case on second trial, as shown by the findings, is very materially different in its facts from the case as stated in the former decision made by this court.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 2687.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 1, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1919.)

1. GUARANTY ⇨38(1) — CONSTRUCTION—UNCERTAINTY—CONTINUING GUARANTY.

Where there is uncertainty as to whether a contract of guaranty was continuing or not, the court must resort to the circumstances under which the instrument was executed.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨461(1) — PAROL EVIDENCE — AMBIGUITY OF GUARANTY.

Where a guaranty is susceptible either of the interpretation that it is, or that it is not, continuing, in determining intention of the parties, the ambiguity may be explained by parol evidence of the situation and surroundings of the parties, and the guaranty interpreted in the light of such circumstances.

3. GUARANTY ⇨38(2)—CONTINUING CHARACTER.

Mother's guaranty of her son's account with plaintiff "up to the sum of seven hundred fifty ($750.00) dollars for what goods in your line he may purchase from you," in view of the circumstances, held to cover only the son's initial order, and not to have been continuing and to cover future transactions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by R. N. Nason & Co., a corporation, against Maria J. Kennedy. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Craig and Bert P. Woodard, both of Los Angeles, and Henry N. Beatty, of San Francisco, for appellant.

F. A. Stephenson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover upon a written guaranty executed by defendant, as follows:

"July 24, 1914.

"R. N. Nason & Co., San Francisco, California.—Gentlemen: I do hereby guarantee the account of L. C. Kennedy up to the sum of seven hundred fifty ($750.00) dollars, for what goods in your line he may purchase from you, and it is understood that if he does not pay his bills under the terms of purchase that I will pay them or see that they are paid.

"Respectively Yours,

Mrs. Maria J. Kennedy."

Appellant contends that this instrument constituted a "continuing guaranty," as defined by section 2814, Civil Code; whereas, respondent insists that, as found by the court, it should be construed as a guaranty for goods bought to the extent only of $750, which sum having been paid by L. C. Kennedy, the obligation of the guaranty was discharged.

[1, 2] While by this writing defendant guarantees the account of L. C. Kennedy and agrees that if he does not pay his bills she will pay them, nevertheless it is silent as to what particular account or bill it had reference to. There is nothing contained therein disclosing with certainty that the parties intended the guaranty should cover liability incurred in successive transactions covering an indefinite period of time. Hence, by reason of such uncertainty, we must, in determining the intention of the parties thereto, resort to the circumstances under which the instrument was executed. First National Bank v. Bowers, 141 Cal. 253, 74 Pac. 856. These circumstances, as disclosed by the evidence, are as follows: In July, 1914, defendant's son, L. C. Kennedy, being desirous of engaging in the mercantile business, placed an initial order for a stock of goods with the Los Angeles agent of plaintiff, whose principal place of business was in San Francisco. Upon receiving this order, plaintiff wrote to the agent from whom it had received the same, stating in substance that it could not make shipment of the goods unless payment thereof was guaranteed, and inclosed with its letter the form of guaranty, with the request that the agent get Kennedy to have his mother sign the same, and saying:

"We understand she is responsible and thus we would be protected for this amount."

Plaintiff further stated in the letter:

"Mr. Kennedy should be willing to make this guaranty because on the terms you are desirous of making to him, he should be in a position to take care of his indebtedness easily, but as a precaution and as a safeguard and on account of the conditions under which he is going into business and also on account of the present financial situation, we must insist upon a guaranty."

L. C. Kennedy, in substance, testified that plaintiff's agent, Mr. Hambly, who was instructed to secure the guaranty, in requesting same told him that plaintiff thought his order too large and had reduced it to approximately $750, to the extent of which value they were willing to ship the goods in filling his order, if payment thereof was guaranteed by his mother; that there was no arrangement or understanding for the purchase of other goods from plaintiff than this initial order which the guaranty was intended to cover. Kennedy did from time to time, while conducting his business, buy other goods from plaintiff, the total amount of which was $1,881.02, upon which he paid all but a balance of $747.27, for which suit is brought.

"Where a merchant sells goods to a customer under a guaranty from a third person that they will be paid for, and afterwards sells him other goods, the first money he receives from the purchaser should be applied to the payment of the goods covered by the guaranty." Carson v. Reid, 137 Cal. 253, 70 Pac. 89; Marx v. Schwartz, 14 Or. 178, 12 Pac. 253.

The former case is also authority for the statement, quoted from Melville v. Hayden, 3 Barn. & Ald. 593, that "it ought to appear unequivocally that it was the intention of the defendant to guaranty * * * payment for goods to be furnished from time to time," and "that in every doubtful case the presumption ought to be against holding a guaranty to be continuing."

Looking solely and alone to the guaranty, it cannot be said that it expresses an intention of the parties that it was to be a guaranty for a line of credit to the extent of $750 to be extended by plaintiff to L. C. Kennedy and covering future transactions. Its language is equally susceptible of either interpretations, viz., that it is or is not continuing. Hence an ambiguity arises which may be explained by parol evidence of the situation and surroundings of the parties and the guaranty interpreted in the light of such circumstances. Bell v. Bruen, 42 U. S. (1 How.) 185, 11 L. Ed. 89.

[3] In view of the fact that L. C. Kennedy was for the first time applying to the plaintiff for the purchase of goods, which plaintiff refused to furnish except upon a guaranty of payment therefor, and there being no arrangement for a line of credit and no understanding that other purchases were to be made or contemplated, taken in connection with the statements made by plaintiff's agent, it may fairly be said that the parties understood and intended the guaranty to cover such initial order only. Had it been intended to cover future transactions, it should have been so worded as to include the same; but, as stated, it is silent as to the time, accounts, or bills which it was to cover.

The evidence supports the finding of the trial court that it was intended to cover the initial order of goods only, without which plaintiff was unwilling to furnish the same. The foregoing view renders it unnecessary to consider whether or not the evidence supported the finding of the court that there was no consideration for the guaranty.

The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER v. SWETT et al. (Civ. 2617.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 26, 1919. Rehearing Denied March 28, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1919.)

1. EASEMENTS ⇨42 — PARTITION DEEDS — CONSTRUCTION—LAND SUBJECT.

Where plaintiff and defendant acquired land through parties who had divided it, easements in favor of one reserved in the partition deed cannot be held as against a parcel of land adjoining that divided which was acquired by the servient owner after the partition deeds were made; Civ. Code, § 1106, relating to subsequently acquired title, passing by operation of law, being without application thereto.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⇨2 — EASEMENTS — PIPE LINE RIGHT OF WAY.

The right to an easement or a right of way for a pipe line is one to which the title may be quieted, although the line has not been constructed.

3. QUIETING TITLE ⇨10(2) — PIPE LINE RIGHT OF WAY—TITLE—BOUNDARIES NOT DESCRIBED.

Although a right of way for a pipe line does not definitely describe the route of the line, it must be held that a reasonable route was intended and title may be quieted to such route, and it is customary for the court to designate for the parties what would be a reasonable route under the circumstances in evidence.

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT ⇨58(4) — GROUNDS—INSUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Where an objection to the form of the action would go to the question of the sufficiency of the complaint as stating a cause of action, which had been decided by the trial court in overruling a demurrer, the question was not a proper one for consideration upon a motion for nonsuit.

5. QUIETING TITLE ⇨45—NONSUIT—DISCLAIMER.

Where the court granted a nonsuit in favor of all defendants, and one defendant had expressly disclaimed any interest in the rights concerning title sought to be quieted, nonsuit as to him was error.

6. QUIETING TITLE ⇨7(4) — JUDGMENT OF NONSUIT AS TO EASEMENTS—CLOUD ON TITLE.

Where the answer of a defendant denied that plaintiff is the owner of all or any of the five easements alleged, which became a matter in issue, a judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff in his suit to quiet his title to these rights is a cloud upon his title, and the fact that he may be using them at the present moment without objection from the defendants does not remedy the injustice.

7. EASEMENTS ⇨36(3) — PRESCRIPTION — ADVERSE CLAIM OR HOLDING—EVIDENCE.

In order for the statute of limitations to run against the right of the holder of an easement, there must be definite and positive evidence of an adverse claim and an adverse holding.

8. EASEMENTS ⇨8(2, 3)—ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—EXPRESS RECOGNITION.

Express recognition of the rights of plaintiff as the owner of the dominant estate in deeds to the servient estate containing reservations thereof is contrary to any claim of adverse possession to such easements.

9. EASEMENTS ⇨30(2) — RIGHT OF WAY BY GRANT—NONUSER—ABANDONMENT.

Although plaintiff and his predecessors have neglected for 25 years to exercise their right to lay a pipe line upon a right of way, they have not lost such right, for an easement founded upon a grant cannot be lost by mere nonuser, no matter how long that nonuser may continue, and it may be lost by abandonment only when the intention to abandon clearly appears.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Homer C. Parker against E. C. Swett and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Order appealed from reversed, with instructions.

Samuel C. Wiel and Wm. E. Colby, both of San Francisco, and Percy S. King and Clarence N. Riggins, both of Napa, for appellant.

R. P. Henshall and Luther Elkins, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for defendants following an order of nonsuit. The action was to quiet title in the plaintiff to certain easements upon the lands of defendants alleged to be appurtenant to the land of plaintiff. Appellant contends that the nonsuit was improperly granted.

The facts of the case are, briefly, these: In 1890, W. W. Thompson and Horace B. Chase were the owners in common of certain lands in Napa county. On May 7th of that year, this land was partitioned between them. Thompson received by the partition deed the southern half of the original tract, and Chase received the northern half. By mesne conveyances the southern half became the property of the present plaintiff and the northern half became the property of the defendant Swett. By the partition deed, above referred to, Thompson, the predecessor in title of plaintiff, reserved to himself five servitudes or easements over and upon the northern half of the land, which land is at this time the property of the defendant Swett. These easements are expressed as follows in the partition deed:

"And the said party of the first part hereby excepts and reserves from the operation of this conveyance unto himself his heirs and assigns forever, and as appurtenant to the tract of land adjoining the above described premises on the south, which has this day been granted by the party of the second part to the party of the first part, and to which conveyance or grant reference is hereby had and made for a description of the lands so adjoining on the south, the following rights, privileges and easements, to wit:

"First. A right of way over, in, along and through all roads upon the above described premises.

"Second. A right of way over, in, along and through all avenues in the vineyard upon said lands so long as said avenues shall continue to exist either in vineyard or orchard.

"Third. A right to take, use, appropriate, divert, lead and carry away, in pipes or otherwise, one-half of the waters flowing or that may flow, in the stream on said premises, to be taken at or near the point where the waters of said stream are now partially diverted in pipes leading to the dwelling on said premises.

"Fourth. The right of way for a line of pipe for water from the point where said waters may be diverted over, across, in and through said premises to the said adjoining tract on the south, such pipe to be laid so as not to interfere with the proper cultivation of said premises, and also, the right at all times to enter in and upon said premises for the purpose of viewing, changing, repairing or reserving said pipe that may be so laid, and making and maintaining a proper division of such water.

"Fifth. The right to enter in and upon said premises and mine and quarry from the rock quarry on said premises, such rock as he may see fit, with the right to remove the same."

The defendant Carlston answered, claiming an interest in the northern half as a mortgagee only—and his rights, of course, would be determined by those of the defendant Swett, his mortgagor. The defendant Clarence Grange disclaimed all interest in the land.

[1] At the outset we will consider the right of plaintiff to charge these easements and servitudes so reserved against the northern half of the original tract, against an adjoining parcel of land also described in the complaint, which was acquired by Chase some time after the partition deeds were made, and which passed with the other land to the defendant Swett. We think this cannot be done. The partition deeds, in terms, referred only to the land originally held in the one tract. This was all the land that was in contemplation of either party. Appellant states that the third tract, afterward acquired by Chase, contained some of the headwaters of the stream of water which flows upon the land partitioned, and argues that a half interest in the entire stream was granted by the partition deed, and therefore, the predecessor of the defendants having later acquired title to a portion of the thing which he had previously granted to Thompson, that later acquired title would redound to the benefit of his grantee Thompson and his successors in interest under the provisions of section 1106, Civil Code. We think this section does not apply to the present case. It is very clear from the entire instrument, and from the situation of the parties themselves, that there was no intention to convey anything but a right to the use of the water which was upon the northern half of the original tract of land. Indeed, the deed itself, after describing the premises constituting the northern half of the original tract, grants the "right to take, use, appropriate, divert, lead and carry away, in pipes or otherwise, one-half of the waters flowing or that may flow in the stream on said premises, to be taken," etc.

Therefore, as to the portion of the land owned by the defendant Swett which was acquired by her predecessor in interest after the partition of the original tract between Thompson and Chase, we think the nonsuit was properly granted.

[2] As to the portion of the land owned by defendant Swett, which was acquired by her through mesne conveyances from Chase which originally was a part of the tract partitioned between Thompson and Chase, we are of a different opinion. The point is raised in the statement of the trial court in granting the nonsuit, and in the arguments of counsel, that an action to quiet title is not the proper form of action for the plaintiff to pursue; particular stress being laid upon the argument that title cannot be quieted to a pipe line not in existence. The easement in regard to a pipe line was of a "right of way for a pipe line." It has been repeatedly held that the right to an easement of this kind may be quieted. Stone v. Imperial Co., 173 Cal. 39, 159 Pac. 164; Arroyo, etc., Co. v. Dorman, 137 Cal. 611, 612, 70 Pac. 737; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Co., 152 Cal. 647, 93 Pac. 869, 1135; Verdugo v. Verdugo 152 Cal. 655, 93 Pac. 1021; Los Angeles v. Hunter, 156 Cal. 604, 105 Pac. 755; Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 236, 135 Pac. 961; Byington v. Sacramento, 170 Cal. 132, 148 Pac. 791.

[3] It is true that the route of the pipe line is not definitely described in the deed, but it has been held that in such a case a reasonable route is intended, and title may be quieted to such reasonable route. Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 683, 110 Pac. 118; Civ. Code, § 1419; Sulloway v. Sulloway, 160 Cal. 513, 117 Pac. 522; Stone v. Imperial Co., 173 Cal. 39, 159 Pac. 164; Byington v. Sacramento Co., 170 Cal. 132, 148 Pac. 791.

It is proper and customary under such circumstances, in view of the general equitable jurisdiction to do full and complete justice in one action, for the court to designate for the parties just what would be a reasonable route under all the circumstances in evidence. Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 683, 110 Pac. 118; Davidson v. Ellis, 9 Cal. App. 145, 98 Pac. 254; Gazos, etc., Co. v. Coburn, 8 Cal. App. 158, 96 Pac. 359.

[4] However, the objection of respondent as to the form of the action would go to the question of whether or not the complaint stated a cause of action, and this question had been decided by the trial court in overruling defendant's demurrer to the complaint. It was not a proper consideration upon the motion for nonsuit. Keefe v. Keefe, 19 Cal. App. 315, 125 Pac. 929. But the question has been raised and argued by both counsel, and it is stated by the trial court as a reason for granting the nonsuit. It will probably become material at the next trial of the action, and we have therefore discussed it here.

[5] The court granted the nonsuit in favor of all the defendants. Defendant Grange had expressly disclaimed any interest in the rights sought to be quieted. Clearly as to this defendant, the nonsuit was error.

[6] Again, the trial court granted a nonsuit as to all the easements sought to be quieted. It is admitted in the brief of respondent, and upon the hearing in this court, that at the trial the right of the plaintiff to three of the easements was expressly conceded by the defendants. In respondent's brief we have the following statement:

"The record below on the motion for a nonsuit shows that counsel for the defendant expressly stated: 'The roadways, which by the way, your honor, are not in dispute between us, as to the roads, there is no doubt as to the right of Parker to these roads.' And appellant's counsel will probably concede that these roads are being used by plaintiff to this day. And not alone was this concession made at the trial, but the roads and avenues referred to are in use by the plaintiff up to this very moment. He is not therefore in any wise aggrieved in respect of them.

"Nor is the right of the plaintiff to enter upon the premises and mine and quarry rock, under the fifth easement, in dispute. The record shows that counsel for the defendant said: 'One of them was the right to go in on the premises and quarry rock, which is not in dispute to this day and which has been exercised by Mr. Parker and his predecessors.'"

However, the answer of defendant Swett denied that the plaintiff is the owner of all or any of the five easements, and this became a matter in issue. The judgment of nonsuit against the plaintiff in his suit to quiet his title to these rights is a cloud upon his title—and the fact that he may be using them at the present moment without objection from the defendants does not remedy the injustice. We fail to comprehend the logic of the respondent's position in asserting that the plaintiff is entitled to these rights and yet seeking to uphold a judgment which denied them to him. As to these three easements, unquestionably, the judgment of nonsuit should be reversed.

[7] The respondent argues, in support of the judgment regarding the easement for a right of way for a pipe line, first, that the statute of limitations has run against plaintiff's right. It has been repeatedly held that, in order for the statute to run in a case like this, there must be definite and positive evidence of an adverse claim and an adverse holding. Half Moon Bay Co. v. Cowell, 173 Cal. 543, 160 Pac. 675; Barlow v. Frink, 171 Cal. 170, 152 Pac. 290.

[8, 9] There is distinctly no evidence in the record of any denial of plaintiff's right until the time when the present defendant acquired the land, which was in August, 1913—less than three years before the commencement of this action. On the contrary, the deeds in evidence by which the successive grantees in the chain of defendant Swett's title acquired the land, and the deed to defendant Swett herself made in 1913, show in each case an express recognition of the right of plaintiff, for each deed contains the reservations in favor of the southern portion of the original tract, in the identical language of the first deed to Chase. This express recognition of plaintiff's rights as the owner of the dominant estate, by each successive owner of the servient estate, is contrary to any claim of adverse possession. It is true that the plaintiff and his predecessors have neglected for 25 years to exercise their right to lay a pipe line, but an easement founded upon a grant cannot be lost by mere nonuser, no matter how long that nonuser may continue. Currier v. Howes, 103 Cal. 437, 37 Pac. 521; Walker v. Lillingston, 137 Cal. 401, 70 Pac. 282. And such an easement may only be lost by abandonment when the intention to abandon clearly appears. Moore v. Sherman, 52 Mont. 542, 159 Pac. 967. In this case there was no intention to abandon, and no evidence appears that would indicate such an intention. On the contrary, the evidence of the plaintiff is decidedly to the effect that he never intended to abandon the right. The evidence of plaintiff's predecessor in interest is to the effect that he never exercised his right to lay the pipe for the reason that he did not require the water during his ownership of the ranch and the installation of a pipe line was quite expensive.

"Mere failure to take and use the water for which he has, at the time, no need, will not forfeit the right to the vendor, in such a case." Copeland v. Fairview Land, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 166, 131 Pac. 119.

From our conclusions, it appears that the nonsuit should not have been granted except as to that portion of the land owned by the defendant Swett which was not included in the original partition between Thompson and Chase.

The order appealed from is therefore reversed, with instructions to the trial court to proceed in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

40 Cal. App. 13

SOUTH v. SAN BENITO COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 2706.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 19, 1919.)

1. VENUE $\hookrightarrow$ 41—CHANGE OF—TRIAL IN COUNTY OF DEFENDANT'S RESIDENCE.

The joinder as party defendant of one against whom no cause of action is stated does not deprive the other defendants of the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence.

2. COUNTIES $\hookrightarrow$ 142—BRIDGES—FAILURE TO CONSTRUCT—RESULTING ACCIDENTS—LIABILITY.

A county, exercising power for purposes essential to the public, such as the construction of bridges, is deemed an agency of the state, and is not subject to liability for any act or omission of its officers in the exercise of such power, unless an action is given by statute.

3. BRIDGES $\hookrightarrow$ 39(4)—COUNTY BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—LIABILITY FOR FAILURE TO CONSTRUCT BRIDGES—DUTY.

The supervisors of a county, who have not agreed with the supervisors of adjoining county for the reconstruction of a bridge on the county line, pursuant to the legislative discretion conferred on them by Pol. Code, § 2713, are not liable for a traveler's injuries due to failure to replace the bridge.

4. VENUE $\hookrightarrow$ 41—CHANGE OF—CONSIDERATION OF MOTION—FICTITIOUS DEFENDANT.

A defendant, who is fictitious in fact as well as in name, and is not brought into court, cannot be regarded in the consideration of a motion by other defendants for change of venue.

5. BRIDGES $\hookrightarrow$ 46(3)—PERSONAL INJURIES—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint in an action for personal injuries received by plaintiff when defendant's automobile, in which he was riding, plunged over an embankment where a bridge had been removed, not alleging negligence, or facts from which negligence of the defendant owner and driver can be inferred, does not state a cause of action against such defendant.

6. NEGLIGENCE $\hookrightarrow$ 108(2)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—SPECIFICATION OF NEGLIGENT ACT.

In action for personal injuries, it is not necessary that the term "negligence" be used in pleading, but it must appear by direct averment that the acts causing the injury were done negligently, where the stated facts do not constitute a cause of action unless done negligently, except where the facts necessarily exclude hypotheses other than that of negligence, and, although it may be sufficient to allege negligence in general terms, the particular act negligently done must be specified.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by William South against the County of San Benito and others. From an order of the superior court, refusing to change the county of trial, certain defendants appeal. Order reversed, with directions to allow motion for change of venue.

Geo. W. Jean, of Hollister, Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, Snook & Church, of Oakland, and A. D. Shaw, of Hollister, for appellants.

D. M. Burnett and James P. Sex, both of San Jose, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from the superior court of the county of Santa Clara refusing to change the place of trial of this action to San Benito county. The action is one to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff in an accident in which an automobile in which he was riding plunged over a precipice into the bed of San Felipe creek. It is alleged that the center line of San Felipe creek is the boundary line between the counties of San Benito and Santa Clara; that a county road and public highway led from Hollister, in San Benito county, to Gilroy, in Santa Clara county, and that for many years prior to January 1, 1914, there had been a bridge across San Felipe creek at the point where said creek was crossed by said road, which bridge was maintained by the two counties jointly as a part of said road; that after January 1, 1914, no bridge was maintained at said point and no means were provided for crossing the creek, but that at the point where the bridge had formerly been there existed on each side of the creek, from January 1, 1914, to June 29, 1914, a sheer drop of about 25 feet from the surface of the roadway to the bed of the creek, a condition dangerous to persons traveling over the road; that immediately before reaching the declivity on the San Benito side there was a small and narrow board or scantling placed across the road, but no other barriers and no lights; that on the night of June 29, 1914, plaintiff, riding in an automobile as the guest of the defendant J. A. Phippen, who was driving from Hollister toward Gilroy, was precipitated over the declivity on the San Benito side, whereby he received the injuries complained of. It is also alleged that it was the duty of the defendant counties and the defendant supervisors of both counties to replace said bridge and repair said highway and make the same passable, but because of their negligence, carelessness, and wrongful failure to replace said bridge and repair said highway and make the same passable, plaintiff sustained the injuries of which he complains.

It appears that the appellants are the five members of the board of supervisors of San Benito county and that they are all residents of San Benito county. The other defendants in the action were County of San Benito, County of Santa Clara, H. S. Hersman, A. L. Hubbard, H. M. Ayer, John Roll, and R. E. Mitchell, personally and as members of and constituting the board of supervisors of the county of Santa Clara, and J. A. Phippen and John Doe. Appellants urge that their motion in the court below should have been granted, for the reason that there is no cause of action stated against the defendants other than themselves, and that such other defendants are therefore improperly joined.

[1] It is settled that the joinder as party defendant of one against whom no cause of action is stated does not deprive the other defendants of the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence. Donohoe v. Wooster et al., 163 Cal. 114, 124 Pac. 730; Bartley et al. v. Fraser et al., 16 Cal. App. 560, 117 Pac. 683.

[2] It seems clear, under the decisions, that no cause of action exists against the county of Santa Clara or against the supervisors of said county, either individually or by virtue of their office. On the question of the liability of the county, we have the following language in Brunson v. City of Santa Monica, 27 Cal. App. 89, 148 Pac. 950.

"In the absence of a statutory provision declaring otherwise, a municipal corporation in California is not liable in damages for the neglect of its officers or agents in the maintenance or care of streets or bridges (Winbiger v. City of Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 36); nor for such negligence committed while engaged in repairing a sewer (Chope v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113). The case at bar comes within the doctrine of these cases of nonliability. The complaint does not definitely state for what purpose the so-called 'dump' was being maintained; but it is stated that the dump was a public work of the city and that the plaintiff was compelled, as well as permitted, to use it. This implies the use of a power of compulsion for some public reason, such as the exercise of the police power for protection of the public health. The decisions in other states, to which we are referred in the brief of appellant, show that there is a conflict of decision on the question here presented; but it is equally clear that the rule in this state is as above stated.

"An attempt has been made to modify by statutory provisions the rule of law above stated. An act approved April 26, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1115), is entitled: 'An act relating to the liability of public officers for damages resulting from defects and dangers in streets, highways, public buildings, public works or property.'

* * *

"Here we have an act which in its title purports to deal with the liability of public officers for damages resulting from certain specified causes. This cannot by any process of reasoning be made to include the subject of liability of the public corporations in whose service such officers may be. The act is void as to any purported legislation therein contained attempting to create a new rule of liability as against such corporations."

The entire matter is carefully considered in the case of Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106, and it is stated that, in so far as municipal corporations exercise powers conferred on them for purposes essentially public, they should be deemed agencies of the state, and not subject to be sued for any act or omission occurring while in the exercise of such power, unless by statute the action is given. To the same effect is the case of Coffey v. City of Berkeley, 170 Cal. 258, 149 Pac. 559.

[3] We next come to consider the liability of the supervisors of Santa Clara county. The accident occurred in San Benito county, and the embankment over which the automobile was precipitated was on the road in San Benito county. There is no dispute about these facts. The theory upon which the supervisors of Santa Clara county were sought to be held is that there was a joint duty imposed by law upon the boards of supervisors of these two counties to construct the bridge, and that their liability arises from their failure to do so before the accident occurred.

It has been held in this state that before a public official becomes liable for a breach of duty, the duty must be plain and mandatory, the means and ability to perform it must exist, and it must be such as not to involve the exercise of any discretion on his part, either as to its performance or nonperformance or as to the manner of its performance. Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 58 Pac. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171; Taylor v. Manson, 9 Cal. App. 382, 99 Pac. 410. In Taylor v. Manson, supra, the court said:

"As the members of the board are public officers, with their duties prescribed by law, and as the other defendants are sureties on their official bonds, they can only be held for nonfeasance as to some act or duty required of the board by reason of their office, or for the negligent performance of some act or duty where the act or duty is plain. It is only where the duty is plain and certain, and such duty is negligently performed or not performed at all, that the officer is held liable to a private individual. If the act is a matter of discretion, or the officer has not the means or ability to perform it, he is not liable nor are his sureties on his official bond. Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171, 58 Pac. 707; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 340, and cases cited; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713; Elliott on Roads and Streets, 506. The reason for the rule is plain. An officer is a public servant. His remuneration is often small. His implied agreement is to faithfully perform the duties required of him by law."

The only statute in force imposing any duties on boards of supervisors in reference to the construction or maintenance of county boundary line bridges is found in section 2713, Political Code, and is as follows:

"* * * Bridges crossing the line between counties must be constructed by the counties into which such bridges reach, and each of the counties into which any such bridge reaches shall pay such portion of the cost of such bridge as shall have been previously agreed upon by the boards of supervisors of said counties.
* * *"

There is no allegation in the complaint that the two boards had come to an agreement as to the proportion of the cost to be borne by each county, or that there was any fund available for the construction of the bridge by the two boards, or at all. It does not appear then that the construction of this bridge was the plain, certain, and ministerial duty of the supervisors of Santa Clara county. Until an agreement has been reached by the two boards, it would seem that neither board has the power to expend the county moneys for such work, and in reaching the agreement, provided for by the Political Code, clearly the boards would be exercising a legislative discretion.

Other than the power given by the above-quoted section to agree with the supervisors of San Benito county upon the division of the cost of a bridge crossing the county line, the supervisors of Santa Clara county clearly had no authority to repair the road in San Benito county, where the accident occurred, or to place warning signals thereon, and they therefore cannot be charged with liability under the provisions of section 1 of the act of April 26, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1115), hereinbefore referred to.

However, while it was contended in the briefs that the counties and the supervisors were liable, it was admitted by counsel for respondent upon the oral argument of this case that there was no cause of action against either the counties or the supervisors of Santa Clara county, and so it is unnecessary for us to discuss these questions further.

[4] A fictitious defendant, John Doe, was named, and it was alleged that he was the roadmaster for the defendant French in the supervisorial district in San Benito county. Apart from the fact in this case that the uncontradicted affidavit of Mr. French appears in the record to the effect that there was no roadmaster in his district at any of the times mentioned in the complaint, and it would seem, therefore, that this defendant is fictitious in fact as well as in name, it has been held that fictitious defendants who have not been brought into court are not to be regarded in the consideration of the motion for change of venue. Yuba Co. v. North American, etc., Co., 12 Cal. App. 223, 107 Pac. 139.

[5] The one remaining question in the case, and the one that is decisive of this appeal, is whether or not a cause of action is stated against the remaining defendant, J. A. Phippen, and to that question we shall direct our attention. The allegations of the complaint with reference to defendant Phippen are as follows:

"That on the night of June 29th, 1914, at the hour of about 11:55 o'clock, this plaintiff was the guest of and riding with said J. A. Phippen, who was then and there driving his automobile along said highway in said San Benito county, in the direction of Gilroy; that said Phippen was so driving said automobile at a prudent rate of speed; that this plaintiff was unacquainted with the condition of said road and the danger incident to traveling thereon, and to the absence of said bridge, and the existence of said drop or declivity from said roadway to the bed of said creek.

"That as the said automobile approached said point where said bridge had formerly been, and where said road formerly crossed said creek, no lights or other barriers were displayed or shown to warn the traveling public of the danger there present.

"That immediately before reaching said declivity or drop there was placed across said road a small and narrow board or scantling, but the same bore no lights or other signals, and the same was not visible to this plaintiff until said automobile had collided therewith, although the lights of said automobile were burning brightly, and although the plaintiff was constantly on the alert for possible danger.

"That the said defendant J. A. Phippen, while so operating said automobile and while approaching said point, did fail to observe said scantling or board, and did so operate his said automobile as to come in collision with said board, or scantling, so set across said road, and that, as soon as said Phippen so came in collision with said scantling, he, the said Phippen, attempted to stop said automobile, but failed to do so, before the same reached said drop or declivity; and that, when the automobile reached said drop or said declivity, it was precipitated over said bank," etc.

Plaintiff then states the nature of his injuries and damage, and continues in his complaint, as follows:

"That at all times herein mentioned it was the duty of the defendant counties, and the duty of all of the other defendants, except the defendants John Doe and J. A. Phippen, as supervisors, to replace said bridge and repair said highway and make the same passable," etc.

We fail to find in the above either an allegation of negligence or any allegations of fact from which negligence can be inferred. On the contrary, the complaint alleges that the said Phippen was driving his automobile "at a prudent rate of speed"; that "there were no lights or other barriers displayed to warn the traveling public of the danger there present"; that the narrow board or scantling was placed across the road and bore no lights or other signals, and the same was not visible to the plaintiff until the automobile had collided therewith, although the plaintiff was constantly on the alert for possible danger. These allegations would seem to negative rather than to assert negligence on the part of the defendant Phippen.

*[6] Although it is not necessary for the term "negligence" to be used in pleading, it is necessary for it to appear by direct averment that the acts causing the injury were done negligently, where the facts stated do not constitute a cause of action unless done negligently, unless the facts themselves necessarily exclude any hypothesis other than that of negligence. Silveira v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 Pac. 996. It should appear in what respects the defendant was negligent, and that such negligence had a causal connection with plaintiff's injury. Lang v. Lilley & Thurston Co., 20 Cal. App. 264, 128 Pac. 1031. While it is sufficient to allege negligence in general terms, the particular act alleged to have been negligently done must be specified. Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 147, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407.

We think this pleading does not meet the general rule, or the rule laid down in this state. A demurrer to the complaint on the part of defendant Phippen would have to be sustained. A cause of action not being stated against Phippen, there remain no other defendants, except those who are nonresidents of the county in which the action was brought; this being true, the motion for a change of venue should have been granted.

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to grant appellants' said motion.

SOUTH v. FRENCH et al. (Civ. 2707.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 19, 1919.)

1. VENUE — CHANGE OF VENUE — RESIDENCE OF DEFENDANTS — DEFENDANT AGAINST WHOM NO CAUSE OF ACTION IS STATED.

The joinder as party defendant of one against whom no cause of action is stated does not deprive other defendants residing in another county of the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence.

2. NEGLIGENCE — 108(2) — COMPLAINT — SUFFICIENCY — ACT NEGLIGENTLY DONE — OTHER ALLEGATIONS SHOWING ABSENCE OF NEGLIGENCE.

The allegation that an automobile driver "negligently" failed to observe that the road terminated in a declivity is not sufficient, in the face of other allegations showing that he was without knowledge of such condition, and that no lights were displayed or warnings given, thus showing an absence of negligence upon his part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by William South against T. H. French and others. From an order denying the named defendant's motion for a change of venue to another county, he appeals. Order reversed, with directions to grant motion.

Geo. W. Jean, of Hollister, Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, Snook & Church, of Oakland, and A. D. Shaw, of Hollister, for appellant.

D. M. Burnett and James P. Sex, both of San Jose, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the county of Santa Clara, denying appellant's motion to change the place of trial of this action to San Benito county. The action is one to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff in an accident in which an automobile in which he was riding plunged over a precipice into the bed of San Felipe creek.

[1] The defendant French, who is the appellant here, is the supervisor of district No. 1 of the county of San Benito, and it appears without contradiction that he is a resident of San Benito county. The defendant John Doe, sued by a fictitious name, is alleged to be the roadmaster of the same district in San Benito county, and it also appears that he is a resident of San Benito county. The only question presented upon this appeal, then, is whether or not a cause of action has been stated against the remaining defendant, J. A. Phippen, for the joinder as party defendant of one against whom no cause of action is stated does not deprive the other defendants of the right to have the action tried in the county of their residence. Donohoe v. Wooster et al., 163 Cal. 114, 124 Pac. 730; Bartley et al. v. Fraser et al., 16 Cal. App. 560, 117 Pac. 683.

[2] In the case of South v. County of San Benito et al. (No. 2706) 180 Pac. 354, which arose out of the same accident, this court has decided, in an opinion filed this day, that a pleading containing substantially the same allegations as the complaint in the present case does not state a cause of action against Phippen. The difference in the allegations in the two cases is not sufficient to warrant a different conclusion in this case. In the present case, the plaintiff alleges that he was riding in the automobile of defendant J. A. Phippen as his guest; that said Phippen was driving at a prudent rate of speed; that the plaintiff was unacquainted with the condition of the road and the danger incident to traveling thereon, and was unacquainted with the presence of the sheer drop or perpendicular declivity of about 20 feet from the surface of the road-bed to the bed of said creek; that, as the automobile approached the point where said roadway left said creek and terminated in such perpendicular drop or declivity, no lights were displayed or other warning given of the danger there present, and no warning lights were displayed or warning of any kind given of the fact that said road was not safe to travel on, or that said road approached said bank of said creek and terminated in such drop or declivity; that as the said J. A. Phippen was so driving and operating his said automobile, and approaching said point, he negligently failed to observe the fact that said road terminated at said creek in such drop or declivity, and so drove his automobile as to cause the same to approach so close to said drop or declivity as to make it impossible to stop the same before the same went over said drop or declivity and was precipitated to the bottom of said creek; that the plaintiff, using ordinary care and being constantly on the alert for possible danger, could not, while seated in the rear seat of said automobile, see the condition of said road, or ascertain the fact that the same terminated at said creek.

The only allegation of negligence made against the defendant Phippen is that he "negligently failed to observe the fact that said road terminated at said creek in such drop or declivity." The mere statement that he did this negligently is not sufficient, in the face of other allegations, which clearly show an absence of negligence on his part. Since it is alleged that no lights were displayed, nor any warnings of any kind given of the fact that the declivity existed, or that the road was unsafe, or that the said road approached the bank of said creek—and it is not alleged that the defendant Phippen had independent knowledge of these facts—it is apparent that Phippen could not be negligent in failing to observe something which it was impossible for him to observe.

While some cases have held that it is a sufficient allegation of negligence to state that the act complained of was done negligently by the defendant, specifying, however, the particular act alleged to have been negligently done (Fisher v. Western Fuse & Explosives Co., 12 Cal. App. 739, 747, 108

Pac. 659), it seems that this is true only where such allegation is not contradicted by other allegations of the complaint. Where it appears from other specific facts alleged that the act alleged to have been done negligently was not done negligently, the complaint is insufficient to charge negligence. Citizens' Co. v. Abright, 14 Ind. App. 433, 42 N. E. 239, 1028; Louisville Co. v. Bates, 146 Ind. 564, 45 N. E. 109. This rule, indeed, would seem to be the only natural and logical one. A pleader should not be allowed to negative his own averments and yet ask that they be considered sufficient.

As plaintiff has not stated a cause of action against defendant Phippen, and as the other defendants are residents of San Benito county, the motion to change the place of trial to San Benito county should have been granted.

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the court below to grant said motion.

(Civ. 2842.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 11, 1919.)

1. EASEMENTS ⇨3(2)—RESERVATION OF EASEMENT APPURTENANT.

Deed to plaintiffs, reserving to grantor, as an easement in favor of the tract owned by him, perpetual right of way over and across strip of land conveyed, constituting northerly 30 feet across width of his tract, constituted and reserved only easement appurtenant to tract of which strip was the northerly portion, and not an easement in gross.

2. EASEMENTS ⇨24 — EASEMENT APPURTENANT—EASEMENT IN GROSS.

An easement appurtenant to a particular tract of land was not like an easement in gross, which the owner could have conveyed away apart from the land.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨173(2) — RAISING QUESTION FOR FIRST TIME—DEDICATION OF LAND IN SUIT.

In suit to quiet title, wherein issue of dedication to public use of strip of land in suit was not presented by defendants' pleadings or embraced in findings or in fact raised on record, question cannot be urged on appeal for first time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by Anna B. Nilson and others against Walfrid Wahlstrom and Maria Wahlstrom, his wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellants.

R. L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, and R. M. Barrett, of Oxnard, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the plaintiffs' favor in an action to quiet their title as against the defendants to a strip of land 30 feet wide running across what is known as the Marshall ranch, in the county of Sonoma, and containing .55 acres off land.

The facts out of which the respective claims of the parties herein arise to interests in this strip of land are these: The ranch was a goodly number of years ago subdivided. In the year 1907 one Geo. P. McNear was the owner of a tract within the boundaries of said ranch containing nearly 17 acres, including this strip, which constituted the northerly 30 feet across the width thereof. The plaintiffs Nelson and Abraham were the owners of two other tracts in said ranch to the westward of the McNear tract. On June 8, 1907, McNear conveyed to Anna B. Nilson and Albertine Abrahamson said 30-foot wide strip of land extending from the county road to their properties, and in said conveyance he inserted the following reservation:

"Reserving, however, unto the said party of the first part and the 16.30-acre tract herein-after described as an easement in favor of said tract of 16.30 acres forever, and in favor of every piece and parcel thereof and in favor of the said party of the first part, his grantees, heirs or assigns, and all persons who may purchase any portion of said 16.30-acre tract, the perpetual right of way over and across said strip hereinbefore described, containing .55 acres."

On February 24, 1917, said McNear undertook to convey to the defendants herein, who own tracts of land on the northerly side of said strip, rights of way over and across the same. When these defendants undertook to exercise the rights purported to have thus been granted them by McNear, the plaintiffs brought this action to quiet their title to the strip. The defendants appeared and answered denying the plaintiffs' exclusive right to said strip, and setting up affirmatively by both their answer and by a cross-complaint the aforementioned source and extent of their asserted rights in and to the use of the same. Upon the trial, the court found in the plaintiffs' favor and rendered its judgment accordingly, quieting their title to the strip. Upon this appeal the first, and in fact the only available question, is that of the construction to be given to the reservation in the deed from McNear to the plaintiffs above set forth. The respondents contend that it constitutes and reserves only an easement appurtenant to the lands of which it was the northerly portion retained by McNear, and no other or further easement or interest in McNear. The appellants contend that the said reservation is also to be construed as reserving an easement in gross in McNear apart from his ownership of his said adjoining land, which said easement in gross was transferable and transferred to the appellants.

[1, 2] We are entirely satisfied that the contention of the respondents which was upheld by the trial court must be sustained upon this appeal upon the authority of the following cases: Hopper v. Barnes, 113 Cal. 636, 45 Pac. 874; Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 99 Am. Dec. 354; Gardner v. San Gabriel Valley Bank, 7 Cal. App. 106, 93 Pac. 900; Jones v. Deardorff, 4 Cal. App. 18, 87 Pac. 213. The reservation in McNear thus construed as embracing only an easement appurtenant to the lands then owned by him and bounded on the north by this strip, it follows that he had nothing in the way of an easement in gross which he could have later conveyed to the defendants and appellants herein, and hence that as to them and their asserted rights of way over said strip derived from McNear the plaintiffs were entitled to have their title quieted.

[3] The appellants undertake to further urge upon this appeal that the evidence in the case showed that the said strip of land had been dedicated to the public use, and that as a portion of the general public they were entitled to a right of way over it for ingress to and egress from their premises. In respect to this contention it is only necessary to say that no such issue was presented by the pleadings or embraced in the findings of the court, or in fact raised upon the record before us. The question cannot, therefore, for the first time be urged upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

OFF v. CRUMP. (Civ. 2878.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 4, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨422—AMBIGUOUS NOTICE OF APPEAL—CONSIDERING APPEAL AS PROPERLY NOTICED.

Notice of appeal, reciting that the appeal is taken "from an order and judgment entered herein * * * denying the motion for a new trial and entering judgment against defendant," is uncertain and ambiguous; but, since it is open to a construction covering judgment as well as order denying new trial, which is not an appealable order under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, the appeal will be considered as properly noticed; respondent not appearing to have been misled or prejudiced.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨706(5)—COLLISION—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff pedestrian crossing a street, caused by being run into by defendant's automobile, evidence held to support court's findings as to defendant's negligence and as to plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨842(4)—FINDINGS OF COURT—REVIEW.

Question of contributory negligence of plaintiff injured by being run into by defendant's automobile while crossing a street being a matter on which under the evidence reasonable minds might differ the findings of trial court will not be disturbed.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨705(10)—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff pedestrian, in determining what course to pursue when one of two automobiles going in opposite directions close to him sounded horn, had the right to assume that defendant approaching street crossing would drive in a reasonable manner and not close to each other; State Motor Vehicle Law, § 20b, requiring that vehicles proceeding in opposite directions shall in passing give as nearly as possible one-half of road.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Hudner, Judge.

Action by E. T. Off against E. S. Crump. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment in this case in the sum of $800 for injuries caused from being run into by defendant's automobile. The judgment was entered December 10, 1915. There was a motion for a new trial, which was denied, under an order of court dated January 3, 1916. The notice of appeal recites that the appeal is taken "from an order and judgment entered herein on January 5, 1916, in favor of plaintiff and against this defendant, denying the motion for a new trial and entering judgment against defendant."

[1] The uncertainty and ambiguity of this notice is obvious. Respondent urges that it is notice only of an appeal from the order denying a new trial. At the date of this order and notice, an order denying a new trial had ceased to be an appealable order, under amendment of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure. Unless the appeal was also taken from the judgment, appellant has no standing in this court. It seems entirely probably that the purpose of the notice was an appeal from the order denying a new trial alone; but, as it is open to a construction covering the judgment as well, and as respondent does not appear to have been misled or prejudiced, we will consider the appeal as properly noticed.

The record comes here on a bill of exceptions, and the only real contention between the parties seems to be on the question of contributory negligence. Respondent objects to any consideration of the evidence applicable to that point on the ground that contributory negligence was not pleaded as a defense. The only matter in the answer suggesting a defense of contributory negligence is that, after controverting the allegations of the complaint charging negligence of defendant in driving his automobile, it is denied "that the plaintiff was struck by said automobile from any cause other than his own negligence," and it is alleged that, "on the contrary, the collision with the plaintiff, and any injuries which the plaintiff may have received therefrom, were wholly and solely due to the negligence of the plaintiff." Similar allegations of negligence as against a plaintiff have been held insufficient to raise an issue of contributory negligence in Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. M. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 Pac. 714, and Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 558, 163 Pac. 885. It is contended, however, by appellant that the case was tried, and evidence introduced, on the theory that contributory negligence had been made an issue. The findings seem, at any rate, to have been framed on this theory, as the court finds:

"That at the time plaintiff was struck by said automobile he was using reasonable and ordinary care, and was not negligent. That no negligence of the plaintiff contributed to or was the proximate cause of the accident."

[2, 3] Assuming, for the purposes of this case, that the issue was properly before the court, we are of the opinion that the findings of the court, both as to the negligence of the defendant and as to freedom from contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, are supported by the evidence. That the evidence was sufficient to justify a finding of negligence against the defendant does not seem to be seriously disputed. There is more room for disagreement as to whether plaintiff showed a want of ordinary care contributing proximately to the injuries complained of; but it is a matter on which, under the evidence, reasonable minds might differ, and therefore the finding of the court cannot be disturbed.

[4] There is very little conflict in the testimony. The plaintiff started to cross a street, apparently in the business district of Pasadena. He was aware that two automobiles were approaching from different directions; he seems to have kept an eye alternately first on one and then on the other, as he progressed across the street. When near the center of the street, the car approaching from the south, being in close proximity to the plaintiff, sounded its horn. He looked toward it, at the same time taking a quick step or two forward to clear its track. He then turned his face toward the defendant's machine, coming from the north, and which was at some distance from him when he had looked that way just before the horn of the other machine sounded, and was at that instant, without warning, run into by defendant's machine. The defendant admits that he did not see plaintiff at any time before running him down. There is evidence that his attention was distracted from his driving by a dog which he and his wife had in the machine. The very fact that he did not see plaintiff, in broad daylight, crossing the street, which was not congested with traffic, is evidence in itself that he was not paying attention to his driving. It is said that no significance is to be attached to the fact that defendant did not sound his horn, as plaintiff already knew he was approaching; yet a timely warning from that source would have notified plaintiff how close he was. Plaintiff could not look both ways at once, but he could have heard from both directions. All these circumstances of defendant's negligence have this bearing on the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence: He had a right, in determining what was the prudent course for him to take, to assume that defendant would drive in a reasonable and cautious manner. Medlin v. Spazier, 23 Cal. App. 242, 137 Pac. 1078.

To sum the whole matter up, if plaintiff was negligent it was in attempting to cross the street at all when two automobiles were approaching from opposite directions, and likely to pass each other about where he was attempting to cross. If this is negligence, then foot passengers will have to keep off the crossings of our business streets. That crossing a street is often dangerous there is no doubt; but it does not follow that it is negligence. On the busy streets of our cities every time a man attempts to cross, in the congested tion of teams and automobiles, he takes his life in his hands; but it is one of the dangers incident to the strenuous life of the city. Where this accident occurred, there does not seem to have been a great amount of traffic. The two cars in question, according to plaintiff's testimony, were about equidistant from him, and from 700 to 800 feet apart. Plaintiff, for all that appears, might have had to wait a long time to find the street entirely free from danger. Having attempted to cross, as we think he was probably justified in doing, he seems to have looked about him with a considerable degree of diligence, and probably was negotiating his passage with as much skill as would the average man. There seems to have been the whole width of the street for these automobiles to pass each other, and the plaintiff had no reason to suppose that they would attempt to pass so close together that he could not avoid one without getting into the path of the other. The State Motor Vehicle Law, § 20b (St. 1917, p. 401), requires that vehicles proceeding in opposite directions shall pass each other to the right, giving as nearly as possible one-half the road to each.

We cannot say that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings.

Judgment is affirmed.

IRWIN v. SILVA et al. (Civ. 1931.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 27, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 28, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS §132(1) — TIME OF FILING LIEN CLAIM—WORK OR MATERIALS FURNISHED NOT UNDER CONTRACT.

Under the Mechanics' Lien Law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187), while for work done under contract between the owner and contractor mechanics or materialmen can, at their election, file a claim either within 30 days after ceasing of labor or of furnishing material, or within 30 days after the completion of the original contract between owner and contractor, yet, where the work is not done under a contract, liens must be filed within 30 days after ceasing of labor or furnishing materials.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS §132(4)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION — "CONTRACT"—"ORIGINAL CONTRACT."

The word "contract," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that "every original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter within 60 days after the completion of his contract," shall file his lien, was intended to be used and understood in the sense employed by the term "original contract" in section 1183, and refers only to work done upon such a contract between owner and contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contract; Second Series, Contract to Answer for Default of Another.]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 118, 132(4)—TIME OF FILING CLAIM—ESTOPPEL OF LANDLORD.

The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, as to filing notice of completion of contract, does not apply where the work was done or material furnished without a contract, and the owner is not estopped by such section, in proceedings for foreclosure of the mechanics' or materialman's lien, from maintaining a defense on the ground that the lien was not filed within time.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. D. Young, Judge.

Action by S. J. Irwin, doing business under the firm name and style of the Irwin Lumber Company, against John Silva as tenant, and John Emrick as owner of premises, to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment in favor of plaintiff as against the tenant and in favor of the defendant owner, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Gordan A. Stewart, of Stockton, for appellant.

Webster, Webster & Blewett, of Stockton, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to foreclose a mechanic's lien on certain property belonging to the defendant, John Emrick. The land was under lease to defendant John Silva, who obtained from plaintiff lumber and material which he used in constructing certain buildings for his own use. Defendant Silva defaulted, judgment was in favor of defendant Emrick, and the appeal is by plaintiff, on the judgment roll, from said judgment.

It was found by the court:

That between the 5th day of June, 1915, and the 16th day of November, 1915, plaintiff sold and delivered to defendant Silva lumber and materials which were used by him in the erection of certain buildings; that said buildings were constructed by defendant Silva with the knowledge of the defendant Emrick; that during the course of construction of said buildings, and before they were completed, portions of them were occupied by defendant Silva. "That the defendant John Silva continued to work intermittently in and about said buildings and improvements up to the 4th day of December, 1915, at which time said buildings were completed. That said buildings were constructed by said John Silva in person and not by a contractor. That on the 8th day of February, 1916, and within 90 days after the last delivery of said lumber and building material and the completion of said buildings," plaintiff filed a claim of lien. "That no notice was ever filed by the defendants, or either of them, * * * setting forth the date when said buildings were completed, or any of the facts required to be set forth in section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure. * * * That the defendant John Emrick knew at all times that said buildings were in the course of construction, and he at no time gave notice that he would not be responsible for any bills incurred in the delivery of said lumber."

As conclusion of law the court declared:

That $540.45 was due plaintiff from defendant Silva, but "that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree against the defendant John Emrick establishing a lien upon the lands and premises of the said John Emrick in satisfaction of the judgment of the plaintiff against the defendant John Silva, * * * by reason that said claim of lien is null and void and of no force and effect, not having been filed within the time required by law."

The only question presented for our decision is: What time has a materialman in which to file a claim of lien for materials furnished and used in the construction of a building where it is not constructed under contract?

Section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"Every original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter, within thirty days after he has ceased to labor or has ceased to furnish materials, or both; or at his option, within thirty days after the completion of the original contract, if any, under which he was employed, must file for record * * * a claim of lien. * * * Any trivial imperfection in the said work, or in the completion of any contract by any lien claimant, or in the construction of any building, * * * shall not be deemed such a lack of completion as to prevent the filing of any lien; and, in all cases, any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for all the purposes of this chapter: The occupation or use of a building * * * by the owner, or his representative; or the acceptance by said owner * * * of said building, * * * or cessation from labor for thirty days upon any contract or upon any building, * * * or the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof; the filing of the notice hereinafter provided for. The owner may within ten days after completion of any contract, or within forty days after cessation from labor thereon, file for record * * * a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation from labor occurred. * * * In case such notice be not so filed then the said owners and all persons derailing title from or claiming any interest through him shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter; provided, that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, * * * or the alteration, addition or repair thereto."

It will be observed that the lien was filed after 60 but within 90 days after the time at which the court finds that the buildings were completed. But the plaintiff relies upon and invokes the estoppel created by the latter part of section 1187, where there is default on the part of the owner of land upon which a building has been erected to file for record within the time prescribed by the section a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation of labor occurred. On the other hand, the respondent contends, and upon that theory the court below decided the case, that the estoppel raised by said section has no application to a case where, as is the claim here, the building is not constructed or the improvement made under a contract. In other words, it is contended that the estoppel referred to is not available to the claimant where the building is constructed or the improvement is made by the owner of the land himself, either actually or constructively.

The position of counsel for the respondent, as above stated, follows from their construction of the following portion of said section, or from the signification they ascribe to the word "contract" as employed therein, "The owner may within ten days after completion of any contract," etc., implying, as is the theory, that the estoppel which follows from the failure of the owner to file the notice prescribed has relation to a contract, and that, unless therefore the work is done under a contract, the estoppel cannot be made available as against the defense by the owner that the lien has not been filed within the time fixed by said section.

No case has been cited, and, after some independent research, we have found none, in which the precise question presented here has ever been considered and decided by any of the appellate courts of this state. We are therefore driven to a determination of the problem submitted entirely by what we consider to be a reasonable construction of the language of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Counsel for the appellant, as in support of his contention as to the meaning and scope of that portion of said section which relates to the estoppel, lays particular stress upon the proposition that it is thereby provided that the estoppel shall apply to "any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter." It is argued that this language clearly implies that the estoppel is applicable in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien authorized by any section or provision embraced within the chapter of the Code relating to the liens of mechanics, laborers, materialmen, etc., and therefore may be invoked as well in a case where the work has not been done under a contract as in a case where the work has been done under a contract. But whether this argument be sound or not must be determined from an ascertainment of the meaning of the preceding language of the section. The language "shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter" obviously means, not necessarily all liens "provided for in this chapter," but any lien "provided for in this chapter" as to which it was the legislative intent that the estoppel might be invoked; so, after all, we are, as stated, required to turn to the language itself providing for the estoppel to ascertain in what cases the estoppel may be relied upon by a lien-claimant. And in getting at the true meaning of the provision as to the estoppel—that is, to ascertain in what cases the Legislature intended that the estoppel may be invoked—we will be greatly assisted by an examination of the preceding parts of said section and other provisions of the lien law.

"Every original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter, within thirty days after he has ceased to labor or has ceased to furnish materials, or both; or at his option, within thirty days after the completion of the original contract, if any, under which he was employed, must file for record," his lien, etc.

It seems to us to be perfectly plain that that language was intended to mean that, in the case of any work being done under a contract between the owner of the property upon which the improvement is to be made and a contractor, the persons furnishing either labor or materials in such case may, at their election, select one of two alternatives as to the time of filing their liens for the same, to wit, either within 30 days after they have ceased to labor or to furnish materials or within 30 days after the completion of the original contract between the owner and the contractor, but that where the work is not done by or under such a contract—as for instance, where the work is done by the owner of the property himself, either actually or presumptively, laborers and materialmen must file their liens within 30 days after they have ceased to labor or ceased to furnish materials. That the second alternative or option was not intended to apply to the latter class is, it seems to us, indubitably shown by the use of the words, "if any," immediately preceding the words, "original contract." The phrase, "if any," as so employed, was certainly intended to and does operate as a limitation upon the second option—that is, the option to file the lien within 30 days after the completion of the original contract, if there be any such contract. If there be no contract, then the lien claimants furnishing labor or materials are afforded full opportunity to preserve their remedy by lien by filing the same within 30 days after they have ceased to labor or to furnish materials.

The theory upon which those bestowing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the construction of a building, where the work is done or to be done by contract between the owner and a contractor, are afforded by the statute two different occasions upon which they, at their option, may file their liens may thus be explained: In the case of work done by or under contract, the contractor himself employs the labor and orders the materials essential to the completion of his contract, and, it may be added, is primarily liable for the labor bestowed upon and the materials furnished for the construction or repair of the building or other structure. It is safe to say that in such a case the contractor is required, in many instances, to rely upon the money he is to receive as the contract price with which to pay for the labor and materials employed by him in the execution of the contract, and it follows that, in such circumstances, he must obtain credit to enable him to carry out the terms of his contract. The contract may provide for the payment of the contract price in installments, of which it may be agreed that some shall not be paid until the contract has been fully completed, or substantially so. The Legislature, having this situation in view, very properly and wisely, therefore, took the pains to provide for such a contingency by giving to laborers and materialmen, in the case of work done by contract, the option of filing their liens within the time specified as well after the completion of the contract as after the cessation of labor or of the furnishing of materials, thus enabling them to extend the credit to the contractor, if they wish to do so, and at the same time enabling the contractor to go on with the completion of his contract without that embarrassment or handicap which might follow as against him from the filing of liens before the completion of the work. In such case, the laborers and materialmen would not be required to exercise constant watchfulness to ascertain precisely when the time for filing their liens would begin to run, for then they would know from the contract itself, which should be on file in the county recorder's office, about when it would be completed, or may rely for knowledge of that fact upon the notice of completion which the owner is required to file, in the case of a statutory as well as in that of an actual completion (Boscus v. Waldmann, 31 Cal. App. 245, 254, 255, 160 Pac. 180), to preserve in himself the right to object if the lien is not filed within the statutory time.

The situation is entirely different where the work is not done by contract. The owner in such case is primarily responsible for the claims of laborers and materialmen furnishing the labor and the materials to carry on the work. Then in that case there may be no definite plans or definite time fixed for the completion of the work, with the result that the work may be extended over a long period of time to comport with the convenience of the owner. The work may be, in point of magnitude, of little consequence, and material for its purpose may be ordered and delivered but not put into the building or structure for months after its delivery, and thus claimants in such a case, if they were required to wait until the filing of a notice of completion by the owner, would have to wait an indefinite time before they could file their liens, without prematurely doing so. Such lien claimants can, themselves, it is obvious, always know, independently and without the aid of extrinsic evidence or notice, when they have ceased to labor or to furnish materials, and thus more than other persons are in a position to know the date from which the time within which they must file their liens, if they would enjoy the benefit of such protection, begins to run. They are not required to be incessantly on the alert and so watch the progress of the work for the purpose of ascertaining when it is completed.

[2] But it is hardly necessary to proceed further in the discovery of reasons which justify the conclusion that in but one contingency are the laborers and materialmen at liberty, under the statute, to file their liens after the completion of the work. It may be added, however, that the initial language of section 1187 clearly and unquestionably provides for two different courses which the owner of land is at liberty to adopt for the erection or improvement of structures thereon, to wit: (1) Where the work of construction or repair is done under a contract between the owner of the land upon which the improvement is to be made and a contractor, in which case either the original or subcontractor employs the labor and orders the materials. (2) Where the owner, either by himself directly or by agent, presumptively or constructively, does the work and employs the labor and orders the materials; and that from this proposition it becomes the more clearly apparent that wherever the term "contract" is employed in the statute it was intended to be so used and to be understood in the sense in which it is employed in section 1183, the initial section of the chapter upon the subject of liens. And that the sense in which that word or the phrase, "original contract," is used in the latter section, is that of work to be done by or under a contract between the owner and a contractor is plainly evidenced by the provision contained in said section 1183 to the effect that the liens "in this chapter provided" shall not in the case of any claimants, other than the contractor, be limited, as to any amount, by any "contract price agreed upon between the contractor and the owner, except," etc., the provision as to the effect of the filing of "such original contract" before the commencement of the work upon the rights of those performing labor thereon or furnishing materials thereunder, the provision for the filing of a bond with "such contract" in the office of the county recorder, the effect of which is, in addition to securing to lien claimants, other than the contractor, the payment of their liens, to restrict the right of recovery as against the owner to the "contract" price, and the provision that any change, alteration, or modification "of any such contract between the owner and his contractor" shall not have the effect of releasing or exonerating any surety or sureties upon any bond given under this section. All these provisions, we say, unquestionably, refer and apply to cases where the work is done, not by the owner himself, either actually or constructively, but by or under contract between the owner and a contractor, and from this, as before declared, the proposition seems to be clearly deducible—indeed, so much so as to transfer it far beyond the realm of doubt—that wherever the word "contract" or the phrase "original contract" is thereafter used in the law it must have been so employed in the sense in which section 1183 uses it, unless there is discernible from the statute itself some overruling reason for applying the term or the phrase in a different sense. No just reason has been shown and, after a painstaking consideration of the lien law in its entirety, none has occurred to us, supporting the contention of the appellant with respect to the sense in which the Legislature intended the word "contract" as used in that part of section 1187 relating to the filing of notice by the owner of the completion of the work was to be understood and applied. Indeed, the construction above given section 1183 and the initial language of section 1187, about the correctness of which construction it seems to us there can be no doubt, is itself sufficient to negative the contention that the word "contract" as used in the provision relating to the filing of notice of completion by the owner is to be interpreted to mean the "building" or the "structure" or the "work," whatever may be its character, to be done. As pointed out, there is apparent no good or any reason why that word should be given such a meaning. To require the owner, in cases where he has himself, either actually or by presumption, done the work, to file a notice of completion would add nothing to the rights of lien claimants in such cases, it would benefit them in no way, it would afford them no better or greater or more advantageous opportunity to preserve their right to liens than by the provision that they may file their liens within thirty days after they have ceased to labor or to furnish materials. Besides, as already shown, the exercise of the second option provided for in a case where the work is done by contract could not affect the owner where he does the work himself as it does a contractor in the former case, for while the provision may, as shown, help the contractor in certain indicated circumstances, and at the same time afford ample protection to claimants, yet where the work is done by the owner himself it can be of no just benefit to him, since he must himself pay for the labor and materials employed in the work, and may proceed with the work according to his own wish and convenience. He may, as before stated, extend the work of construction over a long period of time—in fact, indefinitely—or do it by piecemeal, if he is without the means to press it on to completion as early or soon as ordinarily he might, and yet in such case he cannot suffer by reason thereof as could a contractor, who is, ordinarily, bound to complete his contract within a specified or reasonable time.

But there is another and, we think, a well-nigh conclusive reply to the contention that the provision for the filing by the owner of a notice of the completion of the contract applies to the case where the work is not done under contract, and it is this: The provision with respect to the filing of a notice of completion as it read prior to the revision of the lien law by the Legislature of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1313) was in the following language:

"The owner of any property on which labor has been performed, or for which materials have been furnished to be used in the construction, alteration, addition to, or repair, either in whole or in part, of any work mentioned in section 1183 of this Code, must, within ten days after the completion thereof, or within forty days after the cessation from labor upon any unfinished contract, or upon any unfinished building, improvement, or structure, or the alteration, addition to, or the repair thereof, file for record * * * a notice setting forth," etc.

See Stats. 1897, p. 202.

We have seen no cases which have construed the section as it thus read prior to 1911, but undoubtedly the language quoted could reasonably have been so construed as to have made it applicable to cases where the work was not done by contract as well as those cases where the work was done by contract, and it is most probably true that, when so applying it, it was found to be so unnecessary—so impotent in the achievement of any useful purpose—that the Legislature of 1911, having so viewed it, ex industria, changed it so as that it would read as it now exists. At any rate, we can conceive of no stronger reason calling for the amendment than that of avoiding the absurdity of requiring the owner, where he has himself done the work, to file a notice of completion when at the same time there exists a provision which affords the laborer and materialman in such a case the right of filing their liens within 30 days after they have ceased to labor or to furnish materials, an event produced by their own acts or conduct and which, therefore, they of necessity have actual knowledge of.

[3] It follows, of course, from the view of section 1187 above given, that only those whose rights would be affected by the filing of the notice of completion may invoke the estoppel provided for in said section when no such notice is filed. If, in other words, the provision as to the notice of completion applies only when there is a contract, then, obviously, the estoppel is applicable and may be invoked only when there is a contract. There being no contract in this case—that is, the buildings for which the plaintiff furnished materials not having been constructed by or under contract between the owner and a contractor but constructively by the owner himself—the provision of section 1187 as to the filing of notice of completion does not, as to the appellant, apply, and as an essential corollary of that proposition the estoppel provided for in said section does not apply, and therefore cannot be invoked in this case. In a word, the plaintiff, by reason of the circumstances of this case, comes within that class of lien claimants who have available to them under the statute but a single course to pursue to preserve their remedy by lien, viz.: to file their liens within 30 days after they have ceased to labor upon or furnish material for the work to be done.

The effect of the construction herein of the statute, as amended in 1911, is obviously not to impair in any way the rights of any claimants, but, on the contrary, it seems to us, is to make it fair and just to all lien claimants. And no discrimination can result from the statute as it is so construed. The statute deals with two general classes of cases, and as we construe it those of each class are treated alike. The contingency upon the happening of which each class must act to preserve his rights is plainly pointed out and affords to every claimant full opportunity for protecting his rights under the statute. If our construction of section 1187 would lead to any other result, we would, of course, be compelled to hold, in the face of plain, ordinarily understandable words and language, that the Legislature did not intend to say what the face of the language of the statute clearly and naturally implies and signifies. But, as we have shown, to give to all claimants their constitutional right to liens, and at the same time give to owners just protection, there is no necessity for such a construction of the law established for the enforcement of liens as it exists at the present time. As declared, the law, as we here construe it, in no way curtails or qualifies or impairs the rights of any of the claimants of either class, but leaves all with equal rights, according to the several contingencies upon which they may preserve their right of lien, and affords them as well as the owners of property ample protection.

Accordingly, we conclude that the decision below is correct, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

MALLETT v. DOHERTY. (L. A. 4681.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1919.
Rehearing Denied May 15, 1919.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING ⚡3(7) — SALE OF TIMBER—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

Instrument granting timber on tract with covenants that landowner would permit removal within a specified time held not to convey absolute title to timber, but only right to take such timber as should be removed within specified period.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚡231(16) —
BONA FIDE PURCHASER—TIMBER—RECORDED

Where person holding contract right to remove timber from a tract during a certain period is prevented by the landowner from exercising such right, the time for removal should be extended by adding to it the period of such interruption.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by J. H. Mallett against W. J. Doherty. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Alfred Siemon and W. W. Kaye, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Borton & Thiele, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant to quiet the title of the former to an undivided one-half interest in certain standing timber.

On October 5, 1905, the Kern County Lumber Company, a corporation, being the owner of a tract of land on Mt. Breckenridge, in Kern county, executed and delivered an instrument in writing which purported to convey the standing timber on the said land to the plaintiff. This instrument was duly acknowledged and recorded.

The plaintiff, on October 27, 1905, assigned to the Madera Sugar Pine Company, a corporation, the Fresno Flume & Irrigation Company, a corporation, the Sanger Lumber Company, and the West Side Lumber Company, a corporation, an undivided one-half interest in the said timber.

On November 12, 1908, the Kern County Lumber Company conveyed to the defendant the land upon which the said timber stands. This deed was placed in escrow with the Producer's Savings Bank in Bakersfield on June 19, 1909, with escrow instructions to the effect that the deed be not delivered until the balance of the purchase price, which included a subsisting mortgage of $5,000 on the land, was paid by the defendant. The final payment was made and the deed delivered on May 22, 1912.

In his complaint, filed on December 6, 1912, the plaintiff alleged that he was the absolute owner of an undivided one-half interest in the timber, with a right to the free use of the land without charge for the purpose of removing the timber until the 5th day of October, 1915. It was further alleged that the defendant claims the ownership of the land and the timber; that on November 1, 1912, the defendant evicted the plaintiff from the real property, and ever since then has held possession thereof against the plaintiff. The plaintiff prayed that the defendant be required to set forth his right to the timber, and the real property; that a decree be entered quieting the title of the plaintiff to an undivided one-half interest in the timber; that the defendant be enjoined from claiming any right, title, and ownership therein; and that he be enjoined from hindering and preventing or in any way obstructing the plaintiff in the free use and occupation of the land for logging purposes and for the purpose of cutting and removing the timber.

The defendant answered and denied that the plaintiff is the absolute owner of, or has any interest in, the timber or any right to the use of the land for the removal thereof. He further denied that the plaintiff had ever been in possession of the land or that he had been evicted therefrom, alleging that he himself was the absolute owner of both the land and the timber.

The defendant pleaded separately section 318, section 319, subdivision 1 of section 337, subdivision 2 of section 338, and subdivision 3 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure as a bar to the complaint "and the cause of action attempted to be set forth therein."

The case was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals. The plaintiff also appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial, and the case comes here upon a bill of exceptions used on the hearing of the said motion.

The instrument referred to reads as follows:

"That for and in consideration of the sum of three thousand dollars, the said party of the first part does hereby grant, bargain, sell and convey to the party of the second part, all timber suitable for sawmill purposes, and standing and being upon the following described real estate, * * * together with the free use and occupation of said premises and appurtenances, without charge, for the purpose of cutting, hauling, and sawing said timber.

"And it is further understood and agreed that the party of the second part shall have six (6) years from the date of this agreement to remove said timber and an extension of four years thereafter, if the party of the first part shall not have sooner disposed of said land, and in the event of said land being sold, it shall be upon the express condition that no part of the timber hereinbefore mentioned shall be cut or used in the manufacture of timber, during said term of four years."

The timber had not been removed by the plaintiff or his co-owners within the six-year period, which expired on October 5, 1911, nor at the commencement of this action, on December 6, 1912.

It is the position of the appellant that the instrument conveyed to him absolute title to the timber, so that he could remove it at any time, even after the expiration of ten years, and that the stipulation for the removal of the timber was merely a covenant and the timber remained his property even though it was not removed within the time specified.

As we understand the position of the respondent, it is that the intention of the parties was fully expressed in the contract, and that they intended "that the right to remove the timber and the title of the plaintiff to the timber should terminate and be at an end together."

On the question of the plaintiff's title to the timber and the right to use the land for the removal of the timber, the court found:

"That the plaintiff was not * * * at the time of filing complaint herein and never at any time since has been the owner, either absolute or otherwise, of an undivided one-half interest * * * in the timber. * * * That the plaintiff did not have * * * at the time of filing his complaint herein and has not had at any time subsequent thereto the free use and occupation of all or any of the above-described lands without charge or otherwise, * * * until the 5th day of October, 1915, * * * for the purpose of cutting, sawing, hauling, and removing said timber. * * *"

No other findings were made by the court.

In support of his contention that the instrument conveyed to him absolute title to the timber, the appellant relies on the companion cases of Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 Pac. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107, and Gibbs v. Peterson, 163 Cal. 759, 127 Pac. 62. We are of the opinion that these cases are not determinative of this case. In the Peterson-Gibbs Cases the instrument involved provided, not merely that the vendees of the timber should have a period of ten years within which to remove it, but also that if it was not removed within ten years the vendees should thereafter pay a yearly rental of $200 for the privilege of removing such timber, and it was agreed, "that all the privileges granted herein are to continue until such timber is removed." In view of the provision for the payment of rent after the ten-year period, this court construed the instrument as an absolute conveyance without condition. This obviously is correct, for the provision for the payment of rent for an indefinite period after the expiration of the ten years in case the timber should not be removed indicates clearly that it was the intention of the parties that the vendees should have the right to remove the timber after the specified term. The court said: "The question in each case is as to what is the contract between the parties." The doctrine of the Peterson-Gibbs cases was followed in Ciapusci v. Clark, 12 Cal. App. 44, 106 Pac. 436, and in Anderson v. Palladine (App.) 178 Pac. 553; the court in each of those cases construing the instruments as giving the purchaser of the timber the right to remove it after the expiration of the time specified.

[1-3] The instrument herein contains no language indicating that the appellant was to have more than ten years within which to remove the timber. While the language is somewhat involved, the instrument is, in effect, equivalent to one conveying the timber, "the same to be removed within ten years." This finds support in the provision:

"That in the event of said land being sold, it shall be upon the express condition that no part of the timber hereinbefore mentioned shall be cut or used in the manufacture of timber, during said term of four years."

It is conceded that this restriction was intended to apply to the purchaser of the land. Since it is plain that the appellant was entitled to an aggregate term of ten years, and this action was brought before such term had expired, it will not be necessary to consider the arguments of respective counsel as to the meaning of the phrase, "shall not have sooner disposed of said land," including the question whether it was "disposed of" on the date of the execution of the deed or when it came out of escrow. It may be mentioned that the lumber company failed to put the "express condition" in the deed when the land was sold to the defendant, but this in no way affects the rights of the plaintiff as to the time for the removal of the timber, since the instrument conveying it to the plaintiff was recorded, and the defendant was therefore put upon constructive notice of the provision.

The rule of construction as to contracts for the sale of standing trees to be removed within a specified time is thus stated in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 541:

"Contracts for the sale of standing trees to be removed within a specified time have generally been construed by the courts as sales of only so many trees as the vendee might cut and remove within the time designated, the balance remaining the property of the vendor."

See, also, 25 Cyc. 1549; 17 R. C. L. 1084; and 55 L. R. A. 526.

The weight of authority is in accord with this rule. McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 36 S. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513; Baxter & Co. v. Mattox, 106 Ga. 344, 32 S. E. 94; Howard v. Lincoln, 13 Me. 122; Webber v. Proctor, 89 Me. 404, 36 Atl. 631; McIntyre v. Barnard, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 52; Patterson v. Graham, 164 Pa. 234, 30 Atl. 247; Golden v. Glock, 57 Wis. 118, 15 N. W. 12, 46 Am. Rep. 32; Saltonstall v. Little, 90 Pa. 422, 35 Am. Rep. 683; Williams v. Flood, 63 Mich. 487, 30 N. W. 93.

It is to be noted that the instruments in the above cases, like the one at bar, employ words of present grant.

The question of a forfeiture arising from a condition subsequent has been argued at great length by counsel. But the question is not involved in this case, for the reason that it was the intention of the parties that the right to take the timber should be limited to ten years. The legal result follows that the vendee would be entitled to only so much of the timber as he might remove within the time, the balance remaining the property of the vendor. As stated, however, the ten-year period had not expired when the complaint was filed. There is no finding on the issue that the plaintiff was ejected from the property. If the plaintiff was prevented by the defendant from going on the land and cutting the timber, the period of interruption should be taken into account and the term extended by operation of law for the time during which the plaintiff was so prevented from exercising his right.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered for the purpose of determining whether the appellant has any time remaining within which he may remove the timber and decree accordingly.

HABEAS CORPUS §30(2) — QUESTIONS FOR DETERMINATION—SUFFICIENCY OF INFORMATION.

Whether the specific acts alleged as constituting the felony of drawing a bank check with intent to defraud, as defined by Pen. Code, § 476a, fail to sufficiently show the public offense attempted to be charged cannot be considered on habeas corpus.

In Bank.

Petition by Mae Kavanaugh for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied.

Geo. D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The information in the superior court upon which the judgment against petitioner is based clearly attempted to charge the felony defined by section 476a of the Penal Code. Whether the specific facts alleged as constituting the particular offense failed to sufficiently show the public offense attempted to be charged is a question which cannot be considered on habeas corpus under the well-settled rule of this jurisdiction. Matter of Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605. See, also, Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 770, 96 Pac. 804.

As to the second point, in view of the facts and exhibits shown by the petition, it must be held that the superior court did vacate the order suspending the execution of the judgment.

The application for a writ of habeas corpus was denied for these reasons.

MARSH v. LAPP. (L. A. 4742.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §110—ORDERS APPEALABLE—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL—STATUTE.

An appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial is no longer allowed, and must be dismissed. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended by St. 1915, p. 209.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §757(1)—BRIEFS—SUFFICIENCY—PORTIONS OF RECORD.

Where an appeal is taken under the alternative method, and defendant does not print in his briefs, in accordance with the statutory provisions, such portions of the record as he relies upon, his appeal deserves no consideration. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §840(4)—OVERRULING OF DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT—FILING OF AMENDED COMPLAINT.

Defendant cannot urge on appeal that his demurrer to the first amended complaint on the ground of uncertainty was improperly overruled, where the record shows a second amended complaint was filed, since only the pleadings upon which the issues were joined may be attacked on appeal.

4. PLEADING §406(7) — OBJECTIONS — WAIVER—UNCERTAINTY.

Although defendant demurred to the first amended complaint for uncertainty and the demurrer was overruled, where defendant failed to specifically demur to the second amended complaint, he waived the objection of uncertainty.

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES $\Rightarrow$ 262(1)—SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY—VIEW OF PROPERTY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 694, requiring that in the case of an execution sale of personal property capable of manual delivery the property must be within the view of those attending the sale, does not apply in a case where a tenant, as mortgagor, has waived his right under the statute by removing part of the mortgaged chattels, after the landlord, mortgagor, had published notice of the sale under terms of mortgage securing rent.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action be Cecell L. Marsh against C. E. Lapp. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, the defendant appeals. Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed, and judgment appealed from affirmed.

Clyde R. Burr and Harold G. Ferguson, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin and Alex. Macdonald, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. [1] The defendant appeals from a judgment in plaintiff's favor, and attempts to appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The appeal from such order, being no longer allowed by statute, must be dismissed. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, amended 1915 (St. 1915, p. 209); Regoli v. Stevenson, 176 Pac. 158.

[2] The appeal is under the alternative method. Since defendant does not print in his briefs, in accordance with the statutory provisions, such portions of the record as he wishes to rely upon, his appeal deserves no consideration. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c; Frankfort, etc., Co. v. Bernardini, 174 Pac. 33. We have, however, examined the record sufficiently to dispose of the case upon its merits.

In February, 1915, the defendant was in possession of the Alta Vista Apartments, in Los Angeles, under a lease from the plaintiff, secured by a mortgage on defendant's furniture. The defendant being in arrears in rent in the sum of $3,619.42, and demand having been duly made, defendant defaulted. On February 23d, in accordance with the terms of the mortgage, plaintiff served on defendant a notice of sale of the furniture to satisfy the indebtedness, to be held March 3d, at the Alta Vista Apartments, where the furniture was. About March 1st, defendant attempted to remove the furniture, and succeeded in removing about half of it, which he stored in a warehouse. Pursuant to the notice, the sale was held at the apartment house. The auctioneer offered all the furniture for sale, and the plaintiff purchased it. The present action, in claim and delivery, was brought to recover the furniture thus purchased.

[3, 4] But two points are made on the appeal. The first is that defendant's demurrer to the amended complaint on the ground of uncertainty was improperly overruled. But the record shows that the plaintiff filed, by leave of court, a second amended complaint, and that this was not met by demurrer, and that the action was tried upon it. The last amended complaint superseded the first amended complaint, and the original complaint, and consequently the sufficiency of the latter cannot be considered. Only the pleadings upon which the issues were joined may be attacked on appeal. Schneider v. Brown, 85 Cal. 205, 24 Pac. 715; Bray v. Lowery, 163 Cal. 256, 260, 124 Pac. 1004. Defendant by failing to specially demur to the second amended complaint waived the objection of uncertainty.

[5] Defendant's second point is that, even though the property in question was sold for the sum of $3,619.42, which was admittedly the full value of all the property, both in the apartment house and in the warehouse, the sale was nevertheless invalid as to the property in the warehouse, because violative of the provision of section 694 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that in the case of an execution sale of personal property capable of manual delivery the property must be " * * * within view of those who attend the sale. * * * " Under the circumstances of this case there is no merit in this point. The statutory rule is intended for the protection of the judgment debtor, and he may waive his right thereunder if he sees fit to do so. Lexington Bank v. Wirges, 52 Neb. 649, 72 N. W. 1049. The removal of the property by defendant after notice of the sale amounted to such a waiver, and he cannot now be heard to complain of a result produced by his own voluntary act. Foster v. Goree, 5 Ala. 424, 429.

The appeal from the order denying a new trial is dismissed, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re MINEAR'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6032.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1919.)

WILLS §535 — CONSTRUCTION — RIGHTS OF CHILDREN NOT NAMED IN WILL.

Where will recites that testator is a single man who has never been married and provides that if he has other "heirs" than those named, they shall each receive only $5, persons not named, whether children or otherwise are intentionally excluded so that they are not entitled to share in his estate as if he had died intestate, under Civ. Code, § 1307.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

In the Matter of the Estate of W. L. Minear. Claim by alleged heirs and from a decree denying their claim, they appeal. Decree affirmed.

Ernest F. Baker and William Weinstein, both of Los Angeles, and Jacob Weinberger, of San Diego, for appellants.

Eugene Daney, S. W. Switzer, Johnson W. Peterbaugh, and M. H. Fleming, all of San Diego, for respondent.

At the close of the argument OLNEY, J., delivered the opinion of the court, SHAW and LAWLOR, JJ., concurring.

The decedent in this case died, leaving a will disposing of all of his estate to parties other than the appellants. The latter claim to be children of the testator and that they are entitled as such to inherit in spite of the will under section 1307 of the Civil Code, which provides that "When a testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children, or for the issue of any deceased child, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, such child, or the issue of such child, has the same share in the estate of the testator as if he had died intestate, and succeeds thereto as provided in the preceding section."

The sole question in this case is, therefore, whether or not it appears from this will that the omission of any provision for the appellants was intentional. The material portions of the will upon this point are two: First, "I am a single man, I have never been married," and, second, "Now if there should be any other or others than the ones that I have named in my will above that claim to be my lawful heirs and can and do prove that they are to each of them I will $5.00 five dollars if there should be any such." The point is made that this case is to be distinguished from the Estate of Lindsay, 176 Cal. 238, 168 Pac. 113, where a clause almost exactly the same as the second clause in the present will was involved on the ground that it appeared from the will itself in the Lindsay case that there were children and that, therefore, the testator by the general clause providing for a gift of five dollars to any one who should establish heirship must be taken to have had his children in mind, but that in this case there is no reference in the will to children and that, therefore, the general expression "my lawful heirs" must be taken not to have reference to children and it must be presumed that the testator had forgotten his children and unintentionally omitted to provide for them.

It seems to us very clear that this contention is not sound; that it is in fact refuted by the language of the will, "I am a single man. I never have been married." Taking the two provisions together, we think it is perfectly clear that what the testator in effect said was this: "I never have been married, therefore I have no children. But if any persons other than those named in my will prove they are my heirs (either as children or otherwise) I give each of them $5.00." The true construction of the will we believe to be that the testator intended to exclude from any substantial share in his estate any one not named in his will, whether a child or otherwise.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

McCOMBS et ux. v. CHURCH et ux.
(L. A. 4640.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER §80 — EXCHANGE—SALE BY ACRE INSTEAD OF BY FIXED BOUNDARIES.

In an action arising out of an exchange of real estate, evidence held to show that the parties contemplated an exchange at a fixed price per acre, and not a sale in gross of property with fixed boundaries.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER §65(2) — EXCHANGE OF LANDS—"MORE OR LESS."

The words "more or less," as they appear in instruments involved in an exchange of real property, ordinarily would tend to show that the sale was one in gross, rather than by the acre only, in the absence of contrary showing, but, where a contrary showing was made, such words cannot be said to conflict with the parties' intention that payment be made for the exact amount conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, More or Less.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §499(3)—REVIEW—NECESSITY OF OBJECTIONS BELOW.

The objection that parol proof was introduced to alter terms of written agreements of the parties cannot be considered, where the record does not show that such objection was made in the trial court.

4. EVIDENCE 433(8) — PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING WRITTEN AGREEMENT—MISTAKE.

In an action involving writings evidencing an exchange of real property, the objection to the parol proof to alter and vary terms cannot stand, where the writings themselves, through mistake, do not express the intention of the parties or one of them.

5. PLEADING 433(9)—INFERENCES IN AID OF PLEADING — OBJECTIONS AFTER JUDGMENT.

The objection that a complaint did not state a cause of action because it failed to aver that the mutual mistake pleaded as a cause of action did not arise from plaintiff's negligence cannot be sustained after judgment, where the absence of such negligence is fairly inferable from the allegations of the complaint, and no demurrer was interposed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by N. McCombs and wife against W. J. Church and wife. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Muhleman, Crump & Williams, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action arising out of an exchange of real estate. The merits of the appellant's motion for a new trial, which was denied, are involved in the appeal from the judgment.

The facts are these: The plaintiffs owned and resided upon a tract of land in Orange county which they believed contained 10 acres. The plaintiff N. McCombs brought the defendant Church to this tract and pointed out its boundaries, stating that he bought it for 10 acres, and that he supposed it to contain that much. The exchange, which also involved properties belonging to Church, was made by Church for the land as pointed out by McCombs. It was thought by both parties at this time that the tract contained 10 acres.

An agreement in writing consisting of a proposal and an acceptance was executed wherein the McCombs' property was thus described:

"Second piece of property owned by N. McCombs, situate in Orange county, state of California, containing ten acres, two miles west of Fullerton, California, on good roads boulevard, improved with five-room California cottage, six acres in two year old valencias, four acres in one year old valencias, two acres oat hay, three acres potatoes, two acres cabbages."

The valuation fixed upon the property was $11,000. This was subsequently merged in a new written agreement consisting of escrow instructions deposited with a title insurance company. In execution of the escrow instructions, McCombs executed a deed to Church for—

"lots 7 and 8 of Stern and Nicolas subdivision of sections 31 and 32, township 3 south, range 10 west, S. B. B. & M., as appears on a map plat thereof recorded March 9, 1903, in Book 3, page 13, of the Miscellaneous Maps, records of Orange county, California, estimated to contain 10 acres of land more or less."

In keeping with the escrow agreement, Church executed a mortgage back to McCombs on the same lands.

Five months later the deed and mortgage were sent to another title company for recordation; McCombs having announced the perfection of his title. The deed and mortgage were returned by the title company with a letter calling attention to the fact that the east acre of lot 8 had been sold, and that the description in the plaintiff's deed and the defendants' mortgage back should except from the description of lot 8 the acre so sold from said lot 8. The eastern boundary of the land of the plaintiffs was marked by a fence which was to the west of the easterly acre theretofore sold. The fence was pointed out by the plaintiff N. McCombs as his boundary line. His property was planted in oranges. The property to the east was not. The defendant actually received the property pointed out by the plaintiff N. McCombs with the boundaries indicated by him.

Upon receipt of the letter from the title company calling attention to the fact that one acre out of lot 8 had been previously sold, McCombs and Church, believing that this fact reduced the acreage of the land conveyed from 10 to 9 acres, effected a new agreement whereby the $1,300 mortgage was canceled and in lieu thereof a payment of $200 in cash was made, and the escrow instructions and agreement amended accordingly. The deeds were delivered and recorded. Immediately thereafter the plaintiffs learned from an inquiry addressed to the recorder of Orange county that the aforesaid lots 7 and 8 contained in the neighborhood of 10.80 acres, and that therefore the land conveyed to Church contained in the neighborhood of 9.80 acres (in fact 9.88 acres), and not 9 acres merely. They at once wrote to Church, stating the circumstances and demanding payment for the excess over 9 acres on the basis of $1,100 per acre. The defendants having refused to comply with this demand, the plaintiffs instituted the present action.

The trial court found that the exchange or sale was by the acre at the fixed price of $1,100 per acre, and that the plaintiffs did not intend to convey the excess of .88 of an acre to the defendants, and would not have conveyed this excess save through mutual mistake. Judgment was accordingly decreed for the plaintiffs in the sum of $973.50, or the value of .88 of an acre on the basis of $1,100 an acre with interest at 7 per cent. and the costs of the action. No complaint is made as to the form of the judgment.

[1] Despite appellants' contention to the contrary, we find there is some evidence to support these findings. Thus the testimony of the witness La Due, a real estate broker, called on behalf of the plaintiff is to the effect that, when negotiating for the plaintiff with Church for the exchange, he specifically told Church that the price of the land in controversy was $1,100 an acre, or $11,000 for the 10 acres. That this was the ultimate understanding of the parties themselves is evidenced by the fact that, when it was thought that the exchange involved not 10, but 9 acres, the contract was modified to cover the supposed deficiency in acreage by canceling the $1,300 mortgage and substituting in lieu thereof the payment of $200 in cash. If, as the appellant now contends, the agreement was for the sale in gross of property with fixed boundaries, he had received all the land he had bargained for at the price which he had agreed to pay therefor, and there was no basis for the new agreement. The adjustment seems then to have been made on the theory that the land was sold on the basis of $1,100 an acre.

[2] The words "more or less," as they appear in one or more of the written instruments involved in the exchange, might ordinarily tend to show that the sale was one in gross rather than by the acre, but this would be so only in the absence of a showing, such as was made here, that it was the intent of the parties to the contract to consummate a sale by the acre at so much per acre. Where, as here, it is shown that the parties undertook the one to convey, and the other to receive, a tract of land at so much per acre, the words "more or less" in the instruments involved in the transaction cannot be said to conflict with the intent of the parties that payment should be made for the exact amount of land conveyed, be it "more or less" than the round number chosen to describe the acreage. Hutchings v. Moore, 61 Ky. (4 Metc.) 110; Paige v. Sherman, 6 Gray (Mass.) 511; Barnes v. Gregory, 1 Head (Tenn.) 239.

[3, 4] It is suggested, rather than clearly contended, that the findings of the trial court in the particulars stated rested in part upon parol proof which tended in a measure to alter or vary the terms of the written agreement of the parties, and that therefore such proof was inadmissible. The answer to this suggestion, however, is to be found in the fact that the record does not show any objection to such proof upon the ground that it was parol and proffered for the purpose of varying or altering the agreement of the parties. Moreover, "this * * * is a case where the writing itself, through mistake, does not express the intention of the parties who entered into it, or one of them, and does not, therefore, contain the real contract between the parties." Kee v. Davis, 137 Cal. 456, 70 Pac. 294.

[5] The contention is made that the complaint does not state a cause of action because it fails to aver that the mutual mistake pleaded as a cause of action did not arise from the negligence of the plaintiff. No demurrer, general or special, was interposed by the defendants. If it be granted that such an allegation was essential to the statement of the plaintiffs' cause of action, still the fact that the plaintiffs' carelessness or neglect did not contribute to the mistake involved is fairly inferable from all the allegations of the complaint. Therefore, in the absence of a demurrer, the complaint must be held sufficient to support the judgment. Hyland v. Hyland, 19 Or. 51, 23 Pac. 811.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MONTZ v. NEVINS. (Civ. 2725.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 7, 1919.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION §59(10)—DEFENSES—ADVICE OF COUNSEL—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for malicious prosecution based upon the issuance of a warrant charging grand larceny in the removal of a house in violation of a contract of sale, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to show that the material facts in regard to the removal of the house were communicated to his counsel, notwithstanding that some of the facts and circumstances were so communicated a month or two earlier than on the date on which plaintiff's arrest was advised.

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION §71(2)—PROBABLE CAUSE—QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Probable cause is to be determined by the court when the facts are uncontroverted; but, when the evidence is conflicting as to any of the facts, the existence of such facts is for the jury, and the question whether the facts found establish probable cause is for the court.

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION §21(1)—PROBABLE CAUSE—ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

In an action for malicious prosecution, the defense of advice of counsel goes to the question of probable cause and must be considered in determining that matter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action for malicious prosecution by Simon J. Montz against E. S. Nevins. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, and Kitt Gould, of Clovis, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff for $1,000 in an action for damages for malicious prosecution, pursuant to a verdict of a jury. The facts of the case are, briefly, as follows:

The plaintiff and the defendant were negotiating for an exchange of lands, and upon August 28, 1913, agreed upon the terms of exchange which were set forth in contracts of that date. Plaintiff was in possession of certain lots under contract of purchase, and the defendant owned other lands in the vicinity. After entering into possession, the plaintiff placed a small frame building on the lots he had contracted to purchase; the house being rested upon small cement blocks. Under the bargain for exchange of lands, the defendant was to deed to the plaintiff 10 acres of land, and the plaintiff was to execute a mortgage upon these 10 acres to secure the payment of certain moneys to the defendant, and was to convey to defendant his equity in the lots, together with the house thereon. After signing the contracts, plaintiff learned that under the government survey there was a reservation of a right of way for a road along each section line, and that this reservation as applied to the 10 acres would subject them to an easement over what amounted to about one acre. He demanded that the defendant deed to him another acre somewhere in the neighborhood as a condition of carrying out the bargain for the exchange.

Defendant consulted counsel and under his advice on November 10, 1914, tendered to the plaintiff a deed to the 10 acres demanding of the plaintiff the execution of the mortgage and the conveyance of the lots, of which the plaintiff was then in possession. The plaintiff refused to act, and the matter on November 10, 1914, was left in an unsettled condition. Plaintiff later made application to Elizabeth Stanford, one of the record owners of the lots occupied by him, for an extension of time within which to pay overdue installments. On November 30, 1914, he received a letter from said Elizabeth Stanford in response to his request, granting such extension to January 17, 1915. Defendant on December 3d procured a deed from Elizabeth Stanford to the same lots, which deed contained the following clause:

"This conveyance is received by the grantee herein with full knowledge of a certain contract relating to said lots made on the 17th of January, 1913, between Samuel R. Elliott and Lottie M. Elliott. Elizabeth Stanford, first parties and Simon J. Montz as second party, and the grantee accepts this conveyance with knowledge of all the rights of said S. J. Montz arising by reason of said contract."

On December 9, 1914, defendant wrote to plaintiff that he had a deed to the lots and that plaintiff's rights were forfeited. On Saturday, December 12, 1914, defendant learned that the plaintiff had jacked up and was preparing to move into the county road the small house. Defendant again consulted his attorney, who was the assistant district attorney of Fresno county, and was told by him that, if the house was of sufficient value, its removal would constitute grand larceny, and, if it was removed, to swear out a warrant for the plaintiff's arrest. This advice was given on Saturday, and the defendant applied Saturday night to a justice of the peace for a warrant, stating the facts to him. The justice refused to issue a warrant to the plaintiff on the ground that at that time no crime had been committed and suggested to the defendant that he might procure an injunction. Defendant stated that it was too late. Sunday, defendant found the plaintiff with a group of men in the act of removing the house. There was a wordy altercation in which, among other things, the defendant stated that he would hold all the men engaged in the activities responsible if the house were removed. Montz at that time told Nevins that he had a right to move the house, that it belonged to him, and that the matter was none of Nevins' business. On Monday, acting under the advice of the assistant district attorney, the defendant swore to a warrant before another justice of the peace, charging plaintiff with grand larceny. Plaintiff was held to answer before the superior court, and subsequently, on the motion of the district attorney, the charge was dismissed. Later plaintiff brought this action for malicious prosecution, in which judgment was rendered for the plaintiff for $1,000, from which judgment defendant appeals. The foregoing facts are admitted.

Appellant objects to certain rulings of the trial court upon evidence, and to certain instructions, and contends, first, that the court erred in granting plaintiff's motion to strike out the testimony of the witness Gallaher to the effect that in October, 1914, Mr. Nevins, the defendant, called at the office of the said Gallaher, who was his attorney, for private legal counsel as to certain contracts between himself and the plaintiff and was advised by the attorney that he could not advise him as to the matter unless he saw the contracts and after seeing the contracts he would probably be able to advise the defendant. The plaintiff objected to this testimony on the ground that the only question before the court and before the jury was what was the conversation between the attorney and Mr. Nevins when Mr. Nevins went there to obtain the filing of the criminal complaint. The argument is made by appellant that Mr. Gallagher was the attorney for Mr. Nevins in all transactions with the plaintiff concerning this land, and that he became familiar with the facts and circumstances in regard to the relations of the parties through a period of two or three months' time; and that defendant should have been allowed to show as a part of his affirmative defense that all the facts concerning the entire matter were known to his attorney, whether these facts were communicated at the time of the arrest or at an earlier date.

We believe that appellant's position is well taken.

In the case of Brown v. Smith, 83 Ill. 291, it was held that one who procured the arrest of his divorced wife and her sisters on a charge of malicious mischief, and breaking into his house, which the wife refused to leave after the divorce, is not precluded from setting up the defense of advice of counsel on the ground of failure to disclose the facts, because he did not state to counsel the relations existing between himself and wife as to occupancy of the premises, where the counsel had represented him in the divorce suit and knew the facts. To the same effect is the case of Dennis v. Ryan, 65 N. Y. 385, 22 Am. Rep. 635; Peterson v. Toner, 80 Mich. 350, 45 N. W. 346. While no case in this state has been cited to us deciding this particular question, we find the following statement in the case of Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31:

"In an action for malicious prosecution upon a criminal charge, in order that the defendant may escape responsibility for the prosecution upon the ground that he acted in good faith upon the advice of counsel that there was probable cause for believing the plaintiff guilty of the crime charged, he must prove that before receiving the advice he fairly and fully stated to his counsel, or at least that his counsel knew, all the facts within defendant's knowledge. * * *"

[1] Under these decisions, and under the logic of the situation, we are of the opinion the court erred in not permitting the defendant to proceed with his proof that the material facts were communicated to counsel by the defendant, despite the fact that some of the facts and circumstances may have been communicated a month or two earlier than the date on which the arrest was advised. Naturally, if a man is dealing with his attorney in regard to a particular transaction, and his attorney knows the facts in connection with such transaction—when the situation later changes in regard to some important matter, the client will merely narrate the new facts. It would be unnatural and wasteful of time and energy for him to begin at the beginning, and repeat in detail the facts already communicated by him, or otherwise known to his attorney. It is in the usual course of business under such circumstances for a man merely to advise his attorney of the additional facts relating to the subject-matter and assume that the earlier facts are present in the mind of the attorney. In this case such an assumption was warranted, according to the testimony of the attorney himself.

As all evidence regarding information given to counsel prior to the time that the arrest was advised was stricken out, and as the jury was later instructed that matters stricken out were not to be considered by them in reaching their verdict, the jury must have disregarded, under this ruling and instruction, all disclosures made by defendant to his counsel at any period except at the time of the arrest. As the question of whether or not the defendant had made a full and fair disclosure of all material facts to his attorney was one of the decisive questions before the jury, we think this error was clearly prejudicial to the defendant.

[2] The appellant presents another question in his objections to a certain instruction to the jury. The court instructed the jury that there was a want of probable cause. The rule is that probable cause is to be determined by the court when the facts are uncontroverted. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 220; Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174. But when the evidence is conflicting as to any of the facts, the existence of the facts in dispute is to be found by the jury, and the question whether the facts found by the jury establish probable cause is to be decided by the court. Sandell v. Sherman, 107 Cal. 391, 394, 40 Pac. 493; Booraem v. Potter Hotel Co., 154 Cal. 99, 97 Pac. 65.

[3] While there are different rules followed in other jurisdictions (note to Van Mater v. Bass, 18 L. R. A. [N. S.] 51), in California, by the weight of authority, the rule is that the defense of advice of counsel goes to the question of probable cause, and must be considered in determining that matter. Potter v. Seale, 8 Cal. 220; Levy v. Brannan, 39 Cal. 485; Dunlap v. New Zealand etc. Co., 109 Cal. 365, 42 Pac. 29. The defense of advice of counsel has several elements, such as full and fair disclosure to counsel, good faith in acting upon the advice given, etc. On some of these elements, the evidence in the present case was conflicting. It was proper, therefore, for the jury to have found whether or not the defense of advice of counsel was established before the court determined the question of probable cause; and the court, should have instructed them that if from the evidence they find that Nevins in good faith acted on the advice of counsel after a full and fair disclosure of the facts, there was probable cause; but if, on the other hand, they should find from the evidence the fact that Nevins did not in good faith, and after a full and fair disclosure of the facts, act upon the advice of counsel, that there was a want of probable cause.

The instruction given by the court has removed from the consideration of the jury the facts making up the affirmative defense of advice of counsel, in their relation to the question of probable cause. It is not necessary for us to go into a close analysis and comparison of the results of different instructions given under divergent theories of this defense prevailing in different jurisdictions, in order to decide whether this error was prejudicial or not under the special facts of this case. The first error considered here was sufficiently prejudicial, we think, to make it necessary to send the case back for a new trial, and the error in the instruction is discussed here so that it may not recur at the new trial.

Since the case will have to go back for a new trial and the same rulings upon evidence are unlikely to occur again, it becomes unnecessary for us to discuss the other objections of the appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

BELTRAN v. HYNES et al. (Civ. 2840.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 5, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 1, 1919.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 315(6) —
DISTRIBUTION — NOTICE — CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECREE.

Where due notice was given of hearing of petition for distribution, and no fiduciary relation existed between the distributee, nephew of deceased, and an illiterate nonresident niece of deceased, and there was no fraud, distributee was under no duty to notify niece of death of deceased, even if he knew of niece, and her right is barred by the decree of distribution.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Casimira Beltran against W. J. Hynes, as administrator of estate of Juana Beltran de Marshall, deceased, and others. From judgment sustaining demurrer to the complaint, and an order discharging an order to show cause why preliminary injunction should not issue, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bradley V. Sargent and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco (S. M. Shortridge, A. E. Bolton, and Chas. S. Peery, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a suit in equity to enjoin an administrator from delivering certain property to defendant under a decree of distribution.

The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and discharged an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue. The appeals are from such judgment and order.

From the record it appears that Juana Beltran de Marshall died testate on July 7, 1912, and that a decree was entered in her estate distributing the property to defendant Jose Maria Beltran, a nephew of deceased. This decree was entered January 5, 1916, and was subsequently affirmed on appeal. This action was brought to enjoin the administrator from delivering the property under the decree, and for judgment that Jose Maria Beltran holds the title thereto in trust for plaintiff.

By her complaint plaintiff alleges herself to be a niece of decedent, and recites that she is an illiterate single woman 84 years of age, and that she is a resident of the village of Cosala, in the Republic of Mexico, and that she never heard of or knew of the death of Juana Beltran de Marshall, or of the judgment for the distribution of her estate, until long after the time for appeal from said judgment had elapsed. She further alleges that defendant Beltran did not notify her of the death of decedent or of the proceedings on distribution.

No claim is made that due and legal notice as provided by law was not given of the hearing of the petition for distribution, nor is there any claim of the existence of any fiduciary relation existing between plaintiff and defendant, or of extrinsic or collateral fraud. Under these circumstances, the demurrer was rightfully sustained. Defendant was under no legal duty to notify plaintiff of the death of deceased, even assuming that he knew the plaintiff (Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 Pac. 158); and, proper notice having been given of the hearing, plaintiff is barred by the decree (Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 Pac. 814; Warren v. Ellis, 179 Pac. 544, decided by this court January 31, 1919).

Affirmed.

Division 1, California. March 7, 1919.)

APPEAL AND ERROR §1011(1) — REVIEW—
QUESTIONS OF FACT.

The appellate court will not set aside a judgment merely because a material finding of fact is based upon conflicting evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by M. E. Post against George C. Fetterman and wife. Judgment against the defendant named alone, and in favor of defendant's wife, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse F. Waterman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

F. E. Davis, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This action is upon a promissory note executed by the defendants to the plaintiff. The court found that as to the defendant Rosa Fetterman the note was executed without consideration and held that she was not liable thereon. Judgment was entered against the defendant George C. Fetterman alone. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered in favor of Rosa Fetterman.

Appellant claims that the finding above noted is not supported by the evidence. This is the only ground of appeal presented for our consideration. The note was given on account of moneys which had been advanced by plaintiff for the benefit of George C. Fetterman. The plaintiff testified that when Mr. Fetterman requested him to advance this money Fetterman promised that he would have his wife sign the note when the amount was fixed, and that a result of that conversation he advanced the money. Mr. Fetterman, on the other hand, testified that prior to the time of the plaintiff's paying out any money, the matter of a note to be given by George C. Fetterman and Rosa Fetterman was not mentioned at all, and that the plaintiff never at any time requested of him that he should have his wife sign the note. Mrs. Fetterman testified that she did not receive anything at all for the execution of the note, and that she simply signed the note at the request of her husband without reading it. No new consideration accompanied the making of the note.

Appellant's counsel argues that the testimony of Mr. Fetterman is not entitled to credit, because he verified the answer and cross-complaint and on the witness stand admitted certain facts which are in conflict with some of the allegations of his pleadings which he had verified. Nevertheless the trial court had the right to believe his testimony on the question here at issue. No sufficient reason has been shown to this court on appeal to set aside the judgment merely because a material finding of fact is based upon conflicting evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

PALO ALTO MUTUAL BUILDING & LOAN
ASS'N v. MULLEN et ux. (Civ. 2715.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 7, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §1011(1)—REVIEW—
QUESTIONS OF FACT.

A finding on conflicting evidence held not subject to review.

2. MORTGAGES §116 — CONSTRUCTION —
OBLIGATIONS SECURED—FUTURE ADVANCES.

A mortgage securing future advances "and the fulfillment of any covenants or agreements which the parties hereto, their heirs or assigns, may hereafter agree in writing shall be secured hereby," held to limit the necessity of an agreement in writing to such covenants or agreements, and not to apply to further advances.

Appeal from Superior Court, County of Santa Clara; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by the Palo Alto Mutual Building & Loan Association against Peter Mullen and wife to foreclose a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. H. H. Hart and T. John Butler, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. S. Hutchinson and Walter Slack, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. Action for foreclosure of a mortgage executed on January 28, 1909, by Peter Mullen and Mamie Mullen, his wife, to Palo Alto Mutual Building & Loan Association. Said mortgage secured a note of the mortgagors in the sum of $4,000 and further advances under the terms of the clause hereinafter set forth. The sum of $3,500 only was advanced on the $4,000 note, which sum has been fully repaid. The present action is brought to recover the sum of $1,000, with interest and costs, alleged by plaintiff to have been advanced to the mortgagor Peter Mullen under the terms of the mortgage, and the payment of which is alleged to have been secured by the following clause of the mortgage:

"And also to secure such further advances as may be made to the mortgagors, or either or any of them, by the mortgagee, or on their account, before the satisfaction hereof, and the fulfillment of any covenants or agreements which the parties hereto, their heirs or assigns, may hereafter agree in writing shall be secured hereby."

The judgment was for the plaintiff for the amount of the advance, with interest thereon and costs incurred, with a decree declaring the same to be a lien upon the property described in the mortgage and ordering said property sold and the proceeds applied in payment of that debt. The personal judgment was against the mortgagor Peter Mullen alone, but the interest of the mortgagor Mamie Mullen in the property was ordered sold under the foreclosure decree. The defendants appeal from this judgment, contending: First, that the $1,000 in controversy was not advanced under the terms of the mortgage; and, secondly, that under the clause above quoted, no advancement was secured by the mortgage unless agreed upon in writing by both of the mortgagors.

It is admitted that the sum of $1,000 was paid to the defendant Peter Mullen by check of plaintiff on June 1, 1911. The controversy is over the question as to whether this payment was made as a further advance under the terms of the mortgage and was intended to be secured thereby, or whether, on the other hand, it was a personal payment from one Marshall Black, the secretary of the plaintiff, on his own account and was not made by the plaintiff as an advance under the terms of the mortgage. Upon this disputed fact the evidence introduced by plaintiff was as follows:

At the time the payment was made to the defendant Peter Mullen, he signed a receipt reading as follows:

"No. 5887. Palo Alto, Cal., June 1, 1911.

"Received from Palo Alto Mutual Building & Loan Association one thousand & no/100 dollars, on account of secured advance on loan No. 497. Peter Mullen."

[1] The check was handed to him by the bookkeeper of the secretary Black, who testified that he was instructed by Mr. Black, at the time the check was issued, to charge it to Mr. Mullen's loan account. In connection with this testimony, the check book and account books of the plaintiff were offered in evidence. From these it appeared that the bookkeeper marked the stub of the check as follows: "To Peter Mullen, secured advance $1,000." The first entry in the account books was made in the cash journal and there appeared as, "Secured Advance Peter Mullen, $1,000." The item was also entered in the general ledger of the plaintiff on the page designated as, "Secured Advances," and was again posted in the "Secured Advance Ledger," where it appeared under the name, "Peter Mullen." It further appeared that in posting the item to the general ledger it was first entered in an account designated as "Suspense Account," which account was conceded to have been a personal account of the secretary Black. The bookkeeper testified that this last entry was an error, and that it was corrected as soon as discovered, and the court so found. The defendant Peter Mullen and the secretary, Marshall Black, both testified that the instructions given to the bookkeeper were to enter this item under the personal account of Black, and that neither of them had any knowledge that the transaction was claimed to have been an advance under the terms of the mortgage until shortly before the present suit was commenced, which was more than three years after the payment of June 1, 1911. It appears from the evidence that the secretary Black had purchased an automobile from the defendant Peter Mullen, who had demanded payment therefor. The check of $1,000, which is the basis of this action, was given by Black to Mullen at the time of said demand. It is admitted that this was a personal purchase by Black, and it is contended by the appellants that the whole transaction was had by Black personally and that the plaintiff had no connection therewith, except that Black used the plaintiff's funds in payment of his personal debt. Upon this conflicting evidence the court found that the sum of $1,000 was advanced and loaned by plaintiff to the defendant Peter Mullen under the authority of said mortgage "as a further advance under the terms of said mortgage, which said sum said defendant Peter Mullen then and there agreed in writing should be a secured advance under said mortgage." The above finding is supported by the documentary evidence above referred to and by the testimony of the bookkeeper. Appellants' contention upon this finding goes no further than to show that the evidence upon the issue was conflicting. The finding cannot, therefore, be disturbed by this court.

It is next insisted that, even if the $1,000 was paid to and received by the defendant Peter Mullen as an advance, the clause of the mortgage above quoted does not warrant the conclusion that such advance was secured thereby, for the reason that the defendant Mamie Mullen, who was one of the mortgagors, did not agree in writing that the same should be so secured. The determination of this contention depends upon the proper construction of the clause in the mortgage as to further advances above set forth. On behalf of the appellants, it is argued that the last clause, "which the parties hereto, their heirs or assigns, may hereafter agree in writing shall be secured hereby," should be read as referring both to further advances and to the covenants or agreements referred to in the latter portion of the clause. On behalf of respondent, it is contended that by the disputed clause two distinct objects are sought to be secured, viz., (a) "such further advances," and (b) "the fulfillment of any covenants or agreements"; and that the restrictive clause introduced by "which," contained in the last three lines of the above provision of the mortgage, refers to the second of these objects only, namely, to the covenants or agreements. To state it in a different form, it is contended by respondent that the clause is divided into two distinct parts, the first terminating with the word "hereof" followed by a comma, and that the balance of the clause is entirely separate from that which precedes it. The trial court adopted the construction contended for by respondent and included its interpretation of the disputed clause in its findings in the following language:

"That, in addition to securing said note for $4,000, above referred to, said mortgage was given by said defendants, Peter Mullen and Mamie Mullen, and each of them, to secure such further advances as might be made to said defendants, Peter Mullen and Mamie Mullen, or either of them, by plaintiff before the satisfaction of said mortgage, and which said further advances said Peter Mullen and Mamie Mullen, and each of them, in and by the terms of said mortgage agreed to pay to plaintiff, in gold coin of the United States; that said mortgage was also given to secure the fulfillment of any covenants or agreements which said Peter Mullen and Mamie Mullen, their heirs or assigns, might thereafter agree in writing with the plaintiff should be secured thereby, and also to secure the fulfillment of each and all the covenants and agreements in said mortgage contained."

[2] We are of the opinion that the construction contended for by respondent and adopted by the trial court is the correct interpretation of the clause above referred to, and that the necessity of an agreement in writing is limited to "any covenants or agreements" and does not apply to the "further advances" designated in the first part of the clause referred to. It follows that the trial court did not err in decreeing that the amount of the disputed advance, with interest and costs, constituted a lien upon the real property described in the mortgage and ordering a foreclosure thereof.

We have examined the other contentions of appellants as to attorney's fees and costs, and do not find any error in the action of the trial court with regard thereto.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CELIANO et ux. v. GIORDANENGO.
(Civ. 2664.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 10, 1919.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE $\S$ 128(3)—SUIT TO SET ASIDE—JUDGMENT—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint to set aside a justice's judgment for failure of the return of service of summons to show service on each of the defendants therein, failing to allege that defendants were not in fact served with summons, as required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 410, is demurrable.

2. JUDGMENT $\S$ 128(3)—SUIT TO SET ASIDE—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to set aside a judgment in a justice court action, on the ground of failure of the return of service of summons to show service on each of defendants, a complaint which failed to aver that plaintiffs in the equity suit had a good defense on the merits was demurrable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Suit by Costanzo Cellano and wife against Giuseppe Giordanengo. From a judgment on an order sustaining a general demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. Mazza, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining a general demurrer to plaintiffs' complaint.

The plaintiffs herein were the defendants in a justice's court action, and bring this suit in equity for the purpose of setting aside the judgment obtained against them therein, basing their right to this relief upon the ground that the proof of service of summons in said action fails to show that it was served upon each of them as defendants therein.

[1, 2] Whatever merit there may be in this point as an abstract proposition of law, it can avail the plaintiffs nothing in this proceeding, for two reasons: (1) That the complaint fails to allege that the defendants in the former suit were not in fact served with summons as required by section 410 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (2) that they, as defendants in said justice's court action, had a good defense on the merits thereof.

A defective return of process duly served is not sufficient ground for equity to interfere. Pico v. Sunol, 6 Cal. 294; Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 40 Pac. 24, 48 Am. St. Rep. 110; 23 Cyc. 996. And it is the established law in this state that a bill of equity must allege and show that the complainant has a good and meritorious defense to the action at law. Burbridge v. Rauer, 146 Cal. 21, 79 Pac. 526; Bell v. Thompson, 147 Cal. 689, 82 Pac. 327; Matson v. Batto & Sons, 173 Cal. 800, 161 Pac. 1144. See also Freeman on Judgment, § 498; 23 Cyc. 1031.

Under these authorities it must be held that the equitable relief of setting aside a judgment obtained in a court of law will not be granted without an affirmative showing in the complaint that the complainant, as defendant in said action, has a good defense on the merits. It should have been made to appear in the complaint in this proceeding that a like judgment would in all probability not result from a new prosecution of the action at law.

The judgment is affirmed.

The granting of a new trial depends upon the legal discretion of the court, guided by the circumstances of the case; and, when such discretion has not been abused, the order will not be disturbed.

2. NEW TRIAL ⇨71—DISCRETION OF COURT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for wrongful death, allowance of a new trial after verdict for plaintiffs held not an abuse of discretion, in view of the evidence, although conflicting.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Mary E. Ramsay and others against the McCreery Estate Company, a corporation. From an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial after verdict and judgment for plaintiffs, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for appellants.

L. A. Redman, Jewel Alexander, and H. H. McPike, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order granting the defendant's motion for a new trial after verdict and judgment for plaintiffs.

The action was brought by the widow and children of one Adam Ramsay to recover damages for his death which it is alleged was caused by the negligent operation by defendant of an elevator in a building owned by it, and in which the deceased was employed by a company having offices therein. Ramsay was 60 years of age, and received a salary of $250 a month. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiffs in the sum of $25,000. The trial court set this verdict aside upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support it, and plaintiff appeals from this order.

[1] The granting of a new trial depends upon the legal discretion of the court, guided by the circumstances of the case. The motion is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court; and, when that discretion has not been abused, the order upon the motion will not be disturbed. We have carefully examined the record, and we fail to find any abuse of discretion in the granting of the order.

The only witness to the accident was the operator of the elevator, and his testimony, both before the coroner's jury and at the trial, was mostly given through an interpreter. In substance it appears therefrom that Ramsay left his office, which was located on the sixth floor of the building, about 9 o'clock in the evening, went to the elevator and rang the bell. The operator, who was also a janitor of the building, was at that time engaged in his work on the seventh floor; but, hearing the bell, he entered the elevator and started it down to the sixth floor. When at a short distance above said floor he brought the car to a stop preparatory to slowly lowering it and adjusting it to the floor level. After bringing the car to a stop he started it again very slowly, and again lowered it a short distance, holding the controller bar in his left hand, and while the car was slowly descending he raised with his right hand the latch to the door, and began to open it slowly as the floor of the car was descending to a position flush with the sixth floor. At that time Ramsay, who was standing in front of the door, called out "Quick, quick," and when the door had been opened slightly he took hold of the partially opened door with both hands and shoved it back, against the protest of the operator, who called upon him to stop. When Ramsay attempted to enter the car, the floor of which was still somewhat above the level of the floor of the building, he stumbled and fell against the right side of the operator, pivoting him around so that the operator's left hand shoved the controller bar forward, causing the elevator to reverse its motion and quickly rise. As Ramsay fell against the operator and down upon the floor the operator grabbed hold of him, but before he could drag him into the car the floor thereof had ascended to the top of the door, and Ramsay was caught between the grillwork above the door and the floor of the elevator, and his body fell into the pit. From this evidence it is manifest that the deceased met his death from his own imprudence in attempting to enter the elevator in the manner indicated.

[2] Plaintiffs contend, however, that statements made by the operator immediately after the accident to certain police officers as to the manner in which the accident occurred are contrary to and inconsistent with his testimony at the trial. They also claim that his testimony at the trial is in conflict with his testimony given at the coroner's inquest. No useful purpose would be subserved by an analysis of these claimed inconsistencies. Assuming that they exist, and that they support plaintiffs' claim for negligence, the trial court, having heard the evidence and having had ample opportunity to judge as to the demeanor, manner, and credibility of the witnesses, had the right, if dissatisfied with the verdict, and, if it was of the opinion that it was clearly against the weight of the evidence to set it aside and grant a new trial, even though there was a substantial conflict, as it is not bound by the rule as to conflicting evidence. The opinion of the trial court being that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, its discretion in granting a new trial can be reviewed only when it is made to appear that that discretion was abused. As before stated, the record shows no such abuse.

For the reasons given, the order of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

WASTE, P. J. A rehearing in this case is denied. In denying the petition, however, the opinion is corrected in the following particulars: On page 2, line 25, the word "manifest" is stricken out, and in lieu thereof the words "claimed by defendant" are inserted. On page 3, line 3, after the word "and" insert "that together with the presumption of negligence arising by reason of the accident."

Action by George K. Ford against Frank Freeman and others, in which William M. Cannon filed a cross-complaint. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff and cross-complainant appeal. Reversed.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. These are two appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants, which, by stipulation of the parties, were printed in the same transcript and have been briefed and argued together.

[1] The judgment was entered June 12, 1911. The notice of appeal of the plaintiff Ford was filed December 7, 1911. The cross-complainant Cannon's notice of appeal was filed November 8, 1911. The plaintiff's notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed September 8, 1911, and that of the cross-complainant was filed September 11, 1911. The order denying both motions was entered December 4, 1916, after the amendment to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, taking away the right of appeal from orders denying motions for a new trial, and also after the amendment of section 956 of the same Code, providing that upon appeal from the judgment the court may review orders made on motion for a new trial. Upon this state of the record the respondents herein assert that this court cannot consider the point as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and judgment of the trial court. There is no merit in this contention. Wilcox v. Hardisty (Sup.) 171 Pac. 947.

In order for a proper determination of this cause it is necessary to give a brief review of the facts of this case, which are substantially undisputed. They are these: On April 10, 1901, one Samuel C. Pierce received serious personal injuries while in the employ of the Mountain Copper Company, in the mine of said company in Shasta county. In the month of January, 1902, Pierce employed the plaintiff herein, George K. Ford, an attorney having his offices in San Francisco, to institute an action against the Mountain Copper Company for damages arising out of his said injuries, upon a contingent fee of 50 per cent. of the recovery, the agreement to this effect being in writing. It was understood at the time that Mr. W. M. Abbott would be associated with Ford in said litigation. It was at first contemplated that the action would be commenced in Shasta county. Not long after the employment of Mr. Ford he in the city of San Francisco met the defendant, Frank Freeman, also an attorney, having his offices in Willows, Glenn county, and in a conversation there held told the latter that he had a case similar to one in which Freeman had been recently interested, and that he would like to associate Freeman with him in his case. Ford and Pierce differ as to which first suggested the employment of Freeman, but the difference is immaterial. In the early part of July, 1902, Mr. Abbott, who had already prepared certain tentative forms of complaint, wrote to Mr. Freeman, stating the desire of Mr. Ford, Mr. Pierce, and himself to associate Mr. Freeman with Ford and himself in the case. A correspondence followed, in which Freeman expressed his willingness to come into the case, after which Pierce came into consultation with Freeman, who took his statement and the names of his witnesses, and also took steps looking to the preparation and filing of a complaint. Shortly thereafter Mr. Abbott, having undertaken certain other employments, withdrew from the case, and it would seem that Mr. Ford also had concluded to withdraw, leaving Pierce free to make such arrangements as he might see fit with Freeman as to its further conduct. There is some confusion in the evidence as to this matter, but at any rate not long thereafter, in the early part of September, 1902, Pierce and Freeman entered into a writing by which Freeman alone undertook to conduct Pierce's litigation for a contingent fee of one-half of the recovery. Thereafter, and on September 20, 1902, Freeman requested Mr. Donahue, who shared offices with him in Willows, to be associated with him in the case. About the 1st of October, 1902, Donahue came down to San Francisco and met Mr. Ford in the office of Mr. Cannon there. Mr. Cannon had formerly been a partner of Mr. Freeman in the practice of the law, and the relations between himself and Mr. Freeman and Mr. Donahue were cordial. At the time of his visit to San Francisco Mr. Donahue had drafted and brought down with him a form of complaint for the institution of an action on Pierce's behalf in the federal court, and for that reason stated to Mr. Cannon that he and Mr. Freeman wished to associate him in the case. Cannon assented to this, and they went over the complaint together, and agreed it should be redrafted. This was done by Cannon, who testified that at the time the matter of Mr. Ford's connection with the case was discussed. At that time Ford and Cannon were not acquainted. Upon this occasion also Cannon states that the matter of the division of the fee was considered, and that Donahue then stated that the fee in case of a recovery was to be divided equally among the four attorneys. Whether or not this be taken as an undisputed fact is not very material, for the reason that, we think, the practically uncontradicted proofs show that not long thereafter a letter was written by Donahue to Ford to the effect that the fee in the event of recovery was to be divided equally among the four attorneys in the case. Mr. Donahue states that he does not remember having written such a letter, and the letter itself was destroyed in the great fire of 1906; but the number and clear recollection of the witnesses who testify to the existence and contents of this letter put the matter beyond dispute. The complaint when drafted by Mr. Cannon was signed by him with the names of the four attorneys, and in that form was filed on October 6, 1902. The case proceeded through the successive steps usual to the preparation and trial of a cause, and it cannot be questioned that during all of its stages the names of the four attorneys appeared as attorneys of record in the case, and that each and all of them knew that such was their, and each of their, ostensible relation to the case. The part which each took in the preparation and trial of the case was not equal. Mr. Ford, while frequently consulted and occasionally corresponded with by the defendants herein, did not actively take part in the trial. Mr. Cannon, on the other hand, took the leading part in the trial of the cause and the preparation and hearing upon appeal. As costs and expenses were required, each of these paid such expenses as the occasion required. Upon the trial the plaintiff Pierce recovered a judgment for $15,000, which judgment was affirmed upon appeal on February 25, 1905. On the day of the affirmance of the judgment, Mr. Freeman took from Mr. Pierce an assignment of it to himself, and thereafter, and on August 30, 1905, received from the Mountain Copper Company the sum of $15,100 in full satisfaction of the said judgment. One half of this sum Freeman delivered to the plaintiff Pierce. The other half was substantially divided between himself and Donahue. The cross-complainant Cannon herein, having learned of the settlement of the suit, began inquiring as to his proportion of the fee. These inquiries, in the absence of Mr. Freeman in the East, resulted in the sending by Mr. Donahue of a check for $750 to Mr. Cannon, which the latter received as upon account, still insisting upon his right to an equal one-fourth of the fee. Ford had received nothing, and had been out quite a sum in expenses, and, being able to get no satisfaction, commenced this action.

His complaint herein, after referring briefly to Pierce's injuries and cause of action, alleges an agreement between himself, Freeman, Donahue, and Cannon for an equal division of the contingent fee in event of a recovery, and that the contract which Pierce made with Freeman was made for the benefit of the four, and that whatever sum he had received thereunder he had received in trust to divide the same equally among the four; and that said Freeman had received the sum approximately of $7,500 as such fee, and to be held as such trust, and that he and said Donahue had converted the same to their own use, and had failed and neglected to pay to the plaintiff herein his equal share of the same. He further averred that the defendants were insolvent, and hence prayed for a receivership to take charge of and properly disburse the said trust fund, and for general equitable relief. The defendants Freeman and Donahue appeared and answered this complaint, denying all of the material averments as to the interest and right of the plaintiff in or to any portion of the aforesaid fee. Mr. Cannon, who had been also made a defendant, appeared with a cross-complaint, setting forth substantially the same matters contained in the original complaint. The defendants also answered this cross-complaint with like denials.

Upon the trial of the cause the foregoing facts were established by practically undisputed proofs. The trial court made its findings and rendered its judgment in the defendants' favor. It found that while the plaintiff Ford had originally had an agreement with Pierce for the prosecution of his case upon a contingent fee of one-half of the recovery, this agreement had been abandoned and terminated by him prior to the making of the Freeman contract; that the said contract between Freeman and Pierce had been entered into by Freeman alone and for his own use and benefit, and that neither the plaintiff Ford nor the cross-complainant Cannon were in any wise interested therein; that the said plaintiff Ford and cross-complainant Cannon did in fact perform services in the prosecution of the Pierce action subsequent to the execution of the Freeman contract, and that said Freeman had paid to said Cannon the sum of $750, but had not paid to the plaintiff any sum whatever; that said Freeman had collected on account of the judgment obtained in said action the sum of $15,170.80, and had delivered to said Pierce his due share of said sum, and that as to the portion thereof retained by him no trust existed in favor of either Ford or Cannon. As a conclusion of law from these findings of fact the court adjudged that the plaintiff and cross-complainant take nothing, and that the defendants Freeman and Donahue have judgment for their costs.

[2, 3] The appellants herein contend that the foregoing findings of the trial court are unsupported by the evidence, and that the judgment based thereon must be reversed. We agree with this contention. The undisputed evidence in this case shows that the plaintiff Ford, the defendants Freeman and Donahue, and the cross-complainant Cannon were associated together as attorneys of record for Pierce from the inception of his action against the Mountain Copper Company until the termination of said action through the settlement thereof by the defendant therein, after judgment for practically the whole amount of such judgment; that they each performed such services as such attorneys of record in said action as were required of them during the course thereof. The practically undisputed evidence also shows that prior to the inception of such action the defendant Donahue, purporting to act on behalf of both himself and his associate Freeman, had an understanding, evidenced by a letter written by him to the plaintiff Ford, the contents of which were fully and sufficiently proven, to the effect that these four attorneys were each to share equally in the contingent fee of one-half of the recovery in said action in the event that a recovery was had therein. If the defendant Donahue was acting with authority from his associate Freeman in thus creating this understanding, then both defendants are bound by it, and the trial court should have found that such was the agreement. If on the other hand said Freeman, as the sole contracting attorney in the contract with Pierce, was not to be held bound by the understanding thus set forth by Donahue, then it undisputably follows that there was no agreement between these four lawyers as to the matter of fees; and, if this be taken to be the fact, then it also undisputably follows that these four attorneys were joint adventurers in the conduct of a litigation for a common client, their and each of their fees being contingent upon the success of their mutual endeavors to obtain a recovery for their client in the case, none of them being entitled to any fees from each other or from the client in the absence of such recovery. Nowhere is there any hint in the case of any other understanding between these four attorneys, unless the understanding to precisely the same effect undertaken to be expressed by the Donahue letter is to be given effect. This being so, we think the rule declared in 6 Corpus Juris, § 334, should be given application to this case. Said rule is expressed as follows:

"Attorneys who jointly undertake to prosecute or defend a lawsuit are entitled, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, to share equally in the compensation."

The same rule in slightly different form is expressed in 2 Thornton on Attorneys, § 469, while the following cases fully sustain the rule: Roberts v. Haley, 65 Cal. 397, 4 Pac. 385; Gill v. Mayne (Iowa) 162 N. W. 24; Seneff v. Healy, 155 Iowa, 82, 135 N. W. 27; Columbus v. Sheehy, 43 App. D. C. 462.

If the foregoing views of the facts and the law of this case be correct, it follows that the trial court should have found, either that there was an express agreement between these four attorneys as to an equal division of this contingent fee, or else the court should have found as a fact that there was no agreement whatever between them upon the subject of fees, in which case the court should have found as a legal result the existence of an implied agreement growing out of their common adventure for an equal division of whatever their share in the recovery might be. In either event the defendants would not have been entitled to a judgment in their favor. By reason of the failure of the trial court to make a finding either way upon this vital issue in the case, the judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

CHURCH et al. v. GRADY. (Civ. 2656.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 7, 1919.)

1. PLEADING — 254 — AMENDMENT — DEMURRER TO AMENDED PLEADING.

Where a complaint has been amended, the sufficiency of the amended pleading is alone in question as against demurrer.

2. EVIDENCE — 32 — JUDICIAL NOTICE — MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES.

Courts of record do not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 122(1) — ORDINANCES — PLEADING — SUFFICIENCY OF DESIGNATION.

In pleading a municipal ordinance or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such ordinance by its title and the day of its passage, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 459.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 567(2) — PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — FORECLOSURE OF ASSESSMENT LIEN — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In a suit to foreclose a street assessment lien, an allegation in the complaint, that the "board of public works duly and regularly made an assessment to cover the sum due," sufficiently alleged all the steps preceding the assessment necessary to authorize the board to make it, including the requirement that the resolution of the board of public works contain a reference to the plans and specifications for the improvement contemplated.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — 568(1) — PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — FORECLOSURE OF LIEN — BURDEN OF PROOF — DEMAND FOR PAYMENT.

In a suit to foreclose a street assessment lien, it is essential to prove a demand on the owner of the assessed property for the payment of the assessment as required by ordinance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by David O. Church and another against John H. Grady. From a judgment for plaintiffs and the denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. J. Lynch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. A. Mueller, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action to foreclose a street assessment lien. The original complaint was apparently framed on the theory that the work was done under the authority of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. At the trial plaintiffs admitted that the requirements of the charter, necessary to confer jurisdiction in such matters, had not been complied with.

The cause was submitted to the court for decision and was decided in favor of defendant. Thereupon plaintiffs waived counsel fees and assumed defendant's costs to that date. The court set aside the submission, and permitted plaintiffs to file amendments to their complaint, setting forth facts tending to establish that the proceedings were had under Ordinance No. 2439 (New Series) of the city and county of San Francisco, commonly known as the "Street Improvement Ordinance." By stipulation of counsel said amendments were deemed denied by the answer of the defendant. No further evidence was introduced. The cause was resubmitted, and decision and judgment went in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds being insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. The motion was denied. Defendant appeals, urging the same point as one of the grounds for a reversal of the judgment.

[1] Whatever defects may have existed in the original complaint, the demurrer to which was overruled, that pleading was superseded by the complaint as amended after the trial. The sufficiency of the last pleading is alone in question. Rooney v. Gray Bros., 145 Cal. 753, 79 Pac. 523. Appellant contends that the complaint, as amended, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, by reason of a failure to properly allege the passage and existence of the ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco under which the plaintiff now contends the proceedings were taken.

[2, 3] It is a general rule, supported by unbroken authority in this state, that courts of record do not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances. Metteer v. Smith, 156 Cal. 572, 105 Pac. 735. In pleading an ordinance of a municipal corporation, or a right derived therefrom, it is sufficient to refer to such ordinance by its title and the day of its passage. Section 459, Code Civ. Proc. Plaintiff apparently attempted to comply with the section of the Code in pleading the ordinance in question. The result is rather an allegation by way of parenthesis than of positive averment, but the title of the ordinance, and the day of its passage, are readily ascertainable.

Dealing with this precise question, our Supreme Court has held that when the question of the sufficiency of a complaint to withstand a general demurrer, and therefore to support a judgment, arises, "courts have always discriminated between insufficient facts and an insufficient statement of facts; and where the necessary facts are shown by the complaint to exist, although inaccurately or ambiguously stated, or appearing by necessary implication, the judgment will be sustained." Amestoy v. Electric R. T. Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550.

[4] The ordinance requires that the resolution of the board of public works, if its intention be to recommend to the supervisors that improvements be ordered to be made, shall contain a reference to the specifications, or plans and specifications, prepared for the improvement contemplated. Appellant contends that, while the complaint contains an allegation that such plans and specifications were prepared, it is insufficient because it does not state that the resolution contained the required reference. It is to be observed that the complaint does not state that the resolution did not comply with the ordinance. Furthermore, the complaint alleges that "on the 25th day of May, 1914, the board of public works duly and regularly made an assessment to cover the sum due for the said work so performed and specified in said contract" (referring to the contract and work upon and for which the assessment was made). This is a sufficient allegation that all the steps preceding the making of the assessment, necessary to authorize the board to make it, had been taken in the manner provided by law. Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, 169 Pac. 225.

The complaint originally contained no allegation of demand, on the owner of the property assessed, for the payment of the amount of the assessment. Both the charter and the ordinance require that such demand shall be made. No testimony was offered to establish such fact. The warrant, assessment, and diagram admitted in evidence were not accompanied by the affidavit of demand and nonpayment required by the charter, and by the ordinance, in order to constitute prima facie evidence of the regularity and correctness of the assessment, and of the prior proceedings, and of the right of the plaintiff to recover in the action. Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, art. 6, c. 2, § 15; Ordinance 2439 [N. S.] pt. 1, § 22.

[5] The complaint as amended, after the first submission of the case, alleged that personal demand was made by an agent of plaintiff. This allegation was deemed denied, under the stipulation before mentioned; but no further evidence was offered to establish the fact. There was therefore an utter failure of proof on a vital element in the case. Guerin v. Reese, 33 Cal. 292; McBean v. Martin, 96 Cal. 188, 31 Pac. 5. Notwithstanding such failure of proof, the court found that demand was made as alleged in the complaint. This finding was not justified, because it was not supported by any evidence.

The failure of plaintiff to prove a compliance with the essential requirement of the ordinance, respecting a demand, is fatal to the judgment. McBean v. Martin, supra.

The judgment is reversed.

MULLER v. STANDARD OIL CO. et al.
(L. A. 4635.)(Supreme Court of California. April 22, 1919.
Rehearing Denied May 22, 1919.)

1. DEATH ⚡24 — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PARENT — VIOLATION OF ORDINANCE—UNLAWFUL USE OF SIDEWALK.

A father is guilty of negligence where he permits his four year old son to use a tricycle on a sidewalk in violation of an ordinance, as the father himself is guilty of such violation under Pen. Code, § 31, and where such negligence proximately causes injury resulting in the child's death the father cannot recover.

2. DEATH ⚡76 — PROXIMATE CAUSE OF DEATH OF CHILD—NEGLIGENCE OF PARENT.

In a father's action for death of his four year old son crushed by a truck, at an alley crossing, held, under the evidence, that the boy's use of a tricycle on sidewalk in violation of an ordinance with the father's consent proximately caused the accident.

Lawlor, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by John Muller against the Standard Oil Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Mott & Dillon, Bradner W. Lee, Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Geo. M. Harker and R. T. Lightfoot, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Peter Muller, a boy of four years of age, while riding on a sidewalk on the west side of San Pedro street at its crossing with the alley midway between Fourth and Boyd streets in Los Angeles, was killed by being crushed under the right rear wheel of a five-ton oil truck owned by the defendant Standard Oil Company, driven by defendant Bechtel, an employé. The truck was proceeding easterly out of the alley across the sidewalk and onto San Pedro street. The father, John Muller, sues for damages caused to himself by the death of said child, and alleges that the same was due to the negligence of the driver of the truck. Judgment, after verdict for $5,000, was in favor of the plaintiff. Defendants appeal.

The testimony shows, without contradiction, that the truck was being operated very slowly, between 3 and 5 miles an hour. The driver testified that he looked up and down the sidewalk and the street and that he sounded his horn when within 30 or 40 feet of the sidewalk; that he did not see the child or know of the accident until some bystander yelled, "Stop"; that he stopped within a few feet and found on looking back that the child had been killed. On the south side of the alley is the north wall of the Santa Rosa Hotel, which extends to the sidewalk, and the front or east side of the hotel is flush with the sidewalk. On the north side of the alley and flush with the edge of the alley is a one-story dwelling, the front of which is 7½ feet from the sidewalk line, but in front of which a porch extends several feet towards the sidewalk. Next to that house and within 40 feet of the alley plaintiff resided. Respondent's theory is that the child was riding south on the sidewalk on his tricycle and was struck by some portion of the front end of the truck and thrown underneath the truck, falling in front of the rear wheel on the opposite side. Appellants' theory is that the boy rode directly under the truck between the front and rear wheels and fell in front of the rear wheel on the opposite side. The city of Los Angeles has an ordinance prohibiting the use of tricycles upon sidewalks. The appellants contend, not only that they were not negligent, but that the child and its parents were guilty of negligence. At the conclusion of plaintiff's testimony, appellants moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the evidence showed that the child was negligent, in violating a municipal ordinance, and that the parents were negligent in allowing him to ride upon the sidewalk on his tricycle. The motion was denied, and the denial of this motion is now urged as error. The court instructed the jury that while it was negligence per se to violate a city ordinance, as the child was under 14 years of age, in order to establish negligence by reason of the violation of a city ordinance, it was necessary to prove that the child knew of the wrongfulness of its conduct. Pen. Code, § 26. It may be assumed for the purposes of this decision that the child, because it was too young to know that it was violating a city ordinance, was not guilty of negligence. If, however, the father was guilty of negligence in the care of the child, which proximately caused the injury, he cannot recover. Meeks v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 56 Cal. 513, 38 Am. Rep. 67; Fox v. Oakland Con. St. R. R. Co., 118 Cal. 55, 50 Pac. 25, 62 Am. St. Rep. 216. The child had been using the tricycle for over two years. Respondent in his brief assumes that it was the custom of the child to play on the sidewalk with his tricycle. The father testified:

"Und everybody stop, or give it vistle; on the alley everybody stop, what I see all the time, und give it vistle, or I think hees got killed on the sidewalk over there some time."

Plaintiff also testified that immediately before the accident the child had been given a penny to go to a candy store at the corner of Fourth and San Pedro streets on his tricycle; that he went to and returned from the candy store, both times crossing the alley on the sidewalk; that he again left on his tricycle not two minutes before the accident. The court, in its instructions to the jury upon that subject, stated that if the child was a dutiful and obedient child up to the time in question, and by the consent of the father and mother had gone on his tricycle to the candy store to buy a stick of candy, had been told to immediately return to the house, and that he had done so, "but that then and immediately thereafter and of his own volition and without the consent of its parents, or either of them, either express or implied, the child decided to take another ride on his tricycle, and again started south on the sidewalk toward and onto or across the alleyway in question, and while on his second trip he was run over and killed by the negligence of the defendants, and without any negligence of the parents, or either of them, proximately contributing thereto, then such action of the mother in permitting the child to go in the first place on the sidewalk and to get his candy and return would not excuse the defendants in this case."

[1] The use of the tricycle by a child for more than two years, with the knowledge and consent of his parents, coupled with the fact that immediately before the accident the child had been permitted to use his tricycle upon the sidewalk, twice crossing the alley in question, was in fact a consent on the part of the parents to use the tricycle on the sidewalk at the time of the accident, in violation of the city ordinance. The parents themselves, by consenting and encouraging their child to use the tricycle upon the sidewalk, were thus guilty of a violation of the ordinance. Pen. Code, § 31. There is no doubt that the use of the tricycle was a proximate cause of the accident. No witness saw the child in front of the truck. It appears from the testimony of every witness that saw the child when run over that he fell from his tricycle directly under the truck, either because riding over the edge of the curb which separated the alley and the sidewalk the tricycle tipped over, or because the child suddenly turned the same, or because he was struck by some part of the truck; the latter being the contention of the respondent. The plaintiff's witness Barlag, who was within 10 or 15 feet of the boy at the time he was killed, testified:

"I seen the boy when he fell under the truck. He fell on the south side. He fell under the wheel. He was not lying down. He fell off his tricycle on the ground and under the wheel."

On cross-examination he stated:

That in his opinion the boy was going south. When he first saw the boy he was under the truck. "He was not lying down. He fell under the truck. The first I seen he was under the truck on the tricycle and he fell under the wheel. I don't know whether he was struck by the front wheel or not. When he fell his head fell right under the wheel."

The plaintiff's witness, Thomas Russell, did not see the boy, but stated that when the radiator of the truck was two feet beyond the line of the Santa Rosa Hotel he saw no one in front of the truck at that time; that, though he continued to look at the truck from that time forward, he did not see the accident. Plaintiff's witness James Russell testified:

That the rear wheel passed over the boy's head. "He was almost in an upright position when I first saw him, and he just crumpled under the rear wheel. I don't think he was standing on his feet. I could see his head up above under the truck. He was on the ground. I saw the bicycle laying there. I didn't pay much attention to it. The driver didn't know that he had hurt anybody until he had stopped the truck."

Defendants' witness E. A. Farris stated:

That he stopped his truck in front of plaintiff's house in order to wait for the truck to emerge from the alley, having seen it coming out before he reached the line of the sidewalk, but he did not see the child on the sidewalk. "He was under the truck when I first saw him; just went under the wheel, the tricycle and all—under the right-hand rear wheel. I seen the boy just as he fell, just as he went under the wheel, just as the wheel went over him. * * * He fell off. It looked like there was a curb or something or other. He made a turn, just tumbled right off under it."

"Q. Off the edge of the curb, you mean? A. No, there seemed to be a jump-off or something there. He just keeled right over under the wheel."

No other witnesses saw the accident. The defendant Bechtel testified that he did not see the child, although he looked to the front and both sides, and all the witnesses seems to agree that he knew nothing of the presence of the child until after he had stopped his truck. The only evidence from which the jury could infer that the defendants were negligent was that relating to the speed of the truck, the nature and character of the accident, the testimony which might have justified the jury in finding that the truck driver did not sound his horn nearer than 30 or 40 feet to the sidewalk, if at all, and the inference which the jury might have drawn from the facts and circumstances at the time of the accident that, although the truck driver and other witnesses testified that he looked up and down the street, he did not in fact look with due care.

[2] Assuming, however, that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury holding the defendants negligent, it is clear from the evidence that the use of the tricycle by the child was as truly a proximate cause of the accident, under the circumstances, as was the use of the truck by the defendants. The conduct of the plaintiff in allowing the child to use the tricycle in violation of the city ordinance was negligence on the part of the father, and because such negligence contributed to the injury he cannot recover.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SHAW, J.; OLNEY, J.; MELVIN, J.

LAWLOR, J. I dissent. Assuming that a case of negligence per se was established against the plaintiff, yet, upon the evidence before us and the finding implied by the verdict of the jury and the denial of the motion for a new trial that such negligence did not enter into and form a part of the efficient cause of the injury, such finding should not be disturbed for the reason that, in my opinion, we would be bound by a finding either way.

WILKINSON v. STANDARD ACCIDENT
INS. CO. OF DETROIT, MICH.
(S. F. 8085.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1919.
Rehearing Denied May 19, 1919.)

1. INSURANCE ⇨665(6) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—SUICIDE—EVIDENCE.

In action on accident policy involving issue of whether insured was shot by accident or committed suicide, evidence held sufficient to sustain jury finding that death of insured was due to accident, and not to suicide.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨568(1)—CONCLUSION—ACCIDENT INSURANCE — CAUSE OF DEATH — WEIGHT.

In action on accident policy involving question of suicide, the fact that beneficiary, who was insured's wife, testified at the inquest immediately following insured's death that he had committed suicide, is not conclusive upon question of whether death was due to suicide or accident, being merely an inference.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨568(1) — CONCLUSION — WEIGHT—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—CAUSE OF DEATH—NEWSPAPER REPORT.

In action on accident policy involving the issue of whether insured accidentally shot himself or committed suicide, the fact that newspapers reported that he had committed suicide was not conclusive upon such issue, being merely an inference.

4. INSURANCE ⇨646(7) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—SUICIDE—PRESUMPTION.

In action on accident policy involving the issue of whether insured committed suicide or was shot by accident, the presumption is against suicide and in favor of accident, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1, providing that a person is presumed to be innocent of crime or wrong.

5. TRIAL ⇨191(3)—INSTRUCTION—ASSUMPTION OF FACT.

Instruction, "Where the insured is found dead under such circumstances that death may have been due to suicide or to accident, the presumption is against suicide, and in favor of accident," is not bad in assuming a fact not in evidence.

6. TRIAL ⇨234(7) — INSTRUCTION — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action on accident policy involving issue of whether insured's death was due to accident or suicide, where evidence thereon was purely circumstantial, instruction that presumption was in favor of accident was proper, and did not operate to shift burden of proof as to cause of death from plaintiff to defendant.

7. INSURANCE ⇨634(1) — ACCIDENT INSURANCE—WARRANTIES—PLEADING.

Where warranty is not promissory in character, and there is nothing to be performed thereunder, it is unnecessary to allege truth thereof; an averment of performance being required only where insured has warranted that he will do something.

8. INSURANCE ⇨558(1) — PROOF OF LOSS — WAIVER.

In view of Civ. Code § 1440, insurer waived condition of policy requiring written proof of loss by refusing to furnish beneficiary blank form of proofs and denying liability upon policy and informing beneficiary that it was useless for her to make proof of loss.

9. INSURANCE ⇨556(1) — PROOF OF LOSS — WAIVER—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Insurer's Pacific Coast superintendent, who had authority to look after insurer's interests generally, with power to issue policies without consulting home office, and with duty of looking into accidents where liability was claimed against company, and through whom policies were canceled and return of premiums offered, had authority to waive condition of policy requiring written proofs of loss by refusal to furnish blank forms and denial of liability.

10. INSURANCE ⇨179, 268—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—WARRANTIES—SEPARABLE CONTRACTS.

Where accident policy was issued for husband and wife, misrepresentation of wife's age had no effect upon contract insuring husband, the policy being separable into two distinct contracts of insurance, one insuring husband, and the other the wife.

11. INSURANCE ⇨268—WARRANTIES—FALSITY.

An agreement between insurer and insured that the falsity of any statement in an application for insurance will avoid the policy is binding, regardless of materiality of statement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Mattie M. Wilkinson against the Standard Accident Insurance Company of Detroit, Mich. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Johnston & Jones, of Fresno, and Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco, for appellant.

M. K. Harris and Geo. Cosgrave, both of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This action was brought upon a policy which insured the plaintiff's husband, John H. Wilkinson, against death or disability resulting from accident. From a judgment in plaintiff's favor defendant appeals.

On October 5, 1914, Wilkinson was found dead in his bedroom by his wife. There was no direct evidence as to the cause of the death, and the findings and judgment of the trial court rest upon the following uncontroverted facts and circumstances: Wilkinson's wife had gone to his room upon hearing the report of a revolver. The body was found prostrate in front of a white enameled washbowl, with a bullet hole in the forehead. There were no powder marks or burns on the face. A revolver lay near the knee, about three feet from the right hand. There was a medicine chest above the bowl with a mirror on its door. On the lower part of this mirror, and on the woodwork below it, was a spattering of blood and brain matter. There was no such spattering on the bowl or in the water which was in the bowl. A small drawer below the mirror, which had theretofore been known to contain Wilkinson's revolver, as well as his shaving materials, was open, with the leather holster still lying in the drawer. There was a nick on the edge of the washbowl, together with a black mark, as if some hard object had fallen, chipping and discoloring the surface. These marks were not upon the bowl prior to the shooting. The bullet went straight into the forehead, slightly tearing the skin. Such a wound, in the opinion of defendant's expert witnesses, would cause one to crumple up and fall immediately to the floor, and blood would spurt back out of the wound. The absence of powder marks on the flesh could be accounted for by the experts only upon the theory that the revolver had been placed directly against the skin. On the other hand, a firearms expert testified on behalf of the plaintiff that a shot fired within a foot of the object penetrated would leave powder marks on the surface around the hole; while, if the muzzle of the weapon were pressed against the surface, "it will burn and smudge—crock," and be very apt to explode the gun. He also testified that Wilkinson's revolver could have been discharged by a blow on the hammer, and that it was light on the trigger. One of defendant's witnesses testified to having seen Wilkinson going into the hotel where Wilkinson lived on the evening of the shooting; that he was in the company of two persons; that he did not seem to have full control of himself, and seemed to be mildly resisting the efforts of his companions to get him into the hotel. This testimony, however, was contradicted by plaintiff. No motive for suicide was shown or attempted to be shown, and the evidence shows without conflict that Wilkinson was a man of happy disposition; that he was free from domestic or business troubles; and that he was cheerful and in excellent health up to the time of his death.

[1] Plaintiff's theory is that the circumstances attending the killing showed that Wilkinson, in taking his revolver from the drawer above the bowl, had accidentally dropped the weapon, and that it had fallen onto the bowl in such a position as to cause it to discharge a bullet into his head. Defendant's contention, on the other hand, is that there was no evidence in the case to support the theory of accident, but that, on the contrary, the circumstances shown absolutely precluded the possibility of accident, and therefore compel the conclusion that the deceased committed suicide. We cannot concur in this contention. It is neither inherently incredible nor altogether impossible that Wilkinson could have been accidentally shot and still have fallen backward. It is conceivable that he could have been standing erect, with his head inclined forward toward the bowl. In view of the reflexes of the human body, it is also conceivable that his head was in a sufficiently different position by the time blood spurted from the wound so that the blood discharged would reach a higher place than that from which the shot was fired. Moreover, it is not clear from the testimony that the body did fall straight backward, as defendant assumes, rather than crumpled up, as its witnesses testify would be the case if deceased had been bending forward at the time of the shot. It is not inconceivable that the gun was accidentally discharged while being taken from the drawer, which was just below the mirror and the spattering of blood. In brief, we do not feel justified in holding as a matter of law that, under all the circumstances and the possible inferences to be drawn therefrom, the evidence adduced upon the whole case is not sufficient to support the finding of the jury, implied from their verdict, that the death of the deceased was due to accident, and not to suicide.

[2, 3] The fact that plaintiff assumed in her testimony at the inquest immediately following her husband's death that he had committed suicide, as did the newspaper reporter who wrote an account of the episode, can have no conclusive effect, since this was no more than an inference in each instance. While it is possible that, had we been sitting as the jury in this case, we should have come to a different conclusion from that at which the jury did arrive, still, upon the whole case, it is not open to us to say, as a matter of law, that there was no sufficient evidence to support the verdict and judgment.

Appellant assails the following instruction to the jury:

"Where the insured is found dead under such circumstances that death may have been due to suicide or to accident, the presumption is against suicide and in favor of accident."

[4] The contention that there is no such presumption in this state cannot be sustained. This presumption necessarily and logically follows from the statutory presumption "that a person is innocent of crime or wrong." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 1; Jenkin v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 Cal. 121, 63 Pac. 180.

[5] The instruction does not assume a fact not in evidence. The instruction was simply directed to the issue, plainly pointed by the pleadings, as to whether the decedent met his death through accident or suicide.

[6] It did not operate to shift the burden of proof from plaintiff to defendant, nor was it contradictory of the court's other and general instruction that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to prove death by accident. As was said by Mr. Justice Sloss from the bench during the oral argument of the case:

"There is no inconsistency in saying the burden of proof is upon one party, and at the same time that certain circumstances will furnish a presumption which is an element of proof or item of evidence to be weighed in determining whether he has sustained that burden."

Admittedly the facts of the present case exclude every cause of death save those of accident or suicide, and it is conceded that the solution of the question as to how the decedent came to his death is dependent entirely upon circumstantial evidence. In this particular the case is distinguishable from the case of Weil v. Globe, etc., Co., 179 App. Div. 166, 166 N. Y. Supp. 225, where there was the direct and uncontradicted evidence of several witnesses that the deceased deliberately jumped in front of a moving train. In that case the trial court charged the jury that:

"If the facts are equally susceptible of either construction—that is, suicide on the one hand; accident on the other—it will be presumed that the death was the result of an accident, and not of a wrongful intent."

This instruction was criticized and condemned by the court of last resort, chiefly because it ignored the direct evidence that the deceased voluntarily threw himself in front of an approaching train, and invoked the aid of a presumption "which is available only for the purpose of taking the place of direct testimony with the burden of proof," and also because it was tantamount to charging the jury that, if the evidence was equally balanced, the law permitted the presumption to weigh in favor of the plaintiff, and thereby shifted the burden of producing a preponderance of the proof to the defendant.

In other words, the instruction condemned in the case cited was predicated upon the erroneous assumption that the evidence of the cause of death was wholly circumstantial and was equally susceptible to one of two opposing theories, whereas the instruction under review here merely postulates the opposing theories of accident and suicide, and did no more in our opinion than correctly charge the jury that, when weighing the evidence, they should give due weight to the presumption which the law indulges against suicide. Such an instruction is appropriate and proper in cases where the determination of the cause of death is dependent wholly upon circumstantial evidence which will fairly support either a finding of accident or one of suicide. Weil v. Globe, etc., Co., supra; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 1360, 32 L. Ed. 308; Standard Life, etc., Co. v. Thornton, 100 Fed. 582, 40 C. C. A. 564, 49 L. R. A. 116; Jenkin v. Pac., etc., Co., 131 Cal. 121, 63 Pac. 180. And that, we think, is the condition in the present case.

Other grounds which have been urged for a reversal of the judgment were, we think, correctly disposed of by the appellate court for the First district in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Kerrigan, and we therefore adopt that opinion, which is as follows:

"It is claimed that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained; that certain warranties were untrue, for which reason the policy never attached to the risk; and that no written proof of death was given as required by the policy.

"The contention that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained is based upon the ground that it does not appear therefrom that the warranties set forth in the policy were true, and for the further reason that the complaint simply alleges that oral proof of death was given, whereas the policy required written proof.

[7] "With regard to the first objection it is sufficient to say that the warranties referred to were not promissory in character. Where nothing is required to be performed by an insured under a warranty, there is no necessity for averring performance, for the reason that there is nothing to be performed, and under such circumstances an averment of performance would be useless and without meaning. When a thing is warranted by the insured to exist or a representation to be true at a time when a policy becomes consummated as a contract, he has done all that he can do. Cowan v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 78 Cal. 181, 20 Pac. 408; Berlinger v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 451, 53 Pac. 922. It is only where the insured has warranted that he will do something that an averment of performance is required.

[8] "Nor do we think that there is any merit in the argument that the averment in the complaint with reference to loss under the policy is insufficient. The allegation upon this subject recites that plaintiff gave to defendant complete oral proof of the facts and circumstances surrounding the death of insured, and that, though requested, defendant refused to furnish to plaintiff the blank form of proofs, and denied all liability upon the policy, and informed plaintiff that it was useless for her to make proof of loss. Such denial of liability constitutes a waiver of the condition requiring proof of loss. Civ. Code, § 1440; McCullough v. Home Ins. Co., 155 Cal. 659, 102 Pac. 814, 18 Ann. Cas. 862; May on Insurance, 469.

"The further objection that the complaint is insufficient for the reason that it does not appear therefrom that the waiver of the provision requiring proof of loss was written upon or attached to the policy is disposed of in the opinion of Mr. Justice Sloss in McCullough v. Home Insurance Company, supra, and requires no discussion.

[9] "Nor do we think the evidence supports appellant's contention that there was a lack of authority in the agents in making the waiver. We do not deem it necessary to review in detail the voluminous evidence upon the subject. Briefly, the evidence is as follows: One C. F. Briggs was the Pacific Coast superintendent of defendant company, and had been acting as such for 25 years. Geo. R. Andrews was an agent of defendant at Fresno. Briggs had authority to look after the interests of the company generally. It was within his power to issue policies without consulting the home office, and also to take up policies. The general course of the company in the Pacific territory was to act through Briggs. It was his business, among other things, to look into all cases when accidents happened and a liability was claimed against the company. He had the power to appoint agents to solicit insurance, and appointed Andrews. He also had power to settle cases for the company. The secretary of the company testified that, when defendant wanted to cancel a policy and obtain its return from a policy holder, Briggs made the demand on the Pacific Coast, and that, when denial of liability in death claims was made, the general custom of the company was to convey the information direct from the home office to the policy holder, or by special authority to Briggs; and that, when they wished to offer the return of a premium that had been paid, they had Briggs return it.

"Upon receiving news of the circumstances of the death of insured Briggs instructed Andrews to pay back the premium amounting to the sum of $60, and demand the policy. This Andrews did, at the same time advising the plaintiff that he did it under instructions from Briggs. The company, in the meantime being fully advised of all the proceedings, and within the time when proof of loss might have been furnished, ratified the action of Briggs in refusing to pay the plaintiff's claim and instructed him to recover the policy. This is evidenced by the correspondence between the company and Briggs. The action of the company could hardly be expected to be otherwise from the facts it had before it.

"We are further of the opinion that the claim that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict because certain warranties contained in the policy were untrue is without merit. The untruthfulness of the warranties complained of consists in: (1) That the insured gave the age of his wife as 26 when she was in fact 30; (2) that insured was not at the time of the issuance of the policy a member of a firm, but was an officer of a corporation of the same name.

[10, 11] "With reference to the first alleged false warranty, the policy provided as an additional benefit for a limited insurance in favor of the beneficiary if such person was over the age of 18 years and under the age of 60. It is true that courts have generally held a warranty as to age of the insured to be material. Here, however, the policy, as plaintiff contends, is separable into two distinct contracts of insurance—one insuring the deceased; the other insuring the plaintiff herself. Any misrepresentation respecting the beneficiary could in no manner have any effect upon the contract insuring deceased. The false statement here made was therefore a matter not material to the contract of insurance of deceased, and had nothing to do with it. It is undoubtedly true, as claimed by the appellant, that an agreement between insurer and insured that the falsity of any statement in an application for insurance will avoid the policy is binding, and that in such case the question of its materiality is of no consequence; but the policy here involved contained no such provision.

"The alleged breach of warranty concerning the occupation of deceased was surely not material, and appellant's contention with reference thereto requires no discussion."

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

TOLBARD v. CLINE, Sheriff, et al.
(L. A. 4738.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⇨298(3) — HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨49½(8) — CONVEYANCE BY WIFE—FRAUDULENT INTENT—EVIDENCE.

In a husband's action to enjoin the sale of alleged community property on execution against his wife, evidence held to justify finding that the original deeding of the property to the wife was intended as a gift to her, and that her transfer to a third person, who conveyed to the husband, was made with the intention to defraud creditors.

2. PLEADING ⇨236(3)—AMENDMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The amendment of a pleading during trial lies within the sound discretion of the trial court, and may be allowed though the defense set up has been known for a considerable time before the trial.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1071(6)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO FIND.

In a husband's action to enjoin sale on execution against his wife of property conveyed to him by the wife through a third person, failure to find whether the property originally deeded by the husband to the wife was paid for by the husband out of community funds held harmless to the husband; there having been no dispute on the question, as both the husband and wife testified that property was so paid for.

4. TRIAL 397(1)—FAILURE TO FIND—IMMATERIALITY.

In husband's action to enjoin sale on execution against his wife of property conveyed by wife to him through third person, failure to find that judgment against wife on which execution was issued was on her own contractual obligation, and that the husband was not interested in it, was immaterial, where there was a finding that the wife had made the contract, one of lease, independently, and on her own responsibility.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by W. S. Tolbard against John C. Cline, as Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, and Lillie Ward. From judgment for defendants, and from an order denying his motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Alfred W. Allen and Fred W. Heatherly, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lee C. Gates and W. S. Allen, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. This action was brought to enjoin the defendants from selling certain property against which an execution had been levied. The case was tried before the court sitting without a jury. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

On March 7, 1913, Mrs. Lillie Ward, one of the defendants herein, leased to Mrs. R. A. Tolbard, wife of the plaintiff, an apartment house for "five years from March 7, 1913, at $300 per month, payable in advance." The rent for the first and last month of the term was paid on the execution of the lease.

At the time of making the lease the two pieces of property which are involved in this action stood in the name of Mrs. Tolbard. This property is situated in the city of Long Beach. "Parcel A," also referred to as the "home place," was deeded to Mrs. Tolbard "as her separate estate," while the deed to "Parcel B" was silent as to whether or not it was to be her separate estate. The evidence showed without conflict that both parcels were paid for by the plaintiff out of community funds.

On May 4, 1914, Mrs. Tolbard deeded the property to Mrs. Iola Thompson, who later transferred it to the plaintiff. Thereafter, and for the months of August to December, 1914, inclusive, Mrs. Tolbard failed to pay the rent as provided in the lease. It appears that Mrs. Ward had had some trouble in collecting the rent for the months of April and May, 1914, and that on May 1, 1914, she had threatened to levy against the above-mentioned property, standing at that time in Mrs. Tolbard's name, if the rent were not paid. The plaintiff denies, however, that the transfer of the property to Mrs. Thompson, and thence to him, was made for that reason.

Mrs. Ward recovered judgment against Mrs. Tolbard for the amount of the unpaid rent, and execution was levied on the property above described as parcels A and B. The plaintiff by this action seeks to restrain the sale of this property, alleging in his complaint that it is community property, and therefore not subject to his wife's debts.

The defendants denied that the property is community property, and alleged that it is the separate property of the wife, conveyed fraudulently to avoid payments of the rent under the lease. In an amended answer it was alleged further that the plaintiff, by his representations and conduct, is estopped to deny his wife's title to the property.

The court found: That the property in question had been deeded to Mrs. Tolbard, that "Parcel A" stood of record "as her separate property," and that "Parcel B" was in her name presumptively as her separate property. That at the time the lease of the apartment house was entered into between Mrs. Tolbard and Mrs. Ward the plaintiff had told Mrs. Ward that this property was owned by his wife, and that Mrs. Ward might look to that property as security for the payments of rent to become due under the lease. That Mrs. Tolbard had taken Mrs. Ward to see the property and pointed it out as her own separate property. That, relying upon the conduct, representations, and statements made by the plaintiff and his wife, Mrs. Ward had entered into the lease without any bond to secure the payments of the rent, which she would not otherwise have done. That, having made such representations with full knowledge and notice of all the facts and circumstances of the lease, and regarding the title of record of the property, plaintiff had full knowledge and notice of the fact that Mrs. Ward was extending credit to Mrs. Tolbard upon the faith of the representations and statements and conduct of the plaintiff and Mrs. Tolbard as to the ownership of said properties, and therefore plaintiff is estopped to deny that she was the owner. That Mrs. Ward had difficulty in collecting the rent for the apartment house for the months of April and May, 1914, and that she had told Mrs. Tolbard that she would proceed to collect the rent out of the property of Mrs. Tolbard if the rent were not paid. That the transfer of the properties through Mrs. Thompson to the plaintiff was made with the "intent and design to sequester said properties and to hinder this defendant, Lillie Ward, from subjecting said properties to the payment of the rent then due, or to become due under the terms of the lease of said apartments." That the plaintiff, on or about the last day of April, 1914, knowing that his wife was unable to pay the rent, and anticipating trouble with Mrs. Ward over the matter, with the intent and design to defraud Mrs. Ward and to keep her from subjecting the properties to the payment of any rent due or to become due under the lease, counseled with one E. J. Starr, a notary public of Long Beach, regarding the transfer of the title of the said properties, and authorized Starr to make such disposition of the properties as to him might seem best to keep Mrs. Ward from selling them to satisfy her claims for rent. That Starr accordingly, on May 4, 1914, caused deeds to be made, transferring the properties from Mrs. Tolbard to Mrs. Thompson, and that on the same day Starr caused deeds to be made conveying the said properties from Mrs. Thompson to the plaintiff. That the deeds from Mrs. Tolbard to Mrs. Thompson were recorded and returned to Starr, but that the deeds from Mrs. Thompson to the plaintiff were never recorded. That these deeds, in a packet with other papers, were, in the latter part of June, 1914, given by Starr to the plaintiff, who put the packet away without examining the contents. That the deeds to Mrs. Thompson and from her to the plaintiff were without consideration, and were never delivered, and that the property is still presumptively the separate property of Mrs. Tolbard.

From these findings the court concluded as matter of law that the plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from selling the said properties on execution.

The appellant's chief contention is that there was no evidence on which the court could base its finding that the property involved in this controversy was the separate property of Mrs. Tolbard, and that the transfer to Mrs. Thompson was for the purpose of defrauding Mrs. Ward.

Section 164 of the Civil Code provides:

"All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property; but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property."

Fulkerson v. Stiles, 156 Cal. 703, 105 Pac. 966, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 181, was an action brought by the husband against a judgment creditor of his wife to quiet title to land standing in her name, against which an execution had been levied for debts of the wife incurred before the property was deeded to her. It was held that in the absence of evidence of a gift, the facts that the property had been bought out of community funds, and that the husband and wife both testified that a gift was not intended, negative the presumption that would otherwise arise under section 164, Civil Code, that it was her separate property.

[1] But that case is not in point. The record shows that there was evidence on which to base both of these findings—that the deeding of the property to Mrs. Tolbard was intended as a gift to her, and that the transfer to Mrs. Thompson was made with the intention to defraud Mrs. Ward. The plaintiff testified that he knew that his wife was to take title. "I told my wife she could have the property deeded to her." G. W. Scott, the real estate dealer, testified that Mrs. Tolbard directed that the property be deeded to her "as her separate property." Mrs. Ward testified that the plaintiff told her at the time they were about to enter into the lease that Mrs. Tolbard owned parcels A and B. His actions and conduct indicate that a gift to his wife was intended; for while it is true that both the plaintiff and his wife testified to the contrary, and that the property had been put in Mrs. Tolbard's name merely for the sake of convenience, yet the fact that no attempt was made to put the property in the plaintiff's name until Mrs. Ward had threatened to levy against it to collect her rent, taken in the light of all the other circumstances, is evidence tending to prove that the intention was to make a gift.

The testimony of Mrs. Ward that Mrs. Tolbard said to her on May 16, 1914, "Well, Mrs. Ward, I have fixed my property now so you can't touch it; go ahead," tends to support the finding of fraud in the transfer of the property to Mrs. Thompson. Mrs. Tolbard denied having made such a statement, but her denial only created a conflict in the evidence, which the court resolved against her. In fact, the record shows that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence throughout, and we cannot hold that the findings of the court are without support.

As already stated, the defendants in their amended answer claimed that the plaintiff is estopped to deny that the property was the separate property of his wife. The plaintiff contends that this defense should not be entertained for the reasons that the amended answer was improperly allowed, that the defense of estoppel was not sufficiently pleaded, and that the evidence does not support the finding of estoppel.

[2] Appellant urges that the court erred in permitting the amendment to the answer to be filed during the trial, especially so since the defense of estoppel set out in the amendment was known for a considerable time before the trial. It is well established that the amendment of a pleading lies within the sound discretion of the trial court. In Pierson v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 131, this court said:

"The fact that the new matter set up by the amendment was well known to the defendant when he filed his original answer was no good reason why he should not have been permitted to amend. The rules relating to the amendment of pleadings are properly very liberal, and much is left to the judgment and discretion of the court below."

We think that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the amended answer.

It is immaterial whether the matter of estoppel was sufficiently pleaded or whether there were sufficient facts upon which to base such a defense. It having been proved that the property was not community property, but that it was the separate property of Mrs. Tolbard, the question of estoppel does not enter. Such a bar could have been raised only where it had been found that the property was community property, subject to the control of the plaintiff.

[3] It is contended that the court failed to find whether the property deeded by the plaintiff to Mrs. Tolbard was paid for by plaintiff out of community funds. The court did not make a specific finding on this issue. The plaintiff and Mrs. Tolbard both testified that the property was thus paid for. So even if such a finding should have been made, the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the failure of the court to make it. There was no dispute on the question. The real dispute was as to whether, when the plaintiff deeded the property to Mrs. Tolbard, it was to be her separate property or to remain community property, but standing in her name for the sake of convenience, as was testified.

[4] Nor was it material that the court failed to find that the judgment against Mrs. Tolbard, on which execution was issued, was on her own contractual obligation, and that the plaintiff was not interested in it. The finding that Mrs. Tolbard had entered into the lease independently and on her own responsibility sufficiently answers this point.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HURLBUT v. QUIGLEY. (Sac. 2722.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 25, 1919.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡223—INDORSEMENT—EFFECT.

An indorsement is a written contract, the effect of which the law declares.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡422(2) — INDORSEMENT—ENLARGED LIABILITY.

The writing above indorsers' names, declaring that they waive presentment, etc., is a part of the contract of indorsement, enlarging liability.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡422(2) — INDORSEMENT—JOINT AND SEVERAL AGREEMENT.

The words above indorsers' name, "I hereby waive presentment," etc., are governed by Civ. Code, § 1660, declaring that a promise made in the singular number, but executed by several persons, is presumed to be joint and several.

4. CONTRACTS ⚡184—JOINT AND SEVERAL—PRESUMPTION.

By express provision of Civ. Code, § 1659, where all the parties uniting in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, past or present, their promise is presumed to be joint and several.

5. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡422(2) — JOINT INDORSEMENT—EVIDENCE.

Circumstances held to show that accommodation indorsement of company's note by stockholders and officers, under words of waiver of presentment, etc., was joint and several.

6. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡517 — INDORSERS — TIME OF DELIVERY.

Evidence held to show that company's note to bank was not delivered till after it was indorsed by all the accommodation indorsers.

7. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡266 — INDORSERS — CONTRIBUTION.

Any of joint accommodation indorsers of note paying more than his share has right of contribution from the others.

8. EVIDENCE ⚡461(1) — PAROL EVIDENCE — INTENTION—NATURE OF LIABILITY OF INDORSERS.

Circumstances showing an intention of several accommodation indorsers, whose names appear successively on the back of a note, to act jointly in the matter, may be proved by parol.

9. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⚡49(6) — CONTRIBUTION—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE.

Cause of action for contribution between accommodation indorsers of note is not on the contract of indorsement, but on implied contract, and accrues only when one of them has paid more than his share.

10. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡96 — ACCOMMODATION INDORSEMENT—CONSIDERATION.

Original debt of company to bank is sufficient consideration for accommodation indorsement, before delivery, by company's officers and stockholders, of company's note to bank in satisfaction of prior obligations.

11. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡430 — PAYMENT — NEW NOTE.

Debt represented by note of company to bank is not paid by company giving new note to cover the same and other subsequent indebtedness; the new note not having been offered or accepted as a satisfaction of the old note, but merely as additional evidence of the original debt.

12. BILLS AND NOTES — 266 — INDORSERS — CONTRIBUTION — COMPLAINT.

Complaint by one indorser of note against another indorser thereof for contribution held to sufficiently allege a joint indorsement, it setting forth a company's note with names indorsed on the back, under agreement, made in the singular number, waiving presentment, etc.; and alleging the company executed the note, and that at the same time and as part of the same transaction the three indorsers signed such agreement.

13. EVIDENCE — 80(1) — PRESUMPTION — LAW OF OTHER STATE.

The law of another state is presumed to be the same as that of the forum.

14. PLEADING — 9 — SUFFICIENCY — STATING FACTS WITHOUT CONCLUSION.

A pleading is sufficient if it states the facts on which the law takes effect, without stating the conclusion of law.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by E. H. Hurlbut against J. R. Quigley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. L. Dennett, of Modesto (J. C. Needham, of Modesto, of counsel), for appellant.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff, the defendant, and William Trebilcock became accommodation indorsers upon a promissory note for $6,000, payable to the First National Bank of Central City. The plaintiff was, by suit, compelled to pay the whole thereof. He thereupon brought the present action to recover from Quigley one-third of the amount he had thus been compelled to pay and recovered judgment in the court below. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The complaint alleged that the Gilpin Lumber Company executed a note to the First National Bank of Central City, bearing date July 10, 1911, for $6,000, and:

"That at the same time and as a part of the same transaction, and for value received, the plaintiff, E. W. Hurlbut, and the defendant, J. R. Quigley, and one Wm. Trebilcock signed the following agreement on the back of the said note and indorsed the same as follows, to wit:

"For value received I hereby waive presentment, demand and notice of protest on the within note.

E. W. Hurlbut.
Wm. Trebilcock.
J. R. Quigley."

The theory of the complaint is that Hurlbut, Trebilcock, and Quigley were joint indorsers of the note, and that therefore one who paid more than his one-third share thereof had the right to sue the others for contribution. It is claimed that the evidence does not show a joint indorsement.

The theory of the appellant is that the note, with the writing and the names of Hurlbut and Trebilcock indorsed thereon, was delivered to the bank, and that thereafter Quigley wrote his name under the names of the other two indorsers. On this assumption the argument is that, with respect to the two other persons, Quigley is a successive indorser and not a joint indorser with them, and, consequently, that he and Hurlbut are not joint sureties, and that Hurlbut has no right of contribution from him. We find that the evidence warrants a different conclusion, and one which will support the judgment given for the plaintiff.

There was evidence to the effect that Quigley, Hurlbut, and Trebilcock were stockholders and officers of the Gilpin Lumber Company at and for years prior to the time of the execution of the note of July, 1911; that the company's place of business was in Colorado; that it borrowed large sums of money upon its notes from time to time from banks upon an arrangement, which was carried out, that Hurlbut, Trebilcock, and Quigley should indorse the same as sureties; that in July, 1911, the company owed the First National Bank of Central City, Colo., $6,000, of which $3,000 was evidenced by its note indorsed by Quigley and the other two under the arrangement stated, and the balance was in the form of an overdraft; that the company desired to give a new note for said debts; and that the bank thereupon agreed to accept the company's note for $6,000 indorsed by Hurlbut, Trebilcock, and Quigley, as sureties, in satisfaction of such note and overdraft. Quigley at that time lived in California, but was still a stockholder and officer of the company. Thereupon the note was drawn and properly signed by the officers of the lumber company, indorsed by Hurlbut and Trebilcock, and handed to an officer of the bank to be forwarded to Quigley, in California, for his signature as indorser. The note was so forwarded and was returned by Quigley to the bank in September, 1911, about two months after its date, with signatures as above shown. The bank then accepted the note as the obligation of the parties thereto and canceled the previous note for $3,000. There is no evidence tending to show any understanding between the three indorsers that they were to be liable successively in the order in which their names appeared upon the note, or that their relation was to be other than that of simultaneous accommodation indorsers. As stockholders they were all interested in the credit of the corporation.

[1-4] "An indorsement is a written contract of which the law declares the effect; and when counted upon it is the foundation of the action." Haines v. Tharp, 15 Ohio, 133; Goldman v. Davis, 23 Cal. 256; Citizens' Bank v. Jones, 121 Cal. 32, 53 Pac. 354. Where an indorser precedes his signature by a statement such as that in the indorsement above shown, it constitutes "a valid indorsement with an enlarged liability"; such enlargement in the present case being a waiver of some of the conditions imposed by law upon the payee in favor of the indorser. Buck v. Davenport Savings Bank, 29 Neb. 407, 45 N. W. 776, 26 Am. St. Rep. 392; Helmer v. Commercial Bank, 28 Neb. 474, 44 N. W. 482; Heard v. Dubuque, etc., Bank, 8 Neb. 10, 30 Am. Rep. 811. The writing above the indorsers' names, therefore, constituted a part of the written contract of indorsement. The contract of an indorser, except so far as he qualifies it in writing, is that if the instrument is dishonored he will, upon compliance by the holder with certain conditions, pay the amount of the note. Civ. Code, § 3116. It constitutes, therefore, a conditional promise to pay the note. "A promise, made in the singular number, but executed by several persons, is presumed to be joint and several." Civ. Code, § 1660. See, also, Farmers' Exchg. Bank v. Altura, etc., Co., 129 Cal. 269, 61 Pac. 1077; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 94; Maiden v. Webster, 30 Ind. 317; Salomon v. Hopkins, 61 Conn. 47, 23 Atl. 716; Monson v. Drakeley, 40 Conn. 559, 16 Am. Rep. 74; Hemmenway v. Stone, 7 Mass. 58, 5 Am. Dec. 27. "Where all the parties who unite in a promise receive some benefit from the consideration, whether past or present, their promise is presumed to be joint and several." Civ. Code, § 1659.

[5] It follows therefore that the circumstances above related rebut any presumption that the indorsers did not intend to become jointly bound and, further, in view of the above authorities, that the agreement written on the back of the note, being joint and several in its effect, and a part of the contract of indorsement, made the entire contract joint and several in character.

The case, with respect to the liability of the several indorsers and their relation to each other, is almost identical with Farmers' Exchg. Bank v. Altura, etc., Co., supra. In that case Hutson executed a note to the Altura Company, and thereupon it was taken by Otis, president of the company, to the plaintiff bank, duly indorsed by the company, to be discounted for the benefit of the company. The bank required security, and the words, "I hereby waive demand and notice of demand, protest and notice of protest, and nonpayment," were stamped upon the back of the note. Otis then took the note in this condition to procure accommodation indorsers. He then procured, underneath the words above quoted, the names of five persons, written one under the other and on different days. The note was then delivered to the bank and by it discounted for the company. The court below found that all of the persons thus indorsing the note had waived protest, notice of protest, and nonpayment of the note. The court held that this finding was sustained by the facts above stated. Referring to cases where it was held that such an indorsement constitutes a waiver only by the first person whose signature appears thereunder, there being nothing to indicate the intention to sign jointly, the court said that, under the circumstances shown, this rule did not prevail; that the first indorser "was an accommodation indorser like the rest of them, and signed as they did for the benefit of the mining company of which he and they were stockholders"; and in effect that, as they all signed before the note was delivered, they were all alike bound by the waiver of notice, etc., appearing above their signatures.

[6, 7] Upon the evidence in this case the court below properly found that there was no delivery of the note until after it had been received by the bank from Quigley after he had indorsed the same in company with the other indorsers, and that he thereby became a joint and several indorser with the others. This being the case, the right of contribution would exist in favor of any of the joint indorsers who paid more than his share of the debt. The judgment so far as this point is concerned is supported by sufficient evidence.

[8] The appellant attempts to invoke the rule, which has been laid down in some cases, that, where names appear as accommodation indorsers in successive order on the back of a note, they are, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, presumed to be successive indorsers and not joint indorsers. It is well settled, however, as the above cases indicate, that circumstances showing an intention to act jointly in the matter may be proven by parol evidence, and the presumption of successive indorsements overcome. 8 Cor. Jur. 381; Enterprise B. Co. v. Canning, 210 Mass. 285, 96 N. E. 673; Shea v. Vahey, 215 Mass. 82, 102 N. E. 119.

[9] The action is not barred by the statute of limitations. The cause of action for contribution does not accrue at the time of execution of the contract by which persons become joint sureties, but only when one surety pays more than his share of the debt. Hurlbut was compelled to pay this debt on January 26, 1916, and the action was begun on May 17, 1916. The period of limitation is two years. The action for contribution is not an action on the contract of indorsement, but is an action to enforce the equitable right of contribution upon the implied contract of each to the other, that they will share the burden equally. Chipman v. Morrill, 20 Cal. 136; Sherwood v. Dunbar, 6 Cal. 53; Richter

v. Henningsan, 110 Cal. 537, 42 Pac. 1077; Bunker v. Osborn, 132 Cal. 483, 64 Pac. 853.

[10] There was a sufficient consideration for Quigley's indorsement. His indorsement and that of the others were all made before delivery of the note, consequently the original debt was a sufficient consideration for the contract of indorsement. Savage v. Fox, 60 N. H. 17; 8 Cor. Jur. 211, § 343; McDonald v. Randall, 139 Cal. 255, 72 Pac. 997; Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 490, 78 Pac. 1054.

[11] There is no merit in the claim that the original debt was paid by the Gilpin Lumber Company after the execution of the note in controversy. It is true that a new note was afterwards given by the company to cover the same indebtedness with other indebtedness subsequently accrued; but this new note was neither offered nor accepted by the bank as a satisfaction of the note in question here, but merely as an additional evidence of the original debt. Such a transaction is not a payment.

[12-14] Upon the decision of this case in department it was stated that the complaint did not sufficiently allege a joint indorsement and, consequently, that the judgment could not be sustained. This objection is not mentioned in the briefs. Nevertheless, we have given it further consideration, and we are satisfied that the complaint is sufficient on this point. We have already shown that the contract of indorsement is a written contract of which the law declares the effect. In this state the law on the subject is declared in section 3116 of the Civil Code. It is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the law is the same in Colorado. That section recognizes that such contract may be qualified. We have also shown that the qualification written on the note here involved and signed by the indorsers made the entire contract of indorsement joint and several in character as between the parties thereto. The complaint sets forth the note with this contract indorsed thereon, in full. It therefore charges that the contract of indorsement is joint and several. Furthermore, it alleges that the Gilpin Lumber Company "executed and delivered" the $6,000 note, and that "at the same time and as a part of the same transaction" the three indorsers "signed" the agreement so written on the back of the note and indorsed the same. This means that the indorsements were simultaneously delivered. It is the final delivery as a complete contract that constitutes execution. Therefore it alleges that the indorsed agreement was executed simultaneously by all the indorsers. The allegation that they all signed the agreement is an allegation that Quigley signed it. He would be bound by it as matter of law. A pleading is sufficient if it states the facts upon which the law takes effect. The conclusion of law need not be stated. As it appears from the pleading that the contract of indorsement was joint and several and that Quigley and the others simultaneously executed it, the conclusion must be that it charges a joint indorsement by Quigley and the others.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; OLNEY, J.; LENNON, J.; MELVIN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

WILBUR, J. I dissent. In view of the fact that the prevailing opinion holds that the complaint is sufficient, while the contrary opinion prevailed in department, it seems proper to express in a dissent the view taken in department, to which I still adhere.

In Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, 163 Cal. 485, 126 Pac. 153, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787, the court in bank, speaking through Justice Angellotti, where a note had been indorsed by three persons (the defendants) before its delivery, as an accommodation to the payor, said:

"It cannot be doubted that if the note was a negotiable instrument the defendants were mere indorsers, with no other liability than that of indorsers. As such, notice of dishonor or non-payment would be essential to their liability in the absence of waiver on their part of the right to such notice."

The main opinion holds that the words, "For value received I hereby waive presentment, demand and notice of protest on the within note," convert the indorsements which would otherwise be construed as successive indorsements into joint indorsements. This view, it seems to me, does not give sufficient weight to the effect of an indorsement as provided by the law. It is conceded that without the waiver clause the effect of the indorsement of Hurlbut, as between Hurlbut and Quigley, was that Hurlbut, the first indorser, agreed to reimburse Quigley, the last indorser, upon proper presentment, demand, and notice, in the event that Quigley was called upon to pay the note, and the effect of Quigley's indorsement was that Quigley would pay the note to the payee, in the event that the payor failed to do so, upon proper presentment, demand, and notice, with recourse, in case of such payment for reimbursement against Hurlbut. This rule is thus stated in Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 704:

"But in the absence of any agreement among accommodation indorsers, the law fixes their liability in accordance with the order of the names on the paper, and the indorser who pays a bill or note has recourse against a prior indorser for reimbursement."

The same rule concerning indorsers is stated in a note in 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039:

"Their liability, inter se, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, is that expressed by the paper itself, and their liability is successive, and not joint; consequently they are not cosureties and the doctrine of contribution does not obtain. * * * The only question, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, is what is the prima facie liability of the parties as shown by the paper itself."

The rule may perhaps best be stated in the language of section 3116, Civil Code, in force at the time of the transaction:

"* * * Every indorser of a negotiable instrument, unless his indorsement is qualified, warrants to every subsequent holder thereof, who is not liable thereon to him: * * * (4) That if the instrument is dishonored, the indorser will, upon notice thereof duly given to him, or without notice, where it is excused by law, pay the same with interest."

Now where notice is waived the giving of notice is "excused by law"; and do not we have here a situation expressly provided for by section 3116, namely, that the first indorser warrants to the last indorser that he will, without notice, pay the same with interest? If we hold, as I agree may properly be done, that the waiver clause applies to all the subsequent indorsements (although there are authorities in other states to the contrary (Daniel Neg. Inst. § 1092a [6th Ed.] p. 1247), it seems to me that we give full effect to such clause by holding that this waiver is a joint and several agreement of waiver, the legal effect of which is to remove from the indorsement the condition implied by law that the obligation to pay shall be conditioned upon proper presentment, demand, and notice, so that Hurlbut's agreement to pay the payor of the note in the case of the default of the payee, or to reimburse Quigley in the event that Quigley is called upon to pay the same, is no longer conditioned upon presentment, demand, and notice, but absolute without such presentment, demand, and notice, while Quigley's agreement to pay the payee of the note with recourse on Hurlbut for reimbursement also becomes absolute, instead of conditional upon such presentment, demand, and notice. To hold that because the indorsers join in the one agreement to waive notice, etc., they thereby completely change the contract implied by law, so that instead of Hurlbut's agreement to pay Quigley we have an implied agreement that Quigley will pay to

Hurlbut, seems to me to give an effect to such waiver wholly foreign to its language and evident purpose. The main opinion states that the effect of the waiver and indorsement simply constitutes a contract of indorsement with enlarged liability, while the effect of the decision is that where several indorsers join in such waiver their contract becomes one of guaranty, or suretyship; a joint obligation to pay the payee in the event of the payor's default, with the obligation to mutually contribute in the event any one is called to pay more than his proportion to the payee. The rules of the law merchant, previously in effect, governing such cases, have been incorporated into our Civil Code, in the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Law, since the case was tried, and may well be stated in the language of section 3148, Civil Code, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 1543), providing as follows:

"Where a person places his indorsement on an instrument negotiable by delivery he incurs all the liabilities of an indorser."

Section 3149, Civil Code:

"As respects one another indorsers are liable prima facie in the order in which they indorse; but evidence is admissible to show that as between or among themselves they have agreed otherwise. Joint payees or joint indorsers who indorse are deemed to indorse jointly and severally."

Section 3145, Civil Code, provides as follows:

"Where a person not otherwise a party to an instrument, places thereon his signature in blank before delivery he is liable as indorser, in accordance with the following rules: (1) If the instrument is payable to the order of a third person, he is liable to the payee and to all subsequent parties. (2) If the instrument is payable to the order of the maker or drawer, or is payable to bearer, he is liable to all parties subsequent to the maker or drawer. (3) If he signs for the accommodation of the payee, he is liable to all parties subsequent to the payee."

It seems to me, therefore, that the fact that the indorsers joined together in the waiver does not affect that part of the contract relating to their obligation to pay one another and to pay the payee. I do not believe that the mere waiver of notice can convert an agreement which the law expressly provides shall be that of indorser into a mere contract of guaranty.

CITIZENS' SAV. BANK OF SAN DIEGO v. MACK et al. (L. A. 4734.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 21, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS —123(6)—PLEDGE OF STOCK —SUBSEQUENT LOANS—RIGHTS OF LENDER—EQUITIES IN THIRD PERSON.

Other loans subsequently made by a lender on the security of corporate stock to the holder thereof would have been protected by pledge of stock despite lender's knowledge of equities of third person in stock if subsequent loans had been result of compelling initial loan agreement or necessarily the result of incidental contractual relations of the parties, the lender not being protected where it was optional with it to make any loan in excess of the original amount advanced.

2. MARSHALING ASSETS AND SECURITIES —4 —REQUIREMENT OF FORECLOSURE—STATUTES AND EQUITABLE RULES.

Where bank loaned on pledge of corporate stock, also taking mortgages as security, it was properly required, a third person having equities in the pledged stock, first to foreclose its mortgages before resorting to a sale of the stock, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2899, 3433, and equitable rule that when creditor has lien on two funds, and another lien on only one, he will be compelled to exhaust fund on which he has exclusive lien, and to resort to other for deficiency only.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Citizens' Savings Bank of San Diego against A. F. Mack and the Bentley Ostrich Farm and Henry Eummelen. From a portion of the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 31 Cal. App. 506, 160 Pac. 1096.

Albert J. Lee, of San Diego, for appellant.
Doolittle & Morrison, of San Diego, for respondents.

LENNON, J. The plaintiff by this action sought to restrain by injunction the defendant Bentley Ostrich Farm from canceling certain certificates of its corporate capital stock standing on its books in the name of the defendant Henry Eummelen, and to prohibit the corporation defendant from issuing to the defendant Mack other certificates in lieu thereof evidencing in the aggregate 280 shares of the corporate stock, and also to restrain the defendant Mack from receiving under claim of ownership or otherwise all or any portion of the said stock. The appeal, presented on the judgment roll alone, is only from that particular portion of the judgment which in effect decreed that the plaintiff held the certificates of stock in controversy as a pledge to secure the payment of only $12,000, instead of $24,000, and provided that before a sale of 280 shares of said stock could be resorted to in satisfaction of the loan, which the trial court found were owned by the defendant Mack, the plaintiff must first foreclose the real property mortgage executed to plaintiff by defendant Eummelen simultaneously with the pledge of the stock as additional security for the loan of $24,000, which was ultimately made by the plaintiff to the defendant Eummelen. In this behalf the portion of the judgment appealed from directed that the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property be applied first to the satisfaction of a second loan of $12,000, and that then the plaintiff might have recourse to a sale of said stock in satisfaction of the unpaid balance, if any, of the $12,000 originally loaned to the defendant Eummelen, and secured by a pledge of the stock and a first mortgage on real property as well.

The facts of the case, as evidenced by the pleadings, proof, and findings, are these: In November, 1911, W. H. Bentley was the owner and holder of 840 shares of the issued capital stock of the Bentley Ostrich Farm. In that month, the defendant Henry Eummelen represented to A. F. Mack, defendant and respondent herein, that a controlling interest in said ostrich farm could be had for $50,000. Thereupon an agreement was entered into by and between Mack and Eummelen, whereby they were to jointly purchase the said 840 shares, each to advance one-half of the purchase price, and each in return to receive 420 shares of said stock. Eummelen alone conducted the negotiations with Bentley, acting all the while for himself, and as agent of Mack. During the course of the negotiations, Eummelen informed Mack that he was unable to contribute $25,000 in cash as payment for his portion of the purchase price, and represented to Mack that Bentley was willing to take from Eummelen, in lieu of cash, his promissory note extending over a period of two years if Mack would pay $15,000 in cash and give his promissory note for $10,000, and that if Mack would do this Bentley would convey to Mack in addition to the said 420 shares of stock certain real property situate in the city of San Diego, which was mortgaged for $1,500 and valued at $3,000. Mack was willing, and accordingly paid Bentley the sum of $15,000 in cash and delivered his promissory note to Bentley in the sum of $10,000. Bentley in turn executed to Mack a deed to said real property. The representations made in the first instance by Eummelen to Mack that the purchase price of the stock was $50,000 were false, and willfully and knowingly made by Eummelen, who at all times knew that the price of the stock was but $30,000, and in fact had, during the negotiations for the sale of the stock, agreed with Bentley, without Mack's knowledge, that the purchase price thereof was to be but $30,000. A sale of the stock was consummated by Eummelen and Bentley at that price, but as a payment in full for his 420 shares he gave Bentley only a promissory note for $5,000. In March, 1912, Mack discovered the fraud that had been thus perpetrated upon him, and on August 12, 1912, instituted an action, which sought and secured a judgment, entered on August 4, 1913, decreeing that he was the owner of such portion of the 840 shares of stock purchased as the sum that he had personally paid toward the purchase price of the stock bore to the amount actually paid therefor, namely, 700 shares, and that the defendant Eummelen held 280 shares of said stock in trust for Mack. On June 20th, the defendant Eummelen placed with the Citizen's Savings Bank of San Diego, the plaintiff in the present action, as a pledge to secure a loan of $12,000, and such further sums as might thereafter be advanced, not to exceed the sum of $24,000, stock certificates certifying that in the aggregate the defendant Eummelen was the owner of 420 shares of stock in the Bentley Ostrich Farm. The stock so pledged, being the one-half of that purchased from Bentley for himself and Mack, was only part of the security placed for this loan, a real property mortgage also being executed to the bank by Eummelen on certain property owned by him. On December 27, 1912, plaintiff advanced to Eummelen as a loan the further sum of $3,000, and on February 6, 1913, the additional sum of $9,000, taking, however, as added security from Eummelen a second mortgage on the aforesaid real property which is situate in San Diego county. On August 4, 1913, ten days after the entry of the judgment in the action instituted by Mack decreeing Eummelen a trustee of the 280 shares of the stock which had been pledged to the plaintiff by Eummelen, the plaintiff appeared and interposed in that action a motion to vacate and to set aside the judgment, to the end that it might be allowed to intervene. From the order denying the motion the plaintiff here appealed, but the order was affirmed. Mack v. Eummelen, 31 Cal. App. 506, 160 Pac. 1096.

The principal point argued in support of the appeal is to the effect that the relative rights and obligations of the parties to the pledge of the stock were definitely determined by the initial loan agreement of June 20, 1912, and that as a consequence it was not only the plaintiff's right, but his unavoidable contractual obligation as well, to make further loans to the pledgor of the stock up to the limit of $24,000, and that this was so despite the fact that prior to the making of the second and third loans of respectively $3,000 and $9,000 plaintiff had, as the trial court found, actual notice of the fact that the defendant Mack had instituted an action for the recovery of 280 shares of the pledged stock upon the claim that he was the equitable owner thereof. This contention is rested primarily upon the authority of Jones on Pledges, § 106, where it is said:

"A promissory note pledged before maturity as collateral security for future advances is good in the creditor's hands for all advances made before notice of equities between the original parties; but not for advances made after such notice—unless the creditor at the time of taking the security bound himself to make advances to a definite amount."

It will be noted that the last clause of the quoted section, italicized by us, is not supported by the citation of any authority, and that the cases cited by the author to support the preceding portions of the text have no relation to the principles enunciated in the last clause, which, in so far as our research shows, rests upon no authority save the dictum of the author. It is clearly contrary to the settled, fundamental, and familiar principles which measure the rights and obligations of bona fide pledgees. The general rule which provides protection for loans advanced upon the security of a pledge before but not after actual notice of the fact that third persons own or claim to own all or a portion of the subject-matter of the pledge is doubtless subject to exceptions. The proper limitations to be placed upon the rule in exceptional cases, and which Jones probably had in mind but did not fully express in his work on pledges, is to be found by analogy in his work on chattel mortgages (5th Ed. § 97). There he declares:

"That advances made by a mortgagee after he has actual notice that others have preferred rights in the property will be postponed to the rights acquired by such other persons unless the mortgagee be under a binding contract to make the advances, or it is essential to his own security to complete the advances contemplated by the mortgage. If he has the option to make the advances or not as he chooses, the mortgage as to each advance made upon it is to be regarded as a fresh mortgage."

We apprehend that a "binding" contract is one under which the mortgagee was legally obligated to make the loan called for by the initial loan agreement, and for the breach of which he could be held liable. The case of Preble v. Conger, 66 Ill. 370, is an apt illustration of the application of the exception to the general rule which permits and protects future advances originally contemplated by the mortgage, even though made after notice of existing preferred rights of third parties. In this case the mortgagees had become the guarantors of the mortgagor to third parties for the building of a hotel according to contract and had taken a chattle mortgage from the contractor to indemnify them as a security for the payment of whatever sum might become due for advances and for payments made in discharge of the guaranty. In this situation, the court held that the mortgagees had the right to make on the strength of the mortgage such advances and payments, as well after notice as before, as were necessary for the discharge of their obligation.

[1] By a parity of reasoning, it might be readily and rightfully said that the second and third loans made by the plaintiff to the defendant Eummelen would have been protected by the pledge of the stock in question despite the plaintiff's knowledge of the equities of the defendant Mack if the loans had been the result of a compelling initial loan agreement or necessarily the result of the incidental contractual relations of the parties. But no such situation is shown either by the pleadings or by the proof. On the contrary, it was shown that it was optional with the plaintiff to make any loan in excess of the original $12,000 on the pledge of the stock. That this is so evidenced, we think, by the fact that the plaintiff insisted upon having, and did receive, separate notes and a second real property mortgage as evidence of and security for the second and third loans.

The facts of the case at bar do not either directly or by analogy fall within the reasoning of Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 99, and Brittan v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 124 Cal. 282, 57 Pac. 84, 71 Am. St. Rep. 58, and the general rule declared in section 2991 of the Civil Code. At no time was the stock placed by Mack in the hands of Eummelen so as to make him apparent owner thereof for the purpose of transfer.

[2] The further contention of the appellant that the trial court erred in adjudging that the plaintiff must first foreclose its mortgages before resorting to a sale of the pledged stock is not, we think, well taken. That requirement is within the purview of sections 2899 and 3433 of the Civil Code and well within the principle enunciated in the case of Kent v. Williams, 114 Cal. 537, 46 Pac. 462. Moreover, it is in thorough accord with the well-established rule in equity that, where a creditor has a lien upon two funds and another lien upon only one of them, he will be compelled to exhaust the fund upon which he has an exclusive lien and will be permitted to resort to the other for deficiency only. United States v. Duncan, 12 Ill. 523, Fed. Cas. No. 15,003; United States v. Mott, 1 Paine, 188, Fed. Cas. No. 15,826.

The contention that the trial court erred in refusing to strike out portions of the defendant's answer was not argued and, apparently, is without merit.

Our conclusions upon the merits of plaintiff's appeal make it unnecessary for us to discuss and decide the points presented in support of the defendant's appeal from the same judgment which, by stipulation, comes here upon the same record.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.

MARIN MUNICIPAL WATER DIST. v. NORTH COAST WATER CO. (Civ. 2847.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 13, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1919.)

1. COVENANTS — 8 — IMPLIED COVENANT AGAINST INCUMBRANCES—PROCEEDINGS IN INVITUM.

Where municipal water district having condemned certain land secured possession of land through an order of court by a proceeding in invitum under Code Civ. Proc. § 1254, there was no implied covenant, as in a voluntary conveyance by grant, against incumbrances or liens.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN — 165 — PAYMENT — LIENS—RECOVERY FROM OWNER.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1248, providing that, upon condemnation of land incumbered by a mortgage or other lien securing indebtedness not due at time of entry of judgment, the amount of indebtedness may, at plaintiff's option, be deducted from the judgment, does not give plaintiff the right to recover such indebtedness after payment of judgment in full and neglect to retain amount of indebtedness.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN — 165—CONDEMNATION OF LAND SUBJECT TO TAX LIEN—RECOVERY FROM FORMER OWNER.

Municipal water district, having secured possession of property it had condemned by order of court in a proceeding in invitum under Code Civ. Proc. § 1254, cannot recover from owner taxes due and constituting lien upon land, but not delinquent, at time of transfer of land, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 1712; owner being under no obligation to remove lien of taxes at time of transfer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Action by the Marin Municipal Water District against the North Coast Water Company. Judgment for defendant after demurrer to complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for appellant.

Chas. S. Wheeler and John F. Bowie, both of San Francisco (Nathan Moran, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. In this action the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant the sum of $2,224.57, which it had paid as county and municipal taxes upon certain real property situated in the county of Marin. The complaint set forth certain facts in an attempt to show that it was the duty of the defendant to have paid these taxes, and that, it not having done so, the plaintiff, in order to free its property from the lien thereof, was compelled to and did pay them. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon entered.

It appears from the complaint that the plaintiff is a municipal water district. As such it brought an action to condemn certain lands of the defendant. It had theretofore procured a valuation of said lands to be made by the railroad commission, which fixed such valuation at the sum of $289,100. The action was tried on February 14, 1916, and resulted in a judgment, entered on March 21st following, that the plaintiff take said lands upon paying the said sum of $289,100, from which judgment the defendant took an appeal.

On or about the first Monday of March of the same year the real property was assessed by the county assessor, and a part thereof by the town assessor of Mill Valley, for taxation purposes, and in the following September county and municipal taxes were duly levied (being the taxes giving rise to the present controversy), and became a lien upon the real property referred to as of the first Monday in March, 1916. These taxes became due on October 23d of that year.

On October 24, 1916, the plaintiff, upon notice theretofore given, procured from the superior court, under the provisions of section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an order placing it in possession of the property upon payment of the amount previously found to be its value, and a few days thereafter, to wit, on November 1st, it paid to the defendant this amount and entered into possession of the real property. At the time of the transfer neither the county nor municipal taxes had been paid, and several weeks later became delinquent, and the property was sold therefor. Thereafter the plaintiff redeemed it, and demanded of the defendant that it reimburse to it the amount so paid out, which the defendant refused to do.

[1] The facts as above narrated disclose that at the time the plaintiff took over the real property the taxes, although due and a lien thereon, were not delinquent. There had been no default on the part of the defendant. Its property being taken from it by a proceeding in invitum, there was no implied covenant, as in a voluntary conveyance by grant, against incumbrances or liens. Nor are we pointed to any provision of law placing upon defendant any obligation to the plaintiff to remove from the property about to be taken from it any lien existing thereon. The plaintiff claims that such obligation arises from the terms of section 1248 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section reads as follows:

"When the property sought to be taken is incumbered by a mortgage or other lien, and the indebtedness secured thereby is not due at the time of the entry of judgment, the amount of such indebtedness may be, at the option of the plaintiff, deducted from the judgment, and the lien of the mortgage or other lien shall be continued until such indebtedness is paid."

[2] We do not so construe the section. It gives to the person taking property by proceedings in eminent domain the right to retain from the sum of money to be paid for it the amount necessary to discharge any lien existing thereon, but his neglect to adopt this course would not give rise, in the absence of some other provision of law creating it, to a right of action to recover it when once paid. The right given by this section seems to be one the extent of which is measured by the mode prescribed for its exercise. In eminent domain proceedings the only obligation resting upon the defendant is to prove his damages. A case in which this question arose is Gray v. Case, 51 N. J. Eq. 426, 26 Atl. 805. There the condemnor failed to provide against a lien both at the trial and after the award was paid into court. The Court of Chancery of New Jersey used this language with regard to the situation thereby created:

"But, the company failing to give the requisite notice, it still had the right to have equitable distribution of the award among those interested. For this purpose it was entitled to the aid of the court. Platt v. Bright, 29 N. J. Eq. 128; Id., 31 N. J. Eq. 81. This, too, was neglected by the company. Parties who fail to avail themselves of the rights and safeguards which the law offers them cannot complain when such failure results in their disadvantage."

Plaintiff also claims in support of its right to recover that the case comes within the provisions of section 1712 of the Civil Code, reading:

"One who obtains a thing without the consent of its owner, or by a consent afterwards rescinded, or by an unlawful exaction which the owner could not at the time prudently refuse, must restore it to the person from whom it was thus obtained, unless he has acquired a title thereto superior to that of such other person, or unless the transaction was corrupt and unlawful on both sides."

Obviously this section is entirely foreign to the matter in hand.

[3] We are of the opinion that the facts set out in the complaint fail to show any obligation on the part of the defendant to have removed the lien of the taxes at the time of the transfer of the land to the plaintiff; and that, there being no such covenant or duty, there could be no liability created either by the fact that the defendant did not pay such taxes, or that the plaintiff did pay the same.

It follows that the trial court correctly held that the complaint stated no cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

GUARANTY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. MARSH et al. (Civ. 2790.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 14, 1919.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT — 208(2)—ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE—RENT—RECOGNITION OF ASSIGNEES BY LESSOR.

Lessor, by serving the statutory three days' notice upon lessee's assignees in possession of premises, to pay the rent then due or surrender possession, recognized assignees as tenants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by the Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank, against Albert L. Marsh, E. Rabin, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry M. Willis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Call & Call and Anderson & Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action in unlawful detainer. A trial was had of the issues between plaintiff and appellant, the other defendants having suffered default. At the time of the trial appellant surrendered the leased premises to the plaintiff. Judgment was entered against appellant for the rent for the time covered by his occupancy, from which judgment defendant Rabin has appealed.

Appellant contends that the judgment against him should be reversed for the reason that there was no finding that the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and appellant, and that there was no evidence in the record to support the finding that appellant entered the premises on May 20, 1918, under an assignment of the lease theretofore executed by the plaintiff to Marsh and Bracken. The complaint alleged and it is admitted that the record proves that on the 28th day of January, 1918, the plaintiff executed to Albert L. Marsh and Bertram Bracken a three-year lease of the premises described in the complaint. The lessees went into possession on the 10th day of February following the date of the lease. The complaint alleged that appellant and two other defendants "claim some interest in said lease or said premises under the said lessees, and are in possession of the said premises, or a part thereof, under the said lessees." This allegation was not denied. That it probably could not have been successfully denied is indicated by the uncontradicted testimony of the witness Harrington that appellant, at a time while he was in possession of the premises, declared that he held such possession under an assignment of the Marsh and Bracken lease.

There is no merit in appellant's further contention that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between him and the plaintiff, the reasons alleged by him being that the plaintiff never consented in writing to an assignment of the lease, and never accepted him as a tenant, and never received rent from him. Those portions of the lease which have been printed with the briefs do not show any contract that an assignment of the lease must be approved in writing by the lessor. If there had been such stipulation, it must have existed for the benefit of the lessor and not for the protection of the lessee under such circumstances as here appear. That the plaintiff did recognize appellant's tenancy prior to the commencement of this action is shown by the fact that plaintiff served upon appellant, together with other persons, the statutory three days' notice to pay the rent then due or surrender possession.

The judgment is affirmed.

REHNERT v. BEAM. (Civ. 2628.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 13, 1919.)

CONTRACTS — 172 — PRIMARY OBLIGATION TO REPAY MONEY—ALTERNATIVE PERFORMANCE.

Contract whereby defendant agreed to repay plaintiff's assignor the sum of $5,000 previously advanced for use in perfecting certain inventions, or, instead, to deliver 4,500 shares of the stock of a corporation to be formed, held to obligate defendant primarily to repay $5,000, subject to the proviso that he might relieve himself from payment by delivering stock on or before specified date.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Louise E. Rehnert against P. E. Beam. From judgment for defendant, and from an order denying her motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Gibson & Woolner, of Oakland, and Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. R. Young and Stanley Visel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover money alleged to be due on a written contract. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

It is conceded by counsel on both sides that the only point involved in the case turns upon the construction of the contract. The stipulations of the contract are as follows:

"Whereas, said second party agreed to advance to said first party the sum of ten thousand ($10,000.00) dollars to be used in perfecting certain inventions and the construction of certain machines, and in consideration thereof the said first party agreed to deliver to said second party a part of the capital stock of a corporation thereafter to be formed; and

"Whereas, said second party has advanced to said first party the sum of forty-five hundred ($4,500.00) dollars, and no more:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed, that said first party shall repay to said party of the second part the said sum of forty-five hundred ($4,500.00) dollars and five hundred ($500.00) dollars for the use thereof, on or before the 1st day of April, 1914, or in lieu thereof, shall deliver to said second party forty-five hundred (4,500) shares of the capital stock of the Refrigeration Plants Mfg. Co., hereafter to be formed, par value of stock to be ten ($10.00) dollars per share, by said first party, as agreed. In the event that said first party pays to said second party the said forty-five hundred ($4,500.00) dollars and said five hundred ($500.00) dollars on or before April 1, 1914, then said first party shall be relieved from any obligation to deliver to said second party any of the capital stock of said Refrigeration Plants Mfg. Co. and said second party shall not be entitled to any stock in said company.

"In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals, this 20th day of August, 1913."

The contract was in form between the defendant and one R. E. Starkweather. Starkweather afterwards assigned the contract to the plaintiff. In entering into said agreement Starkweather was in fact acting for and on behalf of the plaintiff and as her agent, and any money to be paid under the agreement or any stock to be delivered was at all times the money and property of the plaintiff. The court below held that by virtue of said contract the defendant did not agree to pay the sum of $5,000 on or before April 1, 1914, or at any other time, but held, on the contrary, that the obligation was to deliver 4,500 shares of stock, subject merely to defendant's option to relieve himself from the delivery of the stock by paying $5,000 on or before the 1st day of April, 1914. Appellant claims that the principal obligation was to pay the sum of $5,000, subject to the proviso that the defendant might relieve himself from such payment by delivering 4,500 shares of stock on or before said 1st day of April. The true meaning of the contract, in our opinion, is according to the latter contention. If the terms of the contract had been that the defendant agreed, on or before the date named, to deliver 4,500 shares of the capital stock or in lieu thereof, within that time, to pay the sum of $4,500, then, upon failure of the defendant to do either of those things within the time limited, the action very properly would have been for recovery of the stock or damages for the breach of that agreement; and in that event the damages would not necessarily have been limited by the sum specified in the agreement, but that specification would have applied only as the definition of the amount which defendant would have the option to pay on or before the 1st day of April. But in the contract, as written, the primary agreement is to pay the money. As within the time limited the defendant did not pay that money or exercise his option to deliver stock in lieu thereof, it seems very plain that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount demanded.

The judgment and order are reversed.

JENSEN v. ALLEN et al. (Civ. 2616.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 17, 1919.)

1. INJUNCTION 236—BONDS TO DISSOLVE INJUNCTION—CONSTRUCTION.

Bond executed by yacht purchasers, who had been enjoined from removing yacht, pending determination of action to enforce lien against it, in which action judgment had been rendered for plaintiff, from which appeal had been taken, conditioned that purchasers pay sums of money found to be lien under "final judgment and decree of said Supreme Court in said action of J. v. D. No. 14311," or return yacht to jurisdiction within 30 days after notice of "judgment of said Supreme Court in said action," construed to remain in force only until determination of appeal then pending, and not to continue during retrial following reversal upon such appeal.

2. INJUNCTION 238—BOND—DISCHARGE—ATTACHMENT.

Bond, executed by purchasers of yacht, who had been enjoined from removing it during pendency of action to enforce a lien against it, was discharged by causing attachment to be levied and by taking possession of yacht under writ.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Sidney N. Reeve, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Jensen against Carroll Allen and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Wilbur Bassett and Allen & Weyl, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Patterson Sprigg, of San Diego, and Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendants appeal from a judgment entered in the trial court in favor of plaintiff. The action was to recover upon an undertaking or bond alleged to have been given to secure payment of any judgment which plaintiff might obtain in an action brought by him against one Dorr, which action was pending at the time of the execution of the undertaking. In the action referred to plaintiff sought to recover, on his own behalf and as assignee of other claimants, for labor and material furnished in the construction of the yacht "Yankee Girl." The total amount there prayed for was about $4,000. Judgment was asked to enforce the claim as a lien against the yacht. An answer was filed, but the trial court, responsive to a motion made by the plaintiff in that behalf, held that no material issue was raised by reason of the denials contained in the answer, and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff on the pleadings. Defendant Dorr appealed to the Supreme Court. In the meantime Dorr had been declared a bankrupt, and a sale had been made of the "Yankee Girl" by the assignee in bankruptcy, the purchasers at the sale being one Sandoval and the International Fisheries Company. While the appeal in the case referred to was pending, the plaintiff brought an action against the purchasers of the yacht and Allen, the assignee in bankruptcy, in which action an injunction was asked for to restrain the defendants from removing the yacht from San Diego county, Cal., pending the determination of the case of Jensen v. Dorr, the demand in the prayer being that such injunction hold "until the remittitur in said case shall be returned to this honorable court." After the injunction order was made the bond in suit here was given. The bond recited first the substance of the matters concerned in the injunction suit; recited that upon issues joined by the amended complaint and answer a permanent injunction had been made, restraining defendants "from removing or taking from the jurisdiction of said superior court, the vessel, 'Yankee Girl,' engine, boiler, tackle, apparel, and furniture, now in the harbor of San Diego in said San Diego county, until the remittitur in the case of Lawrence Jensen v. Fred Dorr, No. 14311, now pending in the Supreme Court of the state of California, should be returned to said superior court, and until the further order of said superior court"; and further provided:

"Whereas, said International Fisheries Company and A. Sandoval desire the use of said vessel during said period, and did by their counsel move said superior court on the 23d day of May, 1910, to release said vessel upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond which they agreed to give, conditioned as hereinafter mentioned; and, whereas, the said superior court upon consent of counsel for Lawrence Jensen, granted said motion and fixed said bond at the sum of six thousand ($3,000.00) dollars; now the condition of this obligation is such that the said International Fisheries Company and A. Sandoval shall well and truly pay or cause to be paid to said Lawrence Jensen, or his assigns, all sums of money found to be a lien upon said vessel, 'Yankee Girl,' under and by virtue of the final judgment and decree of said Supreme Court in said action of Jensen v. Dorr, number 14311, and all damages and costs which may be awarded in said judgment, not exceeding the sum of six thousand ($6,000.00) dollars, in favor of said Jensen or his assigns, or will return said vessel in as good condition as it now is within the harbor of said city of San Diego, and within the jurisdiction of said superior court, to be there held subject to the orders of said court, within thirty days after notice of the decision and judgment of said Supreme Court in said action of Jensen v. Dorr, number 14311, aforesaid. That should the Supreme Court reverse said judgment and hold that the same constitutes no lien on said vessel 'Yankee Girl,' or that no lien exists by virtue of said judgment, then and in that event this obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force, effect and virtue."

The judgment in the appeal referred to was by the Supreme Court reversed as having been improperly made, because, as the Supreme Court held, the answer as filed by the defendant Dorr therein was sufficient to raise issues and place the plaintiff upon trial of his case. See Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 116 Pac. 553. The case was returned to the superior court for trial, was there tried, and judgment again entered for the plaintiff, determining that the indebtedness alleged by him existed, and that he was entitled to enforce a lien therefor against the yacht. An appeal was taken from this judgment, and the judgment was affirmed by this court. Jensen v. Dorr, 23 Cal. App. 701, 139 Pac. 659. Petition for rehearing in the Supreme Court was later denied. This action to recover upon the undertaking hereinbefore referred to was then commenced.

Defendants contend that the judgment should be reversed because: First, the obligation of the bond was fully discharged when the Supreme Court reversed the first judgment in the case reported in 159 California Reports, before cited; second, assuming that the position just stated is not correctly taken, the defendants became released because the plaintiff, after the decision of the Supreme Court, took possession of the yacht under writ of attachment. The latter point is presented under the claim of error of the trial court in refusing to admit a stipulation and testimony showing that such attachment was in fact levied. We think that the appellants are right as to both contentions.

[1] Referring to the first point made, our opinion is that the obligation of the bond was definitely conditioned to remain in force only until the appeal pending at the time the bond was executed should be determined by the Supreme Court, and that, as the bond recites:

"Should the Supreme Court reverse said judgment and hold that the same constitutes no lien on said vessel 'Yankee Girl,' or that no lien exists by virtue of said judgment, then and in that event this obligation to be void."

The obligation was not to answer for the payment of any judgment that might be rendered in the case upon a retrial. We think that this construction is plainly to be drawn from the terms of the undertaking, and that it is indicated by the express language used. When the Supreme Court reversed the judgment on the first appeal there was no obligation left for the bond sureties to respond to. Assuming that they were required, after that judgment was rendered on that appeal, to tender the boat in the harbor of San Diego, the record shows that they offered to prove at the trial that they served written notice upon plaintiff's attorney, making such tender, but the trial court refused to allow the testimony to be given. We think that no such notice was required to be given. If such was a prerequisite to the discharge of the obligation, then the court committed error in refusing to allow the proof to be made. If we are correct in thus construing the obligations imposed upon the makers of the bond, the appeal is effectually disposed of, for the second point made assumes that the obligation continued until a final judgment was rendered in the case of Jensen v. Dorr on appeal after the trial in the superior court. Defendants offered to prove that, about two months after the decision of the Supreme Court in Jensen v. Dorr, a writ of attachment was issued in that case and levied upon the yacht at the instance of the plaintiff. Counsel for the plaintiff stipulated that such was the fact, but objected to the offer on general grounds, which objection was sustained.

[2] Assuming that the bond was in force at the time this attachment was levied, we think that the act of the plaintiff in taking possession of the boat under attachment was an act inconsistent with the terms of the undertaking and of such a nature as to result in the discharge of the obligation of the bond. This bond was given after the permanent injunction had been made, and was one which was wholly without the authority of the trial judge to require, and amounted in effect only to a contract made out of court upon the execution of which the plaintiff in the injunction suit agreed that the defendants might be relieved from the effect of the injunction. There was no appeal in the injunction case; hence the bond was in no wise a bond to stay the execution of the writ. Upon the part of the plaintiff, Jensen, there was an agreement necessarily implied that if the bond were given, the possession of the boat should remain with the defendants in the injunction suit. By causing the attachment to be levied and by taking possession of the boat under such writ, the plaintiff, Jensen, breached the condition on his part to be performed, and the obligation of the bond became at an end. Assuming, then, that the obligation of the bond was a continuing one and was for the purpose of securing any final judgment that might be rendered in Jensen v. Dorr, then we think that the trial judge was plainly in error in refusing to allow the defendants to show that plaintiff effectually waived any benefits he might have had under that instrument, by proceeding to have the boat attached.

There are some other points made by the defendants as to alleged errors committed by the trial judge, but as the points discussed appear to be finally determinative of this appeal and of this action, we think it unnecessary to give particular attention to that argument.

The judgment is reversed.

CALIFORNIA LAND SECURITY CO. v.
RITCHIE et al. (Civ. 1940.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 13, 1919.)

1. BROKERS ⇨14 — LAND BROKERS — AGREEMENT—SALE OF INTEREST.

A contract between landowners and a broker authorizing the latter "to sell all of his interest" gives authority to sell only such interest as such owner may have in the premises, and not any particular estate or fee simple.

2. BROKERS ⇨63(1)—SALE OF LAND—REFUSAL TO ACCEPT PURCHASER.

Where property is sold by a broker to a purchaser able, ready, and willing to take and pay for the property, and the terms are unsatisfactory to the intending vendor, the latter should object on that ground, and not refuse absolutely to sell, and, where he fails to so object, he is liable to the broker for commissions upon refusing to accept the purchaser.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDING OF TRIAL COURT UPON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

4. BROKERS ⇐49(3)—LAND BROKERS—CONTRACT—CASH PAYMENT—CHECKS.

Vendors under contract with broker for sale of land, terms "one-half down and the balance in five equal annual payments," cannot be required to accept payment by check, and they need not bind themselves to convey until this objection is removed by the offer at the time of a different method of payment, reasonable in character and satisfactory to them.

5. BROKERS ⇐49(2)—RIGHT TO COMMISSION—VENDOR'S REJECTION OF CONTRACT INCAPABLE OF SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Under contract to sell vendor's land "one-half down and the balance in five equal annual payments," a broker is not entitled to a commission upon vendor's refusal to sign a sale contract under which purchaser could refuse to complete the purchase by forfeiture of $100 for noncompliance; such being an option contract and incapable of specific performance.

6. BROKERS ⇐49(2)—RIGHT TO COMMISSION—PURCHASER ABLE, READY, AND WILLING—OPTION CONTRACT.

To entitle a broker to agreed commissions, he must produce a purchaser able, willing, and ready to purchase, and he is not entitled to commission for producing such a proposed purchaser who reserved to himself the right of election either to complete or arbitrarily refuse to complete purchase, even though a perfect title be shown.

7. BROKERS ⇐46—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—EXCLUSIVE AGENCY.

An agreement, making a broker the sole agent for sale of defendant's interests in the premises for the period of 30 days, construed as permitting defendant to dispose of her interest by sale without liability for commissions.

Action by the California Land Security Company against Don Ritchie and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for appellants.

Carleton C. Case, of Stockton, for respondents.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover $6,227.50 as commissions for having found a purchaser for certain lands of defendants. From a judgment in favor of defendants for costs, plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The action is based, first, upon what is termed by the parties and what we shall herein call a "brokerage contract," which reads as follows:

"Oakland, Cal., Mar. 1st, 1916.
"Calif. Land Security Co., San Francisco, Cal.—Gentlemen: You are authorized to sell all our interest in the Ritchie ranch in Stanislaus Co., Calif., at the price of seventy dollars per acre for the front land containing 1,350 acres and forty dollars per acre for the river land containing 284 acres.

"Terms to be one-half down and the balance in five equal annual payments at six per cent, interest.

"In case a sale is made you are to receive five dollars per acre so far as our interest appears in said purchase price.

"This agreement can be canceled by giving thirty days' notice in writing and to be exclusive for thirty days or until notice is given to C. B. Hubbard or to Calif. Land Security Co., of San Francisco.

"Yours truly, Don Ritchie.

"Mrs. Josie M. Ritchie.

"Mrs. Belle Lightner."

On the 16th day of March, 1916, plaintiff presented to the defendants Don Ritchie and Mrs. Josie M. Ritchie a document of which the following is a copy:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 13th day of March, 1916, by and between F. H. Arnsburger, the party of the first part, and Josie M. Ritchie, Don Ritchie and Belle Lightner, the parties of the second part, witnesseth:

"That the party of the first part agrees to purchase from the parties of the second part, and the parties of the second part agree to sell to the party of the first part all their right, title, estate and interest in and to that certain tract of real estate situated in the county of Stanislaus, state of California, and particularly bounded and described as follows, to wit: (Describing land known as the 'J. M. Ritchie ranch.')

"It is understood that 80 acres of said tract of land belongs to Josie M. Ritchie in severalty and the rest of said land the second parties own in common, each owning an undivided one-fourth interest therein.

"The party of the first part agrees to pay for said land at the rate of $70.00 per acre for the front land, being the southwesterly portion of said land and comprising 1,350 acres and at the rate of $40.00 per acre for the river land comprising 284 acres; and the party of the first agrees to pay to the parties of the second part on the sale the sums set opposite the respective names, to wit:

"Josie M. Ritchie, the sum of $30,665.00.

"Don Ritchie, the sum of $25,065.00.

"Belle Lightner, the sum of $25,065.00.

"And agrees to pay said purchase price as follows: One-half in cash at the time of delivery of deed, and the balance to be evidenced by a note secured by a mortgage payable in five equal annual payments with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. * * *

"It is also understood and agreed that a mortgage in form substantially like that ordinarily in use by the Stockton Savings & Loan Society will, subject to the terms hereof, be used. Taxes shall be pro-rated as of the time of delivery of deed.

"It is understood that the party of the first part shall have a reasonable time to examine the title to said land and if the title is imperfect and cannot be perfected within sixty days after written notice to C. B. Hubbard of the defect, the deposit may be returned and the parties of the second part agree to convey their said interest in said premises as above defined, to the party of the first part with a valid title free and clear of incumbrances.

"It is understood and agreed that the sum of $100.00 has been paid by the party of the first part to C. B. Hubbard, the agent of the parties of the second part, as a deposit upon said land, and the party of the first part shall pay the balance of one-half of the purchase price above mentioned to the parties of the second part after he shall have had a reasonable time to examine the title to said land, and if the title to said land is a valid title and free and clear of incumbrances and the party of the first part refuses to complete and carry out this contract, then in that case the money paid to C. B. Hubbard shall be forfeited to and belong to the parties of the second part as liquidated damages, and this contract shall thereupon become null and void.

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto and in duplicate set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

"T. H. Arnsburger. [Seal.]"

Then followed the certificate of a notary public that said Arnsburger had acknowledged and executed said instrument before him.

The court found that the foregoing agreement was signed by Arnsburger; that it was presented to the defendants the Ritchies to be signed, together with the offer of a check for $100; that the Ritchies refused to sign it and declined to accept said check; that the said agreement was never presented to the defendant Lightner for her signature; that plaintiff never thereafter made any other or further request or demand upon the defendants to sign said instrument; that, prior to the 15th day of March, 1916, and before said Arnsburger signed said agreement of purchase and sale, the defendant Lightner, without the assistance of the plaintiff, found a purchaser and thereupon sold and conveyed all her interest in the land described in the brokerage contract with the plaintiff, and that said sale was not made to defraud or deprive plaintiff of its commissions; that 80 acres of said ranch was owned in severalty by Josie M. Ritchie, and that the balance, consisting of 1,554 acres, was owned, an undivided one-fourth by Josie M. Ritchie, an undivided one-fourth by Belle Lightner, and an undivided one-fourth by John Raggio and Edward F. Harris; that when said Arnsburger executed said contract he did not know that the said Raggio and Harris owned an undivided one-fourth of the 1,554 acres or that they or either of them were owners of or interested in said land or any part thereof; that the plaintiff never found or presented to the defendants, or any of them, a purchaser or prospective purchaser ready, able, and willing to purchase the property described in said brokerage contract, in accordance with the terms of said contract, or to purchase the interest of the defendants in and to said land upon the terms expressed in said brokerage contract; that said Arnsburger was not, on the 19th day of March, 1916, or at the time he signed said contract of sale, or at any time while said brokerage contract was in effect, ready or willing to purchase the interest of the defendants in and to the said land, and that plaintiff did not perform the terms and conditions of said brokerage contract by it to be performed, "and did not perform the services required of it by the terms and conditions of said brokerage contract"; that the defendants never refused or declined to carry out the terms of the brokerage contract, "but at all times, when the same was in force, stated that they were willing and ready to perform the terms and conditions of said contract on their part to be performed."

The general objection raised by the appellant to the result reached by the court below is that the findings that the plaintiff did not produce before the respondents a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase the lands described in the brokerage contract, and that the respondents "were, at all times, when the same was in force, willing and ready to perform the terms and conditions of said contract on their part to be performed," are not supported by the evidence.

The specific points made by the respondents in support of the judgment are: (1) That there is a material variance or difference between the agreement of the plaintiff and the proposed agreement of sale signed by Arnsburger and submitted by the appellant to the respondents for their approval and signatures, particularly in that, while the brokerage agreement authorized the appellant to sell such interest only as respondents have in the land, the proposed agreement of purchase signed by Arnsburger called for the sale to him by the respondents of the land itself—a distinction quite important in almost all transactions involving agreements to convey real property. (2) That the so-called agreement of purchase signed by Arnsburger was not an agreement of sale and purchase, but a mere option to purchase.

The learned trial judge, on deciding the case, filed a written opinion in which he held that the objection first above stated to the agreement proposed and submitted by the appellant to the respondents for the latter's approval is well taken; that in his opinion the contract between the appellant and the respondents went no further than to authorize the former to negotiate the sale of the interest only of the respondents in the land, while the proposed agreement of purchase provided for a sale of the land itself; and that the respondents were therefore justified in refusing to sign the latter agreement as not conforming in a vital particular to the appellant's authority to negotiate the sale. Upon this theory, the court held and decided that the appellant did not bring to the respondents a purchaser able, willing, and ready to purchase their interest in the land upon the terms and conditions specified in its authorization to sell, and that, consequently, it was entitled to no compensation for any services it had performed or trouble and expense to which it had gone to procure the agreement signed by Arnsburger.

[1] The Arnsburger agreement, it will be observed, contains the following paragraph:

"It is understood that the party of the first part shall have a reasonable time to examine the title to said land, and, if the title is imperfect and cannot be perfected within sixty days after written notice to C. B. Hubbard of the defect, the deposit may be returned, and the parties of the second part agree to convey their said interest in said premises as above defined, to the party of the first part, with a valid title, free and clear of any incumbrances."

It is undoubtedly true that this language appears to go beyond the scope of the written authorization vested in the appellant to sell the land. As seen, the latter instrument authorized the appellant to find a purchaser of such interest only as the respondents have in the land. It nowhere authorized him to find a purchaser of the land itself, as appears to be the proposition involved in the purported agreement of sale and purchase. As is pointed out in the opinion of the learned trial judge, the cases seem to be quite uniform upon the proposition that where one party agrees to convey, and the other party agrees to purchase, all the former's right, title, and interest in and to his real estate, such contract merely means the sale and purchase of such interest as the first party has in the premises, and not any particular estate or fee-simple. See Ward v. Foley, 141 Fed. 364, 366, 72 C. C. A. 140; Henderson v. Beatty, 124 Iowa, 163, 99 N. W. 716; Reynolds v. Shaver, 59 Ark. 299, 27 S. W. 78, 43 Am. St. Rep. 36; Van Rensselaer v. Kearney et al., 11 How. 297, 13 L. Ed. 703.

[2] It is contended by the appellant, however, that it was the duty of the respondents to point out specifically, at the time the Arnsburger agreement was presented to them for their approval and signatures, any objections they had to that instrument or any of its covenants; that they failed to do so or, at any rate, did not object to it on the ground that, in its scope, it transcended the terms of the brokerage agreement between them and the appellant; and that having so failed to state such objections, it is now too late to object to any purpose. This is the most serious problem presented in connection with the point we are now considering, assuming, of course, as we shall at all times assume for the purpose of considering said point, that the Arnsburger agreement involved a contract of sale and purchase. It has been held, upon the soundest of reason, where a broker has negotiated a sale of real property to a purchaser able, ready, and willing to take and pay for the property, and any of the terms of the contract as to payment, abstract or deed are unsatisfactory to the intending vendor, the latter should object to them on that ground and not refuse absolutely to sell; and that, where he fails to make such objection under such circumstances, he will be held liable to the broker negotiating the sale for his commissions if he refuses to accept the purchaser. Smith v. Keeler, 151 Ill. 518, 38 N. E. 250; Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 563, 28 S. E. 238; Donley v. Porter, 119 Iowa, 542, 93 N. W. 574; Blood v. Shannon, 29 Cal. 393; Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 25 Pac. 430.

[3] Don Ritchie testified that he did not like the language of the contract. He could not or at least did not, give any particular reason for his objection to the instrument itself. He did testify, though, that he said to the appellant, when the latter presented the instrument to him and his mother for their signatures, that he did not know Arnsburger or know anything of him, and that he would prefer meeting that gentleman personally before he and his mother entered into a binding agreement of any sort, or language to this effect. His reasons for desiring personally to meet and know something of the proposed purchaser before going further with the deal, he said, were that the plaintiff had had previous options on or agreements to sell the same property, and had telegraphed or telephoned him at Bakersfield to go to Stockton and meet persons who had agreed to buy the property, and that in each of such instances the efforts of the plaintiff to drive a bargain with such parties had failed. He therefore wanted to know with certainty from some investigation of his own that Arnsburger was not only willing to buy their interest, but able and ready to do so. He further testified that he refused to accept the check for $100 tendered by the plaintiff to him and his mother as "earnest money" or a penalty for failure to complete the deal because of his objection to that method of the payment of that sum for the purpose stated, adding that he had lost confidence in the plaintiff or its representatives. This story of what occurred on the occasion of the submission of the Arnsburger agreement to the respondents was flatly contradicted by the witness Hubbard, president and general manager of the plaintiff, who conducted the transaction on behalf of plaintiff; but, the court having accepted it as true we are required to consider the proposition to which it relates accordingly.

[4] As to the first ground of objection, we seriously question its validity. The second ground, though, possesses some force. Indeed, we think it was sufficient to justify the respondents in refusing to sign the instrument and, unless removed within a reasonable time, to decline absolutely to sell the property to Arnsburger. The terms specified in said instrument, as to payment, were "one-half down and the balance in five equal annual payments," etc. This meant a payment in cash down, and, though a payment by check may be a "cash payment," the vendor cannot be required to accept that mode of payment under such an agreement. If he objects to it, the objection is good, and he need not bind himself to convey until the objection is removed by the offer at the time of a different method of payment, reasonable in character and satisfactory to him. It appears from the evidence—in fact, it was admitted by Hubbard—that this objection was not removed or overcome, the check having been returned by Hubbard to Arnsburger within a few days after the time that the Ritchies refused to sign the purported agreement of sale and no other offer of such payment made.

[5] The foregoing discussion has been, as seen, upon the assumption that the instrument submitted to the Ritchies by the appellant for their signatures was an enforceable contract to sell and purchase. But the question arises upon a consideration of the following covenant in said agreement whether it is such an agreement or a mere option to purchase the property:

"It is understood and agreed that the sum of $100.00 has been paid by the party of the first part to C. B. Hubbard, the agent of the parties of the second part, as a deposit upon said land, and the party of the first part shall pay the balance of one-half of the purchase price above mentioned to the parties of the second part after he shall have had a reasonable time to examine the title to said land, and if the title to said land is a valid title and free and clear of incumbrances and the party of the first part refuses to complete and carry out this contract, then in that case the money paid to C. B. Hubbard shall be forfeited to and belong to the parties of the second part as liquidated damages, and thereupon this contract shall become null and void."

The test determinative of the question whether the said agreement, containing as it does the foregoing covenant, is an agreement to purchase and sell the property described therein or a mere option to purchase the same, is: Is said agreement capable of specific enforcement?

There are two classes of contracts for the conveyance of lands, in which penalties are annexed for the breach of the covenants thereof, and in one of which classes specific performance will be decreed and in the other denied, viz.:

(1) Where the contract contains a stipulation for the payment of sums of money, called "penalties" or "liquidated damages," the sole purpose of which stipulation is to secure the performance of the contract or the acts specified therein to be performed. Thus, in Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill. 546, 75 N. E. 1049, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210, which was an action to reform a contract for the sale of real property and for the specific performance of the same when reformed in the particular prayed for in the bill, the contract contained a covenant or stipulation that "if either party * * * fails to keep or perform the covenants hereinabove specified, said party so defaulting shall forfeit to the other the sum of $1,000, said sum being the agreed liquidated damages," and the Illinois Supreme Court held that said stipulation for liquidated damages was intended "merely as a security for the performance of the contract and that there is nothing in the terms of the contract to justify the conclusion that either party has the right to perform the contract, or in lieu thereof, to pay the sum of $1,000.00." The court concluded:

"As the contract, therefore, is not alternative in its nature, a court of equity is not ousted of its jurisdiction to decree a specific performance by reason of the condition contained in the contract in reference to the forfeiture of $1,000 as agreed liquidated damages."

(2) Where there is inserted in the contract a covenant or stipulation that the party who is to perform the contract may at his election do one of two things—that is, where the stipulation is that the proposed purchaser may either consummate the purchase or, in default thereof, pay to the seller a certain specified sum as liquidated damages for the breach or the failure to purchase—in which case the agreement is to be construed as a mere option whose terms are incapable of specific enforcement.

The distinction thus noted is considered and stated by the Supreme Court of Texas as follows in Redwine v. Hudman, 104 Tex. 21, 133 S. W. 426:

"The question always is: What is the contract? Is it that one certain act shall be done, with a sum annexed, whether by way of penalty or damages, to secure the performance of this very act? Or is it that one or two things shall be done at the election of the party who has to perform the contract, namely, the performance of the act or the payment of the sum of money? If the former, the fact of the penal or other like sum being annexed will not prevent the court enforcing the performance of the very act, and thus carrying into execution the intention of the parties. If the latter, the contract is satisfied by the payment of a sum of money, and there is no ground for proceeding against the party having the election, to compel the performance of the other alternative."

See, also, Fry on Specific Performance, § 115; 36 Cyc. 571, 572.

While the proposed agreement here does not directly or in so many words provide that the proposed buyer may refuse to carry out and complete the contract, the language of the instrument necessarily implies as much, and thus would as clearly and effectually vest that right in the proposed purchaser as if it were directly expressed. If signed by the Ritchies, it would give to the buyer the choice of two alternatives, namely: Either to purchase the property on the terms stated or refuse to complete the purchase and so forfeit to the sellers the sum of $100 fixed in the contract as the damages for such noncompliance. This construction necessarily follows from the provision that the proposed vendee might refuse to purchase the property, notwithstanding that the title to the same was found to be valid or merchantable, the provision for liquidated damages in the sum of $100 to be forfeited to the sellers in the event of the refusal by the proposed purchaser to carry out his part of the contract, and the provision that upon the happening of the contingencies named "this contract shall become null and void." No other language was necessary to be added to that covenant of the agreement to make it any clearer than it is that the intention of Arnsburger as therein expressed was to reserve to himself the right of election to buy or not to buy the property in any event. In case the instrument had been signed by the Ritchies,

Clearly, therefore, the instrument was one of those contracts looking to the sale and purchase of real property which are incapable of specific enforcement. It would be, if signed by the Ritchies, wanting in that mutuality between the parties which must be shown to exist in such contracts before their specific performance by the parties thereto can be decreed. Indeed, if, upon the happening of the contingencies named, the "contract shall become null and void," how could the instrument be specifically enforced after the happening of those contingencies? Obviously, if the contingencies happened which would render the agreement "null and void," there could then be no agreement to enforce.

It would seem unnecessary to cite authorities to support the above proposition, but agreements similar to the one here have been considered by courts of other jurisdictions and held not to be subject to specific performance. Some of the cases it will do no harm to refer to herein.

In Crum v. Slade & Bassett (Tex. Civ. App.) 154 S. W. 351, which was an action to recover commissions for the sale of real property, the agreement provided for the payment to the seller of the sum of $2,000, "as part of the cash payment, to be forfeited to the seller in the event the buyer upon approval of the title to said lands, after being furnished abstracts and deeds, as aforesaid, fails or refuses to perform his part of this contract. * * *

the buyer forfeits the $2,000 paid and the contract is thereby at an end [italics ours], that said sum is to be divided" between the seller and the brokers negotiating the sale in certain specified proportions. The Court of Civil Appeals of Texas held that the language quoted, particularly that which we have put in italics, clearly indicated an intention to vest the purchaser with the right either to carry out the agreement or refuse to do so at the expense of the forfeiture of the cash money paid down on the execution of the agreement by the seller, and accordingly ruled that the agreement amounted to no more than an option, incapable of specific enforcement.

Similarly, it was held by the same court, in Simpson v. Eardley (Tex. Civ. App.) 137 S. W. 378 (in which a writ of error was denied by the Supreme Court of Texas), as to an agreement procured by a broker for the sale of certain real estate, which provided, inter alia, that—"Should said title be approved by the attorneys for the parties of the second part, and they fail or refuse to comply with the terms of this contract, then said sum of $1,000 earnest money [the contract providing that that sum should be paid down by the purchaser on the execution thereof by the seller], shall be forfeited to the party of the first part and treated as liquidated damages."

The court in that case said:

"It will be seen that by said contract Bell and Robinson did not agree to become purchasers of the land; that is to say, they did not agree to buy the land, because they expressly reserved the right not * * * to take it and let the $1,000 go to defendant as a forfeit or liquidated damages. Eardley could not, upon that contract, have enforced specific performance; consequently it was not a contract of sale, binding as such on Bell and Robinson in any view, but, at their election, it was a sale or an option according to how they saw fit to treat it. * * * It is clear that defendant, in case of an arbitrary refusal on the part of Bell and Robinson to take the land, was cut off from any right to insist on performance by them, and had to take the $1,000 or nothing."

In Rankin v. Grist et al., 61 Tex. Civ. App. 484, 129 S. W. 1147, and Moss & Raley v. Wren, 102 Tex. 567, 113 S. W. 739, 120 S. W. 847, agreements of like import were held to confer upon the proposed purchaser the right to elect between consummating the purchase and the refusal to purchase, with resultant forfeiture of money to be paid down on the execution of the agreements by the proposed sellers. In both said cases it was held that the agreements could not be specifically enforced.

[6] It is, of course, very clear from the foregoing views and conclusion that the plaintiff did not procure in Arnsburger a purchaser of the land mentioned in the agreement able, willing, and ready to purchase upon the terms specified in the brokerage agreement or at all, and therefore is not entitled to the compensation provided in its agreement for its services in negotiating the sale of the property. Of course, as appellant declares, it is to be conceded to be a well-settled proposition that, where a broker, when employed merely to negotiate a sale of real estate, "has found a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the vendor's terms, his right to the agreed commission is complete, and does not depend upon the final acceptance by the purchaser of a conveyance of the property sold," nor is it contingent upon the consummation of the sale. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105. And it is equally true that where the broker procures a party able to purchase the property upon the vendor's terms and is willing and ready to do so, no act of the vendor whereby the sale fails of consummation can have the effect of depriving the broker of his commissions. Even the failure of the vendor to present a good or merchantable title to the property cannot have that effect, unless there be in the brokerage contract a covenant so providing. But the broker, to be entitled to the agreed commissions, must produce a purchaser able, willing, and ready to purchase; and where, as here, he produces a proposed purchaser, who reserves to himself the right of election either to purchase or arbitrarily refuse to do so, or to refuse to purchase, even though a perfect title be shown, then the broker has not produced a purchaser ready and willing to purchase, even though he has the ability to do so. It follows that the plaintiff has not made out a case entitling it to recover as against the Ritchies.

[7] As to the defendant Lightner, it appears that she had disposed of her interest in the land described in the agreements, and that the Arnsburger agreement was never presented to her by the plaintiff or any other person for her signature. That she had the right to sell her interest, notwithstanding the brokerage contract with the plaintiff pending the life of said contract, is not a debatable proposition when we examine the said agreement. It will be observed that, while the agreement vested in the plaintiff an exclusive agency and so made it the sole agent for the sale of the interest of the defendants in the premises for the period of 30 days, it did not confer upon the plaintiff the exclusive right to sell said interest. As the learned trial judge declared in his opinion:

"Under such conditions, the defendants, collectively or individually, might, pending the period of the agency and before the broker had secured a purchaser or a valid agreement from a proposed purchaser willing and able to make the purchase according to the authorization to sell previously executed, sell or make sale without becoming liable for commissions."

The proposition as thus stated is sustained by many cases, notable among which are Dreyfus v. Richardson, 20 Cal. App. 800, 130 Pac. 161, and Snook v. Page, 29 Cal. App. 246, 155 Pac. 107.

It results that, under the circumstances as disclosed here as to the defendant Lightner, she could in no event be held liable to the plaintiff for commissions for procuring a purchaser of her interest.

Agreeably to the views herein set forth, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

OGRAM v. WELCHOFF et al. (Civ. 2832.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 17, 1919.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 142 — SUFFICIENCY OF STATEMENT—TERMS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, requiring claim of mechanic's lien under section 1183 to state "the work agreed to be done," does not apply where claim is for labor performed by carpenter, by whom there was no specific work agreed to be done; such requirement being confined to contractors.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 135 — LIEN STATEMENT — SUFFICIENCY — CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES—DESIGNATION OF CLAIMANT.

Carpenter's mechanic's lien claim, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1187, stating lien to be for labor performed on building, is sufficient without designating lien as that of a carpenter, the lien under section 1183 being given to persons entitled thereto for furnishing labor contributing to erection of building, and not as followers of a particular trade or calling, notwithstanding enumeration of various classes of persons in such statute.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 5—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 4, and in view of section 1203, the sections of the Code embracing the mechanics' lien law, being remedial in character, should be liberally construed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Ogram against C. Welchoff and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Thomas, of Oakland, Keyes & Horne, and W. L. Newby, of Oakland, for appellant.

Carl F. Wood, of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This was an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment went for defendants upon the ground that the lien filed by the plaintiff was void because it did not contain "a statement of the work agreed to be done by plaintiff." Plaintiff appeals, the record on appeal consisting of the judgment roll alone.

The sole question presented is whether or not the claim of lien substantially complied with the section of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribing what it should contain.

Section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that certain classes of persons therein enumerated shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor, or in the construction of which they have furnished materials, and it is not disputed that the plaintiff comes within one of such enumerated classes.

Section 1187 of said Code provides that every person claiming such lien must file a "claim of lien containing a statement of his demand * * * with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, also the name of the person by whom he was employed, or to whom he furnished materials, with a statement of the price, if any, agreed upon for the same and when payable, and of the work agreed to be done, * * *" etc.

The claim of lien filed by the plaintiff, so far as it bears upon the question to be considered, states:

"Notice is hereby given that Frank Ogram * * * as laborer, claims a mechanic's lien upon the premises hereinafter described for labor performed by him. * * * That Fletcher & Newby and P. A. Newby are the names of the contractors who * * * entered into a contract with said Frank H. Ogram, claimant herein, under and by which said labor was performed, and the following is a statement of the terms, time given and conditions of said contract, to wit: He was to be paid for his services at the rate of $3.50 per day. * * * That said contract has been fully performed on the part of said Frank H. Ogram, claimant, * * * and the total amount of the claim of said Frank H. Ogram for labor by him furnished as aforesaid is $101.50. * * *"

It appears from the complaint, and the court so found, that the plaintiff's employment upon the building in connection with which the lien was filed was as a carpenter, and that his labor upon said building was that of a carpenter. As already pointed out, the court also found that the plaintiff did not include in his claim a statement of the "work agreed to be done," and for this reason held the claim of lien to be invalid. The learned judge of the trial court evidently construed the statute as requiring this even in the case of an artisan, such as a carpenter, who is employed at a daily wage for the purpose of plying his trade as directed from day to day and from hour to hour. It is apparent, we think, that a claimant of this class, employed at daily wages to work at his trade under the direction of his employer, cannot include in the statement of his claim "the work agreed to be done," if in fact no such agreement has been made. At most he could state the general character of the work he expected to be called upon to do, and in support of the judgment the respondents argue that this the plaintiff should have done.

[1] In construing this requirement of the section it must be borne in mind that the section is prescribing the contents of the claim of lien of quite different classes of persons, and it is not likely—indeed quite the contrary—that the requirements laid down for the lien of a contractor or subcontractor would be literally applicable to the claim of lien to be filed by a mechanic or laborer. In the case of a contractor he evidently is able to state the "work agreed to be done," for his contract of necessity specifies it, and we are of the opinion that a correct construction of this requirement would confine it to such cases.

And it would not follow that because a person was not able to state the "work agreed to be done," for the very good reason that no specific work had been agreed upon, he must in lieu thereof state the general character of the work that he was employed to do.

[2] We may notice in passing a secondary contention of respondents, that the mechanic's lien law establishes different classes of claimants, and that a person must claim his lien within his class, e. g., the plaintiff having furnished labor as a carpenter should have claimed his lien as a carpenter. We think it sufficient to say in answer to this contention that the enumeration of various classes of persons in section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, is in no sense a classification of them for the purpose of providing a lien for each class. It is simply an attempted enumeration of those callings whose members furnish the requisite labor in the construction of buildings, and the lien is the same in the case of all persons entitled, and is given to them, not as followers of a particular trade or calling, but as persons having furnished labor contributing to the erection of the building. If we followed this contention of the respondents to its logical conclusion, the plaintiff, being a carpenter would have no lien at all, for we do not find the trade of carpenter included by name in the enumeration.

[3] The sections of the Code embracing the mechanic's lien law, being remedial in character, should be liberally construed. Code Civ. Proc. § 4; Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, 150 Cal. 751, 89 Pac. 1077, 1081. Some of the earlier constructions of these sections, although purporting to follow the rule of construction laid down in section 4, Code of Civil Procedure, were still somewhat technical, and the Legislature showed its disapproval of the method followed by adding to the law on the subject section 1203, which directs that certain kinds of mistakes in claims of lien which theretofore had been held sufficient to invalidate them should not be given that effect, thus emphasizing the legislative intent that the greatest liberality consistent with the attainment of the object of the sections should be exercised in their construction. We are not therefore called upon to hold that because a claimant, from the nature of his employment, is unable to specify the "work agreed to be done," he must, in lieu thereof, state the general character of the work he was employed to do. It seems to be conceded that the object of requiring certain details to be set forth in the lien is to enable the owner of the property against which the lien is filed to investigate the correctness of the demand. In the present case, the owner of the property, being apprised by the claim of lien that the claimant had performed labor for a certain number of days at a specified daily rate of compensation under the employment of certain named persons, he was just as well able to investigate the correctness of the claim as if he had been further informed that the particular work done was that of a carpenter.

Our conclusion is that as the record discloses that there was no specific work agreed to be done by the plaintiff, the requirement of section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, that it should be stated in the lien has no application to this case, and, the findings of the court being in plaintiff's favor on the remaining issues the court erred in holding that the plaintiff's claim of lien was null and void. The judgment is therefore reversed.

1. CORPORATIONS § 308(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF MANAGER'S CONTRACT—COMPENSATION—"NET PROFITS."

Where a corporation whose main profits consisted in buying, selling, exchanging, and generally handling real estate and personal properties and securities, and investing, enhancing, and turning over its capital, agreed to pay its manager, as compensation for services, annually "a sum of money * * * equivalent to 25 per cent. of the net profits," the "net profits" included the appreciation in value of the corporation's assets during the year.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Net Profits.]

2. CORPORATIONS — 308(3) — CONTRACT FOR COMPENSATION OF MANAGER — INTERPRETATION BY PARTIES.

In construing compensation contract between corporation and its manager, the meaning must be determined, in some measure at least, by the interpretation placed upon it by the parties themselves during nearly ten years of conduct of the business of the corporation by the manager.

3. CORPORATIONS — 314(2) — BOARD OF DIRECTORS — VALIDITY OF ACTS — SETTLEMENT WITH HUSBAND OF DIRECTOR.

Settlement of corporation with its manager by board of directors was not affected by fact that manager's wife was one of the directors, since the mere fact that manager was her husband, and that the amount of his claim, if allowed and paid, would increase community funds, would not create such an interest in the wife as would disqualify her from acting as a director.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Frank J. Cuneo against A. P. Giannini and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Purcell Rowe and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, Peter F. Dunne, and Fred L. Dreher, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants. The action was one instituted by the plaintiff on behalf of himself as a stockholder of one of the defendants, J. Cuneo (a corporation), and on behalf of other stockholders thereof, to recover from the defendant A. P. Giannini for the corporation the sum of $37,883.34, alleged to have been illegally paid to said defendant Giannini by the directors of said corporation.

The facts of the case are substantially uncontroverted, and are briefly as follows: For many years J. Cuneo had been engaged in business in San Francisco and adjacent counties as a dealer in and trader of real estate and other kinds of property, with his offices in that city. In the year 1903 he caused to be formed the J. Cuneo Company, a family corporation, as a more convenient instrumentality for the conduct of his business and the consolidation and handling of his properties. The corporation when thus formed took over his business and continued it. Shortly after the formation of the corporation Cuneo died, leaving a widow and nine children, of whom three were minors. One of the elder daughters was at the time married to the defendant A. P. Giannini, and the latter, largely by reason of the meager business experience of the other members of the family, was intrusted with the management of the corporate affairs. A contract was entered into on October 14, 1903, between the J. Cuneo Company on the one hand and said A. P. Giannini on the other, with relation to the terms, conditions, and extent of the latter's management of the business affairs and properties of the former during a period of ten years, the portion of which contract essential to this case being that in relation to the compensation to be received by said Giannini, which reads as follows:

"That said corporation, the party of the second part, shall pay to said party of the first part for his services as said manager a sum of money in gold coin of the United States equivalent to 25% of the net profits of said corporation, an accounting by said manager to be made at the expiration of each year during the life of this agreement and payment to be made at the time of said accounting."

In pursuance of said contract said A. P. Giannini assumed and entered upon the management of said corporation, and continued therein for a period of almost ten years, during which time the corporation continued to be engaged along the lines of the former business of itself and its organizer in buying, selling, trading, and dealing in real estate, bank stocks, and other forms of property. From time to time during those years the corporation, acting through its officers, but with the knowledge and approval of the members of the family constituting its stockholders, took account of the transactions and properties of the corporation and of the increase in values of its various kinds of property, and these were carried into a loss and gain account upon the books of the corporation, which was understood to represent the profits from time to time accruing from and in its business.

In reckoning these estimated profits the properties of the corporation were dealt with in kind, and their increase in value or the increase in value of other properties for which they were exchanged, either directly or through their sale, and the investment of their proceeds in other properties, were treated as profits, and it is testified to by Mr. Giannini and other members of the family without substantial contradiction that it was the general understanding of all concerned that Mr. Giannini was, under his agreement, to be credited with 25 per cent. of these increased valuations as shown by these occasional appraisements and loss and gain accounts, and the evidence shows that from time to time he received such credits on the books of the corporation.

In the early part of the year 1913 it was decided at a meeting of the directors of the corporation to go into virtual liquidation of its affairs and to effect a distribution of its assets among its several stockholders in proportion to their respective holdings of stock therein, such distribution to be based upon an appraisal and valuation of the properties of the corporation presently to be made. Pursuant to this understanding on January 28, 1913, at a meeting of the stockholders of the corporation, all being present, such appraisal and valuation was made and agreed to, and, so far as appears from the record, was entirely fair and satisfactory to all concerned. These appraisements and valuations showed that the values of the properties of the corporation which were thus to be liquidated and distributed had largely increased during the term of Mr. Giannini's services as manager of the affairs of the corporation, which enhanced valuations represented profits in kind though not in money. In the course of this proposed liquidation of the properties and affairs of the corporation the question of the interest and share of Mr. Giannini under the terms of his agreement naturally arose, and it was disposed of at a meeting of the directors held on March 11, 1913, at which a majority of such directors were present, and at which the matter of Mr. Giannini's compensation under his said agreement was considered, and the amount thereof fixed at the sum of $36,994.24 as the balance due him thereunder, and it was then further decided and directed that the note of the corporation should be executed and delivered to him for said sum in full settlement for his said services. Such note was thereupon executed and was received by him, and was subsequently paid. It is this transaction which is assailed by the plaintiff in this action, and which the trial court by its judgment herein sustained.

The main and in fact the only substantial question presented upon this appeal is that of the construction of the term "net profits" as the same appears in the clause of the agreement between the corporation and Mr. Giannini above set forth. It is the contention of the appellant that this phrase has a well-defined meaning, in which meaning it must be held to have been used by the parties to this agreement, and which meaning could not be changed or altered by oral evidence; that according to such meaning "net profits" constitute the difference between receipts and expenditures, and hence can only be represented in money; that net profits must always be actual as distinguished from estimated profits, and hence that the settlement had by the directors of this corporation with the respondent Giannini, having been based upon the estimated increases in valuation of the properties of the corporation in kind, is in contravention of the agreement, and cannot therefore be upheld.

We are not prepared to give our concurrence to this contention on the part of the appellant herein. The terms "profits" and "net profits" depend in our judgment for their meaning upon the nature of the business and properties with respect to which they are employed. The leading case upon the subject of profits in kind is the case of the Spanish Prospecting Company, 1 Ch. (1911) 92, 20 Am. Cases, 677. The Spanish Prospecting Company had purchased from Punchard, Fleming & Vivian certain mining properties in Spain, and had engaged the services of the vendors in the management of said properties, agreeing to pay each of the members of the firm so retained a certain salary, which, however, they were not to be entitled to draw except only from the profits, if any, arising from the business of the company. In the course of said business the company acquired certain shares in another company called the Spanish Minerals Development Company, Ltd., which later went into liquidation and distributed its assets among its shareholders. By virtue of this distribution the Spanish Prospecting Company received certain shares, and also certain debentures of another corporation named the Esperanza Copper & Sulphur Company. These debentures were held in kind until such time as the Spanish Prospecting Company went into voluntary liquidation, when the question arose as to whether these were to be regarded as "profits" from which the aforesaid salaries could be paid. In an extended and luminous discussion of the subject, Lord Justice Fletcher-Moulton says:

"The word 'profits' has in my opinion a well-defined legal meaning, and this meaning coincides with the fundamental conception of profits in general parlance, although in mercantile phraseology the word may at times bear meanings indicated by the special context, which differ in some respects from this fundamental signification. 'Profits' implies a comparison between the state of a business at two specific dates, usually separated by the interval of a year. The fundamental meaning is the amount of gain made during the year. This can only be ascertained by a comparison of the assets of the business at the two dates. For practical purposes these assets, in calculating profits, must be valued and not merely enumerated."

The rule announced in this case has been followed by numerous later decisions on both sides of the Atlantic, notably in the case of Stein v. Strathmore Worsted Mills Co., 221 Mass. 86, 108 N. E. 1029, wherein it was held by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts that, under a contract whereby a plaintiff became the defendant company's selling agent at an annual salary and also a percentage on net profits, the term "net profits" meant the difference between a sum made up at the end of the year of the receipts of the business and of the value of the stock, materials, machinery, real estate, and plant on hand, as compared with a sum embracing all similar items as of the beginning of the year. The following cases also recognize and apply the same rule for the estimation of the net profits of business adventures of the character of that in which the J. Cuneo Company was chiefly engaged during the period of the plaintiff's connection with it in the capacity of its manager. Meserve v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 419; Jones v. Davis, 48 N. J. Eq. 493, 21 Atl. 1036; Mayer v. Nethersole, 71 App. Div. 383, 75 N. Y. Supp. 990.

[1] The instant case, in fact, furnishes a yet stronger reason for the application of the rule than that supplied by some of the foregoing cases, since the corporation of which the plaintiff herein was manager was essentially a trading corporation, making its main profits in the buying, selling, exchanging, and generally handling both real estate and personal properties and securities, investing, enhancing, and turning over its capital through the process of dealing in the main in property in kind. When the agreement between the parties is looked to it will be seen that this fact was apparently in the minds of those who framed it, since it is therein provided that the sum which the plaintiff is to be paid for his services is "a sum of money in gold coin of the United States equivalent to 25% of the net profits of the corporation." The use of the word "equivalent" in this connection would seem to quite clearly indicate that the net profits of the corporation were not to be altogether comprehended in terms of a money residue as a result of the business of the year.

[2] In addition to these considerations we are of the opinion that the meaning to be given the term "net profits" as employed by the parties to this contract, if the same be doubtful, must be determined in some measure at least by the interpretation which the parties themselves placed upon it during the nearly ten years of the conduct of the business of the corporation by the plaintiff under this contract. The evidence, we think, shows clearly that upon several occasions, and particularly with respect to certain specific properties, the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled and which he actually received was determined by a comparison of the values of the assets of the corporation in kind at different periods of time. These valuations and the assignment to the plaintiff of his one-fourth interest in the said assets and properties, based thereon, were, we think, made fairly and openly, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the various members of the Cuneo family interested therein, and, this being so, we think it sufficiently appears that the parties themselves have placed upon this agreement the very interpretation in practical effect which the foregoing authorities would indicate to be the proper one as a matter of law.

[3] The further contention of the appellant to the effect that the action of the directors of the corporation in fixing the sum to which the respondent Giannini was entitled, and in directing the issuance of the corporation note therefor which was subsequently paid, must be held void for the reason that such action was taken at a meeting attended by a bare majority of the said board, one of whose members making up such majority was the wife of said respondent, we think to be possessed of no merit. The said meeting was regularly called and held, so far as the record discloses. The wife of Mr. Giannini was also one of the shareholders in this family corporation, whose interests as such would be adversely affected by the action of the board in the allowance of his claim. She was not directly or beneficially interested, in a financial sense, in the result of the action of said board in the allowance of said claim. The mere fact that the claimant was her husband, and that the amount of his claim if allowed and paid would work an accretion of the community funds of the spouses, would not, in our opinion, create such an interest in the wife as would disqualify her from acting as a member of the board of directors of the corporation. None of the cases cited by the appellant goes so far, and we are satisfied that to uphold the view of the appellant in this regard, in the absence of any showing of fraud would be to create an altogether too narrow limitation upon the powers of boards of directors or trustees of family corporations in which very frequently like dual relations and interests exist. In the instant case there is no showing of any kind tending in the slightest degree to disclose any sort of misleading, or overreaching, or concealment, or advantage, or fraud of any kind on the part of the respondent in respect to any of the transactions in the course of his management of the properties and affairs of the family corporation, and the fact that this action was begun and has been prosecuted by a minority stockholder after a refusal on the part of the directors to reconsider their action, or to themselves institute the same, would serve to indicate that the majority of the stockholders do not wish the action of the directors in the premises overturned.

The foregoing being our view of the law and the facts of this case, it follows that the judgment herein should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

SCARPA v. SCARPA. (Civ. 2833.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 19, 1919. Rehearing Denied April 17, 1919; Denied by Supreme Court May 15, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE ⇨286—PROPERTY OF PARTIES—ACTION OF RECEIVER—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

A divorced husband to whose wife certain of his property has been assigned and receiver appointed to sell other property as community property is not injured by the receiver's action in selling certain property not belonging to either spouse, but to a stranger to the divorce action.

2. DIVORCE ⇨267—PROPERTY OF PARTIES—FEE OF ATTORNEY FOR RECEIVER—AUTHORITY OF COURT.

The court which granted divorce to a wife had authority to make an order for payment of counsel fees to the attorney of the receiver appointed to make sale of the property awarded the wife.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨705—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE.

Where appellant from order settling the account of the receiver in his wife's divorce suit as to certain items fails to bring up the evidence concerning them, the appellate court cannot review the action of the trial court thereon.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1024(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the action of the court concerning certain items of the account of the receiver in a wife's divorce suit was taken on a conflict of evidence as to such items, the conclusion of the trial court may not be reviewed on the husband's appeal from order settling the receiver's account.

5. DIVORCE ⇨255—PROPERTY OF PARTIES—STATUS AS SEPARATE PROPERTY—RES ADJUDICATA.

Where, in a wife's divorce action, it was determined that items of property awarded her and subsequently sold by a receiver were community property, after six months had elapsed after such determination by interlocutory decree the status of the property was res adjudicata, and not open to further attack by the husband by objection to the receiver's account, since an interlocutory decree becomes final as to disposition of property after expiration of the six months from its entry within which appeal may be taken.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action for divorce by Caroline L. Scarpa against Joseph Scarpa, wherein decree for plaintiff appointed William P. Wright receiver to take charge and make sale of the separate property assigned plaintiff. From an order settling the receiver's final account, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. Scarpa and Geo. D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Oneal, of San Jose, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J.—This is an appeal from an order settling the final account of a receiver. The proceeding springs from an action for divorce instituted by the plaintiff, Caroline L. Scarpa, against the defendant, Joseph Scarpa, in which the trial court on November 1, 1916, granted the plaintiff an interlocutory decree of divorce upon the ground of adultery, and in that decree the court directed that the homestead of the parties, together with certain belongings found to be the separate property of the plaintiff, be assigned absolutely to her, and that the community property of the parties be assigned three-fourths to the plaintiff and one-fourth to the defendant. In the decree William P. Wright was appointed receiver to take charge and make the sale of the property. He qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and on October 17, 1917, he filed his report and account. Exceptions were filed thereto, and after notice and hearing the account was settled on November 5, 1917. The appeal is from this decree of settlement.

[1] Defendant objects to the action of the receiver in selling two cows, claiming that they were neither community property nor separate property of either spouse, but belonged to a stranger to the action. There is evidence in the record which sustains the finding of the court implied from its approval of the sale that these animals were legitimately the subject of the receiver's action. On the other hand, if the defendant's contention as to their ownership be correct, it is apparent that he is not injured by the action of the receiver to which he objects.

[2] Defendant also takes exception to the amount of the fee allowed to the receiver's attorney. The court, of course, had authority to make an order for the payment in question, and we find nothing in the record that tends to show an abuse of the court's discretion in this respect.

[3] It appears that several of the items of the account here objected to had been the subject of a separate hearing in the course of the action, but however that may be, the appellant as to these items has failed to bring up the evidence concerning them, which prevents this court from reviewing the action of the trial court thereon.

[4] The remaining objections may be divided into two groups. As to one of them it must be held that the action of the court concerning the items complained of was taken upon a conflict of evidence. As to these items, therefore, the conclusion of the trial court may not be reviewed here.

[5] The other group of objections is based upon the contention that the items of property sold were not community property. The answer to this is that the matter was determined adversely to appellant's position upon the trial of the divorce action, and, as more than six months had elapsed after such determination by the interlocutory decree before the objections to the account were filed, the status of this property was res adjudicata, and thus not open to further attack. In a proceeding in divorce the court has jurisdiction to adjudge the character of any property claimed to be community property, and, having done so in an action between these parties, the question upon the settlement of this account was no longer open. Huneke v. Huneke, 12 Cal. App. 203, 107 Pac. 131; Allen v. Allen, 159 Cal. 197, 113 Pac. 160. An interlocutory decree becomes final as to all dispositions of property made therein after the expiration of six months from the entry thereof, within which an appeal may be taken therefrom. Pereira v. Pereira, 156 Cal. 1, 103 Pac. 488, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 880, 134 Am. St. Rep. 107; Huneke v. Huneke, supra; Allen v. Allen, supra.

The order is affirmed.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

JUDGMENT $\Leftrightarrow$ 251(1)—CONFORMITY TO PLEADINGS AND ISSUES.

In an action for money had and received, where the answer admitted the receipt of the money and set up affirmative matters in defense, the judgment based upon findings adverse to the defendant as to the affirmative matters is a judgment upon a cause of action set forth in the complaint, and not upon one which appears for the first time in the answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Catherine R. Rupert against Joseph C. Hunter and Anna S. Hunter. From an adverse judgment, the first-named defendant appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and rehearing denied in the Supreme Court.

George W. Perkins, of Los Angeles, and C. F. Holland, for appellant.

Alfred H. McAdoo and Duke Stone, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant Joseph C. Hunter appeals from the judgment. The complaint is in three counts, but for the purpose of considering the contentions made by appellant it will be sufficient to refer to the first cause of action, together with the answer thereto and the findings of the court. The complaint alleges that on or about August 10, 1912, the defendants, in consideration of the sum of $2,000 received by them and in evidence of said indebtedness, executed their 30-day note to the plaintiff for the sum of $2,000; that, after crediting payments made, there remained due and unpaid the sum of $1,907.42. The answer of appellant denied the execution of the note, but admitted that on August 10, 1912, he received from plaintiff the sum of $2,000. The answer then alleged as follows:

"Alleges: That for more than seven years last past, defendant Joseph C. Hunter has acted as business agent and advisor for this plaintiff, and that during all of said seven years defendant Joseph C. Hunter has attended to the investing and loaning of plaintiff's money. That said sum of $2,000 was received by defendant Joseph C. Hunter from this plaintiff for the purpose of investing said sum of $2,000 for the benefit of this plaintiff. That said sum of $2,000 was so invested by defendant Joseph C. Hunter at the special instance and request of this plaintiff. That said sum of $2,000 was to be returned to plaintiff at such times and in such manner as said investments should allow or mature."

The answer further alleged that this defendant has advanced to plaintiff the sum of $1,568.03 for and on account of said sum of $2,000.

The findings of the court are silent upon the subject of the execution of the note or the nonpayment thereof. The court did find, however, that—

"On or about August 10, 1912, the defendant Joseph C. Hunter received of plaintiff the sum of two thousand ($2,000.00) dollars under an express agreement between plaintiff and said defendants for the purpose of investing the same for the benefit of the plaintiff, and it was agreed between plaintiff and said defendant that said sum of $2,000 was to be invested at two (2%) per cent. a month and said defendant should pay the plaintiff one (1%) per cent. a month while said money was so retained by him; and it was further agreed between plaintiff and said defendant that said sum was to be returned to plaintiff on thirty (30) days' notice from plaintiff to said defendant. And the court finds that the plaintiff demanded the return of said moneys and an accounting thereof more than thirty days before bringing this action; but that the said defendant has never rendered to the plaintiff an accounting for said moneys and has refused to return said moneys to the plaintiff, except the sum of one hundred fifty ($150.00) dollars."

The court further found that the defendant has never repudiated said trust agreement and the statute of limitations had not begun to run prior to filing this action; that it is not true that the defendant Joseph C. Hunter has advanced to plaintiff the sum of $1,568.03 on account of said sum of $2,000; and in truth and in fact said defendant has only advanced on said $2,000 the sum of $150 and the sum of $338.97, the latter items being advanced from time to time as interest payments. Based on the foregoing findings, the court awarded judgment to plaintiff against the defendant Joseph C. Hunter in the sum of $2,000, with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent. a month from August 10, 1912, until date of judgment, less credits allowed in accordance with the findings.

The record consists of the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The bill of exceptions contains a notice of intention to move for a new trial, with a statement showing that the motion for new trial was duly presented and the motion denied. The grounds of the motion for new trial included a statement "that said decision is against law." The bill of exceptions does not contain any of the evidence received, or any of the rulings of the court thereon.

Appellant contends that the decision was against law, in this, that the court failed to make findings of fact upon the issues presented by the complaint, "but instead has found in favor of plaintiff on an entirely different cause of action than that presented by the pleadings, while the findings are silent as to the real issues of the case." The facts appear to be, however, as we may infer from the findings, that the case was tried upon the affirmative issues tendered by the answer, which showed that the defendant had received the sum of $2,000 from the plaintiff in trust for stated purposes, but alleged that nearly $1,600 thereof had been returned. Presumably in accordance with the evidence produced at the trial, the court found that a very much smaller sum had been returned, and rendered judgment for the actual balance remaining in defendant's hands. So far as the record shows, it may be that no evidence concerning the execution of the note was received at the trial, and it may be assumed that such note was not executed. If the defendant had rested upon his denial with respect to the note, perhaps that would have been sufficient to dispose of the action in his favor, leaving the plaintiff free to maintain another action upon defendant's indebtedness to her. Since the defendant chose to anticipate such a proceeding by an affirmative statement of facts raising the actual issues of the case, we cannot see that he is in a position to complain of the result at this time. Presumably he permitted the court, without objection on his part, to try and determine the controversy, as seems to have been done. The answer, while denying the execution of the note, asserted that this defendant received the plaintiff's money at the time stated in the complaint, but alleged that it was received for the purpose of investing the same in loans for the benefit of the plaintiff, and that those loans were made. The answer did not deny that all of those loans had been repaid to the defendant. The real question at issue seems to have been with respect to the amount that had been repaid by appellant to plaintiff. On that issue we must assume that the findings of fact are in accordance with the evidence. The conclusion at which we have arrived in this matter is in harmony with the opinion of the Third District Court of Appeal as stated in Boyle v. Coast Improvement Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 151 Pac. 25; and Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90. In each of those cases the Supreme Court denied an application for a rehearing. As was said in the Slaughter Case:

"It seems to us that the reformed procedure would receive a decided shock if a defendant should be permitted to stand by and without objection allow an issue to be tried as though properly presented by the pleadings and on appeal escape the consequences by claiming that the complaint failed to present such issue."

It has been held directly that where an answer raises an issue not presented by the complaint, and upon which a judgment might be based, such pleadings are a sufficient basis for the judgment. Grangers' Union v. Ashe, 12 Cal. App. 757, 108 Pac. 533. See, also, Abner Doble Co. v. Keystone, etc., Co., 145 Cal. 490, 78 Pac. 1050; Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 532, 45 Pac. 816.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The opinion of the District Court of Appeal may possibly be taken as holding that a judgment for plaintiff may be sustained upon findings adverse to the defendant upon affirmative allegations of the answer, although the cause of action to which such allegations and findings are responsive is not one set up in the complaint. If this is the construction to be put on the opinion, we are not willing to concur without further consideration. But, in fact, this question is not involved. The complaint as amended is in reality one for money had and received. The answer admitted the receipt of the money and set up affirmative matters in defense, and to these last-mentioned matters the findings are responsive. The judgment upon these findings is therefore a judgment upon a cause of action set forth in the complaint and not upon one which appears for the first time in the answer. A hearing in this court is, therefore, denied.

SMITH v. HERNAN et ux. (Civ. 2661.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 8, 1919. Rehearing Denied April 7, 1919.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES §139(3) — HUSBAND AND WIFE §171(3)—CONSIDERATION—EXTENSION OF TIME—MORTGAGE-NOTE.

Where time in which to pay original indebtedness contracted by husband and secured by mortgage on property subsequently deeded by him to his wife was extended from time to time, there was a sufficient consideration to support husband's promise upon new note and mortgage given by the wife contemporaneously with the execution of the note on property conveyed to her.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE §171(10)—MORTGAGE ON SEPARATE PROPERTY OF WIFE—LIABILITY AS SURETY.

Where husband conveyed to his wife property mortgaged to secure his indebtedness, and thereafter gave new note for remaining part of indebtedness, and he and the wife executed a mortgage on the property to secure the note, the wife's status was that of surety for the husband.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Alice Smith against M. H. Hernan and Lillie B. Hernan. From the decree rendered, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

J. Early Craig, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gerald C. Halsey and C. Harold Caulfield, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Lillie B. Hernan from a decree foreclosing a mortgage. The original indebtedness was contracted by defendant M. H. Hernan, and secured by a mortgage of community property executed by him alone. Subsequently said Hernan deeded the property to Lillie B. Hernan, who was and is his wife. The indebtedness, being extended from time to time, was reduced to $1,175, and defendant M. H. Hernan executed to plaintiff his promissory note for that amount, to secure which both defendants executed and delivered to plaintiff a mortgage of the same property described in the original mortgage and in the deed from M. H. Hernan to his wife, and then separately owned by her.

The note was not paid when it became due and this action was instituted, resulting in the decree complained of by appellant.

Appellant attacks the finding of the court that the "mortgage was made, executed and delivered by defendants M. H. Hernan and Lillie B. Hernan, his wife, to plaintiff on the 5th day of December, 1913, at the time of the execution and delivery of the promissory note" (executed by plaintiff M. H. Hernan alone) "described in plaintiff's complaint, and as part of the same transaction, and for the purpose of securing the payment of said promissory note according to the terms thereof." This finding was made in response to the issues squarely presented by the pleadings, particularly the denials and affirmative allegations of appellant's answer, and is strictly in accord with the testimony of all the witnesses for both plaintiff and defendants. It will therefore not be disturbed.

[1, 2] The original indebtedness and the various extensions of time granted defendant in which to pay the same furnished a valuable consideration to defendant M. H. Hernan for the note and mortgage. Humboldt Savings & Loan Society v. Dowd, 137 Cal. 408, 412, 70 Pac. 274; Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 391, 64 Pac. 560. As the consideration was sufficient to support the promise of the husband upon the new note it was sufficient to support the mortgage given by the wife contemporaneously with the execution of the note. The debt not being her own, and the property being her separate property, she stands as surety for the husband for the payment of the debt. McDonald v. Randall, 139 Cal. 246, 72 Pac. 997; Burkle v. Levy, 70 Cal. 250, 11 Pac. 643; Rohrbacker v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 489, 78 Pac. 1054; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. De Shorb, 137 Cal. 693, 70 Pac. 771.

On the trial of the case, counsel for plaintiff and the court were of the opinion that the mortgage provided for and by its terms secured the expense of a search of title prior to foreclosure proceedings. There is no such provision in the mortgage.

The court below is directed to modify the judgment by deducting therefrom the item of $25 allowed for search of title, and as so modified the judgment will stand affirmed.

H. & W. PIERCE, Inc., v. SANTA BARBARA COUNTY. (Civ. 2866.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 17, 1919.)

1. TAXATION — 489 — INCREASE OF ASSESSMENT — BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — RECORD.

Upon proceedings by board of equalization to increase assessor's valuation of property, there being no requirement as to taking down the evidence at the hearing or of bill of exceptions to rulings of the board, a court will determine the board's action by inspection of the record, in absence of fraud or abuse of power.

2. TAXATION — 490 — HEARING BEFORE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — ORDER OF BOARD — CONCLUSIVENESS.

Order of board of equalization, increasing assessor's valuation of property, reciting that evidence was taken at the hearing, is conclusive as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the increase in valuation.

3. TAXATION — 490 — BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — INCREASE OF VALUATION.

Order of board of equalization, increasing assessor's valuation of property, is conclusive as to jurisdictional facts, unless the contrary appears from the record.

4. TAXATION — 494(1) — VALUATION — REVIEW BY COURTS — IRREGULARITIES.

Equity will not inquire into irregularities nor reverse questions of valuation, unless the valuation is so grossly excessive as to be inconsistent with an exercise of honest judgment, or so unequal and discriminating as to violate the fundamental law of the land.

5. TAXATION — 537 — RECOVERY OF TAX PAID — VOID ASSESSMENT — MORAL OBLIGATION.

In proceedings to recover taxes paid under protest under Pol. Code, § 3819, tax will not be revoked on account of some technical defect rendering assessment void, where there is a moral obligation to pay the tax.

6. TAXATION — 814(1) — ACTION TO SET ASIDE TAX DEED — INVALIDITY OF ASSESSMENT — MORAL OBLIGATION TO PAY TAX.

In proceedings to set aside tax deed, tax will not be revoked because of technical defect invalidating assessment, where there is a moral obligation to pay the tax.

7. TAXATION — 348 — VALUATION — STOCK RANCH.

In valuing land used as stock ranch, all the capabilities or uses to which the land is adopted should be considered, and not merely rental being received for use of land as stock ranch.

8. TAXATION — 469 — VALUATION — BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — INCREASING ASSESSOR'S VALUATION.

Board of equalization's order, increasing assessor's valuation, is not void because of board's refusal to restrict itself in valuing property to the consideration of rental received for land; such refusal, if error, being committed in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the board to hear and determine matter before it.

9. TAXATION — 490 — BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — CONCLUSIVENESS OF ORDER.

In view of Pol. Code, § 3672 et seq., where it appears that evidence was taken by board of equalization at hearing at which it increased an assessor's valuation, the decision of the board raising the assessment is, in absence of fraud, valid and conclusive on the courts.

10. TAXATION — 488 — BOARD OF EQUALIZATION — INCREASE OF ASSESSOR'S VALUATION — SUFFICIENCY OF ORDER.

Board of equalization's order, raising the assessment on parcels of real estate to certain sum, after notice to owner under Pol. Code, § 3673, without designating in figures the exact amount of increase for each parcel, is sufficient, in view of Civ. Code, § 3538; the amount of increase of each parcel being simply a matter of calculation.

11. TAXATION — 428 — ASSESSMENT ROLL — DOLLAR MARKS — PUNCTUATION.

Omission of dollar marks and punctuation in their proper places on the assessment roll was not misleading to taxpayer, where it had knowledge of the exact amount, as evidenced by proceedings under Pol. Code, § 3819, in which it asked for the exact amount which it claims was paid in excess to that which it contends should have been paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by H. & W. Pierce, Incorporated, against the County of Santa Barbara. From judgment and an order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, of San Francisco, and R. B. Canfield, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (T. R. Finley, Dist. Atty., of Santa Maria, and E. W. Squier, of Santa Barbara), for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This action is brought by plaintiff to recover taxes paid under protest as provided by section 3819, Political Code.

It is contended by plaintiff, the appellant here, and admitted by respondent in its brief (although this contention was denied in the trial court) that this action being brought under said section plaintiff was required to present no claim or demand for taxes so paid to the board of supervisors, and that the ruling of the trial court in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to this affirmative defense, numbered "Third" in the answer, was proper. In view, therefore, of this condition of the record, appellant's first point may be deemed disposed of. As to this disposition, however, of that point, as between the parties themselves, we express no opinion favorable or adverse thereto.

It is urged by appellant that "a board of equalization cannot change an assessor's valuation of property for purposes of taxation without evidence authorizing them to do so." This is conceded by respondent; but in that concession respondent insists that, "after hearing evidence bearing upon the matter, said board has such jurisdiction."

Nothing in the complaint here appears from which fraud or abuse of discretion may be imputed to either the assessor or the board of equalization.

It is contended by appellant that "there was no evidence before the board in this case authorizing the increase ordered," and that "there was not sufficient evidence before the board here to authorize the increase ordered." In this we are unable to agree with appellant. There is no merit in this contention. The record discloses that the minutes of the board of supervisors bearing on this matter show on their face that on July 25, 1912, when the matter of raising the assessment came on to be heard, "the following witnesses were sworn and examined: I. W. Stewart, Thos. Nuckolls, John Roupp, and Clio L. Lloyd, county assessor." Indeed, from the conclusive character of the board's order, it is clear that evidence was introduced before the board which, if believed by them—as it obviously was—was sufficient to justify the making of and to support the order. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Board of Equalization, 97 Cal. 318, 32 Pac. 312.

[1] We know of no provision, and none has been called to our attention for taking down the evidence at a hearing, such as the one under discussion here, before a board of equalization, or providing for a bill of exceptions to the rulings of such board. Hence it must be held that the questions here presented must be determined by an inspection of the record itself, in the absence of fraud or malicious abuse of power (Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Board of Equalization, supra); and in such case "the board of equalization * * * is the sole judge of questions of fact and of values of property." La Grange, etc., Min. Co. v. Carter, 142 Cal. 560, 565, 76 Pac. 241, 243.

[2] We are clear that the record discloses beyond controversy that evidence was taken at the said hearing before the board of equalization in support of the raise, and the fact, recited in the order, that evidence was taken, forecloses discussion as to the sufficiency of the evidence. Teague v. Board of Trustees, 156 Cal. 351, 104 Pac. 581; People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205; People v. Town of Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620; Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Placer County, 46 Cal. 667; Pittsburg, etc., Co. v. Backus, 154 U. S. 421, 14 Sup. Ct. 1114, 38 L. Ed. 1031.

Complaint is made that "the court erred in refusing to hear proof of the further evidence produced before the board after the evidence of the rental value of the land had been shown to have been given." Appellant then argues that—

"The court can never tell in advance what may be the effect of further evidence, and should try a case through to the end without stopping the trial on the ground that it has heard enough. Such a course of procedure condemns the litigant before he has been fully heard. All relevant evidence should be received, unless unreasonably cumulative."

[3] Obviously, this is a self-evident truth. Before we can condemn the trial judge in the case at bar, however, of such conduct, and without questioning in the remotest degree the honesty or integrity of counsel for appellant, may we be pardoned if we suggest that he has cited us to no evidence in the record here supporting such criticism; and indeed, we know of no law, and none has been cited to us, that authorizes us to do so on the argument of counsel in his brief on appeal. If the introduction of testimony before the board be jurisdictional, then the order of the board is conclusive as to the jurisdictional facts, unless the contrary appears by the record (Humboldt County v. Dinsmore, 75 Cal. 604, 17 Pac. 710); and this is the rule which prevails both in cases of certiorari and appeal (Hagenmeyer v. Mendocino County, 82 Cal. 214, 23 Pac. 14).

The last ground for reversal urged by appellant is that "the correctness of the board's order, independent of the evidence upon which it was based, is immaterial." We are of the opinion that this difficulty is more apparent than real. It is urged that until the board, acting within its powers, has changed an assessor's valuation, that valuation is presumptively the correct valuation, and is final, and the real owner is entitled to "rest securely upon" it as a settled valuation, and in support of this contention cite People v. Reynolds, 28 Cal. 108. As we view the case at bar, that case is not in point.

[4] It must be remembered that "equity will not inquire into irregularities, nor reverse questions of valuation, unless the valuation is so grossly excessive as to be inconsistent with an exercise of honest judgment, or is so unequal and discriminating as to violate the fundamental law of the land." 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 724; 37 Cyc. 1111 et seq. In the case at bar, as we have already seen, there was no claim made by appellant in his complaint, nor is there any evidence in the case, that either the assessor or the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, were guilty of fraud or abuse of discretion. A careful reading of the record in this case—and assuming, without so holding, that we can in this proceeding review the evidence taken before the board—discloses, we think, without contradiction, that the value of the ranch referred to in this proceeding was at least that assessed by the board, and that the tax was no greater than that imposed upon property of similar character located in that vicinity.

[5, 6] In actions, such as the present one, to recover taxes, as well as in actions to enjoin or set aside tax deeds, the law is that when there is a moral obligation to pay the tax it cannot be revoked on account of some technical defect rendering the assessment void. Steele v. San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. 785, 93 Pac. 1020; Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168; Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 671, 33 Pac. 765.

[7, 8] The testimony of the witnesses, together with other evidence introduced before the board, shows clearly that at that hearing it was contended, in behalf of appellant that the value of the property should be determined by the rental it was producing as a "stock proposition." The board refused to be so restricted. They recognized this fact as an element which might assist in arriving at its real value in money, but took into consideration, in fixing the valuation, the value of the ranch for any purposes to which it appeared to be adapted. We do not think it necessary to cite authorities to support the view of the board, the correctness of which is so obvious. But if it was erroneous, it was an error committed in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the board to hear and determine the matter before it, and such error does not render the order void. In arriving at the value of the land, all its capabilities, or the uses to which it is adapted should be taken into consideration. Muller v. Ry. Co., 83 Cal. 240, 23 Pac. 265; Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 538, 34 Pac. 224; San Diego Land Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 63, 20 Pac. 372, 3 L. R. A. 83.

[9] The powers and duties of county boards of equalization are prescribed by section 3672 et seq., Political Code. No appeal from its decisions, or other method of having its decisions reviewed by a court of law, is provided by statute. While it appears in the case at bar that evidence was in fact taken by the board, the decision of the board thereon raising the assessment is, in the absence of fraud, valid and conclusive, and its judgments are not subject to the supervision of the courts. 37 Cyc. 1111; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 720; Keokuk, etc., Bridge Co. v. People, 185 Ill. 276, 56 N. E. 1049; Board, etc., v. Bullard, 77 Kan. 349, 94 Pac. 129, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 807; Doty Lumber, etc., Co. v. Lewis County, 60 Wash. 428, 111 Pac. 562, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 870; Stanley v. Supervisors, 121 U. S. 535, 7 Sup. Ct. 1234, 30 L. Ed. 1000.

The record discloses that the property in question was assessed to plaintiff for purposes of taxation by said county and state, and on the assessment of said county "each of said parcels of real property" was so assessed, and that the aggregate amount assessed against such parcels of real property by the county assessor, as aforesaid, is the sum of $88,210. That thereafter, on July 18, 1912, the board of equalization did serve a notice upon plaintiff, requiring it to show cause, if any it had, why said assessment should not be raised from said sum last stated to the sum of $175,000; that said notice complied with the rule of said board in such matters made and provided and which said rule was promulgated and adopted in compliance with section 3673 of the Political Code; that evidence was taken, and after consideration of the same, and upon reconvening after an adjournment from morning until the afternoon session on the same day, the following record appears: "On motion, duly seconded, it is ordered that said assessment be, and the same is hereby, raised from $88,210 to $175,000"—all the supervisors voting in the affirmative. As already intimated, no fraud being alleged or proven, this is conclusive. Los Angeles Gas, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 121 Pac. 384.

[10] Appellant contends, in effect, that the statute requires the board to designate in figures the exact amount of increase for each parcel. This is not the case. From what has just been said, manifestly all was done that the law requires, nothing being left but simply a calculation—a simple problem in arithmetic. The board may designate the percentage or proportion to be figured out by the ministerial officer. The maxim "That is certain which can be made certain" is applicable here. Section 3538, Civ. Code.

By the specific terms of section 3819, supra, it is provided that—

"If it shall be adjudged that the assessment, or any part thereof referred to in the protest, was void on the ground specified in the protest (the italics are ours), judgment shall be entered," etc.

[11] The grounds specified in the protest were: First. "Nowhere on the face of said assessment roll is there any dollar mark, or other mark, sign, word, abbreviation, or explanation to indicate what is meant by the figures in the columns on said assessment roll, which are designed to show the value of the property or the amount of the taxes levied against said property." The answer to this objection is that, while the presence of the dollar mark before the figures, and the insertion of punctuation marks in the proper places, would probably have been the proper practice, still appellant evidently has not been misled by that omission, as is evidenced by the fact that it went to court and asked for the exact amount which it claims was paid in excess of that which it contends should have been paid. The second ground specified in the protest is "that the board did not hear evidence upon which the order raising the assessment could be based." Third. "That the board raised said assessment because it considered that 'it was necessary to derive more revenue for county purposes, and preferred to raise the amount of the assessment of the said property rather than to raise the tax rate.'" Fourth. "Because the further purpose of the board was to compel appellant to subdivide said property," etc. And fifth. "Because it did not increase 'the assessment of each parcel of land separately,' but determined and ordered that the assessment of all the property mentioned in said schedule should be raised to the sum of $175,000." The court held that appellant had failed to produce evidence in support of these grounds, and found against it on those points. The evidence here fully supports that finding.

After an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence taken before the board of equalization, as disclosed by the record here—which we were under no legal, equitable, or moral obligation to do—we fail to find therein any improper admission or rejection of testimony, or any error as to the matter of procedure which has resulted in the miscarriage of justice, or because of which the appellant herein has been denied any substantial right.

The judgment and order appealed from are, and each of them is, hereby affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 242

Ex parte JOHNSTON. (Cr. 654.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 12, 1919.)

1. HEALTH ⚡20—POLICE POWER—REGULATIONS.

The adoption of measures for the protection of the public health is a valid exercise of the police power of the state, as to which the Legislature is necessarily vested with large discretion, not only in determining what are contagious and infectious diseases, but also in adopting means for preventing their spread, as by imposing on health department of city the duty to take measures to prevent the spread of disease afflicting any person.

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⚡25(1)—QUARANTINE OF DISEASED PERSON—ILLEGALITY OF ORIGINAL ARREST.

A woman with gonococcus infection, declared, by Pol. Code, § 2979a, as amended by St. 1917, p. 171, to be contagious and infectious, who was originally taken into custody without warrant, but submitted to examination, is not entitled to habeas corpus to release her from quarantine in a hospital, where the health commissioner confined her for treatment, despite any possible maladministration of the law or any illegality in the original arrest.

3. EVIDENCE ⚡14—JUDICIAL NOTICE—COMMUNICABILITY OF DISEASE.

The court may not take judicial notice that gonococcus infection is not communicable except by actual contact.

4. HEALTH ⚡24—QUARANTINE REGULATIONS—JUDICIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF INFECTION.

One infected with a contagious disease, declared to be such by Pol. Code, § 2979a, as amended by St. 1917, p. 171, may be subjected to quarantine regulations by the health commissioner of a city, without its first being judicially established by some proceeding in court that he or she is so infected.

In the matter of the application of Grace Johnston for a writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner remanded to custody.

Paul W. Schenck and Richard Kittrelle, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Erwin W. Widney, City Prosecutor, and W. K. Crawford, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Kemper B. Campbell, of Los Angeles, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. Upon petitioner's application therefor, the Supreme Court issued a writ of habeas corpus made returnable to this court after its denial of a similar petition.

It appears from the return to the writ and oral evidence of Dr. Bettin, who is connected with the city health department of Los Angeles, that petitioner was, on November 12, 17, and 22, 1918, with her consent, examined and found to be afflicted with gonococcus infection, and thereupon, by order of the health commissioner of the city, confined in a hospital for treatment, which, with the view of effecting a cure, was administered until December 5, 1918, at which time, upon application for a writ of habeas corpus, she was, by the superior court, released on bail, at the hearing of which, on February 8, 1919, she was remanded to custody and returned to the hospital, since which time she has steadfastly refused to accept any treatment or submit to any examination. There was no showing or claim that she received treatment while absent from the hospital; nor, indeed, any evidence whatsoever offered in support of the contention that she was not now and had never been so afflicted. The testimony of Dr. Bettin is that, without treatment, the disease would continue its course, and that at the present time, in her opinion, petitioner is still afflicted with said infection.

[1] The adoption of measures for the protection of the public health is universally conceded to be a valid exercise of the police power of the state, as to which the Legislature is necessarily vested with large discretion, not only in determining what are contagious and infectious diseases, but also in adopting means for preventing the spread thereof. Black's Const. Law, § 108; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; State v. Somerville, 67 Wash. 638, 122 Pac. 324; State Bd. of Health v. Bd. of Trustees, 13 Cal. App. 514, 110 Pac. 137. The Legislature, in its discretion having determined the character of the disease in question, has imposed upon the health department of the city the duty, when having knowledge that one is afflicted therewith, of taking the necessary measures to prevent its spread.

[2] In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must, upon the evidence before us, assume that petitioner was, when subjected to quarantine regulations, and is now, afflicted with and suffering from gonococcus infection, which, by section 2979a, Political Code (Stats. 1917, p. 171), is, with leprosy, smallpox, typhus fever, and a number of other diseases, declared to be contagious and infectious. The sole question thus presented is the right of proper authorities to isolate and place her in quarantine. By the section of the Code just cited it is made the duty of the health officer, knowing of the existence of any such contagious or infectious disease, to take such measures as may be necessary to prevent the spread thereof. The isolation of one afflicted with a contagious or infectious disease is a reasonable and proper, indeed the usual, measure taken to prevent the increase and spread thereof.

It appears that petitioner was originally taken into custody without a warrant, and, basing his argument upon such arbitrary action, counsel draws a lurid picture of what might result from maladministration of the law by those charged with the duty of enforcing it. The fact that the authority so delegated may, in a given case, be abused, is no legal reason for denying the power to quarantine summarily in a case where grounds therefor concededly exist. Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 Pac. 879, 1 Ann. Cas. 13; Brown v. State, 59 Wash. 195, 109 Pac. 802. Possible maladministration of the law is no concern of petitioner, unless such administration thereof is shown to have affected her. Nor can her arrest without a warrant, after which, and while being illegally held, an examination was made with her consent which disclosed the existence of the infection, avail her in this proceeding. Assuming the action of the police officer arbitrary and unjustified, she is not restrained of her liberty by reason thereof, but on account of a disease with which she was subsequently found to be afflicted, and in the ascertainment of which fact there appears to have been no arbitrary or unlawful action taken.

[3] There is no merit in the contention that the infection with which petitioner is afflicted is noncommunicable except by actual contact, which contact in such cases must be predicated upon the assumption that an offense cognizable by law will be committed. Assuming that grounds exist for petitioner's contention, no evidence tending to establish such fact has been presented, and it is not a matter as to which the court may take judicial notice.

[4] Counsel cites no authorities in support of the contention that one afflicted with a contagious disease cannot be subjected to quarantine regulations until it is first judicially established by some proceeding in court that he is so afflicted. Manifestly to uphold such contention would render laws for the protection of the public health nugatory. State v. Superior Court (Wash.) 174 Pac. 973, where the matter is fully considered. The writ no doubt was granted upon the argument that petitioner was not and never had been afflicted with the infection, which if true would entitle her to be discharged from custody. The return and evidence taken at the hearing conclusively establish the fact to the contrary.

In our opinion, the return and evidence taken at the hearing show a legal cause for the detention of petitioner, and she is remanded to custody.

DORRIS v. McKAMY et al. (Civ. 2870.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 13, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐2—APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—DISMISSAL—AMENDMENT OF CODE.

Notice of appeal from order denying motion for new trial having been filed after Code Civ. Proc. § 963, had been amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 209), the attempted appeal must be dismissed.

2. OFFICERS ⇐74—REMOVAL—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—ACCUSATION BY PRIVATE CITIZEN.

An accusation by a private citizen against an official, under Pen. Code, § 772, is an accusation of a public offense, neglect of the official's duties or misfeasance in office, the proceeding being criminal and in its nature a prosecution for crime, the penalty wherefore is removal from office and a fine of $500 going to the informer.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇐183(3)—CITY MARSHAL—REMOVAL PROCEEDINGS BY PRIVATE CITIZEN—VERIFIED ACCUSATION.

If the verified accusation against a city marshal, made by a private citizen under Pen.

Code, § 772, wholly failed to state a case sufficient to constitute an offense under the criminal law of the state, the court was without jurisdiction to oust the marshal from office, and judgment for $500 in favor of the informer was a nullity, and subject to collateral attack in the informer's suit to set aside the marshal's conveyance as fraudulent to him.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨183(3)—NEGLECT OF MARSHAL TO PROSECUTE—REMOVAL.

Accusation by private citizen against a city marshal, pursuant to Pen. Code, § 772, charging the marshal with having failed, refused, and neglected to cause the arrest or prosecution of prostitutes in the city, etc., held not to state facts constituting any offense known to the criminal law of the state; the offenses committed by the women whom the marshal failed to arrest having been misdemeanors only under sections 315, 316, and 318.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨183(3)—CITY MARSHAL—REMOVAL—FAILURE TO MAKE ARREST.

Where it is sought to remove a city marshal from office at the instance of a private citizen, pursuant to Pen. Code, § 772, on the ground that he has refused or neglected to perform the duties of his office, in that he has refused or neglected to arrest for a crime amounting to a misdemeanor only some person whom it was his duty to arrest, no warrant having been issued, the person who it is claimed should have been arrested must have committed or attempted a misdemeanor, and have done so in the officer's presence; Pen. Code, § 836, giving a peace officer authority to arrest for misdemeanor without warrant only when the offense is committed in his presence.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨183(3)—CITY MARSHAL—REMOVAL—FAILURE IN OFFICIAL DUTY—"PERMIT."

In an accusation by private citizen against city marshal, pursuant to Pen. Code, § 772, to remove him from office, an allegation that the marshal "permitted" prostitutes to occupy certain buildings amounted to no more than an allegation that having received no warrant issued on a complaint, and not having seen committed in his presence any acts sufficient to constitute any of the offenses denounced by the Penal Code, the marshal made no arrest; "permit" involving no intent, but implying mere passivity and abstinence from preventative action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County: Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Suit by W. C. Dorris against James McKamy and Frances Keester. From judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is a creditor's suit to set aside a conveyance, executed by defendant McKamy to defendant Keester, alleged to have been made with intent to hinder and delay plaintiff in collecting a judgment for $500 that had been given and made in his favor against McKamy in a proceeding under section 772 of the Penal Code to oust the latter from his office of city marshal of the city of Bakersfield—a proceeding wherein plaintiff here was the informer. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff adjudging that the conveyance to Keester was fraudulent and void and setting it aside, and likewise from an order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants have appealed.

[1] Notice of appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial having been filed after section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 209), the attempted appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

Respondent's right to the relief he here seeks depends upon whether he is a judgment creditor of McKamy, the grantor in the conveyance sought to be set aside. Whether he is such a creditor, or even a general creditor of McKamy, depends upon the validity of the judgment in the ouster proceeding, wherein the superior court of Kern county adjudged that McKamy be deprived of his office as city marshal of Bakersfield and that the informer, W. C. Dorris, the respondent here, recover of and from McKamy the sum of $500.

[2] Section 772 of the Penal Code authorizes the superior court to entertain an accusation made under oath by a private citizen against an official within its jurisdiction, charging him with having collected illegal fees or with having refused or neglected to perform the official duties pertaining to his office; and on conviction the court must enter a decree that the accused be deprived of his office, and give judgment for five hundred dollars in favor of the informer. An accusation presented under this section of the Penal Code is an accusation of a public offense, to wit, neglect of official duties, or misfeasance in office. The proceeding is a criminal proceeding, and, in its nature, a prosecution for crime, the penalty wherefore is removal from office and a fine of $500 that goes to the informer. In re Curtis, 108 Cal. 661, 41 Pac. 793; Wheeler v. Donnell, 110 Cal. 655, 43 Pac. 1; People v. McKamy, 168 Cal. 531, 143 Pac. 752.

[3] If the verified accusation against McKamy wholly failed to state a case sufficient to constitute an offense under the criminal law of the state, the court was without jurisdiction in the proceeding to oust him from office, and the judgment for $500 in favor of the respondent here—a sine qua non to his right to the relief here sought by him—was a nullity.

Courts derive their jurisdiction from the law. In criminal cases their jurisdiction extends to such matters as the law has declared criminal, and none other; and when they undertake to punish for an offense to which no criminality attaches, however reprehensible such offense may be in foro conscientiae, they act beyond their jurisdiction. In re Corryell, 22 Cal. 178. Hence the rule is that if an indictment, information, or written accusation—the very groundwork of the whole superstructure thereafter to be built thereon—charges or purports to charge acts which do not constitute any crime known to the law, the court is without jurisdiction, and the sentence or judgment is subject to collateral attack, as, for instance, in a habeas corpus proceeding. In re Corryell, supra; Ex parte Harrold, 47 Cal. 129; Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212; In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 121, 14 Pac. 399; Ex parte McNulty, 77 Cal. 164, 19 Pac. 237, 11 Am. App. 567, 158 Pac. 1050; Siebe v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 551, 46 Pac. 456; Ferguson v. Superior Court, 26 Cal. App. 554, 147 Pac. 603; Ex parte Neet, 157 Mo. 527, 57 S. W. 1025, 80 Am. St. Rep. 638; Ex parte Show, 4 Okl. Cr. R. 416, 113 Pac. 1062; Ex parte Beall, 28 Okl. 445, 114 Pac. 724; Ex parte Roquemore, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 282, 131 S. W. 1101, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1186. In Siebe v. Superior Court, supra, speaking of an accusation filed under section 772 of the Penal Code, the court said:

“* * * And, unless the accusation charges the officer with a violation of his official duty in respect to one or other of these particulars, the court has no jurisdiction in the matter.” (The italics are ours.)

In Ex parte Harrold, supra, the petitioner for the writ of habeas corpus had been tried and found guilty as alleged in an indictment charging him with “willfully omitting as a public officer to perform a duty enjoined by law upon him.” It was charged in the indictment that he had failed to reside at the county seat. It was contended by the Attorney General that this was a “willful omission to perform a duty enjoined by law upon a public officer,” within the meaning of section 176 of the Penal Code. It was held that the failure to reside at the county seat was not an “omission to perform any duty enjoined by law upon a public officer,” and that therefore the indictment did not charge any offense. Because the facts set forth in the indictment did not constitute any crime known to the law, it was held that the petitioner was entitled to his discharge. In Ferguson v. Superior Court, supra, it was held that, if an accusation under section 772 of the Penal Code does not state facts sufficient to constitute a ground for the officer's removal, the court is without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, and the officer is entitled to a writ of prohibition restraining the trial court from proceeding further in the matter. The rule is clearly and concisely stated by the Montana Supreme Court as follows:

“If an information states facts which do not constitute any crime known to the law, or undertakes to state such an offense, but the facts stated do not constitute the offense, and no addition to them, however full and complete, can supply what is essential, then the court is without jurisdiction to put the complainant on trial. In such case the judgment cannot be corrected. It is simply void.” In re Farrell, 36 Mont. 254, 92 Pac. 785.

In Ex parte Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605, the court, recognizing a distinction between proceedings in courts of inferior as distinguished from courts of general jurisdiction, held that, where the criminal proceeding is one pending in a court of general jurisdiction and the indictment or information purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court has jurisdiction, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on a collateral attack. As we understand this statement of the rule, it amounts practically to this: If it can be deduced from the accusation that the prosecutor intended to charge an act or an omission which is a crime known to the law, the court has jurisdiction and habeas corpus will not lie, however defectively the act or omission be described. But if the act or omission charged or attempted to be charged as an offense is not a crime known to the law, then the court is without jurisdiction, and its judgment a nullity. We think the only conclusion that is consistent with the weight of authority and the decisions of our own Supreme Court is that, if the accusation filed against McKamy states facts which do not constitute any crime known to the law of this state, the court was without jurisdiction, and its judgment void.

[4] Did the accusation state facts that constitute any offense known to the criminal law of this state? We think not. It did not differ in any material respect from that held to be insufficient in Ferguson v. Superior Court, supra.

The written accusation presented to the superior court for McKamy's removal from office alleges that, at the times therein mentioned, he was the city marshal of Bakersfield; that in that city there was at that time a large number of women living in houses of prostitution or cribs, maintaining or keeping said places as disorderly houses or houses of ill fame; that such houses had been resorted to by divers and sundry persons for the purposes of prostitution; and that such women kept such places as houses of ill fame for the purposes of prostitution. Then follows, in paragraph 3, a description of the houses or cribs, and the allegation that "such places have been erected, maintained, leased and let" for the purposes of prostitution and lewdness, and that "the occupancy and living in said houses" by said women "has been open and notorious," and that the women in said places "dress and conduct themselves in a vile and indecent manner, as follows: That said women and girls will leave said cribs and solicit, entice and invite those passing thereby to visit them therein for the purposes of prostitution and lewdness." Then follows paragraph 4, which is as follows:

"That during all of the times above mentioned, said defendant James McKamy has had knowledge of the fact that said women were doing the things and performing the acts as in the paragraph last hereinbefore alleged [i. e., the third paragraph], and that he has failed, refused, and neglected, and still fails, refuses, and neglects, to cause the arrest or prosecution of the said women, or any of them, for said acts, but permits them to occupy the said cribs as hereinabove alleged, without molestation or force against them."

Nowhere in the accusation is it alleged, nor is it even claimed, that any warrant was ever delivered to McKamy for the arrest of any of the persons referred to in the accusation. The offenses which the accusation attempts to allege were committed by the women whom McKamy failed to arrest were misdemeanors only. Pen. Code, §§ 315, 316, and 318.

In Ferguson v. Superior Court, supra, it is held that "where the only specific charges of neglect on the part of the petitioner to perform his official duty * * * are, first, his failure 'to cause the prosecution or the arrest of any persons letting said cribs for the purpose of prostitution,' and, second, his failure to cause the prosecution or arrest of 'any of the persons residing therein,' the accusation fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a ground for" the officer's removal. It was held in that case that the accusation was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to remove the officer, even though it alleged that he had knowledge of all the facts respecting such letting of the cribs and residence therein; and that, while the Code provides that in prosecutions for keeping a house of prostitution, common repute may be received as independent evidence of the character of the house and the women resorting to it, the failure of a peace officer to act upon such common repute in arresting the keeper or the inmates thereof does not constitute a neglect of official duty, although it might excuse such action if he did arrest them.

[5] Where, as in the accusation in question here, it is sought to remove a peace officer from his office upon the ground that he "has refused or neglected to perform the official duties pertaining to his office," in that he has refused or neglected to arrest, for a crime amounting to a misdemeanor only, some person whom, it is claimed, it was his duty to arrest—no warrant for such arrest having been issued—two things are essential: (1) That the person who it is claimed should have been arrested committed or attempted to commit a misdemeanor; and (2) that the misdemeanor was committed or attempted to be committed in the officer's presence. A peace officer has authority to make an arrest for a misdemeanor only when he is armed with a warrant or the crime is committed in his presence. Pen. Code, § 836.

The accusation against McKamy fails to allege, not only that any warrant had been delivered to him, but that any of the women had committed, in his presence, any act sufficient to constitute any offense denounced by any Penal Code section to which our attention has been called. The charge in the accusation is that McKamy "has had knowledge of the fact that said women were doing the things and performing the acts as in the paragraph last hereinbefore alleged," i. e., paragraph 3. The only acts that paragraph 3 alleges were committed by the women are: (1) Occupying and living in said houses of prostitution openly and notoriously; and (2) dressing and conducting themselves "in a vile and indecent manner, as follows: That said women and girls will leave said cribs and solicit, entice and invite those passing thereby to visit them therein for the purposes of prostitution and lewdness." It is not alleged that the women "willfully" lived in or occupied the houses, though the language of section 315 of the Penal Code is that "every person who * * * willfully resides in such a house, is guilty of a misdemeanor." As to the alleged soliciting and enticing, it is not alleged that any unmarried female was enticed (the crime denounced by section 266 of the Penal Code); nor that, by reason of such soliciting, enticing, or inviting, any person was "prevailed upon" to visit the room of any of the lewd women (the offense denounced by section 318 of the Penal Code). Our attention has not been called to any other Code section making it an offense to solicit, entice, or invite.

An analysis of the language of the accusation whereby it was sought to deprive McKamy of his office discloses that the alleged neglect of official duty with which he was charged was not stated so strongly as in the similar case against Ferguson—the petitioner for the writ in Ferguson v. Superior Court, supra. For the reasons set forth in that case, with which we agree, we hold that the accusation against McKamy did not state facts sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to punish him by depriving him of his office and adjudging that he pay a fine of $500 to the informer, the plaintiff in this action.

[6] Respondent seeks to differentiate the accusation here in question from that presented against Ferguson by arguing that the accusation against McKamy alleges that he "permits" the women "to occupy said cribs as hereinbefore alleged." The word "permit" is a word of considerable elasticity; it lacks clear-cut and precise definiteness. As defined by Webster and others, "permit" implies no affirmative act. It involves no intent. It is mere passivity, abstaining from preventive action. In re Thomas (D. C.) 103 Fed. 272, 274. An allegation that McKamy "permits" the women to occupy the cribs amounts to no more than that having received no warrant issued upon a complaint sworn to by some person moved thereto by a proper sense of civic duty, and not having seen, "committed in his presence," any acts sufficient to constitute any of the offenses denounced by the Penal Code, he made no arrests.

While in the light of the facts alleged in the accusation, McKamy's failure to swear to a complaint, as any private citizen might have done, indicates a lack of appreciation of the duties that devolve upon every decent citizen having knowledge of facts sufficient to justify the honest belief that misdemeanors have been committed, nevertheless, as was said in the Ferguson Case:

"We cannot subscribe to the proposition that the failure of an officer, without process, to make an arrest under such circumstances, or to swear to a complaint and cause the prosecution of the offenders, constitutes a misdemeanor, to wit, neglect of official duties, for which he may be removed from office. Under such circumstances, to subject him to a prosecution under the provisions of section 772 of the Penal Code, at the relation of one seeking to recover the $500 penalty provided therein, would not only impose unnecessary and intolerable burdens, but strip him of all discretion in the making of arrests for misdemeanors, and require him at his peril to make arrests of vagrants, prostitutes, and inmates of houses of prostitution upon common repute or information."

The accusation here in question is not simply a case where the document has been inartificially drawn, or a case where it intimates the existence of facts necessary to the Constitution of the offense denounced by section 772 of the Penal Code, or even an attempted statement, insufficient, but indicating a purpose to declare on the essential facts. There is here a total failure to allege any offense for which McKamy may be punished by removal from office; and that the court was without jurisdiction and the judgment a nullity is the only conclusion that accords with such cases as Ex parte Harrold, supra, Siebe v. Superior Court, supra, and Ferguson v. Superior Court, supra. Tested by the rulings in those cases, the accusation was not merely defective, or technically insufficient, not merely demurrable or subject to a motion to quash, but, in the language of Ex parte Show, supra, it was "elementally and fundamentally defective in substance, so that it charges a crime in no manner or form and by no intentment."

For these reasons we hold that respondent never was a creditor of McKamy.

Other points are made, but what has been said is sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed.

Judgment reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. A. White, Judge.

Action by Kate I. Nixon against Elsie H. Ramsey, etc. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ira S. Lillick, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment made and entered after demurrer to the complaint sustained without leave to amend.

The action was brought by the plaintiff to recover judgment against defendant, as executrix of the last will, and testament of H. Ramsey, deceased, on three promissory notes made, executed, and delivered by said H. Ramsey, during his lifetime, to the First National Bank of Winnemucca, Nev., and by said bank indorsed, signed, and delivered to the plaintiff herein.

The notes were dated, respectively, November 20, 1909, December 31, 1909, and July 10, 1912, and, being executed out of the state of California, were barred by the statute of limitations when the complaint was filed, September 6, 1916. Section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, subd. 1, as said section provided prior to the amendment of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 299).

On or about the 10th day of December, 1914, plaintiff, by and through her duly authorized agent, one M. D. Fairchild, demanded of said H. Ramsey payment of said notes. The demand was in writing and was as follows:

"The Nixon National Bank, Reno, Nev.

"Dec. 10, 1914.

"Mr. H. Ramsey, Piedmont, Cal.—Dear Sir: In handling various matters of the estate of Geo. S. Nixon, deceased, I find that there are three notes signed by you, as follows:

"December 31, 1909, $10,400.00, November 20, 1909, $825.00, and July 10, 1912, for $2,250.00, making a total of $13,475.00 principal with considerable unpaid interest. As the affairs of the estate are about ready for a final distribution, it has occurred to me that perhaps we can come to some arrangement, whereby it will be of mutual benefit to all concerned, relative to the settlement of these notes.

"I would be very glad to hear from you at an early date and oblige.

"Yours truly, M. D. Fairchild."

Thereafter, and on the 14th day of January, 1913, the said H. Ramsey, in writing, and upon the face of the aforesaid written demand, and below it, subscribed, signed, and delivered to plaintiff herein, by and through said M. D. Fairchild, the said agent of said plaintiff, an acknowledgment of said promissory note, which said acknowledgment was in the following words and figures, viz.:

"Jan. 14th, 1915.

"It is impossible right at the Present time—For me to Pay any Part of the above amount—I hope to be able Some time Soon to hole thing up—I am not making any Promises—I hope to be able to Pay the hole thing up Some day)

"H. Ramsey."

The sole question presented on this appeal is: Is the document pleaded by the plaintiff an acknowledgment of a debt, within the contemplation of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure, sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations?

[1, 2] Under the well-established rule in this state we are of the opinion that it is not. An acknowledgment sufficient to take the case out of the operation of the statute must be a distinct, unqualified, unconditional recognition of the obligation for which the person making such admission is liable. Snyder v. Dederichs, 179 Pac. 535; Powell v. Petch, 166 Cal. 329, 136 Pac. 55, and the cases cited.

The writing indorsed by Ramsey on the letter to Fairchild, the agent, falls far short of containing an admission or a new contract which would take the indebtedness out of the statute of limitations. It was written after the bar of the statute had attached, and must be viewed in the light of that fact. Southern Pacific Co. v. Prosser, 122 Cal. 415, 52 Pac. 836, 55 Pac. 145. Tested by the rule announced in the cases above cited and many others in this state, it is clear that there is nothing contained in the letter from Ramsey to Fairchild which can be construed as an unconditional promise on the part of Ramsey to pay the outlawed debt. Snyder v. Dederichs, supra. The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 15, 1919.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\Leftrightarrow$ 519(1)—STREET IMPROVEMENT—ORDINANCE AND CHARTER—"ASSESSMENT."

Under Charter of City and County of San Francisco, c. 2, art. 6, § 33, giving power to assess cost of such work, the board of supervisors had authority to enact Ordinance No. 2439, N. S., providing that the contractor performing street work thereunder should have a lien upon the property benefited by the improvement for its cost, though an "assessment" is defined as an official estimate of sums which are basis of apportionment of tax.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assessment.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by James J. Flinn and T. E. Treacy against Charles Zerbe and others. From judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Fabius T. Finch and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. Plaintiffs brought this action to foreclose the lien of a street assessment upon certain lands of the defendants. It appeared upon the face of the complaint that the proceedings for the improvement of the street and the assessment of the lands of the defendants therefor were taken under the provisions of Ordinance No. 2439, N. S., of the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants demurred to the complaint. Their demurrer being overruled, they elected to stand upon it, and accordingly declined to answer, whereupon judgment was entered against them as prayed, decreeing a sale of the premises in satisfaction of the lien of the assessment.

In support of their appeal the defendants make but one contention, namely, that the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco had no authority to enact, as they did, in Ordinance No. 2439, N. S., that the contractor performing street work thereunder should have a lien upon the property benefited by the improvement for the cost thereof.

This contention is based upon the appellants' construction of section 33, article 6, chapter 2, of the municipal charter, which, so far as the question is concerned, provides as follows:

"The methods of procedure in this article provided for the improvement of streets * * * and for the assessment of the expense thereof * * * upon private property shall not be deemed exclusive, but the board of supervisors * * * may by ordinance substitute therefor any method of procedure in any general law of the state of California * * * providing for any such improvements in municipalities, and levying assessments for the expense or portion thereof upon private property; or the board may * * * adopt an ordinance * * * providing a method of procedure for such improvement and assessment. * * *

The ordinance under which the present work was done was adopted under the authority of the last part of this provision of the charter, and the point of the appellants' contention is that this authority to enact a method of procedure for the improvement of streets and of the assessment for the cost thereof does not give to the municipal governing body the power to provide that the assessment shall be a lien upon the property assessed.

We think this contention unsound, both upon reason and authority. It has been uniformly held in this state that no personal liability can be constitutionally imposed upon a property owner for street improvement under a public contract, but that the cost thereof may be imposed as a lien or charge upon the specific property benefited (Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 249; Williams v. Rowell, 145 Cal. 261, 78 Pac. 725; Railway Co. v. Reclamation District, 173 Cal. 93, 159 Pac. 430), and the power given to the board of supervisors to enact a method of assessment evidently contemplates an assessment of property rather than of the property owner. It will be noticed that by the section of the charter quoted the alternative is given to the board of supervisors either to adopt by ordinance any existing method of street improvement and assessment provided by the general law, or the method already provided in the charter of the city and county, or to enact a new one. Under the methods provided by the general law of the state and by the charter, an assessment for street improvement is made a lien upon the specific property benefited, and it is apparent that, if the board of supervisors by ordinance had adopted any of those methods, such method would have been in force in the municipality not by virtue of its being a state law, but because of its enactment by ordinance. From which it follows that there is no legislative intent to be discerned in section 33, article 6, chapter 2, of the charter, to exclude from the grant of power to the board of supervisors the ability to provide for a lien upon property in street improvement matters. The particular language employed in this section also leads to the same conclusion. It refers to the assessment provided for in general laws of the state and by the existing municipal charter (all of which are assessments upon property enforceable by sale thereof), and then says that the board of supervisors may by ordinance provide for "such" assessment; i. e., the kind of assessment just mentioned in the section.

The appellants' principal argument in support of their contention is based upon the definition of the word "assessment." They cite Cooley on Taxation (page 258) to the effect that—

"An assessment, strictly speaking, is an official estimate of the sums which are to constitute the basis of an apportionment of a tax between the individual subjects of taxation within the district. As the word is more commonly employed, an assessment consists of two processes, listing persons properly to be taxed, and of estimating the sums which are to be the guide of an apportionment of the tax between them."

With this and similar definitions as a basis, they readily demonstrate by the citation of authority that the power to assess does not include the power to impose a lien. But here the assessment is not imposed upon the person, but upon the property, which necessarily includes a power to collect the assessment by a sale of the property, and whether we speak of the method of enforcing the assessment as the foreclosure of a lien upon the property, or a sale of the property for the collection of the amount assessed, is immaterial; they evidently being the same thing.

Turning to authority, we find that the power conferred by this section of the charter to enact a method of assessment has been construed by our Supreme Court as meaning as assessment carrying a lien upon the property assessed. In Mardis v. McCarthy, 162 Cal. 94, 101, 121 Pac. 389, an ordinance in all respects similar to the ordinance which we are here considering (that is, as to the imposing of liens) was under consideration, except that it provided for the boring of tunnels, instead of grading, paving, sewerage, curbing, and sidewalk streets. The tunnel ordinance provided for the imposing of the burden of the cost of the work upon private property (that is, imposing a lien), and was authorized by the same section 33, chapter 2, article 6, of the charter, as authorized the street improvement ordinance which we are now considering. In that case the delegation of the authority to the board of supervisors to adopt such ordinance was upheld, and the method of procedure provided in the ordinance for the assessment and collection of the cost of the improvement from the adjoining lands by lien was held to be within the scope of the charter authority.

In the case of Hayne v. City and County, etc., 174 Cal. 185, 162 Pac. 625, the Supreme Court was considering the same ordinance as in the case just cited, passed, as we have seen, under the same authority as the one here construed. The objection that is now made was there advanced to that ordinance, and was held not to be a valid objection.

We conclude, therefore, that the court did not err in overruling the defendants' demurrer to the complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

RICHEY v. BUTLER et al. (Civ. 1953.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 18, 1919.)

1. MORTGAGES ⚡464—FORECLOSURE—PRIMA FACIE CASE—EVIDENCE.

In action to foreclose mortgage securing payment of note, the introduction in evidence of note and mortgage sued upon and written assignments showing plaintiff to be owner thereof is sufficient to justify findings sufficient to support decree ordering foreclosure.

2. EVIDENCE ⚡594—WEIGHT—UNCONTRADICTED EVIDENCE.

Trial court is not legally bound to accept all testimony adduced before it at its face value or as conclusive merely because there is no testimony offered and received in contradiction of it.

3. WITNESSES ⚡315—CREDIBILITY—MANNER OF TESTIFYING.

The manner in which witness testifies often operates as effectually in the impeachment of the verity of his testimony as would affirmative contradiction.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1008(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

Since trial court has witnesses before it, its conclusions upon questions of fact are rarely reviewable, and only so when questions of fact are of such a character from the nature of the evidence as to resolve them into questions of law.

5. EVIDENCE ⚡589—FRAUD—EXISTENCE OF INCUMBRANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action to foreclose mortgage executed by purchaser to vendor where defense was that vendor represented land to be free from incumbrances when in fact there was mortgage thereon, and only testimony offered in support of such defense was that given by defendant himself, held that court, in refusing to accept defendant's story, did not commit abuse of sound judicial discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by George D. Richey against James A. Butler, John H. Davidson, Joseph T. Roffy, Gabriel Hughes, Reclamation District 1000, and M. D. Butler, as administrator of the estate of James A. Butler, deceased, substituted as the representative of James A. Butler, deceased. From decree rendered, last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Paul F. Fratessa, of San Francisco, and Edward I. Butler, of San Rafael, for appellant.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and Thomas B. Leeper, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to foreclose a mortgage on 80 acres of land in Sacramento county, which was given to secure the payment of a promissory note for $1,500, executed by James A. Butler and payable to the order of Joseph Roffy, which note and mortgage, at the commencement of the action, were alleged to be the property of the plaintiff.

A decree was entered, ordering foreclosure of said mortgage, the sale of the mortgaged property, and the payment to plaintiff of $1,500 and interest from the proceeds of the sale. It was also decreed that said sale should be subject to an assessment lien of defendant reclamation district 1000, and that plaintiff take nothing as against said reclamation district.

The appeal is by M. D. Butler, administrator, from the judgment. A reversal is urged upon the sole ground that the findings and the judgment are not supported by the evidence.

The note and mortgage in question were dated March 3, 1908, and the mortgage was acknowledged by James A. Butler on the 16th day of the same month. James A. Butler died February 22, 1913, and M. D. Butler was duly appointed administrator of his estate and substituted in the action, and will hereinafter be called the defendant.

It appeared that on October 26, 1907, said Roffy had executed a mortgage in favor of George L. Woodford, but at the date of the trial belonging to James H. Davidson, to secure the sum of $1,500, said mortgage covering 160 acres of land, of which the 80 acres in question were a part. It was alleged in the answer "that the said Roffy, with the intent to deceive and defraud said James A. Butler, falsely, fraudulently, and knowingly represented to said James A. Butler that said land was then free and clear from any and all liens and incumbrances," and that James A. Butler did not discover said incumbrance until in the month of April, 1908, at which time he demanded of Roffy the cancellation of the Butler note and mortgage, which was by Roffy refused. Before the trial, plaintiff dismissed the action as to defendant Davidson, who had commenced an action to foreclose his mortgage. As to this, the court found that nothing was due on the Davidson mortgage, "and said mortgage constitutes no lien or incumbrance upon said land, and the existence of said mortgage constitutes no fraud or deceit upon the mortgagor in said action, and said defendant Butler was not damaged, and suffered no damage by reason of said alleged mortgage."

[1] The plaintiff, having introduced in evidence the note and the mortgage sued upon, and certain written assignments showing that he was the owner thereof, and thereupon rested his case, a showing was then made to justify findings sufficient to support the decree. The single question remaining, then, is: Is the evidence presented by the defendant and addressed to the special defense set up in the answer and based upon the ground of fraud such that this court may justly declare that the trial court, in repudiating or disregarding it, abused its discretion or transcended the province (peculiarly that of trial courts) of passing upon questions of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the evidence?

The only testimony offered by the defendant and received by the court in support of the special defense was that given by the defendant himself. He testified that he met

Joseph T. Roffy in San Rafael at the time the mortgage was executed by his brother to him; that his brother, since deceased, Mr. Roffy, and the witness were present; that he met his brother and Mr. Roffy at their request; that they wanted him to look at some papers which they were about to execute. He continued:

"They told me that Mr. Roffy was the owner of some land up in Sacramento county, and that he was about to trade the land for an automobile that my brother then owned. The automobile was valued by both Roffy and my brother at $1,500. The land was valued by both Roffy and my brother at $3,000. They agreed to make the trade—the automobile for the land, with a mortgage back of the $1,500 on the balance due on the purchase price. They both asked me to look over the papers, which I did. I then informed them both that the transaction was not carried on in a business way; that they should have an abstract of title—search of the title made. Mr. Roffy informed my brother at that time that such a thing would be a needless expense; that he had just had the title searched himself; had the abstract at his place; that he would produce that abstract and would transfer it to my brother, * * * and assured my brother that the land was clear and free of any kind of incumbrance or lien, the title was perfect. * * * My brother said he knew Mr. Roffy for some time; that he was a teacher in the University of California; that he had every faith in him; that it would be a whole lot of red tape and a needless expense to have any search made; that he was perfectly willing to take the statement of Mr. Roffy that the land was free and clear from any incumbrance."

The witness said that so far as he knew his brother never saw an abstract; that about three months later he and his brother visited an attorney who was representing Roffy, and that his brother said he wanted his automobile back, and would reconvey the property to Roffy as soon as the note and mortgage were delivered up and canceled. Shortly after that, witness and his brother saw Roffy in San Francisco. He said:

"My brother demanded from Mr. Roffy that he deliver back the automobile to him. Mr. Roffy made promises of freeing the land from the incumbrance which was upon it. My brother became a little impatient, and told Mr. Roffy that he was tired of waiting; that he had been stalling for two or three months, and that he had lost faith in him; that he would wait no longer. * * * I prepared a complaint at that time setting up the fraud, and asked for an injunction to prevent Roffy from transferring the automobile or further using it or damaging it, and also praying that the note and mortgage be delivered up and canceled. Before that complaint had been verified by my brother or before it had been filed, my brother informed me that Mr. Roffy had disposed of the automobile, and that he was unable to locate it."

Thereupon, he testified, his brother swore to a complaint charging Roffy with obtaining money under false pretenses, and a warrant issued for his arrest, but Roffy had gone to Chicago and the warrant was not served.

It will be noted that it does not clearly appear from the witness' testimony that the deceased never at any time, prior to the consummation of the sale saw and examined the abstract of title to the land which Roffy said that he had, and which he further said he would produce and deliver to the deceased. But, be that as it may, it is, of course, manifest that the court rejected the defendant's testimony, and we can perceive no reason arising from the record before us for declaring, as a matter of law, that the refusal of the court to accept that testimony involved error or an abuse of judicial discretion. Indeed, as we view the proposition, it would be entirely in excess of the just power of a reviewing court to hold that it was the legal duty of the trial court to have accepted as verity the testimony of the defendant, and upon it predicated a finding that the transaction resulting in the sale of the land to the deceased by Roffy was characterized by such fraud and deception as would, in equity, vitiate such a transaction.

[2-4] A trial court is not legally bound to accept all testimony adduced before it at its face value or as conclusive, merely because there is no testimony offered and received in contradiction of it. The manner in which a witness may testify often operates as effectually in the impeachment of the verity of his testimony as would affirmative contradiction thereof by other testimony. The trial court has the witnesses before it, and is thus in a position to determine, with at least approximate accuracy, whether a witness' testimony is or is not worthy of that degree of credence necessary to impress it with persuasive or any probative force. The tests available to trial judges and juries for determining questions of fact are obviously not available to reviewing tribunals, and therefore when a trial court or jury reach a conclusion upon the facts, such conclusion is rarely reviewable, and only so when the questions of fact are of such a character from the nature of the evidence as to resolve them into questions of law.

[5] In the present case, the trial court acted clearly within its province in refusing to accept the defendant's story and, as suggested, the situation here is not such as to warrant us in saying that thus it committed error or an abuse of sound judicial discretion.

But the trial court was not required to determine the question whether there was fraud in the transaction on the part of Roffy sufficient to render it nugatory and void by a consideration alone of the defendant's testimony. The plaintiff in rebuttal, introduced in evidence a number of letters passing between the plaintiff and James A. Butler long after the sale and conveyance of the land to the latter and the mortgage by him given to Roffy on said land to secure payment of his (Butler's) promissory note to Roffy for the purchase price. The contents of the deceased's letters, which formed a part of the correspondence referred to, the trial court could well have considered as rather contradictory to, than confirmatory of, the testimony of M. D. Butler. The subjoined is the important part of said correspondence:

On January 30, 1909, said Butler wrote to plaintiff, saying, among other things:

"I am going to try and settle up with Geo. Woodford regarding the Sacramento land some time, this week, and would like to communicate with you when I do."

To this letter, plaintiff replied on February 4, 1909, as follows:

"Not having heard from you in answer to my two previous letters, I was about ready to start foreclosure on the $1,500 mortgage, signed by you, which I hold against the land near Sacramento. You say you are going to settle up with Woodford this week. Woodford's mortgage is not due for nearly a year yet, while my mortgage was due on Jan. 1st. If you do not care to pay my mortgage and want to get released from the note, I am willing to release you, providing you give me a quitclaim deed to your 80 acres, so that I can clear up the title. If you want to pay the mortgage off and keep the land, and have not all of the cash at this time, I will be willing to accept part of it and wait a short time for the balance. I am willing to do anything that is fair, but something must be done right away. * * *

On February 9, 1909, Butler answered, saying that he had not received the two letters mentioned by plaintiff, and proceeding:

"I was over to see Mr. Woodford to-day and told him that I was willing to settle with him or you. But that I would like to hear from you first which I think is proper. You say his mortgage will not be due for some time. Now your mortgage is overdue and perhaps it would be better to settle with you and you can settle the difference. I now have a check for $1,000 and will pay Mr. Woodford or you providing things can be arranged. I will be able to pay the balance in a month or so. * * *

Plaintiff replied on February 19, 1909, stating that he had nothing to do with Woodford's mortgage; that he would send the note and mortgage to the Wells Fargo Bank, in San Francisco, to be indorsed by the bank upon receipt of $1,000.

On February 24th, Butler wrote:

"I am going to deposit $1,000 this day with the Wells Fargo Bank here in this city. I will instruct them to send you this amount upon receipt of the release & mortgage. I will pay you the balance in three or four months. Kindly let me know what rate of interest you intend to charge. I am willing to pay anything that is fair and square."

Later, on the same day, he wrote that the Wells Fargo Bank refused to accept the money, as plaintiff had no account with it, but that he had deposited the money with the Anglo-Californian Bank, "and if you send your papers to them they will hold them in escrow until your mortgage is satisfied."

Plaintiff, on March 2, 1909, wrote that he was sending the note and mortgage to the Anglo-Californian Bank. He said:

"You state that the bank would hold the papers in escrow until the mortgage was all satisfied. This will hardly be necessary, and I would prefer to hold the papers until the balance becomes due. I have drawn an extension agreement, which is signed by myself and acknowledged before a notary public. This I have instructed the bank to deliver to you when you turn over the $1,000 to them for me. * * * You asked me about the rate of interest on the $500. I am willing to let it go without interest now that the matter is being settled."

The extension agreement referred to in the above letter was to the effect that upon payment of $1,000 upon said note and mortgage, payment of the balance of $500 would be extended to July 1, 1909. On July 7, 1909, J. A. Butler wrote plaintiff:

"Your letter has been received and noted. Let me assure you that I will settle with you in sight of ten days. My money got tied up, otherwise I would have settled before now. Assuring you that I am about to pay you up," etc.

The above letters of the deceased very plainly show that, if he at any time ever believed that Roffy had imposed upon or deceived him as to the title to the land, he must have later satisfied himself that the bargain was all that he could have expected it to be. In none of the letters, it will be noted, did he make any complaint about the transaction or claim that he was induced to enter into and consummate it by any misrepresentations or deception on the part of Roffy. To the contrary, the letters very clearly show that he was anxious to pay his mortgage debt and so retain the land, notwithstanding that he knew, as the letters show, that a prior mortgage to secure an unmatured indebtedness evidenced by a promissory note then subsisted upon the property. It is quite manifest that upon a consideration of said letters the trial court could justly or at least with considerable reason have been inspired with a strong feeling of distrust in the testimony of the witness, Butler.

While thus we have presented and briefly considered some of the considerations upon which the court below might have been led to reach its conclusion, in the face of the testimony of the defendant, that the transaction between Roffy and the deceased was carried on and completed, so far as Roffy's part therein was concerned, honestly and in good faith, and that the purchase of the land by the deceased was not the result of any misrepresentation by the former of the condition of the title, either at the time the transaction was under negotiation or when it was finally completed, it has not, under our view of the record, been absolutely necessary that we should have done so, since, as hitherto declared, there would be, even in the absence of the letters referred to from the record, no justification for the conclusion by this court that the result reached by the court below necessarily involved an arbitrary rejection of the defendant's testimony. In other words, as stated in the beginning, there would be in such case no ground upon which we could justly hold that, by disregarding the testimony of the defendant, the court below was guilty of an abuse of discretion.

In view of the conclusion we have arrived at, as indicated above, it is not necessary to consider other assignments involving attacks upon other findings than those just considered. As stated above, the finding that the note and the mortgage were made and delivered as alleged in the complaint is of itself sufficient to support the judgment, and it therefore becomes wholly immaterial whether the prior mortgage was or was not a subsisting lien upon the land at the time of the transaction between Roffy and the deceased, and the finding that it was not is therefore also immaterial. Nor, in view of our conclusion as to the evidence, is it necessary to determine whether, to entitle the defendant to maintain his defense upon the ground of fraud, it was necessary for him to rescind the contract of sale, it being contended by the respondent that rescission is a prerequisite to a right of action in such a case, and that the same must be kept alive continuously and to the time of the trial, which, it is likewise contended, was shown by the letters above adverted to was not done.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

40 Cal. App. 208

ROTH v. THOMSON. (Civ. 1850.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 7, 1919.)

1. BROKERS ⇨86(4)—REAL ESTATE TRANSACTION—PROCURING CAUSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In real estate broker's action for commissions, evidence held to support finding that sale of property was not made through any effort of plaintiff broker.

2. BROKERS ⇨53—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—PROCURING CAUSE.

Where purchasers had been trying to buy property for a period of 11 years, and during such time had been negotiating with owners, broker was not procuring or efficient cause of sale, though he had property listed and had sent purchasers letters describing it among other properties for sale without calling particular attention to it.

3. BROKERS ⇨54, 57(1) — REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS — COMMISSION — SALE ON TERMS EXPRESSED IN EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT.

Broker, to be entitled to commission for sale of real estate, must produce purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase at the price and on the terms specifically expressed in the contract of employment.

4. BROKERS ⇨63(1)—REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS—COMMISSION—CHANGE IN TERMS OF SALE BY OWNER.

Where broker produces purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase at the price and on the terms specifically expressed in contract of employment, owner cannot by changing terms of sale or price of land affect broker's right to his commission.

5. BROKERS ⇨53—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—COMMISSIONS—PROCURING CAUSE.

Real estate broker is not entitled to commission for sale of land unless his efforts are the procuring or inducing cause of sale.

6. BROKERS ⇨46—BROKERAGE CONTRACT—SALE OF REAL ESTATE BY OWNER.

Where broker wrote owner asking if his land was still for sale and if there had been any change in the price, and the owner replied, naming price and stating broker's commission upon his sale of land, owner had the right to sell the land independently of agreement with broker; such contract not giving broker the exclusive right to sell land nor making him exclusive agent for sale thereof.

7. BROKERS ⇨44—BROKER'S CONTRACT—TERMINATION.

Where contract giving broker right to sell property at certain price for certain commission did not specify duration thereof, owner could terminate contract at any time before broker procured purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase on the terms stated in his contract.

8. EVIDENCE ⇨317(18)—HEARSAY EVIDENCE—ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS—PROCURING CAUSE OF SALE.

In broker's action for commissions for sale of real estate, evidence as to owner's statement after the sale had been effected, and just prior to owner's death, that broker had nothing to do with the sale, was inadmissible, being hearsay.

9. EVIDENCE ⇨271(16)—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS—ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS—PROCURING CAUSE OF SALE.

In broker's action for commissions for sale of land, evidence offered by defendants as to statements by owner after consummation of sale, and just previous to owner's death, that broker had nothing to do in effecting sale, was inadmissible, being self-serving declarations.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨931(6)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—INCOMPETENT TESTIMONY—TRIAL BY COURT.

In trial by court it will be presumed on appeal that court, in reaching its conclusion, disregarded any incompetent testimony which might have found its way into the record.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1170(7)—HARMLESS ERROR—INCOMPETENT TESTIMONY.

In action tried by court, introduction of incompetent testimony was not reversible error under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where the evidence, with incompetent testimony disregarded, was sufficient to support findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by E. H. Roth against Mary C. Thomson, as executrix of the last will and testament of Henry T. Thomson, deceased. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles Kasch, of Ukiah, and W. G. Poage, for appellant.

Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to recover from one Henry T. Thomson a real estate broker's commission alleged to have been earned by plaintiff in procuring customers for the purchase of certain lands of said Thomson. Subsequently to the filing of the complaint, Henry T. Thomson died, his wife, Mary C. Thomson, was duly appointed and qualified as executrix of his will, and plaintiff filed a supplemental complaint making her, as such executrix, the party defendant. The supplemental complaint set up the due presentation to the executrix and the rejection by her of a claim for $968 as commissions for plaintiff's alleged services, and prayed judgment for that amount.

The cause was tried before the court sitting without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. From said judgment plaintiff prosecutes the appeal.

It is agreed by both parties that there are two questions to be decided, namely: Was there a sufficient contract of employment and agreement to pay a commission, signed by Henry T. Thomson? If so, did plaintiff produce a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase the property from said Thomson under the terms and conditions of said contract of employment?

The court found: That on the 26th day of February, 1917, Henry T. Thomson was the owner of about 1,940 acres of land in Mendocino county and of a large amount of personal property, consisting of cattle, horses, and hogs; that on or about said date said Thomson, without the aid or assistance of plaintiff, found purchasers for said ranch and personal property in the persons of C. E. Firebaugh and J. W. Firebaugh; that C. E. Firebaugh entered into a contract with said Thomson, agreeing to purchase said property for $23,500 payable as follows: $1,000 on the execution of said agreement; $8,000 upon the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient warranty deed conveying the lands of said Thomson and a bill of sale for the personal property; the balance of $14,500 to be represented by a promissory note payable on or before six years from date of delivery of deed, with 6 per cent. interest per annum, secured by mortgage upon the property transferred; that said Firebaughs thereafter completed the purchase of said ranch from deceased; that plaintiff did not procure said purchasers for said property nor did he act as agent for deceased in the sale thereof; that he did not bring the parties together and did not induce the said Firebaughs to enter into said contract; that he rendered no valuable or other service to deceased in procuring said purchasers and is not entitled to any commission.

The contract of employment relied upon by plaintiff consists of a number of letters passing between him and Henry T. Thomson, plaintiff residing at Willits, and said Thomson at Covelo, in Mendocino county. The first letter, written by plaintiff, was dated August 19, 1915, in which it was stated:

"I am writing to find out if your ranch is still in the market. * * * I had a gentleman in my office who wants a good stock ranch. * * * I told him about your ranch, and he promised to go up and see it within the next two weeks. His name is V. A. Spragia, so if he comes and you do business you will do the right thing by me. Would be pleased to hear from you as to any changes in price or otherwise."

Thomson replied to this letter on the next day August 20th, as follows:

"My ranch is on the market for $26,000.00. 1,840 acres of land and all of the stock. * * * Your commission will be 5% on the land. Will not pay any commission on sale of stock."

On August 23d plaintiff wrote asking Thomson to segregate the land and the stock, giving the price on each. On August 25th Thomson wrote that the price of the land was $10 per acre, and that the stock was not for sale if he did not get a buyer for the land. On April 17, 1916, Thomson again wrote plaintiff, giving an itemized list of the live stock, farming implements, etc., and the value of each, and stated:

"I will take $26,000.00 for this property. Pay you 5 per cent com. on sale of land. $15,000.00, balance $11,000.00 at 6%."

[1] We are satisfied that the finding that the sale of the Thomson ranch to the Firebaughs was not effected through any effort of the plaintiff derives sufficient support from the evidence; hence it will not be necessary to consider whether the plaintiff's purported authority to negotiate the sale of the ranch measured up to the requirements of our statute of frauds, or, to be more definite, comes fairly within the provisions of section 1624, subd. 6, of the Civil Code. See, also, C. C. P. § 1973, subd. 6.

The facts, as briefly as they may well be stated, are these: In 1906 J. W. Firebaugh met Mr. and Mrs. Thomson on the Thomson ranch and purchased from them a number of horses, and there were then some negotiations between the parties regarding the purchase of the ranch by Firebaugh. In 1911 the Firebaugh brothers again met the Thomsons at their ranch, remained there three days, and attempted to buy the property, but could not come to an agreement. The Firebaughs lived in Fallon, Nev., and, after returning to their home, a number of letters passed between them and Thomson, none of which appear in the record, relative to the purchase of the ranch and stock. Mrs. Thomson testified that the correspondence with the Firebaugh brothers relative to the proposed purchase of the ranch thereafter continued intermittently for a period of two years, and ceased either in the year 1913 or 1914. Asked if she at that time had given up selling the place to them, she replied: "Well, I should say so."

After the receipt of the letter from Thomson dated August 25, 1915, heretofore referred to, plaintiff went to the Thomson ranch and secured five or six photographs of the place, in one of which Mrs. Thomson appeared. He placed an "ad" in one of the San Francisco daily papers, advertising different properties for sale. J. W. Firebaugh saw this ad, and on December 18, 1915, wrote plaintiff, requesting him to send a list of properties he had for sale in Mendocino county, which plaintiff did. Firebaugh replied, requesting detailed information as to certain properties which plaintiff furnished him. On December 31, 1915, Firebaugh wrote plaintiff asking for further information, and stated:

"The place you speak of at Covelo answers the description of a place I looked at once; east of Round Valley on the road to the Sacramento Valley, owned at that time by a Mr. Thompson."

Plaintiff sent the photographs he had of the Thomson ranch to Firebaugh, who recognized the place and also Mrs. Thomson in one of the pictures.

In 1916 the Firebaughs again visited the Thomson ranch, and in February, 1917, they purchased the property. J. W. Firebaugh testified that when going to the ranch at this time they did not stop to see plaintiff, and said that he had never met him prior to the consummation of the sale. It does not, in fact, appear that the Firebaughs ever communicated with or heard from the plaintiff after January 20, 1916.

Testifying as to the circumstance of the appearance of the Firebaughs at the ranch in the summer of 1916, Mrs. Thomson said that they (the Firebaughs) were at that time "passing through the country" on a camping tour and stopped at a "Ranger's Station," where a Mr. John Bauer was stationed. The Firebaughs remained in that locality for seven days, during which time they renewed negotiations with the Thomsons for the purchase of the ranch. They rode over the ranch and examined it and the stock carefully, being accompanied on one occasion by Mr. Thomson himself, and on others by some one sent out by Thomson. She testified that they at that time almost came to an agreement for the sale of the ranch and stock to the Firebaughs, but the latter were not satisfied with the price asked for the properties. Without then consummating the purchase, the Firebaughs proceeded to Covelo, and thence to Napa. The Thomsons had asked $24,000 for the ranch, the equipments and the stock thereon, and gave the Firebaughs ten days within which to decide whether they would take the properties at that sum. Later the Firebaughs addressed to the Thomsons a letter in which they offered them $21,000 for the properties. Mrs. Thomson said that immediately on reading that letter she destroyed it. The next time the Thomsons heard from the Firebaughs relative to the purchase of the ranch was in February, 1917, when the Mr. Bauer above mentioned, having received a letter from the Firebaughs requesting him to see the Thomsons and ascertain from them the lowest price they would take for the properties, went to the home of the Thomsons and read to them the letter. The Thomsons told Bauer that they still wanted and would require $24,000 for the ranch and stock, etc. A few days thereafter J. W. Firebaugh visited the Thomsons and said he desired to look over the stock on the ranch, to see how they had "wintered and count them up and see what we had." Mr. Thomson sent a man with said Firebaugh over the ranch to look over and take an account of the number of head of the different kinds of stock owned by the Thomsons and then on the ranch. Again, on this occasion, the said Firebaugh was told by the Thomsons that they demanded and wanted $24,000 for the ranch as it then stood and the stock. Firebaugh said he would give them an answer within a few days. On the 17th day of February, 1917, the said J. W. Firebaugh sent a telegram to Mr. Thomson, dated at Napa, in which he offered to give Thomson $23,500 for the properties, "providing the Forest Service will give us the same range now allowed you. If that suits you, meet me at Ukiah." (Here it may be explained that the forest service of the United States had rented a large tract of government range land adjacent to that of the Thomsons to the latter at a nominal rental.) After considering this proposition, the Thomsons concluded to accept it, and thereupon telegraphed the Firebaughs to meet them at Ukiah on February 22, 1917. The Firebaughs and the Thomsons met at Ukiah on February 25, 1917, and then and there immediately entered into negotiations which, as stated above, culminated in the sale of the properties to the Firebaughs.

It is not at all doubtful that, from the foregoing evidential facts, the trial court could justly have specifically found, as impliedly in general language it did find, that the Firebaughs, for a period of approximately 11 years, dating from the year 1906—long before the latter had ever had any communication with the plaintiff regarding the ranch—had been trying to purchase that particular property; that their minds were and had been for many years particularly fixed upon buying the Thomson ranch; that, after having attempted, but failed, a number of times to consummate a deal with the Thomsons, the advertisement of the plaintiff in one of the San Francisco newspapers, setting forth that he had for sale several different tracts of land in Mendocino county, came under their observation, and that, being desirous of securing good stock land in Mendocino county, they communicated with the plaintiff for the purpose of securing from him further particulars or more definite information than the advertisement disclosed of the properties he had for sale; that, upon receiving a reply to their letter from plaintiff, the Firebaughs found that the Thomson ranch, which they had for many years been endeavoring to buy, was among the properties which the farmer referred to in his advertisement; that, without further communication or dealings with the plaintiff, the Firebaughs, about a year subsequently, again went to the Thomson ranch and again opened up negotiations with the Thomsons themselves for the purchase of the ranch, and finally made a deal with them and bought their ranch at a price several thousand dollars below that which they authorized the plaintiff to sell it for in the letter to him of August 19, 1915.

[2] It is to our minds perfectly clear that from such findings, which, as before stated, were impliedly made by the court in this case, the conclusion is irresistible that the plaintiff's efforts were not the procuring or efficient cause of the sale of the ranch to the Firebaughs. It was not as the result of his efforts that the minds of the vendors and vendees were brought together upon the proposition. He did not even put the Firebaughs "on the track" of the property; for they themselves had for a long time previously to any communication with the plaintiff been "on the track" of the property, and for a corresponding period of time had perseveringly endeavored to purchase it at a price agreeable to their own conception or estimate of what it was worth. There is no evidence that the plaintiff ever informed the Thomsons that he had in the Firebaughs prospective buyers of their ranch, and Mrs. Thomson testified that, when the negotiations directly resulting in the sale were pending, they asked J. W. Firebaugh, who at that time was conducting the negotiations on behalf of himself and brother, whether there was any real estate agent or broker concerned in the transaction in any way, and he replied in the negative. In a word, the plaintiff did not produce the Firebaughs before the Thomsons as a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the ranch upon the terms and at the price fixed by the Thomsons in their letter to the plaintiff purporting to authorize him to sell the property. As far as the evidence shows the plaintiff had gone in an effort to sell the property to the Firebaughs was in writing the latter letters describing among other properties they had for sale in Mendocino county, the ranch of the Thomsons. He, indeed, did not direct the attention of the Firebaughs particularly to said ranch until after the latter had, in a letter addressed to him, inquired whether the tract referred to in a letter to the Firebaughs from him as "stock ranch 1840A" was the Thomson ranch. In reply to that inquiry he gave the Firebaughs in a letter some particulars as to the character of said ranch; but he thereafter did absolutely nothing to bring about the sale. This sale, as seen, was effected only after considerable negotiations between the Firebaughs and Thomson and after the latter had reduced the price in a small amount.

[3-5] The rule is that, to entitle a broker to a commission for the sale of real estate which he has been given by the owner authority to sell, he must produce before the owner a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase at the price and on the terms specifically expressed in the contract of employment. While a change made by the owner, when consummating the sale, in the price of the land or the terms of the sale from those specified in the broker's contract, cannot of itself affect or impair in any way the right of the broker to his commission, the latter cannot claim a commission unless his efforts are the procuring or inducing cause of the sale. This proposition is explained with singular lucidity in Smith v. Preiss, 117 Minn. 392, 136 N. W. 7, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 820, as follows:

"In order for the broker to recover, the evidence must show that his efforts were the procuring cause, and not merely one in a chain of causes. * * * The expression 'procuring and inducing cause,' as used in the books, refers to the cause originating a series of events that without break in their continuity result in the accomplishment of the prime object of the employment of the agent."

The books are full of cases expounding and applying the rules governing in cases of this character, and it is sufficient merely to cite a few which are particularly applicable to the facts of the case now in hand. viz.: Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. 642; Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105; Cone v. Keil, 18 Cal. App. 675, 124 Pac. 548; Dreyfus v. Richardson, 20 Cal. App. 800, 130 Pac. 161; Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 Pac. 867.

[6, 7] Of course, it will not be contended that the Thomsons did not have the right to sell the property independently of any arrangements or agreement they had with the plaintiff. The brokerage agreement in this case, assuming that it is legally sufficient as such in all respects, cannot be construed as vesting in the plaintiff the exclusive right to sell the property. Indeed, it does not even go so far as to make him the exclusive agent for that purpose, nor does it specify any time during which his authority to sell should exist. Conceding it to be sufficient to have authorized him to sell the property, it is so phrased that the Thomsons were at liberty to terminate it at any time before he procured a purchaser able, willing, and ready to purchase on the terms stated therein. But, however this may be, it is clear, as stated, that the Thomsons had the right to sell the ranch without the assistance or intervention of the plaintiff, and that the finding that they did so is, as above declared, well supported.

The only other point urged for a reversal involves certain rulings whereby certain witnesses were permitted, over objection by the plaintiff, to testify that, in conversations with Henry T. Thomson, just prior to his death and shortly after the sale was effected and after the plaintiff had started this action, the said Thomson declared that the plaintiff had had nothing to do with the sale of the ranch. It is claimed that this testimony was highly prejudicial to the substantial rights of the plaintiff.

[8-11] The testimony is clearly hearsay and self-serving, and the objection to it should have been sustained. We are not prepared, though, to say that it resulted, or could, under the circumstances of the case, have resulted, in substantial or, indeed, any damage to the plaintiff's rights in the trial of the case. The cause was tried by the court, and it is to be assumed that the court, in reaching its conclusion, disregarded any incompetent testimony which might have found its way into the record. But beyond this consideration there is, as has been shown, other testimony in the record which of itself is amply sufficient to support the decision. Indeed (we do not hesitate to say), the objectionable evidence referred to may be and could have been by the trial court utterly disregarded, and still, the verity of the other evidence having been established by its acceptance by the trial court, no other decision than that crystallized in the findings, so far as is concerned the issue as to whether it was directly or otherwise through plaintiff's efforts that the ranch was sold to the Firebaughs, could justly have been warranted. We therefore conclude that the error complained of cannot be held to have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

The judgment is affirmed.

Chas. W. Kitts, of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. L. Husted, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in an action for damages for the conversion of personal property, and is taken on the judgment roll alone.

The defendant in an amended answer alleged two distinct matters of defense. To the second of those defenses the trial court sustained a general demurrer, and it is upon the action of the court in this and one other matter that the defendant bases his appeal.

In the so-called second matter of defense the defendant alleges that Michael C. Taylor, his testator, was fraudulently induced to contribute to the support of Emma Onken during his lifetime; and was also fraudulently led to believe that unless he made some provision for her after his death she would be in want of the common necessities of life; that accordingly he caused a certificate for 16 shares of the capital stock of the Spring Valley Water Company (which is the property here in dispute) to be issued in the name of Emma Onken, with the understanding that the title and possession thereof were to remain in him until his death, when said shares of stock were to become the property of said Onken; that upon the issuance of said certificate it was delivered to said Taylor; and that it remained in his possession until he died. It is also alleged that Emma Onken died before M. C. Taylor, and that plaintiff herein acquired said shares of stock with notice of all the circumstances herein related, and that hence she has no valid title to the property.

[1, 2] According to these allegations of the second defense, it would appear that no valid gift of the shares of stock was made by Taylor to Onken, and that plaintiff's title is no better than that of Onken, which would constitute a good defense to plaintiff's cause of action. But as it also appears from the record that the matter of plaintiff's title to the property was fully covered and put in issue by the allegations of the complaint and the first defense pleaded, and that the court made a finding thereon, it follows that the defendant was in no manner prejudiced by the ruling complained of.

We think also that the findings of the court are responsive to the issues made by the pleadings, and that they fully support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

KNOX v. KEARNEY et al. (Civ. 2654.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 14, 1919.)

1. DEEDS §§67, 82—PASSING OF TITLE—DELIVERY—RECORD—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

As between the parties, where there is a complete delivery of deeds by grantor to grantee without condition or reservation, the title passes to grantee, irrespective of whether deeds are recorded or delivery accompanied by change of possession.

2. DEEDS §194(4) — IMPLIED ACCEPTANCE—DELIVERY.

Where deeds are delivered to grantee in person, an acceptance of the conveyance will be implied, in absence of controverting evidence, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 28, declaring it to be a disputable presumption, controvertible by evidence, that things have happened according to the ordinary habits of life.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Jennie G. Knox, executrix, etc., substituted in place of David W. McQueen, deceased, as executor of the last will and testament of Jane McQueen, deceased, against William B. Kearney and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. Crowley and Emilio Lastreto, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gerald C. Halsey and Harris & Hess, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action, brought by the plaintiff as guardian of the person and estate of Jane McQueen, an incompetent person, and continued by said plaintiff upon her decease as executor of her estate, wherein the relief sought was the cancellation of two deeds, alleged to constitute a cloud upon plaintiff's title. Judgment was rendered for defendants. Plaintiff appeals, and brings to this court a record consisting of the judgment roll alone.

The essential facts of the case as shown by the findings are as follows: Jane McQueen, about eight years before her death, being at that time of sound mind, and the owner of the property described in the complaint, executed two deeds thereto, and with the intent to make an absolute gift of the real property therein described to her son, Alfred W. McQueen, delivered them to him. It being the desire of the grantor that the deeds should not be recorded during her lifetime, they were, immediately after their delivery as aforesaid, placed in the possession of the defendant William B. Kearney, with instructions to that effect. Six years after making these deeds Jane McQueen was declared incompetent, and two years later she died, and the plaintiff, who had been the guardian of her person and estate, was appointed executor thereof. Alfred W. McQueen had predeceased her, having died intestate on August 23, 1914, and his widow, the defendant Pauline M. McQueen, was appointed administratrix of his estate. The complaint alleges a demand upon the defendant Kearney for the return of the deeds, and his refusal to accede thereto, but the findings declare that no such demand was made.

In support of the appeal the plaintiff contends that the findings fail to show that there was an acceptance of the conveyance by Alfred W. McQueen; and also that the findings fail to support the judgment for the reason that they do not disclose that the delivery of the deeds was accompanied by a transfer of possession of the property. He also argues in support of the appeal that this court should hold that a deed long unrecorded is invalid, challenging the soundness of the decisions to the contrary, and urges that the rule of those decisions places a premium upon fraud.

In the case at bar the court found that there was a complete delivery of the deeds by the grantor to the grantee without any condition or reservation.

[1] The title thereupon, it is clear, passed to the grantee, and this irrespective of whether the deeds were recorded, or the delivery thereof was accompanied by a change of possession. As between the parties the performance of neither of these things is essential to a valid conveyance; nor is there any violation of law nor infringement of public policy by the grantee failing to place his deed on record, or by the grantor retaining possession of the property. Fisher v. Ludwig, 6 Cal. App. 144, 91 Pac. 658.

[2] As to the point that the findings fail to show that there was an acceptance of the conveyance, we think that, since the findings show that the deeds were delivered to the grantee in person, an acceptance is implied. We see no reason why such a case is not covered by subdivision 28 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declaring it to be a disputable presumption, controvertible by evidence, that things have happened according to the ordinary habits of life. If we understand human nature as illustrated by the ordinary habits of life, we would not hesitate to affirm that a person to whom is conveyed valuable real property and takes delivery of the deed conveying it usually accepts it. True, it is a disputable presumption, but one requiring evidence to controvert; and in the absence of such evidence the finding of the court of a delivery is sufficient. There might, of course, be a mere manual delivery of a deed, effected by some artifice, from which an acceptance could not be implied, but here the findings present no such case. 13 Cyc. 570; Rousseau v. Bleau, 60 Hun, 259, 14 N. Y. Supp. 712, 716. See, also, DeLevillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120; Bensley v. Atwill, 12 Cal. 236; Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 Pac. 803.

The judgment is affirmed.

KELSEY v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al. (Civ. 2952.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 10, 1919.)

1. PROHIBITION $\S$ 3(3)—REMEDY ON APPEAL—GRANTING RESTRAINING ORDER.

Alleged error in granting injunctive relief, in that the complaint failed to state facts warranting such relief, cannot be made the basis for prohibition, where the court acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction, but the error must be corrected on appeal.

2. INJUNCTION $\S$ 150—RESTRAINING ORDER—NECESSITY OF SERVICE OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES.

Where no points and authorities in support of an application for a restraining order were served upon defendants prior to the hearing on such order, the service of points and authorities for use at the hearing of a prior order, which was vacated, is no compliance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 527, requiring such service to be had at least two days before the hearing.

3. INJUNCTION $\S$ 150 — TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER—GROUNDS FOR CONTINUANCE—ILLNESS OF ATTORNEY.

Where, on account of the illness of an attorney, the hearing on a restraining order issued without notice was continued, there was no compliance with Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 527, requiring a temporary restraining order to be heard within ten days from its date and that the applicant must be ready to proceed when the matter first comes up for hearing.

4. PROHIBITION $\S$ 10(2) — TEMPORARY INJUNCTIONS—HEARING — JURISDICTION DIVESTED.

Where the trial court continued the hearing on a temporary restraining order beyond the time fixed by statute, it was divested of jurisdiction to take any action on the date fixed other than to dissolve the order issued, and a writ of prohibition to prevent it from taking action on such restraining order will be granted.

Proceedings by Van R. Kelsey against the Superior Court of San Diego County, C. N. Andrews, Judge, for writ of prohibition. Writ granted.

George H. Moore and Raymond E. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, and Henning & McGee and W. H. Wylie, all of San Diego, for petitioner.

T. B. Cosgrove, City Atty., and M. R. Thorp, both of San Diego, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In response to an alternative writ of prohibition issued by this court in the above-entitled matter, requiring respondent to show cause why it should not be prohibited from proceeding further in a certain action wherein the city of San Diego is plaintiff, and Van R. Kelsey and James Byers, as sheriff of San Diego county, are defendants, an answer to said writ, consisting of a certified copy of the entire record, has been filed in this court.

It appears from the petition upon which the writ was granted:

That on the 26th day of July, 1918, petitioner commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against James Kennedy, the purpose of which was to recover a money judgment against defendant therein. That at the time and upon the filing of the complaint there was duly issued by the court a writ of attachment in said action, directed to the sheriff of San Diego county, pursuant to which and the instructions given him by plaintiff, he on July 30, 1918, attached certain personal property, consisting of tools, machinery, and other equipment, then in the possession of Kennedy and used by him in constructing what is known as the "Lower Otay dam" in San Diego county, and took the same into his possession and under his control, as appears from the return upon said writ of attachment so made by said sheriff on August 10, 1918, which is as follows:

"I, James C. Byers, sheriff of the county of San Diego, hereby certify that I received the hereunto annexed writ of attachment on the 30th day of July, 1918, with instructions from attorney for within named plaintiff to attach any and all personal property belonging to the defendant, consisting of tools, horses, machinery and other equipment of every kind and description now being used in the construction of the 'Lower Otay dam' at Otay, San Diego county, California. By virtue of the fact that the above-mentioned property was already in my possession under prior attachments, the said property is held on this attachment. Dated this 10th day of August, 1918. James C. Byers, Sheriff, by F. Knefer, Deputy."

And that at all times since the levy of the writ he has had said property in his possession.

That on September 18, 1918, plaintiff in said action recovered a judgment against the defendant therein in the sum of $11,336.12, which was duly docketed on September 19, 1918, and thereafter, to wit, on January 4, 1919, a writ of execution was duly issued thereon, commanding Byers, as sheriff of San Diego county, to make the sums due on the judgment of petitioner out of the property of said Kennedy situated within San Diego county, which execution was placed in the hands of the sheriff, with instructions to levy upon and sell the personal property, tools, machinery, and equipment owned by said Kennedy and located at said Lower Otay dam in San Diego county, in pursuance of which writ and instructions so given, Byers as sheriff levied upon the property and advertised it for sale on January 17, 1919.

That thereafter, on January 15, 1919, the city of San Diego, as plaintiff, commenced an action in the superior court of San Diego county against petitioner and Byers as sheriff, the purpose of which was to enjoin the sheriff from selling the property as advertised under execution, and at the same time plaintiff in said action procured from said court a restraining order and order to show cause commanding petitioner and said Byers to show cause on the 28th day of January, 1919, why an injunction should not be issued forbidding the sale of the property, which order was duly served upon said sheriff, by reason of which fact he refused to make the sale as advertised, or enforce the writ of execution.

That on the day specified in said notice petitioner and Byers as sheriff appeared in response thereto and demurred to said complaint for injunction and filed objections to the issuance thereof, based upon affidavits, all of which were duly served upon the attorney for the plaintiff in said action; whereupon said superior court of San Diego county (as shown by the answer to the petition) vacated said restraining order and ordered the same discharged.

That immediately thereafter, on the same date and upon the same complaint, without amendment thereto or affidavits filed plaintiff in said action procured to be issued out of said court another restraining order against petitioner and Byers, restraining the sheriff from selling the property of Kennedy under and pursuant to the writ of execution so issued, and requiring petitioner and sheriff to show cause on February 3d, before Hon. C. N. Andrews, judge presiding in department 4 of said court, why an injunction should not be granted restraining the sale of said property under said execution, and meanwhile restraining said sale. That after obtaining said last mentioned order, to wit, on January 31, 1919, the plaintiff in said action wherein petitioner and the sheriff were made defendants filed an amendment to its complaint and duly served the same, but at no time did the plaintiff therein, through its attorneys, file or serve upon petitioner or said sheriff, or upon either or any of their attorneys, any points or authorities, as required by section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

That on February 1, 1919, petitioner and said sheriff filed and served their affidavits in response to said order to show cause on February 3, 1919, and notified the attorney for said city of San Diego that petitioner and said sheriff, at the hearing of said order to show cause on February 3d, would rely upon the demurrer theretofore filed and affidavits theretofore filed, in addition to an affidavit served upon said counsel on February 1st. That, pursuant to said order, petitioner and the sheriff appeared before Hon. C. N. Andrews, judge of said superior court, on February 3d, in response to the order to show cause, at which time Deputy City Attorney M. R. Thorp appeared and moved the court to continue the hearing of said matter upon the ground that the city attorney was then engaged in the trial of a case in another department, and that, other than said city attorney and M. R. Thorp so appearing, there was no attorney in the office of the city attorney familiar with the issues of law and fact involved in said hearing; that, while he was then ready and prepared to present his points and authorities in support of the contention of the city in said matter, he was then sick, and by reason of his physical condition, due to illness, was unable to present said matter and to proceed with said hearing. That the court from its observation of the physical condition of said Thorp at the time when he made said motion concluded that he was physically unable to proceed with the hearing and, over the objections of petitioner, who insisted that the hearing proceed, continued the same to February 10th, a time covering a period of more than 10 days after the making of said restraining order and order requiring petitioner to show cause why a temporary injunction should not be granted.

That, notwithstanding the levy of said writ of attachment and the placing of said writ of execution in the hands of the sheriff, he has permitted and is permitting the city of San Diego, through a keeper by him placed in charge thereof, to use said property of Kennedy's so attached and levied upon, continuously, as a result of which it is being worn out and depreciated in value, which wear and tear and depreciation will continue so long as said city is permitted to use the same.

That on February 10th, the day to which said hearing was continued, petitioner and the sheriff appeared in court and objected to the court taking any proceedings in said matter other than to declare and adjudge that said restraining order dated January 28th was ineffectual, and that said order to show cause had by lapse of time become inoperative, which objections were overruled and the further hearing of the matter continued to 2 o'clock on February 10th, at which time, as appears by supplemental petition filed, the said superior court, Hon. C. N. Andrews presiding therein, did grant and cause to be issued a temporary injunction wherein said Byers as sheriff was ordered to desist and refrain from selling the property of Kennedy so levied upon at the Lower Otay dam site, in the county of San Diego, under and in pursuance of the execution issued out of the superior court of Los Angeles county in favor of Van R. Kelsey and against James Kennedy, or in any manner or in any wise interfering with plaintiff's possession and use of said property pending the final determination of the action.

[1] Plaintiff insists, first, that the complaint filed by the city fails to state facts entitling plaintiff to any injunctive relief. This for the reason that at the time when the levy under the writ of attachment was made Kennedy owned and was in possession of the property, and the city, though asserting a lien upon the property by virtue of a clause in a contract existing between it and Kennedy, had in fact no lien thereon or claim thereto recognizable in law. Assuming this contention to be well founded, and also that petitioner has just cause for grievance due to the action of the sheriff in what upon this record appears to be a plain violation of his official duty in permitting the property to be used by the city, the effect of which, owing to such use and resulting deterioration, must necessarily greatly depreciate the value thereof, nevertheless upon such facts it cannot be said respondent, if it erroneously issued the restraining order and temporary injunction, acted in excess of its jurisdiction. It is a court of general jurisdiction having power to entertain the class of proceedings in question. It had before it the parties to the action. The subject-matter of the litigation, which the court was called upon to determine, was plaintiff's right to the relief prayed for upon the facts stated in the complaint.

"Whether the particular facts on which the court proceeds in that regard are or are not sufficient to justify its exercise of jurisdiction is a question of law, the solution of which, either way, cannot impair the court's right to apply its judicial power in the premises according to its view of the law, and of the facts before it." State ex rel. Union Depot R. Co. v. Valliant, 100 Mo. 59, 13 S. W. 398.

Hence, conceding a total absence of facts alleged in the complaint to warrant the action of the court, nevertheless it, in making the orders complained of, acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and, if while so doing it erred, such error cannot be made the basis for prohibition, but must, for like error in an ordinary civil action, be corrected on appeal.

[2] Petitioner, conceding the restraining order to have been properly made, next insists that the court upon the proceedings shown to have been taken had no power to make any order other than to dissolve the restraining order. This contention is based upon the provisions of section 527, Code of Civil Procedure, which, among other things, provides that—

"In case a temporary restraining order shall be granted without notice, * * * the matter shall be made returnable on an order requiring cause to be shown why the injunction should not be granted, on the earliest day that the business of the court will admit of, but not later than ten days from the date of such order. * * * When the matter first comes up for hearing the party who obtained the temporary restraining order must be ready to proceed and must have served upon the opposite party at least two days prior to such hearing, a copy of the complaint and of all affidavits to be used in such application and a copy of his points and authorities in support of such application; if he be not ready, or if he shall fail to serve a copy of his complaint, affidavits and points and authorities as herein required, the court shall dissolve the temporary restraining order."

While points and authorities were served upon defendant in the action brought by the city, prior to the time fixed for the hearing of the restraining order first granted and thereafter vacated, no points and authorities were so served in support of the application made and set for hearing on February 3d. Upon the vacation of the restraining order first granted, the proceeding for temporary injunction terminated. The service of such points and authorities for use at the hearing thereof cannot, as to the order here involved, be deemed a compliance with the provisions of the statute, which in absolute terms requires the applicant for an injunction to serve upon the opposite party, at least two days prior to such hearing, a copy of his points and authorities.

[3] Not only was there a failure of the plaintiff in said action to comply with this provision, but it appears from the application made for a continuance that there was an absence of compliance with the provision of the statute to the effect that, at the time fixed for the hearing, the applicant for the injunction must be ready to proceed with the hearing. Otherwise, in express and positive terms, the statute provides that "the court shall dissolve the temporary restraining order." The purpose of the statute is plain. In enacting it the Legislature intended, not only that an injunction should not be granted without notice, but that the power of the court to restrain the act sought to be enjoined temporarily should be restricted to the time specified in the statute. The illness of an attorney cannot be deemed ground for continuing a restraining order in effect beyond the time fixed by statute, nor is it an excuse for noncompliance with its terms, any more than such illness would excuse his client for failure to file notice of motion for a new trial within the time specified therefor. In this proceeding it appears that the city attorney knew of his engagements in another department, and knew that his deputy, M. R. Thorp, was ill, although he appeared in court and stated that he had his points and authorities prepared to submit, and further appears the city attorney had two other deputies who might have appeared and represented the city.

[4] The provisions of section 527 provide a complete scheme in a proper case for the obtaining of a writ of injunction, and such scheme must be deemed the measure of the power to be exercised by trial courts in the matter of provisional injunctions. United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 Pac. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199. The effect of the order made was to nullify the terms of the statute, which are so plain and unambiguous that no room exists for interpretation. German Sav., etc., Society v. Aldrich, 5 Cal. App. 215, 89 Pac. 1063.

By its action in continuing the hearing the court was, in our opinion, divested of jurisdiction to take any action on February 10th other than to dissolve the restraining order so issued. It follows from what has been said that the peremptory writ of prohibition should be granted. It is therefore ordered that the respondent refrain and desist from any action or proceeding based upon the restraining order made on February 3, 1919, or the order made on February 11, 1919, granting a temporary writ of injunction, or the enforcement thereof, in that certain cause wherein the city of San Diego is plaintiff and Van R. Kelsey and James C. Byers are defendants, now pending in the superior court of San Diego county, other than to make an order dissolving the restraining order and temporary writ of injunction so granted in said matter.

KELSEY v. BYERS, Sheriff of San Diego County. (Civ. 2953.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 10, 1919.)

Application for a peremptory writ of mandate by Van R. Kelsey against James C. Byers, as Sheriff of the County of San Diego, commanding him to execute a writ of execution issued out of the superior court of Los Angeles County against certain personal property and requiring him to sell such personal property. Directed that the writ prayed for issue.

George H. Moore and Raymond E. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, and Henning & McGee and W. H. Wylie, all of San Diego, for petitioner. Eugene Daney, of San Diego, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an application for a peremptory writ of mandate to be directed to the respondent as sheriff of San Diego county, commanding him to execute a writ of execution issued out of the superior court of Los Angeles county in a certain action wherein Van R. Kelsey was plaintiff and James Kennedy was defendant, and requiring him to immediately, in accordance with law, proceed to sell the personal property upon which said execution was levied. As shown by answer to the petition for the writ, his refusal to proceed in enforcing the writ of execution is based upon a restraining order issued in the case of City of San Diego v. Van R. Kelsey and James C. Byers, Sheriff, by the superior court of San Diego county enjoining him from so doing.

In a proceeding numbered 2952 (180 Pac. 662) wherein Van R. Kelsey is petitioner and the superior court of San Diego county is respondent, involving the validity of such restraining order and injunction, this court, for the reasons stated in an opinion this day filed, held that said superior court, by reason of continuing the hearing of the application made by the city of San Diego for a temporary injunction, had no jurisdiction to make any order in said matter other than one to dissolve the restraining order. It follows from what is said in the opinion so filed that the writ of mandate as prayed for should issue against said James C. Byers as sheriff, and it is so ordered.

OLCESE v. HARDY. (Civ. 2745.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 18, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1002—CONCLUSIVE-NESS OF VERDICT UPON REVIEW.

In a servant's action for injuries, held, that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence precluding the appellate court from disturbing the verdict.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨930(2)—REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

In a servant's personal injury action, where the jury were instructed, in conformity with the Roseberry Act, that the damages might be diminished in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable by plaintiff, it must be assumed in support of the judgment for plaintiff that if there was evidence of plaintiff's negligence the jury made the proper deductions in arriving at verdict.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a servant's action for injuries, error in the admission of evidence as to the furnishing of knives in a rip saw machine held not prejudicial to defendant.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨264(4)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEFECTIVE MACHINERY—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Evidence as to defects in the blower or hood of a rip saw machine used by plaintiff held admissible under general allegations of negligence in furnishing a defective machine, though followed by an allegation of special defects in the blades.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1050(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a servant's personal injury action, the admission of plaintiff's testimony informing the jury that an insurance company was interested in the litigation, if error, was not prejudicial, where the master introduced evidence showing the insurance company's interest and particularly its inspection by cross-examination of the plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Louis Burger against James H. Hardy for personal injuries alleged to have been received by plaintiff, in which Emilio Olcese, as administrator of the estate of Louis Burger, was substituted as plaintiff upon the plaintiff's death. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James Alva Watt and Watt, Miller, Thornton & Watt, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This action was instituted by the plaintiff's intestate, Louis Burger, against the defendant for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been received by Burger through the carelessness and negligence of the defendant while Burger was in the employ of the defendant. Burger having died on the 20th day of July, 1915, the plaintiff above named, as administrator of his estate, was substituted as plaintiff. The defendant answered denying any carelessness or negligence and setting up as a separate defense that the accident and injury were due solely to the carelessness of Burger. The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered thereon in the sum of $5,750, from which judgment the defendant appeals. Appellant contends that the judgment should be reversed on the grounds that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict and errors in law occurring at the trial.

[1] The appellant argues at some length the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. He admits that the evidence of Burger given on his direct examination is sufficient to raise a conflict in the evidence and consequently to preclude this court from reviewing the evidence; but contends that Burger contradicted this testimony on cross-examination and at the taking of his deposition before the trial, and that therefore this testimony is without weight, and that without this testimony there is no evidence to support the verdict of the jury.

We do not believe that contradictory statements of plaintiff, if there are any, necessarily nullify his testimony. The weight to be given it might be lessened by such contradictions, or the jury might reject the testimony entirely, but the fact that the jury found for the plaintiff conclusively shows that they accepted his statements on direct examination as true. But admitting that there are conflicts and contradictions in his testimony, and considering that portion of his testimony which is least favorable to his contention, it seems to us that this court would not be justified in reviewing the evidence under the record in this case. Construing the portions of plaintiff's testimony which are quoted in the briefs of appellant and urged as contradictory, most strongly against plaintiff, we shall proceed to analyze the testimony.

The facts are briefly these: The defendant was engaged in the lumber and mill business in San Francisco. Louis Burger entered his employ and operated a rip saw machine for a few weeks, after which he was made the working foreman of the mill and was placed in charge of a machine known as a "sticker machine." His work consisted in feeding the boards into the machine. The boards would then pass under the revolving rollers and move toward the revolving head, which made approximately 3,200 revolutions a minute. To this revolving head were attached removable blades of various shapes, and these blades or knives would cut or plane or curve, as occasion required, the pieces of lumber passing under the revolving head. When Burger took charge of the machine, there were certain blades there for use in the operation of the machine. Burger tried all of the blades, but claimed that a certain type of thin hard blade among the blades provided was the only type of blade with which the quantity of work expected to be done could be obtained. It was this type of blade which flew off the head and inflicted the injury upon Burger. In his direct examination Burger testified that within a few weeks after he took charge of the sticker machine he informed the defendant that the head was defective and asked him to get a new one. He testified that he told the defendant that the head had nicks in it that made it unsafe. He also testified that he suggested that an iron cylinder head in which the blades drop in a slot be obtained, and that the defendant promised to get a new head for the machine. Burger also testified in his direct examination that on many occasions prior to the happening of the accident these blades, clamped as they were to the head, worked loose while the head was revolving and flew out some distance from the machine, and that Burger called the attention of the defendant to this, and that the defendant himself was present and saw the blades fly out on several occasions. Burger also testified that the defendant inquired of him how the danger from flying blades could be overcome, and that he (Burger) directed his attention to a new type of sticker machine which was being generally used by mills in San Francisco. The defendant asked if the old machine could not be changed so as to overcome the danger, and Burger told him that that was impossible. The defendant then told Burger that, when business got a little better, he thought he could afford the new type of machine. The accident happened on April 16, 1913. On the evening of April 15, 1913, the defendant told Burger that there was some "stuff" to be worked on the next morning and to force the work as much as possible. On the morning of the accident, Burger arrived at his work about 8 o'clock. He was using a thin hard blade in the machine, one which had been in use in the machine the previous afternoon. After operating the machine for about 20 minutes, the accident occurred. The blade became loosened and flew out and struck Burger in the head, inflicting serious injury upon him.

We now come to a consideration of the cross-examination of the plaintiff, which it is claimed by appellant completely destroys the force of the evidence upon the direct examination. It is first claimed by appellant that the cross-examination shows that Burger himself purchased the particular blade which caused the injury. The evidence only goes to the extent of showing that Burger, acting for his employer, purchased the particular blade which was used on the day of the accident to replace others of the same pattern which had become worn. It does not contradict the testimony elicited in the direct examination that the form of blade was among the original blades furnished Burger by the defendant, and that Burger was not responsible for its introduction into use in defendant's business.

As opposed to Burger's testimony on direct examination to the effect that the head of the machine was defective, appellant points out that Mr. Burger testified on his cross-examination that an inspector for an insurance company made an inspection of the mill, including the sticker machine by the operation of which the plaintiff was injured, and the inspector and Burger talked of what changes of importance should be made in and about the sticker machine to make it safe; and that Burger did not inform the inspector of any defects in the head or blades or hood of the machine. While, of course, the fact that he did not make known these defects to the inspector is persuasive of the fact that they did not exist to his knowledge at the time, it is not direct evidence upon that fact, and we cannot say that it is directly contradictory of the evidence given on the direct examination, that the defects did exist. It is entirely possible for the defects to have existed and yet for the plaintiff not to have mentioned them to the inspector. And it is the duty of an appellate court to reconcile apparent contradictions in evidence whenever possible.

Appellant next argues that the cross-examination shows that Burger had full authority to make purchases and was in full charge and control of the mill. There is some testimony from which the jury might have taken this view of the matter, but there is also testimony to the effect that Mr. Hardy was consulted, and that he authorized the purchase of all supplies when such purchases were made, and there is testimony in regard to numerous conversations between Mr. Burger and Mr. Hardy concerning changes in the revolving head and in the machine, from which the jury might have believed that Mr. Burger's authority in making purchases and changes was a very limited authority. Under these circumstances, we do not think that we can interfere with the implied finding of the jury in regard to this matter.

Appellant refers to certain testimony elicited upon cross-examination, showing, he contends, that Burger was fully informed of the defects in the machine and that he continued to operate the machine after such knowledge. This would go to the defense of assumption of risk if that defense had been open to the defendant at the time of the accident. However, the Roseberry Act (St.

1911, p. 796) was in force at the time of the accident, and abolished this defense. Therefore this testimony can be of no avail to appellant.

It is argued that the testimony shows that the knife which injured Burger came loose, not because of any defect in it, but because of Burger's failure to tighten the nut and bolt that held it in place. This question was one for the jury, along with the general question of Burger's negligence in all particulars connected with the accident. We cannot disturb its finding thereon. It is the province of the jury to draw deductions from testimony, but the appellant overlooks this and asks us to decide from the testimony that the accident could not have occurred if a certain blower or hood attached to the machine had been down at the time the blade flew out. The jury was taken to the scene of the accident, and examined the machine in question. They had before them evidence to the effect that the hood was merely for the purpose of catching shavings; that the hood was defective and difficult to pull down, that it interfered with the speed of the machine, and that Burger had been requested to hasten with the work, and other similar matters. This question is again a part of the larger question of whether or not Burger had been negligent, and, as stated before, we cannot interfere with the finding of the jury upon this subject, so long as there is any substantial conflict of the evidence.

We have discussed the evidence at this length in an effort to demonstrate that, even if we construe the conflicts in Burger's testimony most strongly against him, yet there remains a substantial conflict in the evidence which will preclude us from going into the questions involved. Upon appeal, in this state, if there is any evidence to justify the verdict it cannot be disturbed. There is no standard for the sufficiency of evidence to induce belief, and, unless the evidence so clearly preponderates against the verdict that the court cannot conclude that the verdict was the result of a due consideration of the evidence, the verdict will not be disturbed.

[2] Appellant contends that the verdict is against law in certain particulars specified in his brief. Upon these matters, we have found the evidence conflicting. The instructions of the court fully covered the points and stated correctly the law to the jury. We must assume that the jury followed these instructions, and found the facts to be such as to justify their verdict in the light of the law contained in the instructions. Furthermore, the jury was instructed, in conformity with the Roseberry Act, that the law of this state provides that in an action to recover damages for a personal injury sustained within this state by an employé, while engaged in the line of his duty or in the course of his employment as such employé in which a recovery is sought upon the ground of want of ordinary care of the employer or of any officer, agent, or servant of the employer, the fact that such employé may have been guilty of contributory negligence—if such negligence was slight, while that of the employer was gross in comparison—will not preclude a recovery, but the damages may be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé. We must assume in support of the judgment that if, as the appellant contends, the evidence in any particular did show negligence on the part of Burger, the jury made the proper deductions therefor in arriving at its verdict.

[3] A number of alleged errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence are urged. On direct examination Burger was explaining the different kinds of knives which might be used in sticker machines, such as he was operating at the time he was injured. Defendant objected to a question wherein Burger was asked whether the defendant had furnished a certain type of high-tempered steel blade, which the plaintiff had previously testified was used by almost every mill in San Francisco. Defendant objected to the question and answer for the reason that the witness had previously testified that that type of blade was so soft that, "if a man runs 100 feet with one of them without stopping to sharpen, he is absolutely lucky," and also because the witness had previously testified in relation to the same type of blade that he did not believe that the blades could have been bought at the time of the accident. Appellant urges that, by permitting the question to be answered by the witness, the court left it to the jury to infer that, because the blades referred to were not furnished, the defendant was guilty of negligence, and that such an inference was not warranted in the light of the fact that Burger himself had testified that the blades were soft and unsuitable for his work, and that it was unlikely that they could have been procured by the defendant. If this was error, it was not prejudicial to the defendant because the jury had before them all the statements of Burger as to the blades, the uncertainty of procuring them, etc. If it drew inferences from the testimony, we must assume it drew inferences based upon all the testimony presented, and that it considered the statements of Burger with regard to the impracticability of these blades and to the improbability of being able to procure the same, in connection with his statement that they had not been furnished by the defendant.

The legal propositions urged by appellant in arguing his objections to this and other evidence are the same propositions which he has urged elsewhere, and, as stated before, we believe these matters were fully and fairly covered by the instructions of the court.

[4] While Burger was testifying, the court asked him a question regarding the position of the blade or knife. Burger answered this question, and, after answering it, proceeded with a lengthy explanation concerning his adjustment and operation of the machine on the day of the accident. In this explanation he mentioned certain defects in the blower or hood of the machine which he stated prevented it from being pulled down. Defendant objected for the reason that the defects in the blower or hood were not relied upon in the complaint, and that this matter was not within the issues. A portion of the answer of Burger was responsive to the question and to the issues in the case. The motion was to strike out the entire answer, and we think it was properly denied. But apart from this reason, we think that the evidence was properly admitted. The amended complaint alleged:

"That on said April 16, 1913, said sticker with the said steel blades attached thereto was defective and dangerous and insecure and was unsafe and dangerous. * * *" And also that "through the carelessness and neglect of the defendant to furnish a safe sticker and blades therefor, one of said blades became detached and broke."

Here is an allegation of defective machinery, as well as a later allegation of special defects in the blades attached thereto. The case of Monaghan v. Pac. Rolling-Mill Co., 81 Cal. 190, 22 Pac. 590, holds that, where there is an allegation of defect in machinery, the cause of action is not limited to a defect in one part thereof. Where general allegations of negligence are followed by an enumeration of specific acts, the plaintiff will not be limited to proof of specific acts unless the complaint clearly indicates the intention of the pleader to limit the negligence to such acts. United States Exp. Co. v. Wahl, 168 Fed. 851, 94 C. C. A. 260; Traver v. Spokane St. Ry. Co., 25 Wash. 225, 65 Pac. 284; Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 193, 111 Pac. 519, 527.

[5] The appellant urges several objections to evidence on the ground that the questions and answers had the effect of informing the jury that an insurance company was interested in the litigation and consequently of prejudicing the jury in favor of the plaintiff. While this testimony may have had that effect, incidentally, it becomes unnecessary for us to decide whether or not errors occurred in its admission, for the reason that the defendant could not have been prejudiced, because the defendant himself introduced considerable evidence showing that an insurance company was interested in the case. It brought out upon cross-examination of Burger that an inspector for an insurance company had visited the mill and examined the machinery for defects; also, that a few days prior to the accident a letter was written to the insurance company stating that all the defects in the plant had been remedied.

There are several other specifications of error in the rulings of the trial court upon evidence, all of which we have examined and find them to be without merit. It is unnecessary to discuss them separately here. From an examination of the entire record it appears that substantial justice has been done between the parties.

The judgment is affirmed.

EASTERN OUTFITTING CO. Inc., v. MYERS et al. (Civ. 2481.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 30, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 27, 1919.)

1. PARTIES ⇐96(6)—SUIT AGAINST ONE BY FICTITIOUS NAME—WAIVER BY ANSWER.

By answering in his proper name, a defendant sued by the fictitious name of "Doe" waived plaintiff's failure to file formal amendment substituting the real name for that of Doe.

2. BAILMENT ⇐21 — SALES ⇐480(1) — CONDITIONAL SALE OR LEASE—DEFAULT—RIGHT OF OWNER.

Where furniture was either sold conditionally by an outfitting company to the lessee of a hotel, or else was leased by it to him, title remained in the outfitting company, and on default by the lessee it became entitled on demand to a return of the property, whosoever might have possession of it.

3. REPLEVIN ⇐10 — DEFENDANT'S POSSESSION OF CHATELS THROUGH TENANT.

Possession of furniture by defendant's tenant was sufficient to sustain judgment in claim and delivery against defendant, where he was resisting delivery of the property to plaintiff owner.

Sturtevant, Judge pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Eastern Outfitting Company, Incorporated, against W. A. Myers, S. L. Goldstein, and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant Goldstein appeals. Affirmed.

Lloyd S. Ackerman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. Tomsy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. [1] This is an action in claim and delivery for certain furniture. The case was tried under an agreed statement of facts, and judgment given against the three defendants, Myers, Goldstein, and Gray, for a return of the property or for the alternative sum of $750 in case delivery could not be made. Gray and Goldstein were sued by fictitious names under apt allegations in the complaint. The court made an order requiring an amendment of the complaint substituting other names for the fictitious names. The complaint seems not to have been formally amended, but Gray and Goldstein both answered, and in their answers each recited that he was sued by a fictitious name. Counsel for Goldstein, who alone appeals, now claims that the judgment is invalid as to him because of the failure to file the formal amendment substituting his name for that of Doe. Manifestly, by answering in his proper name, he has waived the amendment, and, besides, the agreed statement of facts, which under our practice constitutes the findings, showed that Goldstein was the owner of the Altoona Hotel property, including the furniture, and that Myers was the lessee in possession of the hotel. Myers, while the tenant of Goldstein, bought the furniture from the plaintiff for the purpose of replacing and renewing articles of furniture in the hotel. Myers' lease bound him to keep the furniture in good and sound condition, and, according to the findings, it was further covenanted and agreed in the lease that all alterations, additions, and improvements which might be added to or placed in the leased premises should be the property of Goldstein and should be surrendered to him with the premises.

Myers' lease was terminated on the 1st day of March, 1917, and the property was thereupon let by Goldstein to Gray, who, on March 1, 1917, took possession of the hotel and of the property sought to be recovered by this action. Gray had no notice or knowledge that plaintiff claimed the property and took the property in good faith and for a valuable consideration and is now in possession of the property as the tenant of Goldstein. Before this action was begun the plaintiff demanded the property from the defendants and delivery was refused.

The character of the transaction between Myers and the plaintiff at the time Myers acquired the property is the vital question in this case. A part of the agreed statement of facts consists of certain memoranda, or printed or written documents signed by Myers and apparently executed by him to the plaintiff at the time of the acquisition of the furniture. These are in the form of printed receipts, many blanks upon which are not filled. They recite, among other things, that "the undersigned lessee acknowledges to have received on lease from the Eastern Outfitting Company," denominated the lessor, the furniture described in the complaint.

There are several of these interesting memoranda, and in two instances they are varied by language other than that above quoted which characterizes the transaction. For instance, in one dated July 8, 1916, it was recited that Myers "has this day leased of Eastern Outfitting Company the following goods," and that "all payments therefor are to be made at said Eastern Outfitting Company's office," and the document further reads:

"Should I fail to make any of the payments as specified, I hereby agree to surrender and return said goods to the Eastern Outfitting Company in as good condition as when received, customary wear by careful usage excepted. And I further agree * * * that no agreement of sale of said goods is implied, nor shall a sale of same be deemed valid without a written receipt from said Eastern Outfitting Company therefor."

There are also agreements to keep the goods insured against fire and to pay such insurance, in case of loss, to the Eastern Outfitting Company, who is again denominated the lessor, and to pay $100 down and $50 per month rental thereafter "until total is paid."

[2] Reading these papers all together, they must be held to either constitute a conditional sale of the goods to the defendant Myers, or a lease thereof to him; and it seems to us that it is not necessary to decide whether the goods were taken under a lease or were purchased conditionally. For in either instance the title remained in the plaintiff, and upon default by Myers the plaintiff became entitled, upon demand, to a return of the property, whosoever might have possession of it.

[3] Goldstein, who alone appeals, contends that he was not in possession of the property. But his tenant, Gray, was in possession, and it seems to us that possession by his tenant was sufficient to sustain the judgment against him, where he is resisting the delivery of the property.

Judgment is affirmed.

I concur: LENNON, P. J.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. (dissenting). This is an action in claim and delivery for certain furniture. The case was tried under an agreed statement of facts and judgment given against the three defendants, Myers, Goldstein, and Gray, for a return of the property or for the alternative sum of $750 in case delivery could not be made. Myers, while the tenant of Goldstein, bought the furniture from the plaintiff for the purpose of replacing and renewing articles of furniture in the hotel. Myers' lease bound him to keep the furniture in good and sound condition, and, according to the findings, it was further covenanted and agreed in the lease that all alterations, additions, and improvements which might be added to or placed in the leased premises should be the property of Goldstein and should be surrendered to him with the premises.

Myers' lease was terminated on the 1st day of March, 1917, and the property was thereupon let by Goldstein to Gray, who, on March 1, 1917, took possession of the hotel and of the property sought to be recovered by this action. Gray had no notice or knowledge that plaintiff claimed the property and took the property in good faith and for a valuable consideration, and is now in possession of the property as the tenant of Goldstein. Before this action was begun, the plaintiff demanded the property from the defendants, and delivery was refused.

The character of the transaction between Myers and the plaintiff at the time Myers acquired the property is the vital question in this case. The plaintiff claims as lessor. Its claim in this behalf is founded on nine written instruments. Two of those instruments purport to be forms of leases, and seven of them purport to be forms of supplemental leases. Each purported lease consists of a printed blank, having inserted thereon in the appropriate blanks the description of the article, the price, and the quantity. Each lease contains many blanks not filled out, and neither one of the purported leases is signed by either the lessor or the lessee; neither one of these purported leases is a contract. Barber v. Burrows, 51 Cal. 404; Las Palmas Winery & Distillery v. Garrett, 167 Cal. 397, 139 Pac. 1077. The papers purporting to be supplemental leases were signed by both parties. Each paper purporting to be a supplemental lease contains the statement, "This lease is supplemental to a lease dated—;" the blank is not filled, and the paper does not refer to either of the papers which purport to be leases. The purported supplemental leases do not, therefore, include the purported leases and give efficacy to the purported leases, because of the absolute want of reference thereto. The reference to the purported lease being in blank, the reference is a nullity. The record shows there were at least two purported leases and there may have been more. The record contains nothing showing any fact or circumstance pointing to the particular date intended to be inserted in the blanks above mentioned. The purported supplemental lease is not in and of itself a lease. It contains no covenants whatever on the part of the lessor. Each one of the purported supplemental leases is in different language, but each one contains blanks not filled. No term is stated in any one of them. The monthly payments are not stated in any one of them. The total payments are not stated in any one of them. In short, they are nothing but receipts in which the lessee acknowledges himself to be lessee; whereas, in truth and in fact, the papers show that he is not lessee.

When the defendant Myers surrendered the Altoona Hotel to the defendant Goldstein, these articles were contained in the hotel and were at that time in Myers' possession, and he was exercising acts of ownership over them. Under these facts he was presumed to be the owner. Subdivisions 11, 12 and 20 of section 1963, Code Civ. Proc.; Bickerdike v. State, 144 Cal. 698, 701, 78 Pac. 270. The unexecuted lease and the purported supplemental leases do not contain any evidence overcoming such presumption. On the facts as contained in the agreed statement of facts the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

In my opinion the judgment in favor of plaintiff should therefore be reversed.

LEMLEY v. DOAK GAS ENGINE CO. et al.
(Civ. 2702; S. F. 8504.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 28, 1919. On Hearing in Supreme Court in Bank, April 28, 1919.)

1. WORK AND LABOR — 4(2)—IMPLIED CONTRACT.

A contract is implied to pay for services accepted under such circumstances as to raise a presumption that one accepting them expected, or ought to have expected, that they were to be paid for.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT — 358 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—ACCEPTANCE OF STATUTE.

Employés employed at a daily wage are not required, by section 7 of the Roseberry Act, to file daily with employer that they refuse to be bound by the compensation provision of act.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT — 358 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EMPLOYÉS SUBJECT—ACCEPTANCE OF PROVISIONS.

Where deceased employé was hired at a daily wage before employer became subject to the compensation provisions of Roseberry Act, but employer became subject to it 17 days before the accident, the employé's failure to give notice of refusal to be bound by the act as provided in section 7 was not acceptance thereof on his part.

4. EVIDENCE — 506 — EXPERT TESTIMONY — MATTER IN ISSUE.

An expert witness may give an opinion on the very issue which a jury is to decide.

5. EVIDENCE — 554, 558(9)—EXPERT OPINIONS—HYPOTHETICAL ANSWER.

Hypothetical statement of the data need not be made in giving an expert opinion, except by witnesses not having personal observation of the data for their opinion, and in such case opposing party may bring out facts on cross-examination.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 232(2)—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—OBJECTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Objection to evidence that "the proper foundation had not been laid" fairly presented question of sufficiency of evidence as to expert qualification of witness.

7. EVIDENCE 474(11)—OPINION—SPECIAL KNOWLEDGE—QUALIFICATION.

A machinist who had personally observed facts connected with operation of an engine on day that its flywheel broke, and had been working on it all day and up to a few moments of the accident, and who had been making similar tests of engines for the defendant for about a month, and gave facts connected with the operation and testing of the engine, was qualified to give his opinion as to what caused the flywheel to break.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Laida F. Lemley, as administratrix of the estate of Clyde V. Lemley, deceased, against the Doak Gas Engine Company and the Pacific Foundry Company. From an adverse judgment, the first-named defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal, which affirmed the judgment. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Geo. J. McDonough, of Oakland, and Stanley Moore and Geo. K. Ford, both of San Francisco, for plaintiff and respondent.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, and Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for defendant and appellant.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for defendant and respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $7,500 in favor of the administratrix of the estate of Clyde V. Lemley, deceased, on account of the death of said deceased. There are two questions presented by the appeal. The first of these is: Was the deceased at the time of the accident which caused its death subject to the compensation provisions of the Roseberry Act?

The facts of the case, pertinent to this inquiry, are as follows: Lemley, the deceased, was employed by the foreman of the defendant Doak Gas Engine Company about the middle of January, 1913, as a machinist's helper. He continued to work daily at the plant of the defendant until March 8, 1913, the date on which he was killed. He had been hired at a daily wage. At the time of his employment his employer, the defendant herein, was not subject to the provisions of the Roseberry Act (St. 1911, p. 796). On February 19, 1913, which was 17 days before the day on which Lemley was killed, the employer elected to accept the provisions of this act. The deceased had not given to the defendant any notice that he elected not to become subject to the compensation provisions of the act up to the time of his death. It is conceded that the accident which brought about the death of Lemley arose out of his employment and occurred while he was acting in the course of his employment. The solution of the first point raised by appellant depends upon the proper construction of section 7 of the Roseberry Act. The significant portion of said section is as follows:

"Sec. 7. * * * Any employé as defined in subsection (2) of the preceding section shall be deemed to have accepted and shall, within the meaning of section 3 of this act be subject to the provisions of this act and of any act amendatory thereof, if, at the time of the accident upon which liability is claimed:

"(1) The employer charged with such liability is subject to the provisions of this act, whether the employé has actual notice thereof or not; and

"(2) At the time of entering into his contract of hire, express or implied, with such employer, such employé shall not have given to his employer notice in writing that he elects not to be subject to the provisions of this act, or, in the event that such contract of hire was made in advance of such employer becoming subject to the provisions of the act, such employé shall, without giving such notice, remain in the service of such employer for thirty days after the employer has filed with said board an election to be subject to the terms of this act."

[1, 2] The appellant seeks to bring deceased under the compensation provisions of said act by the contention that the contract of hire under which he was working at the time of his death was entered into after February 19, 1913, the date when the defendant became subject to the act, and that therefore deceased's failure to give notice in writing that he elected not to be subject to the act should be deemed an acceptance thereof. In support of this position appellant argues that the original employment, being at a daily wage, was a contract from day to day under the presumption raised by section 2010, Civil Code, and ended at the close of the first day; and that under section 2012, Civil Code, such express contract was replaced on each subsequent day that Lemley worked for the defendant by an implied contract of hire upon the terms of the original express contract. And this argument brings appellant to a position where it contends that the contract under which deceased was working at the time of his death was an implied contract, entered into the day of the accident upon the same terms as the original express contract, and that the deceased was under the obligation of rejecting the compensation provisions of the act on the morning of the accident or of being bound thereby. Section 2012, Civil Code, is as follows:

"Renewal of Hiring. Where, after the expiration of an agreement respecting the wages and the term of service, the parties continue the relation of master and servant, they are presumed to have renewed the agreement for the same wages and term of service."

We think that in this case since the employé actually made an express contract with his employer, the fact that under section 2012 he may have automatically renewed it each day upon the same terms as those of the original contract by going to work each morning does not change the fact that the contract of employment was an express contract, and was made about the middle of January, before the defendant was subject to the provisions of the act. Section 2012 merely provides for a renewal of the original contract. We think that the language of the Roseberry Act, "At the time of entering into his contract of hire, express or implied, * * *" has reference to the original contract of hire, and not to any automatic renewal thereof. Appellant argues that since the words "express or implied" are used, the Legislature must have meant by the word "implied" the implied contract raised by section 2012, Civil Code, because appellant states:

"It is hard for us to conceive of any transaction to which this term [implied] can be attributed unless it be such a contract as is implied in law by section 2010 and 2012, Civil Code."

It is not difficult for us to conceive of an implied contract which shall also be the original contract of hire.

"A contract is implied to pay for services accepted by the defendant under such circumstances as to raise a presumption that he expected, or ought to have expected, that they were to be paid for." Parsons on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 4; Krieger v. Feeny, 14 Cal. App. 538, 112 Pac. 901.

Section 7 of the act refers to the time of "entering" into the contract, and not to the time of "renewing" it. We believe that the section of the act above quoted plainly contemplates that an employé, under such circumstances as those in the present case, shall have 30 days after the employer accepts the provisions of the act within which to elect whether he (the employé) will be bound by the act or not. We are strengthened in this view by the fact, as pointed out by respondent in her brief, that the construction contended for by appellant would make it necessary for all employés whose compensation was fixed at a daily wage to file a notice with their employer each morning that they refused to accept the provisions of the act or else they would be bound thereby.

Appellant quotes from Matter of Zany, 20

Cal. App. 360, 129 Pac. 295, to the effect that a statute should be construed so as to avoid "absurd and unjust consequences," and we think that to so construe this statute as to place upon employés employed at a daily wage, the duty of filing with their employer each morning a written notice that they refuse to be bound by the provisions of the act would be to bring about a condition which would be both absurd and unjust. This clearly was not the intent of the Legislature. The "contract of hire" mentioned in the section quoted, we think, means the contract of hire made at the time the employé began his employment. That contract may have been either express or implied.

[3] The act provides that where the contract of hire was made in advance of the employer becoming subject to the provisions of the act (as in this case), the employé shall become subject to the provisions of the act when he shall remain in the service of his employer without giving notice in writing that he elects not to be subject to the act for a period of 30 days after the employer has filed with said board an election to be subject to the act. In this case the employé remained in the employment only 17 days after the employer became subject to the act, and therefore said employé did not become subject to the provisions of the act, and the trial court properly so decided.

The second point raised by appellant is that the court erred in admitting the testimony of one Downie as to his opinion of the cause of the accident, without any statement of the basis for such opinion, and that such error was prejudicial to the defendant.

The amended complaint set out three charges of negligence. First, that the deceased was not given a safe place to work; second, that the defendant knowingly directed the deceased to perform a particularly hazardous task without advising him of its dangerous nature; third, that the gas engine which was being tested by deceased at the time of the accident was being tested in a negligent manner in that no provision was made for the cooling of the flywheel after the same had been heated by friction and no protection was furnished to the employé against a possible breakage. The defendant company was engaged in the manufacture of internal combustion gas engines. On the day of the accident, certain engines were being tested as to horse power, one of them being the engine which caused the accident. The manner of testing was as follows: A 2x4 scantling about 10 feet long was placed under the flywheel of the engine, and an employé was directed to exert an upward force on the end of the scantling, away from the engine. The scantling came in contact with the flywheel, and necessarily retarded the same. Whether or not the requisite power was developed was determined by the amount of resistance the wheel could withstand. During a part of the day this engine was tested by a leather belt applied around the flywheel. The engine had been tested all day. The accident occurred late in the afternoon. The test was being performed by James E. Downie, a machinist employed by the defendant company. The flywheel had on several occasions during the day become heated. Lemley, the deceased, was a helper to Downie, the machinist, and was assisting in testing the engine. The deceased was instructed by Downie to hold the scantling against the flywheel of the engine while Downie went outside to inspect the exhaust pipe. While the deceased was applying this pressure the flywheel broke into many pieces, and a piece struck Lemley on the head, causing his death. The witness Downie was called for the plaintiff and, after testifying fully regarding all the facts and circumstances surrounding the accident, he was asked the question: "Will you state to the jury, what, in your opinion, caused that flywheel to break?" Defendant objected to this question as "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and calling for the opinion and conclusion of the witness on a matter not properly the subject of expert testimony, and upon the further ground that the proper foundation had not been laid, and it calls for an answer to the very question to be passed on by the jury." The court overruled the objection, and the witness answered: "I think the heat done it. That is why I went up and felt the flywheel."

[4] The ultimate questions to be passed upon by the jury were whether or not the engine was being negligently tested by the defendant company and whether or not the employer had furnished the employé with a safe place to work. However, even if the question of what caused the flywheel to break had been the question before the jury, we think there would have been no objection to receiving the opinion of the witness upon the subject for that reason. "It is sometimes said that an opinion is not to be offered on 'the very issue before the jury,' but this, as once remarked (Snow v. R. Co., 65 Me. 231), would rather 'seem to be a very good reason for its admission.' If the witness can add instruction over and above what the jury are able to obtain from the data before them, it is no objection that he refers to the precise matter in issue, and if his opinion is superfluous it is inadmissible even if it concerns a matter not directly a part of the issue." Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 1 (16th Ed.) p. 551.

[5] No objection was made to the qualifications of the witness as an expert, and the appellant now urges that the facts upon which the opinion was based should have been stated to the jury, so that the jury could judge as to the existence of such facts and be able to value the opinion accordingly, and that Downie in rendering his opinion really acted as one of the jury and usurped the functions of that body. The appellant quotes from several decisions in foreign jurisdictions to sustain his position. The precise question raised is carefully analyzed in volume 1, Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.), at page 559. The statements there made seem to answer completely every argument of the appellant. It is pointed out that where a witness testifies by stating his inferences from facts not personally observed by him, it is necessary, for the sake of the jury in dealing with his testimony, that the data on which he bases his inference be specified by him and stated as assumed or hypothetical. It is also said that where the witness has personal observation of the facts upon which he bases his opinion, these facts can be stated by him upon his direct examination or upon his cross-examination as the observed facts upon which he bases his opinion. But if he has not had any personal observation of the facts and forms his opinion merely upon testimony listened to or upon other intimations of the facts, it would be impossible for the jury, merely from his statement of opinion, to know what were the data for the opinion. It would therefore be necessary for him, in stating his opinion, not only to specify the data for it (if this were all, it might be done by a question on cross-examination), but to specify them hypothetically, i. e., as only assumed by him to exist. This is for the purpose of allowing the jury to reject the opinion as having no application to the facts of the case where the jury finds that the hypothetical facts upon which it is based do not exist. Thus, the necessity for stating the data hypothetically arises because the witness has no personal knowledge of them, and because it cannot be known, before the jury's retirement, what data they will find to be facts, and therefore what opinions are applicable to the case as found by the jury.

The argument made by appellant that the witness in stating his opinion based upon the facts which he had observed was "usurping the functions of the jury" is discussed by the author of the standard work on Evidence above mentioned. He points out that this objection, which has been frequently urged, has no foundation whatever, as the court does not empower the expert witness to decide any facts, nor is the jury bound to accept his assertion.

The class of cases (from jurisdictions other than California) from which appellant quotes to support his contention is not overlooked by Mr. Greenleaf. In regard to them, we have the following language, which seems so peculiarly applicable to the present case that we have thought it proper to quote it here:

"As a matter of academic nicety, it might be thought to follow what even a witness speaking from personal observation might be required to specify the data for the opinion he founds on his observation; and to this extent a few rulings have gone. But in such a case the direct examination or the cross-examination sufficiently brings out the data that serve to found the opinion on; and it may be taken as a proper deduction of principle that the hypothetical statement of the data need not be made except by witnesses not having personal observation of the data for their opinion."

The witness Downie had personally observed the facts connected with the operation of the engine on the day of the accident; he had been working upon it all day and up to a few moments of the accident; he had been making similar tests of engines for the defendant company for about a month before the accident. He had testified quite fully as to all facts connected with the operation and testing of the engine, and both upon his direct examination and upon his cross-examination the facts appear upon which he must have based his opinion. If there are any which do not appear, the defendant might have brought them out upon cross-examination, and if it failed to do so, it may not complain.

In the case of People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517, relied upon by appellant in its brief, the expert witness whose opinion was asked had made no personal observation of the facts. Necessarily, his opinion would have to be based upon hypothetical facts which should have been stated by him. In the case of Eisenmayer v. Leonardt, 148 Cal. 596, 84 Pac. 43 (the only other California case cited by appellant), the expert witness was asked his opinion of the value of certain stock, and the court held this to be error because "there were no facts stated, either real or hypothetical, as a basis for an intelligent opinion." This statement is clearly not applicable to the case at bar.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. [6, 7] In denying the application for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, we deem it proper to say that the statement in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, to the effect that no objection was made to the qualifications of the witness Downie as an expert, is, in our opinion, erroneous, as the objection "that the proper foundation had not been laid" fairly presented the question of the sufficiency of the evidence as to the expert qualifications of the witness. However, we are of the opinion that there was sufficient evidence as to such qualifications, and in so far as this ground was concerned the objection was properly overruled.

The application for hearing is denied.

In re MINOR'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8823.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1919.)

1. TAXATION $\hookrightarrow$ 879(1)—INHERITANCE TAX—
TRANSFER IN CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH.

Facts held not to support the finding of the trial court that transfers were made "in contemplation of death," within the meaning of St. 1905, p. 341, relating to inheritance tax, whether the statute be construed separately or with the aid of the amendments thereto.

2. TAXATION $\hookrightarrow$ 879(1)—INHERITANCE TAX—CONSTRUCTION — "CONTEMPLATION OF DEATH."

The phrase "contemplation of death," as used in St. 1905, p. 341, and the Inheritance Tax Act, § 27, as amended in 1911, means that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person on the execution of his will, and not merely that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person in making a gift causa mortis.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contemplation of Death.]

3. TAXATION $\hookrightarrow$ 893 — INHERITANCE TAX —
TRANSFER SUBJECT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of showing that a transfer is subject to a collateral inheritance tax is upon the state.

4. TAXATION $\hookrightarrow$ 879(1)—TRANSFER TAX—EV-IDENCE OF TRANSFER.

At the time of making an oral antenuptial agreement held, that the death of testator was not presently or even remotely contemplated by either party, and that the transfers in question were not made in contemplation of death or in lieu of a testamentary disposition, so that they were not subject to inheritance tax notwithstanding the antenuptial settlement was ratified by will.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Isaac Minor, deceased. Appeal from a decree in probate fixing an inheritance tax upon personal property disposed of by deceased during his lifetime. Reversed.

Frank McGowan, of San Francisco, and G. W. Hunter, of Eureka, for appellant.

Robert A. Waring, Inheritance Tax Atty., of Sacramento, for respondent.

J. Paul Miller, Asst. Tax Atty., of Sacramento, for the State Controller.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a decree in probate fixing an inheritance tax upon personal property disposed of by the deceased during his lifetime.

The three contentions of the appellant are:

(1) That the transfer in controversy was not made in contemplation of death; (2) that the transfer was not made in lieu of a testamentary disposition; and (3) that the transfer, having been made pursuant to a marriage settlement, did not fall within the purview of the then existing inheritance tax law.

The deceased, Isaac Minor, was married to appellant on the 5th day of August, 1908. He was then 78 years of age. He was a rich man. His former wife had been dead for many years. He had a large family of sons and daughters, all of whom were married and most of whom had families. Appellant was a comparatively young woman, 29 years of age, sensible and accomplished, and employed in the occupation of a practical nurse. Marriage was considered, discussed, and finally agreed upon by her and Isaac Minor. Thereupon an oral antenuptial agreement was entered into by and between them, wherein and whereby the deceased, in consideration of her marriage to him, agreed to give, and appellant agreed to take, the sum of $100,000 as a marriage settlement. At the time of making this agreement, Isaac Minor was actively engaged in attending to his business interests and was planning for the future. He was then and continued for many years thereafter in good health. He was active in the management of his affairs up to the time of his death in December of 1915.

The oral antenuptial agreement was partially performed by Isaac Minor on the day of his marriage to appellant, August 5, 1908, by the payment to her of the sum of $50,000 in cash. On February 16, 1912, over three years after the marriage, the execution and existence of the oral antenuptial agreement and its previous partial performance were evidenced by a written instrument wherein appellant acknowledged the prior payment of $50,000 in cash for and on account of the antenuptial agreement and also the transfer and indorsement to her by Isaac Minor, on the day of the execution of the said written instrument, in full and final performance of the oral antenuptial agreement, of a fully secured promissory note in the sum of $50,000 originally executed and made payable to Isaac Minor. This instrument contained a further clause wherein and whereby the appellant promised on behalf of herself, her heirs, etc., in consideration of the full performance of the antenuptial agreement, to "release and forever discharge the said Isaac Minor, Sr., his heirs, executors, and administrators, of and from all manner of actions, causes of actions, suits, debts, dues, sums of money on account of any community interest which she has or may have by descent or inheritance in or to the estate of Isaac Minor, Sr., either in law or in equity. * * *

The whole of Isaac Minor's estate at the time of the marriage and at the time of his death was separate property and subject to his testamentary disposition. The $100,000 paid to the appellant in pursuance of the antenuptial contract was at all times held and controlled by her as her separate property.

Early in 1915, Isaac Minor executed his last will and testament, in which he stated:

"I give and bequeath to my wife Caroline Minor * * * personal property as follows * * * she having received before this time one hundred thousand ($100,000) dollars in money as her share of my estate."

[1, 2] Upon the foregoing facts, which are practically undisputed, the court below based its findings that the transfers to appellant by Isaac Minor, aggregating in cash and its equivalent $100,000, were made without an adequate and valuable consideration, in contemplation of death, and in lieu of a testamentary disposition within the meaning of the inheritance tax laws of the state in force and effect on the dates of the said transfers and on the date of the decedent's death. From these findings the conclusion of law was that the transfers in question were covered and controlled by, and therefore taxable under, the inheritance tax law (Stats. 1905, p. 341). That law prescribed the imposition of a tax upon the transfer of any property, real, personal, or mixed, "when the transfer is of property made by a resident, or by a nonresident when such nonresident's property is within this state, by deed, grant, bargain, sale, assignment or gift in contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, assignor or donor, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death."

The facts hereinbefore narrated do not support the finding of the trial court that the transfers in controversy were made in "contemplation of death" within the meaning of the statute just quoted. This is so whether the statute be considered and construed separately and solely in the light of its own language or with the aid of the amendments thereto wherein the phrase "in contemplation of death" is defined to mean that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person on the execution of his will, and not merely that expectancy of death which actuates the mind of a person in making a gift causa mortis. See section 27 of the Inheritance Tax Act as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 726). That is to say that, when measured either by the commonly accepted or by the statutory definition of the phrase "in contemplation of death," the transaction here involved cannot, upon the undisputed facts of the case, be fairly brought within and subjected to the provisions of the inheritance tax act as it existed and was in force and effect when the transaction was initiated and finally consummated.

[3, 4] The burden of showing that a transfer is subject to a collateral inheritance tax is upon the state. In re Wadsworth's Estate, 100 Misc. Rep. 439, 166 N. Y. Supp. 716. Fairly construed, the evidence adduced upon the whole case falls far short of showing that at the time of the making of the oral antenuptial agreement the death of Isaac Minor was presently or even remotely contemplated by either party to the agreement. The state attempted to support the burden of making a case by proof of the oral antenuptial agreement and of the circumstances preceding, attending, and following the making of the agreement. But the agreement itself does not disclose, nor do any or all of the circumstances taken singly or collectively indicate, that the transfers in question were made in contemplation of death and in lieu of a testamentary disposition. Manifestly the marriage of Isaac Minor to the appellant was not a deathbed marriage. At the time he made the agreement to marry, on the day of the marriage, and for several years thereafter, Isaac Minor was not only in good health, but, despite his years, was physically and mentally active in the successful management of his extensive business interests. The transaction at its inception and up to the time of the partial performance of the antenuptial agreement on the day of the marriage certainly contains no suggestion that Isaac Minor was then contemplating anything but matrimony. In view of his then admitted good health and physical and mental activity, it would indeed be, to say the least, incongruous that he should have contemplated death and matrimony at the same time. It may, perhaps, be said that Isaac Minor was contemplating death when, some 3½ years after his marriage and the partial performance of the antenuptial agreement, he saw fit when making the final payment under that contract to insist, not only upon an acknowledgment in writing of the full performance of the contract, but also upon a release of his estate from any and all claims which appellant otherwise might have had thereto. Certain it is that Isaac Minor was contemplating death when he made his will. But it must be remembered that both of these instruments were executed several years after the making and the partial performance of the antenuptial contract. Clearly, therefore, these instruments cannot be held to be an integral part of the antenuptial agreement or anything more than an acknowledgment and affirmance of that agreement. Granting that at the time of the execution of the instruments Isaac Minor was contemplating death, this fact alone is not sufficient in and of itself to show that he was contemplating death when he entered into the antenuptial agreement.

It nowhere affirmatively appears that the oral antenuptial agreement involved the relinquishment of any right which appellant might have had in the estate of Isaac Minor as a result of her marriage to him. Consequently, if Isaac Minor had died between 1908 and 1912, appellant, in the absence of any other agreement to the contrary, might have claimed the sum of $50,000 from his estate upon the theory that it was due to her pursuant to the terms of the antenuptial agreement, and, obviously, if such a claim had been allowed and paid in satisfaction of a contract supported by the perfectly valid and valuable consideration of marriage, it could not have been subjected to a collateral inheritance tax. But even if it could be said that the evidence clearly and affirmatively reveals the fact that the oral antenuptial agreement was made and based in part upon the consideration of the appellant's relinquishment of all right in the estate of Isaac Minor, nevertheless, the evidence upon the whole indicates clearly enough, we think, and practically without conflict, that the marriage was the primary and controlling consideration for the making and ultimate consummation of that agreement.

Confirmatory of these conclusions is the added fact that the transfers in controversy took effect in full and unqualified possession and enjoyment during the lifetime of Isaac Minor, that admittedly being the intent and purpose of the antenuptial agreement. It is to be noted that when making an antenuptial agreement the parties doubtless may and often do consider the fact that certain property rights result by law from the assumption of the marriage relation. Especially is this so with respect to those rights which take effect upon the decease of one of the spouses. In such a case, the parties desiring a definite and final arrangement of property rights enter into an agreement settling and determining those rights. Obviously, the purpose of such a contract is to effect a disposition of the property as an end in and for itself. It is not made as a condition precedent to obtaining some other and independent benefit. When such a settlement assumes to fix the rights of one spouse in the estate of the other upon his or her death, or in effect to pass property in present in lieu of testamentary or intestate disposition, the transfers involved therein can fairly be said to have been made in contemplation of death. It was this kind of antenuptial contract which was interpreted and the transfer thereunder held subject to tax in People v. Estate of Marshall Field, 248 Ill. 147, 93 N. E. 721, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230, and in People v. Union Trust Co., 255 Ill. 168, 99 N. E. 377, L. R. A. 1915D, 450, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 514. But such, however, is not the situation where, as here, the parties primarily contemplate matrimony and a marriage settlement as a condition precedent thereto. Here the controlling consideration of the transfer was the marriage, a circumstance which necessarily excludes the idea that a desire to make a testamentary disposition was in any substantial sense a direct cause of the transfer. That such is the case may be demonstrated by a brief recapitulation of the facts. In 1908 Isaac Minor was 78 years of age. He was a wealthy man. His wife had been dead many years. His children had grown up, married, and had absorbing interests of their own. Appellant was a comparatively young woman of 29, a nurse by profession. She knew that she was making some sacrifices. Isaac Minor knew that he was getting a sensible and accomplished young woman to be his wife, to attend to his domestic affairs, and to care for him in his declining years. It may be admitted, as asserted, that the marriage would not have taken place had Isaac Minor been a poor man. That fact, however, would do nothing more than tend to show that appellant rightfully demanded some benefit to balance the sacrifice which youth was making to old age. Although Isaac Minor was a wealthy man, all of his property was and would continue to be his separate property subject to his absolute power of disposition. He would no doubt be pressed by the claims of a large family. In these circumstances, it was only fair and proper that appellant should have been provided for by a sufficient marriage settlement.

Concluding as we do that neither the antenuptial agreement itself nor the shown and undisputed circumstances preceding, attending, and following its making, indicate that the transfers in question were induced substantially or at all by any thought of death by either party to the agreement, we are constrained to hold that those transfers were not made in contemplation of death and in lieu of a testamentary disposition within the meaning of the inheritance tax law.

The decree appealed from is reversed.

HANSON et al. v. CHOYNSKI. (S. F. 8700.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 619—DISSOLUTION—OFFICERS AS TRUSTEES.

Civ. Code, $\S$ 400, as amended by St. 1905, p. 563, making directors or managers of a corporation at the time of its dissolution trustees of the creditors and stockholders and members of the corporation with full power to settle its affairs, the Legislature contemplated that the act would apply to corporations dissolved for nonpayment of license taxes.

2. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 619—DISSOLUTION—CREDITORS' SUITS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where a corporation has been dissolved for nonpayment of its license tax, and its affairs are under the control of trustees pursuant to Civ. Code, $\S$ 400, as amended by St. 1905, p. 563, the creditors must, before bringing an equitable suit against the trustees to compel the application of funds to their claims, seek the usual remedies at law.

3. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 548(1)—INSOLVENCY AND DISSOLUTION—JURISDICTION OF EQUITY—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

Where the directors of an insolvent corporation appropriated funds held in trust for all the stockholders to the payment of their own claims, and where relief has been unsuccessfully sought in the bankruptcy court, which was the only legal tribunal able to defeat such a preference, creditors may invoke the interposition of equity.

4. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 545(1)—INSOLVENCY AND DISSOLUTION—PREFERENCE TO DIRECTOR—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

Where a director who is also a creditor of an insolvent corporation appropriates funds held by him for the benefit of all creditors and stockholders for the payment of his own claim, such application is void as against other creditors, since he cannot use his position to obtain a preference for his own claim.

5. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 548(7)—INSOLVENCY AND DISSOLUTION—CREDITORS' BILLS—PARTIES.

Where one of three trustees of an insolvent corporation has applied money held by him in trust for all the creditors and stockholders to the payment of his own claim, the other two directors are necessary parties to a bill by a creditor to subject all the preference to the general right of all the creditors, in view of Civ. Code Proc. $\S$ 339, and St. 1907, p. 746, $\S$ 10.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by E. J. Hanson and others against Herbert Choynski. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Vogelsang & Brown and Wm. M. Cannon, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Herbert Choynski, of San Francisco (James Raleigh Kelly, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiffs are creditors of the Olson's Market, Incorporated. In September, 1907, it appeared that the corporation was insolvent, and negotiations were in progress between the defendant and one I. I. Brown, representing the creditors, wherein it was sought to settle the claims of the creditors at 30 cents on the dollar. In order to consummate these negotiations it was necessary to sell the property of the corporation, and, in addition thereto, for the stockholders to raise a certain amount, which, together with the amount for which the property was sold, would aggregate a sufficient amount to pay 30 cents on the dollar. While these negotiations were pending, on November 30, 1907, the charter of the Olson's Market, Incorporated, was forfeited for nonpayment of its license tax. Subsequent thereto two sales of the property of the corporation were effected which had been in contemplation as a part of the proposed settlement. Stock and fixtures were sold for $1,598, and a check therefor was drawn in favor of the corporation. This check was indorsed, "Herbert Choynski, trustee," and collected by the defendant, who was a director at the time of the dissolution of the corporation. Mr. Olson, one of the other directors, sold stock of goods for the sum of $467, and retained the possession thereof. There was at the time of the dissolution one other director, there being three in all, named H. B. Hawkinson. The total amount of indebtedness due for merchandise is alleged by the defendant to be about $10,000. The defendant claimed that the corporation was largely indebted to him, and in his answer states that the amount of that indebtedness was $19,000. It was believed by the creditors that the proceeds of these sales of the property of the corporation were being held to pay their claims, and that the delay was caused by the failure of the stockholders to raise the additional money required to completely liquidate the affairs of the corporation. Defendant subsequently refused to pay over the money in his hands, or any part of it, for division among the creditors of the corporation. Bankruptcy proceedings were thereupon begun against the corporation, upon the theory that there had been an illegal preference in favor of the defendant as a creditor of the corporation. The defendant, acting as attorney for the Olson's Market, Incorporated, filed an answer to the petition in bankruptcy, verified by him as an attorney, containing the following denial:

"Denies that the said respondent did convey or transfer, or did permit to be conveyed or transferred to Herbert Choynski or any other person, the sum of $1,598, or any other sum, the property of said respondent, with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors, or either of them, of said respondent."

It was also alleged in said answer that the corporation had been dissolved November 30, 1907. It denied specifically any transfer of its property, "to wit, the sum of $1,598 or any other sum to one of its creditors, Herbert Choynski, or to any other person, with intent to prefer said Herbert Choynski, or any other person, as a creditor over its other creditors, or either of them." Upon the trial before the referee, according to the testimony of Brown and the referee, the defendant Herbert Choynski, testified that he had received the check for $1,598 in trust for the creditors, and that he did not receive it, and was not holding it adversely to the creditors. In his answer in this case the defendant alleges that the corporation was indebted to him in the sum of $19,000; that it was agreed between himself and Henry Olson, one of the other trustees, that this sum of $1,598 should be applied upon the defendant's claim, but subsequently "$1,000 of said sum was returned to the said Henry Olson for the reason that it was believed that the same would be considered a preference." On the trial the defendant testified with relation to the matter as follows:

"We had this bankruptcy proceeding under way, and I told him, I said, 'Olson, our bankruptcy court cannot adjudicate this corporation a bankrupt, because this corporation was dead, and they have no right to take any action with respect to a dead corporation any more than they have with respect to a dead person. They will never be able to adjudicate this a bankrupt, and the court will not make that adjudication.' Now I have been the only friend this corporation has had. I explained to him that I was entitled to $500 of the money anyhow, even if there was an adjudication of bankruptcy. I would be entitled to have paid the costs that were paid by me and my $500 attorney's fees, and no bankruptcy court would be permitted to adjudicate that question, and this other $1,000 I ought to be able to get that and use and apply on there, because if the whole thing did go into bankruptcy they wouldn't get one cent on the dollar, and it wouldn't be distributed among enough people to make it worth anybody's while. He said, 'All right, I would rather have you have it than anybody else.' I said, 'All right, then if anything comes up after this you will understand that you have given me permission to take it,' and he said, 'Yes.' That is all that took place at that time. That took place between me and Mr. Olson at the very time the Olson's market was charged with giving me a preference of $1,598.

"Q. You carried out the preference then while that proceeding was going on? A. Yes; I did. I tried in every way to get it; I will tell you that candidly.

"Q. You waited until you testified in the bankruptcy proceeding that there was no preference, and then you went and had a preference after testifying and before the proceeding was decided? A. I guess that is it."

The court in this action found:

"That in August, 1909, the defendant agreed with his cotrustee, Henry Olson, that the defendant should apply the sum of $1,598 as part payment on account of defendant's own claim against Olson's Market, Incorporated, exceeding said sum by a considerable amount, and the defendant did then so apply said sum; and thereupon he paid over to said Olson $1,000 thereof."

The court further found that the bankruptcy proceedings were begun April 14, 1908, upon the ground of a preference of defendant as a creditor in the sum of $1,598, and upon the ground of a transfer to the defendant of the sum of $1,598, with intent to prefer him as a creditor, and upon no other ground, and that, after a full hearing of the petition, in the month of August, 1910, "said court adjudicated that none of the alleged acts aforesaid had been committed," and thereupon dismissed the said bankruptcy proceedings. Thereafter plaintiffs brought this proceeding on behalf of themselves and other creditors, praying, among other things:

"That the sum of $1,598, with interest, be paid by the defendant to the clerk of the court for the benefit of plaintiffs and such other creditors of the Olson's Market, Incorporated, as are entitled to participate therein, and that the funds be ordered distributed proportionately according to the respective amounts of their valid claims among the creditors of said Olson's Market, Incorporated, entitled legally to participate therein, and for general relief."

The defendant in his answer and upon the witness stand denied that he was a director or trustee of the defunct corporation, but the finding of the court was to the contrary.

The rights of the parties depend in large measure upon the statute concerning the effect of a dissolution of a corporation in force at the time of such dissolution. Judgment was for the defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Appellants predicate their right to recover in this form of action on the theory that immediately upon the dissolution of the corporation the directors became trustees for the stockholders and creditors of the corporation, under section 400, Civil Code. They, therefore, claim the aid of a court of equity in the administration and distribution of the trust. The statute providing for a forfeiture of a corporate charter for failure to pay the license tax (Stats. 1907, p. 746, § 10a) declares (italics ours):

"In all cases of forfeiture under the provisions of this act, the directors or managers in office of the affairs of any domestic corporation, whose charter may be so forfeited, * * * are deemed to be trustees of the corporation and stockholders or members of the corporation whose power or right to do business is forfeited and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation, and to maintain or defend any action or proceeding then pending in behalf of or against any of said corporations, or to take such legal proceedings as may be necessary to fully settle the affairs of said corporation, and such directors or managers, as such trustees, may be sued in any of the courts of the state by any person having a claim against any of said corporations."

This statute does not in express terms make the directors trustees for the creditors. However, section 400 of the Civil Code, as it stood at the time of the dissolution of the corporation, provided:

"Unless other persons are appointed by the court, the directors or managers of the affairs of a corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders or members of the corporation dissolved, and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation."

[1] It is claimed that these two statutes must be construed together, and when so construed the directors are trustees for the creditors as well as the stockholders. The power to manage the property of the defunct corporation, and to settle its affairs, necessarily involves the payment of the creditors' claims, where there is sufficient property, and the creditors are therefore necessarily interested in the conduct of the trustees. The question of the method of enforcing their claims, however, is more difficult, and depends upon the legislation on the subject. In order to correctly understand the rights of a corporation, its stockholders and creditors, in case of dissolution for nonpayment of license tax, it is necessary to consider the history of this legislation. The original statute imposing a license tax was approved March 20, 1905. Stats. 1905, p. 493. It provided for the forfeiture of the charters of all corporations failing to pay the license tax (section 6), and declared that any person who shall exercise "any powers under the charter of any such corporation after the same shall become forfeited to the state, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." No provision was made therein for settling the affairs of such a dissolved corporation, or disposing of its property. To provide for this defect, the Legislature the next day (March 21, 1905) repealed section 399 and amended section 400 of the Civil Code to read as above quoted. Stats. 1905, p. 563. This amendment merely substituted "a" for "such" before the word "corporation." The reason for the change was that section 399, Civil Code, stated that the dissolution of corporations, if voluntary, was provided for by the chapter on dissolution of corporations (Code of Civil Procedure, tit. 6, pt. 3), and involuntary by the chapter on quo warranto (chapter 5, tit. 10, pt. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure); consequently the words "such corporation" in section 400, Civil Code, might be construed to apply only to corporations dissolved by one of these two methods. It is obvious, therefore, that the Legislature contemplated that section 400, Civil Code, would apply to corporations dissolved for nonpayment of license tax, and that it was amended as a part of the general scheme of dealing with corporations so dissolved. The effect of this legislation was to destroy the corporation so that no suit could be brought against it, and that a judgment secured in a suit prosecuted against the corporation, if before or pending the suit the corporation was thus dissolved, was void. Newhall v. Western Zinc Mining Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 Pac. 1040; Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 580, 89 Pac. 335.

"It is settled beyond question that, except as otherwise provided by statute, the effect of the dissolution of a corporation is to terminate its existence as a legal entity, and render it incapable of suing or being sued as a corporate body or in its corporate name. It is dead, and can no more be proceeded against as an existing corporation than could a natural person after his death. There is no one who can appear or act for it, and all actions pending against it, are abated, and any judgment attempted to be given against it is void. * * * Statutes similar to our section 400 of the Civil Code above quoted do not have the effect of continuing the existence of the corporation as cestui que trust, or otherwise, so as to render it capable of defending actions in its corporate name." Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., supra.

The effect of this legislation was very far-reaching and disastrous. Corporate charters were forfeited without any knowledge on the part of the creditors of such forfeiture. The Governor of the state, on June 1, 1906, in his call for an extra session of the Legislature, specified as one of the purposes of such session the amendment of the statute of 1905, "so as to increase the license tax on such corporations, * * * and provide for the revival, under certain conditions, of the corporations which have not paid their tax, and make provision for settling the affairs of corporations where said license tax has not been paid. * * *" The Legislature, on June 13, 1906, at its special session, passed an act amending the law of March 20, 1905 (Stats. 1907, Extra Sess. 1906, p. 22), by amending every section thereof excepting the section providing for appropriations, and adding two new sections, 10a and 10b. Section 6 provided that by payment of the delinquent license tax between July 1, 1906, and September 6, 1906, with penalties therein provided, the corporation "shall be relieved from the forfeiture prescribed by the act, and all persons exercising the powers of any such corporation making such payment shall be relieved from the provisions of section nine of the act." Section 10a was added in the same terms as above quoted from the amendment of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 745; Extra Sess. 1906, p. 22). The amendments of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 745) further defined the rights of creditors upon such dissolution, by adding two provisos, as follows:

"Provided always that no action pending against any corporation shall abate thereby, but may be prosecuted to final judgment and the same may be enforced by execution with the same force and effect and in like manner as though no forfeiture has occurred; and

"Provided further: That where judgment has been entered against any corporation prior to forfeiture under this act, that notwithstanding execution may be issued thereon and the property of said corporation, or which may come into the hands of any trustees for it may be levied upon, seized and sold to satisfy the same with like force and effect as though such forfeiture had not occurred."

By the various amendments to the law of 1905 (Stats. 1905, p. 493), opportunity was given to pay the tax and thus revive the corporation. Stats. 1907, Extra Sess. 1906, p. 22; 1907, p. 745; 1909, p. 454; 1911, p. 1094;

1913, pp. 513, 680; 1915, p. 422; 1917, pp. 371, 378. So that, while the Legislature of 1905 contemplated the complete dissolution and settlement of the affairs of the corporation, all the subsequent legislation on the subject, beginning with the special session of 1906, looked to the revival of the corporation. The rights of the creditors to seek the aid of a court of equity to supervise and direct the trustees must be determined in the light of this policy. The creditors have the right to sue the trustees (section 10a, Stats. 1907, p. 746) to recover their claims. In Rossi v. Caire, 174 Cal. 74, 161 Pac. 1161, this court had under consideration the right of a stockholder to force a sale of the very extensive and valuable property of the corporation for the purpose of winding up the affairs of a defaulting corporation. It was there held that the purpose of the law was to vest the trustees with a discretion as to the sale which could not be controlled by a court of equity, except in case of an abuse of power. The court there said:

"In order to justify the interference of a court, says the Supreme Court of Alabama, the mere fact of dissolution, or forfeiture of the charter, is not enough; the facts appearing 'must be of a character to show that the trustees are incompetent, or unfaithful, or are mismanaging the property to the injury of the complainant, or are without power and authority to subvert some peculiar interest or right of the party complaining and that he is being injured thereby.' Weatherly v. Capital, etc., Co., 115 Ala. 172, 22 South. 142. This language was used with reference to an application for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of and administer the corporate assets, as also was the language in the Havemeyer Case, but the same principles apply to any application for the intervention of the judicial power to supersede, supervise, or control the powers conferred by the statute upon the trustees."

[2, 3] It follows, therefore, that the creditors must ordinarily seek the usual remedies at law, and the question in this case is whether sufficient facts are stated to justify an application to a court of equity, and if not whether a cause of action at law is stated. It appears from the complaint that one of the directors of a defunct insolvent corporation, in custody of its funds as such official of the company, seeks to appropriate the major part of its assets to his own claim, in violation of his duty to the corporation, its stockholders and creditors. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cal. Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 214, 152 Pac. 542, citing with approval Morawetz on Corp. § 787. The findings are to the effect that two of the three directors consented to such an arrangement, but that subsequently $1,000 was returned to the custody of trustee Olson. Without undertaking to define the duties of such directors to creditors, it is clear that the directors cannot, with due regard to their duties to stockholders and to creditors, pay themselves from the funds held in trust for all the stockholders. Where it is apparent, as it is here, that the directors or trustees are using their power and authority for the purpose of benefiting themselves at the expense of both creditors and stockholders—for the stockholders are interested in having the best terms possible made with the creditors—and where relief has been sought in the only legal tribunal that could defeat such a preference, and where the corporation is insolvent, the interest of the creditors in the fund is sufficient to justify the interposition of a court of equity at the instance of a creditor.

[4] Plaintiffs in this action sought to invoke the power of a court of equity, praying, among other things, "That the said defendant, Herbert Choynski, be declared and held trustee of said sum of $1,598 * * * for the benefit of plaintiffs and any and all creditors * * * who come in this action and establish their claims. * * *" Notwithstanding this prayer and that the court found the fact to be that $598 was in the possession of the respondent under circumstances which charged him with a trust in favor of the creditors and stockholders of the corporation, the judgment rendered was that plaintiffs take nothing and defendant have judgment for costs. Such a judgment was erroneous. The complaint was framed in three counts. Most of the allegations in each were the same, the allegations of the first count being incorporated into the second and third counts by reference. In the first count it is alleged that there were three trustees of the corporation, one of whom was the respondent, at the time of the dissolution. In the last count it was alleged that "one Henry Olson was the only director of said corporation in office and engaged in the management of its business and affairs." In the first count it was alleged that the respondent agreed with his cotrustees Olson and Hawkinson that he would apply the sum of $1,598 received by him in payment of the claims of the creditors of the corporation, while in the last count it was alleged that this agreement was made between respondent and Olson, as the only director of the corporation in office and who was managing its affairs at the time of its dissolution. It appeared from the evidence to the satisfaction of the trial court that there was no specific agreement on the part of the respondent to use said money in payment of appellants' claim, and that the money was held by him as one of the three trustees of the corporation. Respondent's claim that he held the money in his own right by virtue of his agreement with Olson that the amount should be applied to respondent's indebtedness is not tenable, for a director, "Who is at the same time a creditor, is precluded from using his position as director to obtain a preference over other creditors in the payment of his own claims." Title Ins., etc., Co. v. California Dev. Co., supra, 171 Cal. 214, 152 Pac. 559. Hence the application of the money in the hands of the respondent in payment of his own claim was void, and the finding of the court in that regard is in legal effect a finding that the $598 was held by the respondent as one of the three trustees of the defunct corporation.

[5] In order to determine the controversy before the court, to wit, the ownership of the $1,598, $598 of which was conceded to be in the hands of the respondent, it was therefore necessary that the other two trustees be joined as codefendants. It was the duty of the court, if no application was made therefor, to require the pleadings to be amended so as to bring in the other two trustees, for there could be no adjudication binding upon the property of the corporation in their absence. Code Civ. Proc. § 389; Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 522, 99 Am. Dec. 423; O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 443, 16 Pac. 236; Alison v. Goldtree, 117 Cal. 545, 550, 49 Pac. 571; Mitau v. Roddan, 149 Cal. 1, 84 Pac. 145, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. The defendant alone would not have authority, by default or otherwise, to bind the property of the corporation. Newhall v. Western Zinc Min. Co., 164 Cal. 380, 383, 128 Pac. 1040; Stats. 1907, p. 746, § 10a.

The trial court made no finding as to the statute of limitations. It appears from the record that on September 25, 1907, the Olson's Market, Incorporated, acknowledged plaintiffs' claims in writing. The original complaint was filed September 16, 1910. If these facts are true, the four-year period for commencing an action after such acknowledgment had not then elapsed. The evidence on a new trial, however, may be different, and we need not, therefore, pass on the question.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to grant plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint to join the other trustees of the Olson's Market, Incorporated, as codefendants, and to make other appropriate amendments to determine the rights of the plaintiffs in and to the fund in the hands of the defendant.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; LENNON, J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment. The complaint and the findings showed that Choynski held $598 as trustee for the creditors and stockholders of the defunct corporation; that he denied the trust and applied the money to his own use, and that the two other directors were also trustees to administer and settle the affairs of said corporation, bound to the same duties as Choynski. The court had full authority in a suit against Choynski alone to give judgment declaring that he held that sum as such trustee. But it could not go further and direct the administration and distribution of the trust funds, unless the two other trustees were parties to the suit.

Under these circumstances, if the plaintiffs or Choynski had asked to have the other two trustees made parties, it would have been the duty of the court to grant the application, have the parties brought in by proper amendment, proceed to determine the entire controversy, and order that the trust be settled. The cases cited in the opinion of Justice Wilbur so declare. But I do not think they are authority for the proposition that the court was bound of its own motion to require the pleadings to be amended so as to bring in the other two trustees. In other words, if the court below had, upon the complaint and findings, given judgment that Choynski had $598 in his possession, and that he held the same in his capacity as one of the trustees of the defunct corporation, for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors, including the plaintiffs, I do not think this court would be justified in reversing the case because it did not, of its own motion, go on and have the other parties brought in so as to give relief which no one had prayed for. In all other particulars I agree with the opinion of Justice WILBUR.

SAX v. CLARK et al. (L. A. 4779.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 1, 1919.)

1. LIS PENDENS ⇨16—NAMES OF PARTIES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 409, the names of all parties to an action are essential to a proper lis pendens.

2. LIS PENDENS ⇨3(4)—NECESSITY—FORECLOSURE OF LIENS.

A lis pendens is not required in a suit for the foreclosure of liens filed within 90 days, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, and a purchaser of the land during the pendency of such a suit must be held to have had constructive notice thereof.

3. MORTGAGES ⇨151(3)—MECHANICS' LIENS—TRUST DEEDS—PRIORITY.

Where the construction of a building for which lien claimants furnished material was begun on September 15, 1912, and the lien claimants entered into their contract for furnishing materials for such building on October 1, 1912, and furnished such materials between such date and January 15, 1913, a materialman's lien, properly filed, attached September 15, 1912, and was superior to a trust deed dated October 21, 1912, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186.

4. APPEARANCE ⇨24(1) — DEFECTIVE SUMMONS—WAIVER OF INFIRMITIES.

A party who appears in an action and demurs to the complaint waives all possible infirmity in the summons or service thereof.

5. PROCESS ⇨25—SUMMONS—NAMES.

The names of all the defendants need not appear in the title in a summons, where all the names are given in the body thereof, under Code Civ. Proc. § 407.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Caroline Sax against William E. Clark and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

R. L. Horton, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James Brunken and S. M. Johnstone, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff successfully sued to quiet her title to lot 57 of the Cumberland tract, as per map thereof recorded in book 19, page 29, of Miscellaneous Records in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county, state of California. Defendants have appealed from the judgment.

The source of title is common. It was stipulated that prior to October 21, 1912, Alice G. Handy and Harry Handy were owners of the property. On that day they delivered to the Title Insurance & Trust Company a trust deed to secure a note for $700 in favor of Marie L. Barrett. This was recorded. On June 24, 1913, the Title Insurance & Trust Company, in accordance with the terms of the trust deed, conveyed the property to Marie L. Barrett, who on the following day quit-claimed to Anna M. Colkins, and on July 26, 1913, Anna M. Colkins, by grant deed, conveyed the property to plaintiff herein.

The title which appellants assert is based upon the following facts:

On March 26, 1913, a mechanics' lien was recorded against the property in question and Alice Handy and F. C. Handy, and in favor of B. W. and W. E. Clark, doing business as Clark Bros. On April 9, 1913, there was recorded a mechanic's lien in favor of Antonio Silva against A. Handy, covering the premises in question. On June 20, 1913, an action was commenced and a lis pendens was recorded wherein B. W. Clark et al. were plaintiffs and Alice G. Handy et al. were defendants. In said action the Handys, Barrett, Moyer, and Title Insurance & Trust Company were made parties and served with process. The Title Insurance & Trust Company, holding the legal title as trustee, filed a demurrer to the complaint. Thereafter judgment was rendered against all the defendants named in said action and in favor of the plaintiffs therein for an amount greater than $600 and for foreclosure of the mechanics' liens. On May 18, 1914, the sheriff of Los Angeles county sold the premises upon execution issued in said suit to Clark Bros. Lumber Company, a corporation, delivering a certificate of sale, which was recorded July 15, 1914. On March 10, 1915, Clark Bros. Lumber Company conveyed the property to defendant Hammond Lumber Company, and thereafter the sheriff of Los Angeles county made and delivered his sheriff's deed to the premises to said Hammond Lumber Company. This chain of title was asserted by Hammond Lumber Company by way of cross-complaint in the action at bar.

[1, 2] It is the contention of respondent that the suit for the foreclosure of the liens had no binding force against her or her title because she had neither actual nor constructive notice of the pendency of that action. In this behalf she calls attention to her uncontradicted testimony that she knew nothing of the said suit, and to the infirmity of the lis pendens which was entitled, "B. W. Clark et al., Plaintiffs, v. Alice G. Handy et al., Defendants," after which was the usual statement that an action was pending upon the complaint "of the above-named plaintiffs" against the "above-named defendants." Our attention is called to the fact that while the notice describes the land and gives the amount of the lien claims and costs, it contains no further identification of the parties to the action. It is doubtless true that the names of such parties are essential to a proper lis pendens (section 409, Code Civ. Proc.), but this fact can give no comfort to respondent because a lis pendens is not required in a suit for the foreclosure of liens filed within 90 days. Section 1190, Code Civ. Proc.; Tulloh v. Boyce, 174 Pac. 680; s. c., 177 Pac. 847. We must hold, therefore, that plaintiff had constructive notice of the pendency of the action.

Respondent insists, however, that upon the authority of Metropolis Trust & Savings Bank of Barnet, 165 Cal. 449, 132 Pac. 833, her title must be held senior to that depending upon the mechanics' liens, and that the suit and the resulting judgment can have no binding force against her deed from the trustee. There is language in the opinion in that case which, if removed from the context, would seem to support this contention, but the facts of the two cases are not at all similar. That was a suit to restrain the sheriff from selling property under a judgment in an action to foreclose mechanics' liens. The plaintiff and respondent therein had been a defendant in the lien suit and the judgment decreeing the sums claimed as liens upon the real property involved found them subject and subordinate, however, to the lien of the respondent under its deed of trust. It was therefore properly held that respondent's title acquired, during the pendency of the action, from the trustee, by sale according to the terms of the trust deed need not be set up by supplemental answer in the lien suit.

[3] In the case before us the facts are entirely different. In the foreclosure complaint it is alleged that the Title Insurance & Trust Company was grantee in the trust deed dated October 21, 1912, recorded by the county recorder of Los Angeles county; that the construction of the building for which the lien claimants furnished material was begun on or about September 15, 1912; that Clark Bros. entered into their contract for furnishing materials for that building on October 1, 1912, and furnished such materials between said date and January 15, 1913. It followed therefrom that the liens of the claimants attached about September 15, 1912; that the trust deed was subsequent to and subject to such liens. Section 1186, Code Civ. Proc. There was also the usual allegation that the claims of the defendants, including the Title Insurance & Trust Company, "are subsequent to and subject to plaintiffs' claims of lien sued upon herein." The lien claimants prayed for judgment foreclosing their liens, and decreeing "that the liens of the plaintiffs be declared prior to those of the defendants, and each of them," and that the Title Insurance & Trust Company be restrained from selling the premises pending the litigation. The Title Insurance & Trust Company, trustee by virtue of the deed of trust, filed a demurrer to the complaint. Thereafter a judgment by default was given against all the defendants, in which, among other things, it was adjudged that the liens of plaintiffs were superior to any claim of the defendants, including the trustee. That this judgment is, under the circumstances, binding upon the plaintiff herein we are convinced.

[4, 5] Respondent has made the further assertion that the defendants in the suit upon the claims of lien were never properly served with summons, and that the court never acquired jurisdiction of them or of the subject-matter of the action. This point if good, would be of no value to plaintiff herein, for the reason that the holder of the legal title to the property, the trustee, who was one of her predecessors in interest, did appear in the action and demur to the complaint, thus waiving all possible infirmity in the summons or the service thereof. In re Clarke, 125 Cal. 388, 58 Pac. 22; Security Loan & Trust Co. of Southern California v. Boston & South Riverside Fruit Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296. The summons in that action was entitled "B. W. Clark et al., Plaintiffs, v. Alice G. Handy et al., Defendants," and the respondent insists that it was a nullity as against all of the defendants except, possibly, Alice G. Handy, basing her contention upon the authority of Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 630. There is no force in the attack on the summons, and the cited case is not opposite because in the body of the criticized summons the names of all of the defendants were given. There is no provision in the statute that such names must appear in the title. Section 407, Code Civ. Proc. Therefore, conceding that the plaintiff in this action may attack the summons in the suit on the lien claims, we are constrained to hold that there was a substantial compliance with the law in the form of the summons served upon the defendants in that litigation.

For the reasons above given, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.

PATTERSON v. ALMOND CITY LAND & DEVELOPMENT CO. et al.
(Civ. 2732.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. March 14, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 757(1) — BRIEF ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a brief to which is appended a résumé of the evidence of certain witnesses contains conclusions of fact to support which no reference is made, either to the transcript or the appendix to the brief, and the brief contains nothing clearly informing the court what the issues were, and sets out only one of the findings, the court will not examine a 400-page transcript in search of error upon which to base a reversal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 1011(1)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Where there is a substantial conflict of evidence upon the facts found, the appellate court will not overturn the findings below.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 1043(7)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where it was stipulated that the evidence of an absent witness might be introduced after other evidence, error, if any, in refusing a continuance for the continued absence of such witness was harmless, where his evidence would only create a further conflict as to whether defendant knew of the admitted fraud perpetrated on plaintiff, by its agent.

4. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY 11—RESCISSION — OFFER OF RECONVEYANCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to rescind a contract for the exchange of land, a deed of reconveyance by plaintiff was sufficiently tendered by depositing the deed in a bank and notifying defendant to call for it.

5. JUDGMENT 403 — SUIT TO SET ASIDE—CONCLUSIVENESS—INDIRECT ATTACK.

Where an equitable suit is brought to set aside a judgment at law, the judgment is not res adjudicata on the issues, since, while it is not a direct attack on the judgment, neither is it collateral, but is an indirect attack.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Suit by Mary Hughes Patterson against the Almond City Land & Development Company, Frank Barnet, as sheriff, and another, to rescind a contract for the exchange of lands, and to set aside a judgment. Decree for plaintiff, and the named defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. S. Derby, of San Francisco (J. C. Nichols, of Berkeley, of counsel), for appellants.
J. M. Latimer (J. E. Pemberton, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

HAVEN, J. [1] The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in a suit to rescind a contract for the exchange of real property upon the ground of fraud, and to set aside a prior judgment of the superior court in Alameda county in a suit which grew out of one phase of the dealings between the parties under the contract. The appeal is taken in the so-called "alternative" method. The typewritten transcript of testimony covers something over 400 pages, and the findings of fact alone cover 12 typewritten pages. As an appendix to appellants' brief there is printed what is designated a résumé of the evidence of three witnesses, with some references to transcript pages. In the brief itself are certain conclusions of fact, to support which no reference is made either to the transcript or the appendix. There is nothing printed in either brief to inform the court clearly what the issues were before the lower court, and but a single one of the findings is printed, and that in the appendix to respondent's brief. Under these circumstances, the court will not examine the voluminous typewritten transcript in search of error upon which to base a reversal. Scott v. Hollywood Park Co., 176 Cal. 680, 169 Pac. 379; Randall v. Allen, 26 Cal. App. Dec. 852, on rehearing in Supreme Court, see 180 Pac. 941.

[2] While the above authorities, and many other pronouncements by the appellate courts of this state, justify a refusal to examine any portion of the record not printed in the briefs, we are loath to refuse to pass upon the merits in any case where counsel have endeavored properly to present their points. In this case the appellant contends the judgment should be reversed because of laches on the part of the plaintiff, because of her waiver and ratification of the fraud perpetrated upon her, and because of her failure promptly to meet every requirement of the law in regard to rescission. Giving to the appellants' statement of evidence its strongest force, it appears from the similar unsatisfactory statement of evidence in the respondent's brief that there was a clear conflict of evidence as to the time when plaintiff had knowledge of the fraud, and as to the extent of such knowledge, upon which facts the defenses of laches, waiver, and ratification are all dependent. It must be assumed, therefore, the findings were supported by sufficient evidence. This court cannot overturn the findings of the court below where there is a substantial conflict of evidence upon the facts found. Tracy v. Smith, 175 Cal. 161, 165 Pac. 535.

[3] The same conditions of conflict exist and the same rule applies to the appellants' contention that the plaintiff failed to show the defendants knew of the fraud perpetrated by their agent. Upon this latter point the appellants claim that a new trial should have been granted on the ground of surprise, because of certain proceedings connected with the nonappearance of one Fitch, whose evidence was desired by the defendant company. At the opening of the trial counsel for the parties entered into a stipulation in open court, made a part of the record in the case by the direction of the judge who was presiding, to the effect that the trial should proceed at that time, and, after all available evidence had been introduced, the evidence of the witness Fitch might be introduced. At the close of the trial the appellants sought a continuance of the case in order that the evidence of Fitch might be taken upon his arrival from abroad, a statement being made that he was expected to reach the place of trial within about ten days. The attention of the court was called to the stipulation, notwithstanding which continuance was refused. It is claimed by the appellants that a formal showing would have been made for the continuance but for the stipulation, and that its disregard and the refusal to adjourn the trial deprived the appellants of substantial evidence. So much of the record as is presented by the briefs fails to support this contention. The evidence which the appellants claim would have been given by the witness Fitch was that the defendant company had no knowledge of the admitted fraud perpetrated upon the plaintiff by the company's agent. Apart from any question of the imputed knowledge of the principal, it appears that another agent and officer of the defendant corporation testified that he knew of the fraudulent acts of which complaint was made; that he knew that the agent of the corporation was also the agent of the plaintiff and was receiving compensation both from the plaintiff and from the defendant corporation. Under these circumstances, the evidence of Mr. Fitch could have had no greater force than to import a further conflict of evidence in the case upon an immaterial matter. If there was error in this particular, the appellant has failed to show injury therefrom. We cannot say, therefore, that the refusal of the trial court to grant the continuance or to grant defendants' motion for a new trial was reversible error.

Appellants further claim that the plaintiff failed to establish collusion or fraud in the transaction complained of. The court found the existence of such fraud; and the record discloses sufficient evidence to support such finding.

[4] Objection is made to plaintiff's offer to rescind the fraudulent contract on the ground that the deed of reconveyance from plaintiff to the defendant company of the Yolo county land, which had been conveyed to plaintiff under the contract, did not accompany the offer, and was not tendered to the corporation at its office in San Francisco. The deed referred to was deposited in a bank at Woodland, and the defendant company was notified to call for it. Under the circumstances, this was a sufficient notice of rescission and offer to restore the consideration. The notice was received by the defendant company, and it was advised where the deed to it could be obtained upon compliance by it with the plaintiff's demand for a reconveyance to her of the land she had deeded to the company under the contract.

[5] The further contention of appellants that the judgment in a prior action between the same parties is res adjudicata and conclusive upon the issues here involved is answered by consideration of the fact that the present action is a suit in equity to set aside the very judgment relied upon. While this is not a direct attack upon the judgment, neither is it collateral, but is properly designated as an indirect attack. In such a case the judgment is not conclusive. In Eichhoff v. Eichhoff, 107 Cal. 42, 48, 40 Pac. 24, 25 (48 Am. St. Rep. 110), the Supreme Court says:

"In fact, when an action is brought in a court of equity to set aside a judgment at law the attack, although not collateral, is always indirect. Freeman on Judgments, § 485. The judgment is not under review, but an issue is being tried as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to have a court of equity interpose in his behalf. The judgment is not conclusive in such a case. The question to be determined is whether the adjudication was not procured by fraud or mistake. It may be said that in such a case the legal validity of the judgment is admitted, and it is because of its validity, or apparent validity, that the plaintiff requires to be relieved from it."

The case of Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 175, 68 Pac. 597, relied upon by appellants, is distinguished from the instant case for the reason that that suit was brought to set aside the contract, the validity of which had been determined in the prior action, and was not an attack on the judgment itself.

We find no prejudicial error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; BRIT-TAIN, J.

PEOPLE v. BERNAL. (Cr. 700.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. March 21, 1919. Re-hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1159(3)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—REVIEW.

The appellate court cannot review a finding of fact by the jury on conflicting evidence.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡785(10)—INSTRUCTION—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The court properly instructed the jury that "in determining as to the credit you will give a witness and the weight and value you will attach to a witness' testimony, you should take into consideration the conduct and appearance and manner of the witness while on the stand, the interest of the witness, if any, in the result of the trial, the motives which actuate the witness in testifying, or in giving contradictory or false testimony, the witness' relation or feeling toward the defendant, and the probability or improbability of the witness' statement being true when considered with all other evidence, etc.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡786(2)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF DEFENDANT.

The court did not err in instructing: "The defendant in this case has offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, and you are to judge his evidence by the same rules that you would that of any other witness. You have no right to disregard his testimony merely upon the ground that he is the defendant and stands charged with this crime, but you should fairly and impartially judge his testimony, together with all other evidence in the case."

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡785(9)—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—INTEREST—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court properly instructed the jury that: "In judging the credibility of a witness, whether such witness be the defendant, the prosecutor, or any other witness produced on either side, you may consider the interest and relation of such witness in and to the case."

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡800(6)—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFINITION OF INTENT.

Where the court had instructed as to the necessity for proving "motive," it did not err in instructing: "Now, gentlemen, upon this question of intent and motive, I will read you the definition as laid down in the Penal Code in section 21," relating to the manifestation of "intent."

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡798(1/2)—ARGUMENTATIVE INSTRUCTIONS—DUTIES OF JURY.

Where the court prefaced an instruction with the words "in view of the arguments in this case," and proceeded to tell the jury, in substance, that it was not concerned with what might be the final judgment or sentence in the event that they should find the defendant guilty, and that the jury must put out of consideration entirely what the court might or might not do, such instruction was not open to the objection that it was argumentative.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡829(1)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTION.

An accused cannot complain of rejection of instructions, where the points concerned were fully and correctly covered in the court's charge.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1137(8)—INVITED ERROR—MISCONDUCT OF COURT AND COUNSEL.

Where accused while on the stand related a remarkable story of brutal treatment at the hands of the authorities, the effect of which, if true and believed, would tend to prejudice prosecution and put in question the mental soundness of accused, remarks of judge and district attorney that accused must be crazy, followed by an investigation the effect of which was to entirely discredit accused's story, were not prejudicial; accused having undoubtedly sought to influence the jury by his testimony.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⚡1035(3), 1037(2)—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS.

Where no assignment of misconduct of court or district attorney, or request for an admonition to the jury to disregard the objectionable remarks, was made at the time of the trial, the matter will be deemed to have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Pedro A. Bernal was convicted for lewd and lascivious acts, and appeals from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

Frank A. Henning, of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rior-dan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WASTE, P. J. Defendant was charged by an information with the violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. He was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of one year. He now appeals from such judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant complains that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. The prosecuting witness, a girl upon whose person the lewd and lascivious acts were committed, was about 11 years old at the time of the trial. She testified in detail to the acts of the defendant constituting the crime. Her testimony was corroborated by the testimony of her mother and two other witnesses, to the effect that shortly after the acts complained of defendant was brought before the little girl, who told what had happened. The defendant was thereupon asked if the little girl was telling the truth, and he answered, "Yes." He further stated to these three witnesses:

"I was tempted, a funny feeling came over me, I don't know why I did it."

Later the defendant stated to the district attorney, when questioned about the matter:

"Well, I didn't harm her. I looked at her and saw that she was young, and I stopped just in time. I guess because I was passionate."

[1] The defendant introduced no testimony other than his own concerning the occurrence. He positively denied the commission of the offense. There was therefore presented only a conflict of testimony which it was the duty of the jury to pass upon, and, it having done so, this court cannot review the evidence in this regard.

[2] Defendant complains that the court erred in giving the jury the following instructions:

"In determining as to the credit you will give a witness and the weight and value you will attach to a witness' testimony, you should take into consideration the conduct and appearance and manner of the witness while on the stand; the interest of the witness, if any, in the result of the trial; the motives which actuate the witness in testifying, or in giving contradictory or false testimony, the witness' relation or feeling toward the defendant, and the probability or improbability of the witness' statement being true when considered with reference to all other evidence, facts, and circumstances proved in the case."

The instruction was proper. People v. Wong Ah Foo, 69 Cal. at page 183, 10 Pac. 375; People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31 Pac. 107. By the instruction the court simply informed the jury of certain facts and circumstances in the case before them which they would perhaps, as men of ordinary observation, have been bound to know. People v. Bush, 71 Cal. 602, 12 Pac. 781.

[3] The court instructed the jury as to defendant's testimony as follows:

"The defendant in this case has offered himself as a witness in his own behalf, and you are to judge his evidence by the same rules that you would that of any other witness. You have no right to disregard his testimony merely upon the ground that he is the defendant and stands charged with this crime; but you should fairly and impartially judge his testimony together with all other evidence in the case."

The court did not err in giving the instruction. It did not go as far as did the court in instructions which have been upheld. People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191; People

v. Lang, 104 Cal. 363, 37 Pac. 1031; People v. Wells, 145 Cal. 138, 78 Pac. 470.

[4] The court instructed the jury that:

"In judging the credibility of a witness, whether such witness be the defendant, the prosecutor, or any other witness produced on either side, you may consider the interest and relation of such witness in and to the case."

No error was committed by the court in this regard. People v. Bush, supra; People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 531, 66 Pac. 794.

[5] The court instructed the jury that if the evidence in the case failed to show a motive on the part of the defendant for committing the crime charged in the information, that that was a circumstance which the jury must consider in connection with all the other evidence in arriving at its verdict, and that the absence of motive on the part of the defendant was a strong factor in favor of his innocence, and in that connection gave the following instruction:

"Now, gentlemen, upon this question of intent and motive, I will read you the definition as laid down in Penal Code in section 21: 'The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused. All persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots or lunatics, nor affected with insanity.'"

This was not error, and appellant's attempt to draw a distinction between the use of the word "motive" in the instructions and the use of the word "intent" in the Code section does not impress us as worthy of further consideration.

[6] The court prefaced one instruction with the words "in view of the arguments in this case," and proceeded to tell the jury, in substance, that it was not concerned with what might be the final judgment, or sentence, of the court in the event they should find the defendant guilty, and that the jury must put out of consideration entirely what the court might or might not do in the case. Appellant contends that this instruction was argumentative. There is nothing in the point. The giving of other instructions is complained of, but our examination satisfies us that the court committed no error in its charge.

[7] The court declined to give the jury certain instructions proposed by the defendant; as to presumption of innocence, the difference between civil and criminal causes in respect to the degree or quality of the evidence necessary to justify a jury in finding for the plaintiff, and relative to the good character of the defendant. The court, however, fully and correctly covered each of these points in its charge. The rejected instructions were only repetition. The court is not bound to state the law to the jury more than once. People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387; People v. Feld, 149 Cal. 464, 86 Pac. 1100.

[8, 9] The defendant while on the stand denied the commission of the offense and contradicted the testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution. He devoted the greater part of his testimony to the attempt to establish what he termed a "frame-up" on the part of the family of the prosecuting witness, and the officials of Santa Clara county. He related a most remarkable story of alleged brutal treatment at the hands of the authorities when first placed in the county jail. The effect of the testimony, if true, and believed by the jury, would tend to prejudice the prosecution, and put in question the mental soundness of the defendant. It was apparently given for that purpose. At the conclusion of defendant's testimony, the following occurred in open court, in the presence of the jury:

"By the Court: Mr. Thomas, I would like to call some deputy sheriff, or whoever has charge of these men and investigate this particular charge that he is making here; to test the man's knowledge of things, to put it mildly. Who had charge of this man, Mr. Buffington?"

"By Mr. Buffington: Billy Rowland."

"By the Court: Where is Rowland, is he here?"

"By Mr. Buffington: Yes."

"By the Court: Bring Rowland in; you may step down, Mr. Bernal."

"By Mr. Free: He is entirely crazy, or making believe."

"By the Court: That is what I want to find out."

Mr. Free, who took part in this colloquy, was the district attorney of the county, and had testified as a witness for the prosecution. He apparently took some part in the conduct of the case. Witnesses were called to testify as to what really took place in the jail, the effect of which was to entirely discredit the defendant's story. Appellant contends that the remarks of the court and the district attorney tended to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jury, and constituted a reversible error. Appellate courts are continually warning trial courts, and prosecuting officers, of the danger of giving utterance to any statements tending, or in any wise so conducting themselves as to cause prejudice against defendants in the minds of jurors. But bearing in mind that defendant had undoubtedly sought to influence the jury by his own testimony, to which we have referred, we cannot feel that prejudicial error was committed by either the court, or the district attorney, in the manner so complained of. Furthermore, no assignment of misconduct, or request for an admonition to the jury to disregard the objectionable remarks, was made at the time of the trial, in which state of the record the objection will be deemed to have been waived on appeal. People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Amer, 8 Cal. App. 143, 96 Pac. 401; People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 743, 89 Pac. 450.

Certain rulings of the court on the admission of testimony are complained of, but our examination of the record satisfies us that no prejudicial error was committed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

NAY v. BERNARD et ux. 40 Cal. App. 364 (Civ. 2736.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 21, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1011(1) — REVIEW — QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Findings based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

2. EASEMENTS — 8(2,3) — PRESCRIPTION — PERMISSIVE USE.

A right of way by adverse user or prescription cannot be based upon a permissive use of the road.

3. EASEMENTS — 18(3) — WAYS OF NECESSITY — OTHER MEANS OF ACCESS.

The owner of land bordering a county road who has constructed a road over such land to the county road cannot claim a right of way by necessity over the land of another to another county road.

4. EVIDENCE — 461(4) — PAROL — EASEMENTS.

Where the owner of land severs it and retains an easement, whether such easement is in gross or appurtenant to the dominant estate may be shown by facts aliunde the deed, notwithstanding that no description of the dominant estate is included in the grant of the servient tenement.

5. EASEMENTS — 17(5) — QUASI EASEMENT — CREATION.

Where the owner of land severs it and sells a part after the establishment of a road across the land conveyed, a quasi easement is created in favor of and as an appurtenance to the land retained by the grantor; the easement being obviously apparent and the parties having knowledge thereof at the time of the grant.

6. EASEMENTS — 14(2) — RESERVATION OF RIGHT OF WAY BY GRANTOR — EFFECT OF OTHER RESERVATIONS.

An easement for a right of way reserved by the grantor upon the severance of the estate and the conveyance of part thereof is not affected by an express reservation of another right of way for another purpose, especially if the latter reservation was for a right of way for a future use.

7. EASEMENTS — 3(2) — CONSTRUCTION OF RESERVATION IN DEED — CONVEYANCES.

Where an owner of land severs it and conveys part thereof, expressly reserving a right of way, the easement is appurtenant to the land retained, in view of Civ. Code, § 1069, requiring reservations in a deed to be construed most favorably to the grantor, and passes by transfer of the land itself, without particular reference thereto, in view of section 1084.

8. EASEMENTS — 71—SUITS TO ESTABLISH—FINDINGS.

Where the grantor of land conveyed part thereof, reserving a right of way, a subsequent grantee of the land retained was not entitled to judgment in a suit to establish the right of way as appurtenant to his land, in the absence of findings that the road existed prior to the conveyance severing the estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by H. L. Nay against J. Bernard and wife. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Lyman Harford and Juilliard & Harford, all of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

HAVEN, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action to establish a right of way, to restrain defendants from interfering therewith, and to recover damages for prior interference. In 1894 the adjoining ranch properties of plaintiff and defendants were owned by Calvin H. Holmes, and held by him as a single tract of land. In September of that year he divided this tract by conveying to his son-in-law, Charles H. Foote, the southerly portion thereof, which is now owned by defendants and is hereinafter referred to as the "Bernard property," retaining title at that time in himself to the northerly portion of the tract, which is now owned by plaintiff and is herein referred to as the "Nay property." The plaintiff acquired title to the Nay property in 1906 by mesne conveyances from Calvin H. Holmes. The title to the Bernard property was conveyed by Charles H. Foote to the defendant John Bernard by deed dated March 12, 1913. The deed of the Bernard property from Holmes to Foote contained the following habendum clause:

"To have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, and to his heirs and assigns forever, excepting the privilege of conducting water through a six-inch pipe at any point on the premises from said Yellow Jacket creek. The right hereby is reserved to my heirs and assignees forever of six inches of water therein with the right of way to conduct said water and the right of way to travel over said land by a road to be laid out or kept open for travel."

A road from the Nay property across the Bernard property to the county road had existed for a number of years prior to the division of the tract by the execution of the above-mentioned deed. The evidence is conflicting as to the extent and nature of the use of such road prior to the date of the deed, but the grantee testified that it was a traveled road at that time, and its use to some extent and the recognition of its existence were clearly established.

[1, 2] Appellant claims that the evidence established: First, that the easement of the right of way for a road was appurtenant to the Nay property; second, that a right of way by necessity existed; third, that plaintiff had acquired an easement by adverse user and prescription; fourth, "that defendants were estopped from disputing the rights of plaintiff." Upon the question of a right of way by adverse user and prescription, the trial court found that the plaintiff had never traveled any portion of the road adversely to defendants nor under any claim of right, "but whenever plaintiff has traveled said road it has always been with the permission of the owners of the land over which said way runs," and, further, "that the portion of said road crossing the lands of defendants and the gates thereon were never used by others than the owners of said land except by and with the permission of such owners." These findings are supported by evidence offered on behalf of the defendants. The evidence of plaintiff is in conflict therewith; but, under that state of the record, the findings cannot be disturbed. A right of way by adverse user or prescription cannot be based upon this permissive use of the road.

[3] The claim of a right of way by necessity was waived by the attorney for the appellant on the argument; and necessarily so, as the evidence discloses that the Nay land itself borders on a county road to which appellant has constructed a road over his own land.

The question chiefly argued in the briefs is whether the easement of a right of way for a road was appurtenant to the Nay property or was an easement in gross, personal to Calvin H. Holmes, the grantor in the above referred to deed. If appurtenant, it passed to plaintiff as an incident to the land conveyed to him. If personal to Holmes, plaintiff proved no title thereto, as no conveyance of the easement as such was offered in evidence. The trial court found the execution of the deed with its habendum clause as above set forth. To such finding the following is added:

"That in said deed there is no mention or description of the lands hereinbefore described, and found to now belong to plaintiff or any portion of said lands, nor does said deed mention or describe any other lands or property than said 538.55-acre tract therein conveyed to said C. H. Foote. That neither said road or right of way or any portion thereof over said lands of defendants is now or ever has been appurtenant to the lands now owned by plaintiff or any portion thereof. That at the time of the conveyance of said 538.55-acre tract from Calvin H. Holmes to Charles H. Foote, said Calvin H. Holmes owned the whole of the present Nay ranch described in plaintiff's complaint, and thereafter continued to own said ranch for several years. That said ranch was thereafter, after several successive transfers, conveyed to plaintiff; that none of the deeds or conveyances in the line from said Calvin H. Holmes to plaintiff in any way mention or refer to said right of way."

It is evident that the conclusion of the trial court that the easement was not appurtenant to the Nay property is based upon the finding that said property is not described nor referred to in the deed by which the Bernard property was conveyed. Such conclusion is warranted by the case of Wagner v. Hanna, 38 Cal. 111, 99 Am. Dec. 354, if the rule of that case is still the law of this state. The principle there announced is that, upon severance of an entire tract of land by conveyance of a portion thereof, an easement reserved by the grantor, for the benefit of the portion of the tract retained, is not appurtenant thereto unless the latter tract is described in the deed. We are of the opinion, however, that, while this case has not been expressly overruled, later decisions of the Supreme Court are so inconsistent therewith as to destroy its authority upon the particular point here involved.

In Hopper v. Barnes, 113 Cal. 636, 45 Pac. 874, the plaintiff and defendant owned adjoining quarter sections of land. Defendant granted to plaintiff a right of way for a road over defendant's land. The deed contained an exact description of the granted right of way by metes and bounds, but did not describe either the land of plaintiff in connection with which the right of way was to be used or the remaining land of defendant from which the right of way was carved. The exact question considered by the court was whether, under such circumstances, the easement was personal to the grantee or appurtenant to his adjoining land. After citation of authority to the effect that an easement is never presumed to be in gross when it can fairly be construed to be appurtenant to some other estate, the court held that the right of way there involved should be considered as appurtenant to plaintiff's land. In reaching that conclusion the court quotes with approval from a Massachusetts case (Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591), as follows:

"When there is in the deed no declaration of the intention of the parties in regard to the nature of the way, it will be determined by its relation to other estates of the grantor, or its want of such relations."

This is a distinct holding that the nature of the easement, whether personal or appurtenant, may be determined by evidence allunde the deed, which is the very thing that the case of Wagner v. Hanna, supra, holds cannot be done.

[4] The principle established by Hopper v. Barnes, supra, has been applied in a number of later cases, in all of which an easement conveyed by an express grant was held to have been appurtenant to a dominant tenement by reason of facts appearing allunde the deed, and notwithstanding that no description of such dominant tenement was contained in the grant. Jones v. Sanders, 138 Cal. 405, 71 Pac. 506; Jones v. Dearthorff, 4 Cal. App. 18, 87 Pac. 213; Gardner v. San Gabriel Valley Bank, 7 Cal. App. 106, 93 Pac. 900.

The case of Wagner v. Hanna is not referred to in any of the later cases, but we cannot escape the conclusion that it is practically overruled thereby.

[5] If the deed from Holmes to Foote had contained no reservation whatever of a right of way for a road, a quasi easement for that purpose would have been created in favor of, and as an appurtenance to the land retained by the grantor, which is now the Nay property. In Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 135, 139, the court adopts the rule laid down in a leading New York case (Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505) as follows:

"The rule of the common law on this subject is well settled. The principle is, that where the owner of two tenements sells one of them, or the owner of an entire estate sells a portion of it, the purchaser takes the tenement or portion sold with all the benefits and burdens that appear at the time of sale to belong to it, as between it and the property which the vendor retains. * * * No easement exists so long as the unity of possession remains, because the owner of the whole may at any time rearrange the quality of the several servitudes; but upon severance by the sale of a part, the right of the owner to redistribute ceases, and easements or servitudes are created corresponding to the benefits or burdens existing at the time of sale."

This rule is repeated in the same language in Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 250, 252, 17 Pac. 69, and is applied in the recent cases of Cheda v. Bodkin, 173 Cal. 16, 158 Pac. 1025, and Jersey Farm Co. v. Atlanta Realty Co., 164 Cal. 412, 129 Pac. 593.

Under the common law and many authorities in other jurisdictions, the doctrine of an implied right of way is limited to cases of rights of way by necessity. In this state, however, the rule is applied whenever the quasi easement is obviously apparent or the parties had knowledge of its existence at the time of the grant. Civ. Code, § 1104; Jones v. Sanders, supra. The record in this case discloses that the road here involved had existed and been used for a number of years prior to the deed from Holmes to Foote, and it is apparent that both parties had knowledge of its existence and use at the time of the execution of that deed.

[6] Respondent claims that all of the clauses found in the habendum in the deed from Holmes to Foote should be construed as having reference to the privilege of conducting water, and that the right of way "to travel over said land by a road to be laid out or kept open for travel" has reference to such a right of way for the purpose of visitation and repair of water pipes alone; in other words, that the only right of way reserved by this clause in the deed is not for a road for general travel, but solely for the purpose of being used as an incident to the privilege of conducting water, referred to in other portions of the habendum clause. If this construction is correct, manifestly the deed had no effect upon the quasi easement which is based upon the act of Holmes in conveying a portion of his land over which an established road for travel existed. Such easement reserved to the grantor upon the severance of his estate would not be affected by an express reservation of another right of way for another purpose, especially when the latter reservation was for a right of way for future use. If, on the other hand, the clause referred to is to be construed as an attempted reservation by the grantor of a right of way for a road in existence or another one to be laid out for general travel, we are of the opinion that the intent of the grantor to reserve such easement for the benefit of and as appurtenant to the portion of the land which he did not convey sufficiently appears from the record before us.

[7] The conclusions which we have reached are strengthened by the provisions of section 1069, Civil Code, to the effect that, in case of a reservation in a deed, the construction most favorable to the grantor must be placed upon the language of such reservation. We hold, therefore, that the easement here involved was appurtenant to the land retained by Holmes at the time of the execution of his deed, and passed by the subsequent conveyances of that land to the plaintiff. Such an easement passes by transfer of the land itself without particular reference thereto. Civ. Code, § 1084; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 140.

[8] Notwithstanding our conclusions in favor of appellant's title to the right of way in dispute, a judgment in his favor cannot be directed, unless the findings of the trial court will support such judgment. We have no power to modify the findings as made. The only finding as to existence of the road here involved is that it has been in existence "for more than five years last past." For support of a judgment in favor of appellant, under the views hereinabove expressed, findings are necessary as to the existence and use of the road prior to the execution of the deed from Holmes to Foote in 1894. In the absence of such findings, we cannot direct the entry of a judgment.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

DAVIDSON v. ROFFY et al. (Civ. 1935.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 6, 1919. On Petition for Modification, April 5, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 5, 1919.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS ⇐20 — RIGHTS ASSIGNABLE — WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

A written obligation, secured by a real estate mortgage and in form a promissory note, conditioned upon the nonpayment of dividends upon shares of stock received by the payee, and providing that, if the dividends are less than as guaranteed by the maker, they be credited on the note, whether a promissory note or a guaranty, is assignable; Civ. Code, §§ 954, 1458, providing that a right arising out of an obligation may be transferred.

2. GUARANTY ⇐4 — INDEMNITY ⇐1 — SCOPE AND EXTENT OF OBLIGATION.

Where the purchaser of land gave in payment shares of stock and a note secured by a mortgage on the land, with a proviso in the note for its cancellation if the payee received dividends from the shares equal to the amount of such note, held, the contract was not one of indemnity or guaranty against loss incident to the purchase of the stock, but a direct promise of the maker of the note to pay the amount thereof.

3. PLEDGES ⇐20 — MORTGAGE — SHARES OF STOCK.

Where the purchaser of land gave in payment thereof shares of stock and a note secured by a mortgage on the land, with a proviso in the note for its cancellation if the payee received dividends from the shares equal to the amount of such note, such stock did not constitute additional security for payment of the sum.

4. MORTGAGES ⇐414 — FORECLOSURE — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — NOTICE.

Where shares of stock and a note secured by a mortgage on the land were given in payment of land purchased, and the note contained a proviso for its cancellation if the payee received dividends from the shares equal to the amount of such note, failure of vendor to notify the purchaser's successors that the stock had failed to pay dividends, and that he would hold the land under the mortgage, did not estop his assignee from foreclosing the mortgage; such notice not being necessary.

5. MORTGAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 178, 427(1), 557, 559(3)—
ACTIONS AGAINST PURCHASERS OR GRANTEES —PARTIES—ORIGINAL MORTGAGOR—FAILURE TO MAKE PARTY—EFFECT.

In a foreclosure action by the assignee of a mortgage, the mortgagor, who had disposed of his interest in the land, is not a necessary party, and failure to serve him with summons and bring him into court does not operate to release a subsequent purchaser and junior mortgagee from the burden of the mortgage; the mortgagor's personal liability not being thereby released, nor deficiency waived against him.

6. MORTGAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 559(3) — PARTIAL RELEASE
OF MORTGAGE—DEFENSE TO CLAIM FOR DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT.

In a foreclosure action, in order to have an alleged release of land of greater value than the amount of the mortgage operate as a payment of the mortgage debt as to defendants, they must show that such release was without their consent, and unless so established it does not constitute a defense to the claim for deficiency judgment against them.

7. MORTGAGES $\hookrightarrow$ 454(1)—FORECLOSURE—DEFENSES — EXONERATION — PLEADING SPECIALLY.

In a foreclosure action, a defense that the land has been exonerated from liability must be pleaded specially.

On Petition for Modification.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 762—DISREGARDING CONTENTIONS.

On appeal, contention of an appellant as to what was necessary for the defendants to plead and for the court to find will not be disregarded by the appellate court, because made for the first time in appellant's closing brief, if made in response to a claim of defendants in their brief.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 654—RECORD—MATTERS NOT APPARENT OF RECORD—RECORDS IN OTHER CASES.

Contention by defendant that it was understood and agreed in the court below that the case and another case involving the same subject-matter should be considered together, and that the evidence in both cases might be considered in determining each, is not ground for modifying or changing the record on appeal, where there is nothing in the record to show such an understanding, nor any contention that it was agreed that both records be considered on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action for foreclosure by John H. Davidson, with Paul F. Fratessa, assignee, substituted as plaintiff, against Joseph T. Roffy and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals, making George D. Richey and certain of the other defendants respondents. Reversed.

J. J. West and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, and Frank J. O'Brien and John W. Johnston, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

A. C. Huston, of Woodland, and Thomas B. Leeper, of Sacramento, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought by the assignee to foreclose a mortgage on land located in Sacramento county. The written obligation to secure which the mortgage was given was as follows:

"$1,500.00. Oakland, Calif., Oct. 26, 1907.

"On or before two years after date I promise to pay Geo. L. Woodford, or order, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, gold coin of the United States, with interest at the rate of one per cent. per month from and after maturity, value received. If the principal and interest, or either, shall not be paid when due, then the whole of the said indebtedness shall be due and collectible at the option of the holder hereof. This note is upon the following conditions as to its payment prior to its maturity, or at maturity: That inasmuch as George L. Woodford has received from the maker hereof two thousand shares of the capital stock of the Roffy Electrical Company, upon which the maker hereof has and does guarantee a dividend each year for two years from January 1, 1908, of $750.00. If, therefore, in the said two years dividends have been received by Woodford on the said shares to the full sum of $1,500.00, then this note to be canceled. If the said dividends during said two years does not amount to $750.00 each year, then this note shall be credited with the dividends, whatever they may be, and the maker hereof shall then at maturity pay the balance.
"[Signed] Joseph T. Roffy."

On January 11, 1910, the said Woodford assigned the said note and mortgage to John H. Davidson, who commenced this action. He afterwards assigned to Paul F. Fratessa, who has been substituted as plaintiff. The summons was not served on Roffy; he having disposed of his interest in the mortgaged land before this action was commenced. The complaint was answered by defendants W. H. Leeper, G. D. Richey, and M. D. Butler, as administrator of the estate of James A. Butler, deceased, successors to Roffy's interest in the land mortgaged by him to Woodford. They denied the execution of the assignment by Davidson to Fratessa and the nonpayment of the note.

[1] There seems to be some contention by respondents that there can be no assignment of the said written instrument—of the note and mortgage. However, there appears to be no question about that, since, whether the said written instrument be considered a promissory note or a guaranty for the payment of money, it was plainly assignable by virtue of the provisions of sections 954 and 1458 of our Civil Code. There are many decisions also cited by appellant to the point that such obligations are assignable, but we deem it unnecessary to notice them.

[2] We are entirely satisfied, also, that respondents are entirely in error in contending that the said written instrument constitutes a contract of indemnity against loss incident to the purchase of the shares of stock, and that no cause of action could arise therefrom without such loss by the holder of both the shares of stock and the note, and that the note would have no validity where it had been assigned without an assignment of the shares. There is nothing in the language of the note or of the mortgage to support this view. It is true that the maker used the word "guaranty"; but it is not contended by respondents that there was any guaranty, as that term is understood by the authorities. It is claimed, however, by them that the maker "warranted" the payment of said dividends, and that he intended to indemnify the payee against loss in consequence of any failure of said dividends. But it must be understood that Roffy was a debtor and Woodford a creditor to the extent of $1,500. In other words, that the former obligated himself to pay the latter the said sum, and, if the stock should pay any dividends, the amount was to be credited on the payment of said $1,500. In other words, Woodford was to pay himself out of said dividends a portion or all of the said money which Roffy promised to pay, and, if no dividends were obtained, the amount of $1,500 was to be paid by said Roffy. There could, therefore, be no loss to Woodford, by reason of the nonpayment of dividends, since the amount was to be paid at any rate. The condition in reference to the application of any dividend that might be received to the payment of the claim was a favor to Roffy, and could not be a detriment to Woodford. In fact, if the obligation be considered in any sense a "warranty," it amounted to nothing more than a "warranty" that Roffy would pay his own debt, either from the dividends or otherwise. The truth is that the instrument constitutes a direct promise of the maker to pay Woodford the sum of $1,500, with the proviso that Woodford might pay himself this amount, or a portion thereof, out of any dividends that might be received from said stock.

When we consider the mortgage itself, we find it was given entirely and exclusively for the purpose of securing the payment of the debt of $1,500, according to the terms of said promissory note. There is not a word in said mortgage in reference to any warranty or guaranty or indemnity. The language of the mortgage, as far as necessary to quote, is as follows:

"That the mortgagor mortgages to the mortgagee that certain parcel of land [describing it] as security for the payment to the said mortgagee of the sum of fifteen hundred ($1,500.00) dollars, with interest thereon according to a certain promissory note of even date herewith, made by said mortgagor to the mortgagee herein."

We may add that there is nothing in the evidence in the case to support the theory of respondents as to indemnity. The only testimony on the subject is that of Woodford, who declared that he sold the land to Roffy for 2,000 shares of stock in a certain corporation and $1,500 in cash, but for the cash was substituted a note secured by the mortgage. In other words, it appears without conflict that Woodford became the owner of the stock and that the note and mortgage were given to secure the payment of the sum of $1,500 in cash.

[3, 4] The foregoing facts show, also, the fallacy of the position of respondents that the stock also constituted security for the payment of said sum. It follows that they are mistaken in the contention that the mortgage herein could not be foreclosed against respondents without taking into account said stock. There was no occasion for an election between two securities, since only one security was given to secure the payment of said $1,500. Neither is there any ground for the contention that plaintiff is estopped from foreclosing the mortgage by reason of the fact that Woodford never notified respondents that the stock had failed to pay dividends and that he would hold their land under the mortgage. He was not required to give any such notice. The recordation of the mortgage was sufficient to notify all subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers that the land was held as security for the payment of said $1,500. Nor was he required to begin an action to foreclose the lien, nor was there anything in the agreement between him and Roffy to preclude the assignment of said note and mortgage. If the respondents were led to believe that the stock had paid dividends to the amount of the note it was their own fault. If they had any reason to so believe, they could and should have made inquiry of Woodford, and we cannot see anything inequitable in his conduct in respect to the nonpayment of said dividends. In fact that, as we have seen, was a matter of interest exclusively to himself and Roffy.

[5] Another point made by respondents is, we think, more debatable. It grows out of the fact that the plaintiff failed to bring the maker of the note into court; it being claimed by respondents that plaintiff dismissed said action and waived deficiency against Roffy, the maker, and proceeded to trial over the objection of defendants. It is contended by respondents, and this view seems to have been adopted by the trial court, that by so doing he released the claims of the subsequent purchaser and junior mortgagee from the burden of the mortgage.

Coyle v. Davis, 20 Wis. 568, involved the interest of a subsequent purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged premises, and it was held that the release of the mortgagor by the mortgagee from any personal liability discharged the land from the lien of the mortgage. The court said:

"The plaintiff and her husband, by their purchase of a portion of the mortgaged premises, acquired the right to redeem from all the mortgages, by paying the entire mortgage debt, and then to obtain satisfaction by the foreclosure and sale of the residue of the premises, and if they proved insufficient, to resort to the personal liability of Jarman, the mortgagor. * * * She stands in the relation of a surety for Jarman, and any agreement between Joseph Davis and him, which operated to diminish her security or to increase her liability, was a release of all obligation on her part. The right of insisting upon the personal liability of Jarman, was one of the safeguards of the plaintiff's title, and, by voluntarily depriving her of that, Joseph Davis deprived himself of the right of insisting upon the liens of his mortgages upon the lands owned by her."

In Sexton v. Pickett, 24 Wis. 346, it was held that—

"A mortgagee, who diminishes the security of a second mortgagee by releasing the mortgagor's personal liability, if he does not absolutely discharge the premises from the lien of his mortgage, as in the case of a subsequent purchaser, at least subordinates his lien to that of such second mortgagee."

The answer of appellant to these cases is that they "cannot apply to the case at bar, where there was no release of Roffy's (the mortgagor's) personal liability"; and it is further contended that the law has been virtually declared otherwise by the Supreme Court of this state. The fact that the mortgagor was not served with summons would not, of course, relieve him from personal liability. Nor did appellant acquit him of any further liability for the indebtedness. He simply announced: "We are not asking for a deficiency judgment against him." Manifestly, he could not obtain such judgment when Roffy had not been brought within the jurisdiction of the court. There is nothing in the law or in equity to compel the plaintiff to proceed against the mortgagor, where he had disposed of his entire interest in the land. Respondents were interested in the matter, because they were redemptioners and had the legal right to be subrogated to the claims of the senior mortgagee. But in order to discharge the lien it would be necessary for them to pay the entire debt, and therefore they should have the benefit of any deficiency judgment that might be obtained against the mortgagor. The conduct of plaintiff did not prejudice this right. They could have had the mortgagor brought in and all the equities determined in the one proceeding. They did not choose to do so, and they cannot complain because plaintiff did not see fit to relieve them of this trouble.

Appellant also relies upon the case of Gut- zeit v. Pennie, 98 Cal. 327, 33 Pac. 199. Therein the court said:

"The only question in the case at bar requiring special notice is this: 'Is a judgment foreclosing a mortgage valid as against grantees of the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers, although a representative of the deceased mortgagor is not before the court at the time of the judgment—the plaintiff waiving all recourse against any of the property of the estate except the mortgaged premises?'"

The court held that said judgment was valid as against said parties. Respondents contend that the only thing decided in that case was that the representative of the deceased mortgagor was not a necessary party to the foreclosure; but there was virtually a waiver of all personal liability of those succeeding to the interest of the mortgagor in the land mortgaged. This would seem to affect the security and liability of the subsequent grantees and incumbrancers in the same manner as if there had been a release from liability of the mortgagor if living. In support of its position the court quotes from Schadt v. Heppe, 45 Cal. 437, and Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Herbert, 53 Cal. 378, and cites Belloc v. Rogers, 9 Cal. 124, Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 461, 76 Am. Dec. 540, Story on Equity Pleading, 197, and Pomeroy on Remedies, § 326, and notes. In the Belloc Case there were two mortgages, and the junior mortgage was foreclosed first and the property purchased by the mortgagees therein. The senior mortgagee then brought suit to foreclose his mortgage, making the mortgagor and the second mortgagees parties, and he had personal service upon the mortgagor, but before judgment the mortgagor died and his administrator was made a party defendant.

The judgment was for the amount of the mortgage debt, for a sale of the premises, and, in case the proceeds were not sufficient, then a judgment for the residue. The appeal was by the administrator, and only from that part of the judgment ordering a sale of the premises. The case is hardly analogous to this, and in the language of the Supreme Court the only question for solution was "whether, the facts being admitted, 'showing the first and second mortgage, and the sale of the equity of redemption under the second mortgage, the estate of Saroni had such an interest in the premises as to render it necessary that the probate court should order the sale, upon the application of the administrator, or of the plaintiff, and to oust the district court of jurisdiction to order a sale.'" In the course of the opinion a quotation was made, however, with approval, from Bigelow v. Bush, 6 Paige, 345, that "the grantee of the mortgagor could not complain if the mortgagor was not made a party, for the reason that the grantee could not be injured."

Goodenow v. Ewer, supra, embraces a comprehensive consideration of the nature of a mortgage and the proceedings provided by our law for its foreclosure, and it was held that the grantee of the mortgagor was a necessary party to the suit for foreclosure in order to enforce the lien against his interest; the court saying:

"It is only when the owner of the estate—whether such owner be the mortgagor or his grantee—has had his day in court, that a valid decree can pass for its sale."

It was further held that the bid by the plaintiffs, being for the full amount of their judgment, satisfied it, and the effect of this satisfaction was to discharge from the lien of the mortgage the portion held by the grantee, who was not made a party. It thus involved a different question from the one before us, but the court reiterated the rule as to the mortgagor not being a necessary party, where he has disposed of his interest and no deficiency judgment is sought against him.

The declaration from Story is:

"Where the mortgagor has conveyed his equity of redemption absolutely, the assignee only need be made a party to the bill to foreclose."

Pomeroy states it:

"It follows, as an evident corollary from the proposition just stated, that the mortgagor who has conveyed away the whole of the mortgaged premises is no longer a necessary party defendant in a foreclosure action; that is, he is not indispensable to the rendition of a simple judgment of sale, if no decree for a deficiency is asked."

The decision in 98 Cal. 327, 33 Pac. 199, thus seems to support appellant's view of the rule, but many authorities hold with Jones on Mortgages, § 727, as follows:

"But if a mortgagee releases the mortgagor from personal liability, he thereby diminishes the security of a subsequent purchaser of part of the premises, and therefore the lien of the mortgage, so far as the rights of such subsequent purchaser are concerned, is discharged."

[6] Respondents contend, furthermore, that the mortgage was satisfied as to them because plaintiff with full knowledge of their status released land of greater value than the amount due on his mortgage. He released, so it is stated, "the land of defendant Howes, of the stipulated value of $1,457.20, and the land of defendant Reclamation District 1000, by dismissing as to them, of the value of $1,085.50, and he entered into an agreement with defendant Butler that the latter would pay him one-half the amount of his mortgage independent of the result of this suit." As we understand the record this latter amount is about $750. Thus it is claimed that plaintiff has virtually received "through his releases and agreement about $3,500, as against $2,150, paid for the mortgage." However, as to the land of the Reclamation District, it appears that a portion of the consideration at least was paid to respondents; but we may eliminate that entirely, and the principle contended for will apply, since the sum of $1,457.20 and $750 exceeds the amount paid by plaintiff for the mortgage.

The reason for this claim of respondents is that the grantee and the subsequent mortgagee of the whole or of a portion of the premises are redemptioners of the whole of the land subject to the original mortgage, and their right cannot be prejudiced by the release or sale of a portion without their consent, and without applying its value to the reduction of the amount secured by the senior mortgage. In this respect, since they are subrogated to his rights, their situation is similar to that of the original mortgagor where the mortgagee has released without the former's consent. In Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. 292, 51 Pac. 4, 63 Am. St. Rep. 103, it is said:

"We cannot perceive upon what principle of equity or by what construction of this section [section 726, C. C. P.] it can be held that the mortgagee may, without the consent of the mortgagor, let go a part of the security to a purchaser from the mortgagor, at less than its value may be, and then look to the mortgagor to make up the deficiency. It would be a gross injustice to the mortgagor to hold him liable for a deficiency which the mortgagee has, without the mortgagor's authority or consent, created. The deficiency which the Code directs may take the form of a personal judgment is a deficiency arising from the sale of all the mortgaged security, and not a part of it."

In Merced Sayings Bank v. Simon, 141 Cal. 11, 74 Pac. 356, it was held that—

"Where subsequent to the execution of a mortgage the mortgagor granted a right of way over the mortgaged lands to a third party, the mortgagee could not, subsequent to that deed, prejudice the owner of the right of way by releases of other portions of the mortgaged premises."

In section 4841 of Elliott on Contracts the author, after stating that the second mortgagee has the right to redeem the property from the prior mortgage, says:

"The second mortgagee, in such cases, stands in the place of the mortgagor, having the same rights and coming within the exception of a statute which provides that recorded mortgages 'shall not be valid against any person other than the parties thereto.'"

Many authorities sustaining this position of respondents might be cited, and the principle seems to be pretty well established. The point is made, however, by appellant that there is no finding that said release of a portion of the land was not agreed to by respondents. It is clear that, in order to have said release operate as a payment of the mortgage debt as to respondents, the release must have been without their consent, and unless so established it does not constitute a defense to the action.

[7] Again, it is settled that in a foreclosure action a defense that the land has been exonerated from liability must be specially pleaded. Barnhart v. Edwards (Sup.) 47 Pac. 251;¹ Cassinella v. Allen, 168 Cal. 677, 144 Pac. 746. There was no such pleading in the case.

Of course, the settled rules of pleading and practice should be observed as far as possible to promote uniformity in the administration of justice. These suggested defects may be easily remedied in case of new trial, but, as the record is presented, it is believed that the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: BUCK, Presiding Judge pro tem.; HART, J.

On Petition for Modification.

PER CURIAM. [8] In their petition for modification of the opinion and judgment, respondents claim that we should disregard the contention of appellant that it was necessary for the defendants to plead "that the land had been exonerated from liability, and also for the court to find that said release was not agreed to by respondents." This claim is based upon the proposition that appellant makes the contention for the first time in his closing brief. However, the contention of appellant is in response to the claim of respondents in their brief that "the mortgage was satisfied as to the contesting defendants, because plaintiff released land of greater value than amount of mortgage."

The rule invoked by respondents is therefore hardly applicable to the case. It is true that some evidence was received on the subject without objection, and it appears that the cause was tried upon the theory that such an issue was made. This would preclude appellant from thereafter making the objection that the matter was not pleaded. However, there is no finding upon the subject, and under the view we take of the case the findings that are made are insufficient to support the judgment.

[9] It is claimed by respondents; furthermore, that it was understood and virtually agreed in the court below that this case and Richey v. Butler, 28 Cal. App. Dec. 629, decided by this court on March 18, 1919, relating to mortgages on the same piece of land, should be considered together, and that the evidence in both cases might be considered in the determination of each.

It is furthermore claimed that the evidence in the latter case sufficiently showed that the note and mortgage in this case had been paid and discharged. We have no reason to doubt the statement of counsel in this respect; but there is nothing in the record before us to show that such was the understanding, and, moreover, there is not even any contention that it was agreed that both records might be considered by this court. It would be a departure from well-established practice in appellate proceedings to permit the record to be thus modified or changed. Furthermore, there is no finding in this case that the note has been paid or the mortgage released or discharged.

We can find no authority for changing the record and modifying the judgment, as requested by respondents. If they are right in their theory, the matter can be easily adjusted in the lower court, but, in view of what is before us, we think the petition must be denied; and it is so ordered.

GRBAVACH v. CASUALTY CO. OF AMERICA. (Civ. 2413.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 21, 1919.)

INSURANCE — 686 — REINSURANCE — ACTIONS ON REINSURANCE POLICY — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by an insured upon a reinsurance contract covering liability for injuries, whereby the reinsurer agreed to settle the claims and losses of the original insurer, and which provided for the transfer of cash or securities by the original insurer to the reinsurer as a prerequisite condition, proof by plaintiff that such company had complied with its obligations under the contract was essential to recovery, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 2646, 2649.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Peter Grbavach against the Casualty Company of America and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant alone appeals. Reversed.

Bowen & Baile, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Herbert W. Kidd, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The plaintiff herein recovered judgment against one Reed for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered while the plaintiff was being conveyed as a passenger in an automobile operated by the said Reed. Reed carried insurance protection by policy issued by the defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company. By the terms of that policy the insurance company agreed that its liability thereunder would inure to the benefit of any person who recovered judgment against the insured. Taking advantage of that condition, plaintiff, after securing judgment against Reed, brought this action against defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company, and joined defendant Casualty Company of America because of the fact that the latter company had entered into a certain reinsurance agreement with the defendant first named. The Casualty Company of America disclaimed any liability to the plaintiff here, and appeals from the judgment entered against it.

It is insisted that in the complaint of plaintiff no cause of action was stated as against the appellant, and, further, that the evidence was insufficient to show that any liability had accrued under the alleged reinsurance agreement. It requires, indeed, a most liberal interpretation of the language used in the complaint in order to sustain it as sufficient in its statement of a cause of action against appellant. That portion of the complaint which purports to show such liability is as follows:

"That as plaintiff is informed and believes and therefore alleges, on or about February 28, 1916, the defendant Casualty Company of America entered into a certain reinsurance agreement with the defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company, under the terms of which said Casualty Company of America reinsured all of the outstanding liability of defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company, including the liability of said Pacific Coast Casualty Company by reason of the execution of the policy of insurance before mentioned, and said Casualty Company of America thereupon assumed all outstanding liability of said Pacific Coast Casualty Company, including all liability by reason of the execution of said policy of insurance by the defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company."

The allegation that a certain reinsurance agreement was made and that "under the terms of which said Casualty Company of America reinsured all of the outstanding liability of defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company," standing by itself, certainly does not show that such an agreement was made as to make the appellant liable for the damages alleged. Under the Code provisions, the original insured has no interest in a contract of reinsurance. Section 2649, Civ. Code; Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. American Central Insurance Co., 68 Cal. 430, 9 Pac. 712. By the language quoted, nothing is described other than a contract of reinsurance such as defined by section 2646, Civil Code, and unless the latter part of the allegation quoted, that "said Casualty Company of America thereupon assumed all outstanding liability of said Pacific Coast Casualty Company, including all liability by reason of the execution of said policy of insurance by the defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company," shows an extension of liability beyond that of an ordinary contract of reinsurance, the complaint was insufficient. The use of the words, "assumed all outstanding liability," may, perhaps, import that the contract was so extended, and under such construction it would be proper to hold that a sufficient cause of action is stated. However, we think that the second point made as to there being a lack of evidence to substantiate the allegations of the complaint must be sustained. Plaintiff offered in evidence the alleged reinsurance agreement, from which it appeared that upon certain conditions stated—plainly prerequisite—the appellant agreed to adjust and settle the "claims and losses" of the Pacific Coast Company. As consideration therefor, the Pacific Coast Company was to "transfer, assign and set over to the 'Casualty' in cash or securities acceptable to the 'Casualty,' an amount equal and corresponding to the aggregate amount of the 'Pacific's' legal loss reserves as of December 31, 1915. * * *" Plaintiff made no proof or showing that the Pacific Coast Company had complied with its obligations under the contract; hence it would follow that there was no evidence from which it could be inferred that conditions had occurred which would require this appellant to settle the claims and losses of the Pacific Company. The appellant admitted the execution of the agreement and the filing thereof with the insurance commissioner of the state of California, but objected to the introduction in evidence of the same on the general ground that the evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The case as made by the evidence of the plaintiff was incomplete, and for that reason the judgment cannot be maintained.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

Action by the San Diego Investment Company against Alex T. Crane. Plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, and Laurence H. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

E. S. Torrance, of San Diego, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. The appeal is from "the judgment entered in the above-entitled court on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1916." We have searched through the record in vain to find such a judgment, or, indeed, any judgment. There is none.

We do not know to what appellant refers when, in its notice of appeal, it says it "hereby appeals * * * from the judgment entered * * * on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1916," unless it be the findings and conclusions of law, which, for some unaccountable reason, bear the indorsement, "Entered February 4th, 1916." These, however, do not constitute a judgment. Miller v. Sharpe, 54 Cal. 590; Thompson v. Lynch, 43 Cal. 482. The clerk's certificate certifies that "the foregoing transcript on appeal is correct, and contains a true copy of the judgment roll in the action." In the absence of anything to the contrary, we must assume that the clerk's certificate states the truth; if it does, then the transcript "contains a true copy of the judgment roll." Since no judgment appears in the judgment roll as printed in the transcript, the only possible conclusion is that, as yet, no judgment has been given or made. There is therefore nothing from which to appeal, and the appeal should be dismissed. Miller v. Sharpe, supra.

air, an iron grating or other similar device, if safely and properly constructed, and such a contrivance is not a nuisance per se.

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 167(5)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSONS—LIABILITY OF LANDLORD.

If an abutting property owner makes an excavation under sidewalk and exercises care in constructing a grating, coal hole, or other similar device with permission of proper city authorities, and work is not inherently in its nature a nuisance per se, he is not liable for injuries to third persons due to lack of repair, where device was in good condition at time owner leased premises to tenant under a lease wherein it was duty of tenant to make repairs.

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 167(5)—GRATING IN SIDEWALK—INJURY TO PEDESTRIAN.

Where a pedestrian is injured by reason of a grating in a sidewalk being out of repair, the occupier of the premises, and not the owner, is the one to whom responsibility prima facie attaches.

10. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 167(5)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS — GRATING IN SIDEWALK—LIABILITY OF LANDLORD.

Even though premises leased be but a part of the whole building, landlord is not liable for injuries to a third person by reason of failure to repair a grating in sidewalk, which it was duty of tenant to keep in repair, where grating in sidewalk was used exclusively for benefit of and in connection with part of building leased by tenant.

11. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 167(2)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSON — LIABILITY OF LANDLORD.

One who upon express or implied invitation of tenant enters, or is proceeding to enter, upon the leased premises is an invitee, and as such stands in the shoes of the tenant, and may not recover for injuries received due to lack of repairs, if tenant cannot.

12. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 164(2)—INJURIES TO TENANT—LACK OF REPAIRS.

A tenant may not recover from his landlord damages for injuries suffered by reason of lack of repairs, where burden of repairing rests upon tenant.

13. LANDLORD AND TENANT — 169(5)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSION BY MAKING REPAIRS.

Voluntary repair by a landlord of a defect in leased premises, after an injury to a third person resulting therefrom, is not an admission of liability.

14. APPEAL AND ERROR — 907(4) — PRESUMPTIONS OF REGULARITY.

Where on appeal from judgment based on a directed verdict appellant has not all evidence in record, it will be presumed that any errors in admission or rejection of evidence were cured by evidence not brought up.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Alice Runyon and William S. Runyon against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. E. Joslin, of Los Angeles, for appellants. Norman Sterry and Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. [1] Action by husband and wife to recover damages for injuries to the wife, received from falling through a broken iron grating in the sidewalk in front of a barber shop on the First street side of the Nadeau Hotel Building—a building on the southwest corner of First and Spring streets, in the city of Los Angeles, and owned by the defendants other than the city. The city's demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend, leaving the owners as the sole remaining defendants. At the conclusion of the evidence the court directed the jury to return a verdict for defendants. From the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. The appeal from the order must be dismissed; it having been taken after section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure had been amended in 1915.

At the time of the accident the hotel was vacant, but all the ground floor storerooms on the First street side of the hotel building were leased to tenants, including the storeroom known as 212 West First street, in front of which, in the sidewalk, was the broken grating that was the cause of the injury. This storeroom was then occupied and used as a barber shop by one Cooley, a tenant of the owners under a written lease wherein it is expressly provided that the tenant, at his own cost, shall make all necessary repairs during the term of the lease.

The broken grating, which was 27 inches long by 11½ inches wide at one end and 10 inches at the other, was made of iron bars an inch in thickness, extending from end to end. At the date of the execution of the lease one bar was out of the grating. It was stipulated at the trial that Mrs. Runyon could not have been injured by the grating with only one bar out. So that, though one bar was out at the date of the lease, the grating was not then dangerous, and therefore, at that time, not a nuisance. The second bar—the breaking of which caused the grating to become a menace to public safety and a nuisance—was broken by a third person while delivering paper to a subtenant who had sublet from Cooley a part of the basement under the barber shop. Under each storeroom on First street is a separate basement, separated by brick walls from the basement under each of the other storerooms and likewise from the hotel basement. The door to Cooley's barber shop is set in from the line of First street about 6 feet. On the right or west side of this inset is a bootblack stand, extending from the line of the sidewalk to the door of the barber shop. The iron grating came flush up to the property line. It was over an opening under the sidewalk that led into the basement under the barber shop and gave light and air thereto. It was the custom of the owners, whenever they leased a storeroom, to deliver possession of the basement thereunder. Cooley testified that he bought the establishment from a Mrs. Sanborn, to whom the premises had been let under the written lease; that after the lease had been made to her, Mrs. Sanborn put him in possession of the storeroom; that afterwards he asked the agent of the owners if the basement did not go with the storeroom, and that the agent said "Yes," and gave him the key. The agent for the hotel property testified that he knew the lease was assigned to Mr. Cooley; that he delivered the storeroom and basement to him; that Cooley asked him if the basement did not go with the lease; that he told Cooley it did, and gave him the key; and that whenever the owners of the building leased a storeroom they always delivered possession of the basement that is under such storeroom, without specifying the basement in the lease.

Immediately prior to the accident Mrs. Runyon and her cousin were on the north side of First street, opposite the shoe-shining stand in front of Cooley's barber shop. The cousin, desiring to have her shoes shined, crossed over to the shoe-shining stand, leading the way, while Mrs. Runyon followed, intending to wait for her cousin while the latter had her shoes shined. Without noticing the broken grating, Mrs. Runyon stepped into the opening made by the absence of the two broken iron bars, and her right leg was jammed or crowded down between the remaining bars nearly to the knee.

[2] The record before us, as presented by the bill of exceptions, contains a part only of the evidence, it appearing affirmatively therefrom that several witnesses, none of whose testimony is set forth, were sworn and testified. This being so, we very properly might affirm the judgment without any further discussion. When exceptions are taken to a nonsuit, or to a directed verdict, all the evidence necessarily becomes a part of the case. Such a ruling is based upon the entire evidence. It cannot be determined that the ruling was erroneous without an examination of all the evidence; for it may be that the error complained of was cured by the omitted evidence. However, we shall endeavor to dispose of the case on its merits, notwithstanding the incompleteness of the record, though the failure to include all the evidence in the bill of exceptions necessarily will compel us to resolve every material question of fact against appellants.

There are two crucial facts respecting which it cannot be said that the evidence before us is complete. They are: (1) Was the basement under Cooley's storeroom necessarily used with, or reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the storeroom as a barber shop? and (2) did the basement, as an independent and separate inclosure, include, as an integral part thereof, and separated from all other parts of the building, the excavation or space under the sidewalk over which the grating was constructed?

[3, 4] The written lease does not expressly mention the basement under Cooley's barber shop. The language of the lease is:

"That certain storeroom known and numbered as 212 West First Street, * * * said storeroom hereby leased being the room now occupied by the party of the second part. * * * The said storeroom is to be used by the party of the second part for the purpose of conducting a barber shop therein, for which said purpose it is now occupied by the party of the second part."

A lease of a part of a building passes with it, as an incident thereto, everything necessarily used with or reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the part demised. Miller v. Fitzgerald Dry Goods Co., 62 Neb. 270, 86 N. W. 1078; Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philbin, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 340, 96 N. W. 487; Herpolsheimer v. Funke, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 471, 95 N. W. 688. The general rule is that where a store is leased, everything then in use for the store, as an incident or appurtenance, passes by the lease. Hall v. Irvin, 78 App. Div. 107, 79 N. Y. Supp. 614; Browning v. Dalesme, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 13. From the testimony to which reference already has been made, it may be inferred that the basement was necessarily used with, and was reasonably necessary to the use of, the barber shop occupied by Cooley. A fortiori, it may well be that the evidence that was introduced in the court a quo, but not brought up by the record on this appeal, showed that the basement necessarily was used with the barber shop, and that therefore it passed by the lease as an incident or an appurtenance to the storeroom described in the written document itself.

[5] Appellants claim that the excavation under the sidewalk, over which was the grating that caused the accident was no part of the basement occupied by Cooley; that it was not so physically connected with that particular basement as to be an integral part thereof and of that basement only. The agent for the property testified:

"This basement under Mr. Cooley's store has no connection with or entrance into the hotel basement. It is separate. * * * The grating out of which the bars were broken was over an opening that led into Mr. Cooley's basement."

From this it may be inferred that the basement under Cooley's store, shut off from every other basement by solid brick walls, included, as an integral part thereof, the space under the sidewalk over which the grating in question had been constructed, and that such excavation under the sidewalk was shut off from every other basement. At any rate, the incomplete evidence before us does not conflict with this view. Since every intentment must be indulged in favor of the regularity of the court's procedure, it will be presumed that if all the evidence were in the record it would support a state of facts sufficient to uphold the judgment.

For the foregoing reasons we must assume, as unavoidable hypotheses, that the basement under the leased storeroom included the excavation over which the grating was constructed, separated from every other basement; that the basement was reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the leased storeroom or barber shop, and that, therefore, it passed with the lease as a necessary incident or appurtenance. Upon this state of facts—a state of facts that we necessarily must assume would be established if all the evidence were before us—respondents are not liable.

[6, 7] The written lease, if the facts be as we have stated them, included the iron grating that permitted the entrance of light and air to Cooley's basement, and the tenant's covenant to keep in repair applied to it. Boston v. Gray, 144 Mass. 53, 10 N. E. 509; Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 382, 64 Pac. 564. The grating when originally constructed was not a nuisance per se. Nor was it, per se, a nuisance at the time when the lease was executed, though at that time one bar was broken; for the fact that one bar was out did not cause the contrivance to become a source of danger. The abutting owner, whose title extends to the center of the street, may excavate a vault or cellar under the sidewalk. Such owner, with permission of the city authorities, express or implied—implied or inferred where, after a reasonable time, no objection has been made by the proper officials—may insert in the sidewalk, for the purpose of admitting light and air to the vault or cellar, an iron grating, or other similar device, if safely and properly constructed, and such contrivance in the sidewalk is not a nuisance per se. Rider v. Clark, supra; Morrison v. McAvoy, 7 Cal. Unrep. 37, 70 Pac. 626; Hirsch, etc., v. Remick Co., 177 Pac. 876; Fisher v. Thirkell, 21 Mich. 1, 4 Am. Rep. 422.

[8, 9] The original structure having been legal and in a safe condition when respondents leased the premises to their tenant, and the injuries having been received in consequence of the grating getting out of repair during the tenancy—the tenant and not the landlord being bound to repair—respondents are not liable as owners, or otherwise. If the abutting property owner making the excavation and constructing the grating, coal hole, or other similar device in the sidewalk does so with the permission of the proper city authorities, and the work is not inherently, in its nature and character, a nuisance per se, the owner is liable only in the event that he fails to use ordinary care and diligence in constructing the grating or other similar contrivance and keeping it in such repair that it shall be as safe for the use of the public as any other part of the sidewalk. West Chicago Masonic Ass'n v. Cohn, 192 Ill. 210, 61 N. E. 439, 55 L. R. A. 235, 85 Am. St. Rep. 327. When the premises are in good repair at the time they are let, and the landlord, under the terms of the lease, is not bound to keep them in repair, the tenant in possession, and not the landlord, is liable for an injury resulting from a failure to repair the pavement in front of the premises. Lindstrom v. Pennsylvania Co., 212 Pa. 391, 61 Atl. 940; Fisher v. Thirkell, supra. The general rule is that it is the occupier, and he alone, to whom such responsibility prima facie attaches. Ahern v. Steele, 115 N. Y. 203, 22 N. E. 193, 5 L. R. A. 449, 12 Am. St. Rep. 778; City of Lowell v. Spaulding, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 277, 50 Am. Dec. 775. To this general rule the following exceptions are recognized, and the owner of the leased premises may be made liable: (1) If the lease be one under which he, and not the tenant, is required to keep the premises in repair; (2) if the dangerous and defective condition by which the injury was occasioned existed when the premises were leased; (3) if that which occasioned the injury was, inherently, in its nature and character, a nuisance, and was upon the premises when the lease was executed. West Chicago Masonic Ass'n v. Cohn, supra. The proof does not bring respondents within any of these exceptions to the general rule. The grating being safe at the date of the lease, the neglect which caused the injury to Mrs. Runyon was not that of respondents, but of their tenant Cooley, who had covenanted to keep the leased premises in repair.

[10] It is contended that where the owner of a building is granted the privilege of excavating a vault under the sidewalk of a public street, and has constructed in the sidewalk an iron grating, coal hole, or other similar device for the admission of light and air for the benefit of his premises, he assumes, by implication, the duty of keeping the sidewalk in as good condition and as safe for the public use as if the grating, coal hole, or other like construction had never been made; that such duty is imposed by law for the public safety; and that, while the alienation of the entire premises, either permanently, as by deed, or temporarily, as by lease, will transfer the duty to the grantee or tenant, still the lease of a part only of the premises will not relieve the owner of the duty he owes to the public and cast the same upon the tenant of such leased part of the entire premises, even though the opening in the sidewalk has no relation to any other portion of the building than that in possession of the tenant. This view seems to have obtained the sanction of the New York Court of Appeals in the case of Canandaigua v. Foster, 156 N. Y. 354, 50 N. E. 971, 41 L. R. A. 554, 66 Am. St. Rep. 575. Of this case the Illinois Supreme Court in West Chicago Masonic Ass'n v. Cohn, supra, said:

"Fowler, the owner and landlord, was not in possession, but the coal hole had been constructed without the consent of the city and constituted a nuisance, and Fowler let the premises with the nuisance upon them. His case fell within one of the exceptions to the general rule hereinbefore mentioned as recognized in this jurisdiction."

The New York courts always have held the owner to a stricter accountability than is consistent with the weight of authority. Fisher v. Thirkell, supra. It is conceded by the courts of that state that the owner and landlord who has made the excavation under the sidewalk and constructed the iron grating, or other similar contrivance, may divest himself of all responsibility by demising or leasing the premises as a whole. If an owner who has constructed a contrivance that becomes a source of danger and a nuisance may divest himself of future responsibility under any circumstances whatever, as, for example, by demising the entire building, we fail to perceive why he may not equally divest himself of such responsibility by exacting from his lessee a covenant to keep the leased premises in repair, even though the premises so leased be but a part of the whole building, provided the contrivance in the sidewalk be used exclusively for the benefit of and in connection with that part of the building which is leased. The abutting owner is liable only in the event that he fails to use ordinary care in the original construction of the iron grating, or other similar device in the sidewalk, or in keeping it in such repair that it shall be as safe for the use of the public as any other part of the sidewalk. If, as originally constructed, the contrivance is safe and not a nuisance per se, and if, at the date of the execution of the lease of the part of the premises to which it is solely appurtenant, it is safe and not, in its nature and character, a nuisance, the owner exercises ordinary care to keep it in such condition if he exacts from his lessee a covenant to make all necessary repairs. The true rule—the rule that has the sanction of authority and reason—is stated by the Illinois Supreme Court as follows:

"If the coal hole and vault were constructed and are used for the benefit of the entire premises, the leasing of a portion, only, of the premises would not absolve the owner from his duty to use ordinary care to keep the coal hole and the covering thereto in a good and safe condition; but if the vault into which the coal hole opens has no connection with any other part of the building than the basement leased to the tenant, and no benefit inures from it to any other portion of the premises, and the tenant, as against the owner, has, and is entitled to have, exclusive possession and control of the basement, coal hole, and vault, and has covenanted to keep the same in good repair, then the case should be regarded as within the operation of the general rule that the occupant of the premises, and not the owner thereof, is responsible for injuries received in consequence of a failure to keep the premises in repair." West Chicago Masonic Ass'n v. Cohn, supra.

[11, 12] We have assumed in our discussion of the case that Mrs. Runyon was one of the general public using the sidewalk, and was not a guest or invitee of the tenant in possession. The rule is that one who, upon the express or implied invitation of the tenant, enters or is proceeding to enter upon the leased premises, is an invitee, and as such stands in the shoes of the tenant, and therefore may not recover if the tenant cannot, and that the tenant may not recover if the burden of repairing rests upon him. Mackey v. Lonergan, 221 Mass. 296, 108 N. E. 1062, L. R. A. 1916F, 1098; Leaux v. New York, 87 App. Div. 398, 84 N. Y. Supp. 514. In Canandaigua v. Foster, supra, the general rule is stated:

"It must be further conceded that, if the store was in proper condition at the beginning of the term, the owner was not bound to repair it for the protection of those who, upon the express or implied invitation of the tenant, might enter it for the transaction of business or any other purpose."

Mrs. Runyon evidently proceeded to enter the space occupied by the bootblack stand, assuming that she would be permitted by the subtenant to enter upon and remain on his premises as a guest or invitee while her cousin was having her shoes shined.

[13, 14] Appellants complain that the court erred in refusing to allow them to show that, after the accident, respondents, as owners, made and paid for repairs to the broken grating. Voluntary repair by a landlord of a defect in the demised premises after an injury resulting therefrom, is not an admission of liability. Kearnes v. Cullen, 183 Mass. 298, 67 N. E. 243. However, as to this and all other complaints made by appellants respecting the admission or rejection of evidence, it may be said that every intendment is in favor of the correctness and regularity of the proceedings below, and that, since appellants have not brought up all the evidence for review, we will, if necessary, infer that the evidence not brought up cured the errors, if any there were. Barlow v. Barnes, 172 Cal. 98, 155 Pac. 457.

CONSOLIDATED CONCESSIONS CO. v. MCCONNELL. (Civ. 2667.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 25, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⚡514(1)—ACTIONS—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS OF CORPORATE CAPACITY.

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was incorporated on certain date without alleging that it continued to be such corporation for or at any time thereafter, or that it was such corporation at the time of any of the transactions referred to in the complaint, or at the time of the institution of the action, is insufficient.

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⚡37(3)—PLEADING — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT — EXECUTION OF CONTRACT.

In corporation's action to cancel a contract and note and shares of stock executed by corporation pursuant to the contract, complaint alleging that the execution of such contract and note, and the issuance of such stock, was purported to be authorized by resolutions purporting to have been adopted at meetings of the corporation, which were never held, but failing to allege that such contract and note were in fact executed, and that such stock was in fact issued, is insufficient.

3. CORPORATIONS ⚡189(11)—CONTRACT WITH STOCKHOLDERS—ACTIONS — FRAUD — SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In corporation's action to set aside contract and note, authorized to be executed, and stock authorized to be issued to defendant stockholder at fictitious meetings of directors, who were merely nominal stockholders, allegation that defendant used the corporation as a "tool and catspaw," and thereby received certain amount "paid into said company by the public as the proceeds of plaintiff's stock," held insufficient allegation that there were bona fide stockholders who were defrauded by such wrongful acts.

4. CORPORATIONS ⚡189(11) — FRAUDULENT CONTRACT BY NOMINAL STOCKHOLDERS—ACTION TO SET ASIDE CONTRACT—COMPLAINT.

In corporation's action to set aside contract note and stock issue authorized at fictitious meetings of directors, who were merely nominal stockholders, and constituting fraud on the corporation, complaint must allege that there are bona fide stockholders who are real parties in interest, who such persons are, and to what extent and in what way they were injured by such acts and proceedings.

5. PLEADING ⚡225(2)—DEMURRER — LEAVE TO PLEAD OVER—DISCRETION.

Court, in sustaining demurrer to fifth amended complaint, did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff leave to amend.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Consolidated Concessions Company against Emmett W. McConnell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. D. Newhouse, of San Francisco, and Milton Shepardson, of Oakland, for appellant.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant after an order sustaining his demurrer to the plaintiff's fifth amended complaint. The action purported to be one instituted by the plaintiff as a corporation to annul and cause to be canceled a certain contract between the plaintiff and the defendant for the sale by the latter and purchase by the former of certain capital stock in other corporations, and for delivery up for cancellation and annulment of a certain promissory note of the plaintiff for the sum of $500,000, and for the cancellation and annulment of 60,000 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff, which was to have been issued to the defendant pursuant to said contract, and for an accounting between the defendant and the plaintiff as to the funds received by the former as a result of these transactions, and for general relief.

The demurrer of the defendant to the fifth amended complaint was both general and special, and was sustained by a general order of the trial court, and from the judgment thereupon entered the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] A mere cursory view of the plaintiff's fifth amended complaint will serve to show that the defendant's demurrer to its sufficiency was well taken upon several grounds. In the first place, while it is averred that the plaintiff was incorporated on or about July 15, 1913, there is no averment that it continued to be such corporation for or at any time thereafter, or that it was such corporation at the time of any of the transactions referred to in the plaintiff's pleading, or at the time of the institution of this action in the month of April, 1917. The defendant's demurrer aimed at this defect is both general and special, and obviously is good. Again, this complaint alleges that certain transactions, embracing the execution of a contract with the defendant and the issue of certain stock to him pursuant thereto, and the receipt from him, as the consideration therefor and for the promissory note of the plaintiff, of certain shares of stock of other corporations, was purported to be authorized by certain resolutions purporting to have been adopted at certain meetings of the corporation which were never held, but the complaint fails to aver that such contract was ever in fact executed or acted upon, or that such stock was ever in fact issued, or that said promissory note was ever executed or delivered to the defendant; in a word, the complaint utterly fails to aver that the several instruments which it is the main purpose of the action to have rescinded, canceled, and surrendered, ever in fact came into being or were in existence or in the possession of or under the control of the defendant at the time the action was begun.

[3, 4] A yet more serious deficiency in the complaint before us is this: The action is one apparently to set aside the contract, stock, and promissory note authorized to be issued to the defendant at fictitious meetings of the directors of the corporation who were merely nominal stockholders therein, who are alleged never to have had any interest therein or to have given any consideration for their stock, which collectively amount to but 10 shares, and, having accomplished the cancellation of these documents, to recover from the defendant the sum of $90,000, which it is alleged the defendant has defrauded the public out of. In view of these objects to be attained by this action it would seem to have been an essential averment that there were stockholders of the corporation other than the defendant and the few nominal incorporators thereof who are alleged to have no interest therein, yet this fifth amended complaint contains no averment that there are any such stockholders, save the inferential allegation that the defendant used the corporation as a "tool and catspaw" of himself and a fellow conspirator, and as a "means and instrumentality of defrauding and swindling the public, by which process he wrongfully and fraudulently received from the Consolidated Concessions Company about $90,000 paid into said company by the public as the proceeds of plaintiff's stock." It is clear that these averments are altogether insufficient to base a right of action for the recovery of money upon. If, as alleged, this corporation was the "tool and catspaw" of the defendant and his fellow conspirators, there is nothing to show that it is not still such, or that, being particeps criminis in the alleged fictitious and fraudulent transactions, it has any right of action to set aside such transactions or recover moneys, unless so to do would redound to the benefit of bona fide stockholders of the corporation, who are the real parties in interest and the only persons defrauded by the defendant's alleged wrongful acts. It was essential therefore to have alleged that there were such persons, and who they were, and what their interest in the corporation amounted to, and in what specific way and to what extent they were injured by the acts and proceedings complained of. Such averments are altogether lacking from this complaint.

It was the existence of these and a number of other defects in this fifth amended complaint which caused the court to properly sustain the general and special demurrer to it.

[5] The main contention of the plaintiff on this appeal appears to be that the trial court sustained said demurrer without leave to amend. Had this been a demurrer to the original complaint there might be some reason or force to this contention, but there is a limit to which the patience of the trial court may be extended in the matter of allowing repeated attempts to amend a faulty pleading. This was pointed out in the case of Billesbach v. Larkey, 161 Cal. 649, 120 Pac. 31, wherein the Supreme Court, in affirming a judgment rendered after a third ineffectual attempt to amend a complaint, said:

"Ordinarily the trial court should be liberal in allowing amendments where the defect in the complaint is one of form only. This, however, is a matter which is almost entirely within the discretion of that court, and this court can reverse the case only where there is a manifest abuse of discretion in giving final judgment on demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff does not have a positive right to amend his pleading after a demurrer has been sustained to it. His leave to amend afterwards is always of grace, not of right. * * * In the present case the final pleading of plaintiffs was the third amended complaint. It was therefore their fourth attempt to state a cause of action. * * * The refusal of leave to amend was not an abuse of discretion."

We do not deem it necessary to pursue the subject further. Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PREWETT. (Cr. 843.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 22, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 19, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §711 — LIMITATION OF ARGUMENT.

Where defendant's counsel upon court's inquiry stated that he did not think his argument would consume more than an hour and a half, and court thereupon suggested that no more than an hour and a half would be allowed either side unless the court session was to run into the night, such limitation of argument was not a material detriment to defendant nor an abuse of discretion.

2. HOMICIDE §311 — INSTRUCTIONS — PENALTY.

In homicide prosecutions the giving of instructions as to the penalty for the various degrees of homicide is not to be commended.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §823(17)—INSTRUCTIONS —PENALTY—CORRECTION.

In homicide prosecution, court's action in reading to jury Pen. Code, §§ 190, 193, 1168, relating to the punishment for murder in first and second degrees and for manslaughter and to indeterminate sentences, was cured by an instruction immediately following, charging jury not to permit the penalty to influence it in determining the degree or grade of the crime, if any, of which defendant was guilty.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §1144(15)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.

Jury will be presumed to have followed court's instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Samuel M. Prewett was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Feliz & White, of Salinas, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree. The appellant urges three grounds for the reversal of such judgment. The first of these is that the court erred in limiting the argument of the defendant's counsel to the jury. This contention we find to be without merit. At the outset of the argument of the cause the judge of the trial court inquired as to how long a time it was expected by counsel would be consumed in argument, to which Mr. Feliz, one of the defendant's counsel, stated that on account of his having a severe cold he did not imagine that he would occupy an hour and a half, whereupon the court suggested that that was all the time that could be allowed on each side unless the session of the court were run into the night. No objection was at this time made by defendant's counsel to the court's suggestion, and the argument proceeded. After the opening argument on the part of the people, Mr. White, one of defendant's counsel, occupied an hour in opening the argument on behalf of the defense, and thereafter Mr. Feliz, in closing for the defense, spoke for an hour and ten minutes, at the end of which time the court made the following observation:

"If we are to complete this case to-day, Mr. Feliz, I think you had better conclude your argument within the next 15 or 20 minutes."

To this remark on the part of the court the defendant's counsel took an exception, and Mr. Feliz then proceeded with his argument, concluding the same within about 10 minutes thereafter.

[1] Upon this state of the record we are satisfied that the defendant sustained no material detriment from the limitation of the argument of his counsel under the circumstances above set forth.

In the case of People v. Morrell, 28 Cal. App. 729, 153 Pac. 977, this court laid down the rule that—

"Trial judges have the right to regulate the proceedings in their courts and have the right to exercise a reasonable discretion in the direction of limiting the arguments to be made by counsel."

We are of the opinion that there was no abuse of such discretion in the instant case.

[2] The next contention of the appellant is that the court committed an error in giving certain instructions to the jury with relation to the penalties for murder and for manslaughter. The record in that regard discloses that after the jury had been generally instructed by the court and had retired for deliberation, it returned to the court for further instructions, whereupon the court proceeded to read to the jury sections 190, 193, and 1168 of the Penal Code, relating to the punishment for murder in the first degree, for murder in the second degree, and for manslaughter, and also relating to the recent changes effected by the amendment of section 1168 (St. 1917, p. 665) in relation to indeterminate sentences. We are not pointed to any authority on the part of the appellant holding the giving of such instructions to be reversible error; but we are inclined to agree with the appellant's suggestion that the practice of giving such instructions is one that is not to be commended. Nevertheless the record discloses that at the time of giving the foregoing instructions and as a part thereof the court gave to the jury the following instruction:

"The jury is further instructed that its sole province is to pass on the guilt or innocence of the defendant and to determine the grade or degree of crime of which it finds him guilty, if it finds him guilty of any, and the matter of the penalty which may be attached to the commission of the crime must not in the slightest degree influence you in determining the question of his guilt or innocence. Nor shall such penalty influence you in the slightest degree in determining the degree or grade of crime committed, if any. As you have been heretofore instructed, the defendant's guilt or innocence and also the degree or grade of crime committed by him, if any, must be determined by you from all the evidence in the case, and not from the nature or extent of the penalty fixed by the statute for the commission of said grades or degrees of crime."

[3, 4] The instruction last above quoted would, if followed by the jury, have the effect of effacing whatever prejudice the defendant might have suffered from the giving of the court's instructions in relation to penalties; and, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, this court will assume that the jury did in fact obey the last above quoted instruction of the court in its further deliberations and in the rendition of its verdict.

As to the appellant's final point, that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by the evidence, it is sufficient to say that the examination we have made of the record satisfies us that this contention must be resolved against the appellant.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

NATIONAL BANK OF SAN MATEO v. WHITNEY. (Civ. 2744.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 14, 1919. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 12, 1919.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING ⚡106—DEPOSITS—EXECUTION OF NOTE — ABSTRACTION OF FUNDS BY CASHIER.

If depositor hands note to cashier, with instructions to charge it to his personal account and credit proceeds to account of corporation of which he is president, and cashier charges note to personal account, and abstracts proceeds without crediting them to corporation's account, the loss falls upon bank, and not depositor.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡90—CONSIDERATION—DELIVERY.

Where depositor left note signed in blank with bank cashier, with directions to fill in note, and charge to his personal account and credit to account of corporation of which he was president, and cashier upon filling in note and charging to depositor's personal account abstracted proceeds without crediting corporation's account, depositor was not liable on note; there being no consideration for note and no delivery thereof to bank.

3. BANKS AND BANKING ⚡106—ABSTRACTION OF BANK FUNDS—DEPOSITS—LOSS OF BANK.

If a merchant sends his bookkeeper to bank with check to be deposited and bookkeeper delivers check to bank's teller, with instruction to deposit proceeds to merchant's account, and teller destroys deposit slip and treats check as cash transaction, abstracting money, and not crediting deposit to account of merchant, it is bank's loss, not merchant's.

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡63—DELIVERY—ACCEPTANCE BY BANK.

There is no legal delivery of note to bank by bank's customer until the bank or some one acting for it takes affirmative action, such as orally consenting to advance money represented by note, or entering note on books of bank, and transferring proper credit, or some other act, since bank does not accept delivery until such affirmative act.

5. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡64—NOTE TO BANK—DELIVERY—DISREGARD OF CONDITIONS.

If conditions prescribed by maker of note are fraudulently disregarded by the discounting bank or its agent, there is no delivery binding the maker; there being no meeting of the minds.

6. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡92(1)—CONSIDERATION—BANK FUNDS.

Where bank customer's note was charged to his account by cashier, who, instead of crediting proceeds, pursuant to directions, to account of corporation of which depositor was president, filed note with bank papers and abstracted proceeds from bank's funds, depositor was not liable on note, under Civ. Code, § 1605, as being supported by a consideration because of prejudice suffered by bank; for such prejudice was by reason of the theft, and not by reason of the note.

7. BILLS AND NOTES ⚡493(4)—CONSIDERATION—PRESUMPTION—EVIDENCE.

The presumption that depositor's note charged to his personal account, and placed on file with bank papers by cashier upon his abstraction of proceeds from bank funds, was based upon a consideration, cannot overcome direct evidence that note was not credited to account of depositor, or of corporation of which he was president, showing that neither received any benefit from note.

8. BANKS AND BANKING ⚡106—CASHIER—DEPOSIT OF NOTE WITH BANK—ABSTRACTION OF FUNDS.

Where depositor left blank note with bank cashier, with instructions to fill in note and charge it to his personal account, and credit proceeds to account of corporation, of which he was president, the cashier in abstracting proceeds of note after having filled in and charged note to depositor's personal account, without crediting proceeds to corporation's account, was not depositor's agent in abstracting the money, nor in receiving it as a thief.

9. TRIAL ~~404~~(2)—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Finding "that no part of principal sum or the interest on said promissory note is due or owing" is a conclusion of law.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ~~1071~~(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—SURPLUSAGE.

In action on note, finding "that no part of principal sum or the interest on said promissory note is due or owing," though a conclusion of law, was not prejudicial, where there was no delivery of nor consideration for the note; such finding being surplusage.

11. TRIAL ~~404~~(1)—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Findings must be construed together to uphold judgment entered thereon.

12. ESTOPPEL ~~72~~—INNOCENT ACTS—PARTY INJURED.

Where depositor left blank note with cashier, with instructions to fill in note, charge to his personal account, and credit proceeds to account of corporation, of which he was head, and cashier, after charging note, abstracted proceeds thereof, without crediting proceeds to corporation's account, depositor is not liable on note under the rule that, where one of two innocent parties must suffer by the act of the third, the loss must fall upon the first negligent actor.

13. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ~~180~~—IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE—FRAUDULENT TRANSACTION.

The rule that, where an agent receives notice, it is not imputed to the principal, if the agent is engaged in committing an independent fraudulent act upon his own account, does not apply, where the agent is the sole representative of the principal in the transaction, and does not deal with the principal or with any other agent acting for him; in such case the knowledge of agent being imputed to principal.

14. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ~~116~~(6)—IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE—FRAUDULENT TRANSACTION—BANK CASHIER.

Where depositor left blank note with cashier, with directions to fill in amount, charge note to personal account, and credit proceeds to account of corporation of which depositor was president, and cashier, instead of crediting the proceeds of note, after having charged note to depositor's account, abstracted proceeds and placed note in bank files, the cashier's knowledge of the limited purpose to which the proceeds of note could rightfully be applied was imputed to bank, notwithstanding cashier's fraudulent act.

15. APPEAL AND ERROR ~~1071~~(6)—RECORD—FAILURE TO MAKE FINDING.

A judgment will not be reversed for failure to find upon an affirmative defense, if the record does not show that evidence was introduced in support thereof.

16. APPEAL AND ERROR ~~1071~~(6)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

Judgment will not be reversed for failure to make finding, where the evidence introduced was not sufficient to support finding, if it had been made.

17. APPEAL AND ERROR ~~1032~~(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

It is incumbent upon appellant to show, not alone error, but injury from error.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the National Bank of San Mateo against Leslie D. Whitney. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellant. Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HAVEN, J. This suit was to recover $3,000 on an instrument, in form a promissory note, dated July 14, 1915, and signed by the defendant. Defendant denied the execution of the note and the debt, and in a separate defense and by way of cross-complaint alleged facts to which further reference is made in this opinion, and which were claimed to constitute a complete defense to the action.

The judgment was in favor of the defendant. On this appeal by plaintiff numerous contentions are made, for an understanding of which it is necessary to state the facts disclosed by the evidence.

[1-3] The Leslie Salt Refining Company was a corporation of which Leslie D. Whitney was the president, his brother St. John Whitney was a member of its board of directors and business manager, and W. M. Roberts was a stockholder and a director. Roberts was also the cashier of the plaintiff bank. The Salt Company and Leslie D. Whitney were both customers of the plaintiff bank, and had been frequent borrowers for at least five years prior to July 1, 1915. All of the dealings of the defendant, both individually and on behalf of the Salt Company, with the bank had been carried on with Roberts as cashier. On June 30, 1915, the defendant, Leslie D. Whitney, who was about to enter a hospital for treatment, visited the bank and explained to Roberts that the Salt Company might shortly thereafter require accommodation, and since its bank loans were already close to its margin of credit, he (Whitney) desired to leave in the hands of Roberts a blank note to be filled in by Roberts upon the order of his brother or himself, then to be charged to his personal account, and the proceeds to be applied to the credit of the Salt Company. Under these conditions he signed the blank note and left it with Roberts. On the same day he went to the hospital, where he remained for some weeks. On July 14, 1915, without having received instructions from either of the Whit-
